

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. Soon after the first volume of this work was published, and when almost the whole of the text of the second volume was in type, arrangements were made for the early appearance of the delayed official reports; and by awaiting the result of those arrangements, and making the corresponding insertions, the second half of the digest is enabled to present official volume references for all, and page references for nearly all, the cases that it includes. In the table of cases are included all citations of Michigan reported cases found in our own reports or in those of the supreme court of the United States.

VI. ACTION UPON JUDGMENT; SCIRE FACIAS.

VII. JUDGMENT CREDITORS' PROCEEDING.

As to principles peculiar to judgments in the various forms of actions and in special proceedings, see the appropriate titles.

As to judgments in evidence and their relevancy, see EVIDENCE, §§ 105, 229-249.

As to the faith and credit to be given to records and judicial proceedings of sister states, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 691-702.

As to effect of want of jurisdiction and of irregularities, see JURISDICTION.

As to attorney's lien upon judgments, see ATTORNEYS, §§ 82, 83.

I. RENDITION.

(a) Nature; form.

1. In general.

As to decrees, see EQUITY, XII, (a), 1.

As to justices' judgments, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (a), 1.

1. Rendition of judgment is a judicial act, requiring a court to be held, and it is void if done on Sunday: Hemmens v. Bentley, 32 M. 89.

2. A judgment is the final consideration and determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon the matters submitted to it: Whitwell v. Emory, 3 M. 84.

3. A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein: Crippen v. People, 8 M. 117.

4. A recital in an order has no force as an adjudication if it relates to a matter not alleged in the pleadings and not put in issue: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448.

5. The statute does not require a finding of facts and conclusions of law to be incorporated into the judgment on a trial by the court without a jury: Lorman v. Benson, 9 M. 237.

6. On overruling a demurrer, judgment goes for plaintiff, unless defendant is given leave to plead; such leave may be conditioned as the case requires: Tefft v. McNoah, 9 M. 201.

7. On overruling a demurrer a court can do no more than award an interlocutory judgment: Mason v. Reynolds, 33 M. 60.

8. The only object of an interlocutory judgment is to direct the ascertainment of damages for the purposes of a final judgment; and its form is immaterial if the method of assessment is correct: Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 M. 355.

9. A court cannot render final judgment on the whole record upon demurrer to certain counts in the declaration while an issue of fact is pending on other counts: Bosman v. Akeley, 39 M. 710.

9a. Judgment on demurrer goes against the pleader committing the first error in substance, not in form merely: Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276; People v. Hartwell, 12 M. 508; People v. Miller, 16 M. 56.

10. Judgment as in case of nonsuit is rendered against a plaintiff who fails to appear on trial before a referee: Abbott v. Mathews, 26 M. 176.

11. The county judge, in his return to a certiorari, set forth that he rendered judgment of "no cause of action, nonsuit, I think;" but as the judgment was rendered upon proofs and a submission on the merits, it was held to be in law a judgment for defendant, and not a nonsuit: Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 M. 77.

12. Pleas of abatement to the jurisdiction were filed by several defendants, one of whom was a railway company. Both were tried, but in giving judgment the court, while reciting only that the railway company had pleaded in abatement, ordered that the declaration of "said plaintiffs be quashed, and that the said defendants go thereof without day; and that said defendants do recover of and from the plaintiffs its costs and charges by it in its defence in this behalf expended." Held, that the word "defendants" in this judgment referred only to the railway company: Barnes v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 54 M. 243.

13. A judgment rendered in favor of two plaintiffs after the death of one of them cannot be sustained by showing that the deceased plaintiff left a son surviving him who was living when judgment was rendered: Teller v. Wetherell, 9 M. 484.

14. A judgment given in a suit at law brought without leave pending foreclosure in chancery is not invalid: Goodrich v. White, 39 M. 489.

2. Joint and several.

15. A judgment for a joint conversion cannot include a defendant who was not served with process and who did not appear: McLean v. Isbell, 44 M. 129.

16. H. S. §§ 7730, 7732, authorizing judgment, etc., in form against joint debtors though only one has been served with process, held valid: Brooks v. McIntyre, 4 M. 316.

17. H. S. § 7730, concerning joint debtors, applies to all joint undertakings or liabilities, and covers obligations that are joint and several as well as those that are joint: Goebel v. Stevenson, 35 M. 172.

18. The proceedings for joint judgments when part only of joint debtors are served are special and statutory, and cannot be extended: Hamilton v. Plumer, 67 M. 135 (Oct. 6, '87).

19. Plaintiff in an action against joint defendants is allowed to proceed on service against only one defendant. But process must issue against all, and the intentional omission to serve either defendant, if seasonably found within the jurisdiction, would be an abuse of the writ. And the judgment, though joint in form, preserves all rights which defendants would have at common law: Ralston v. Chapin, 49 M. 274.

20. Joint judgment may be entered on a joint obligation against parties, one of whom is outside of the jurisdiction and cannot therefore be lawfully served: Gunzberg v. Miller, 39 M. 80.

21. Joint judgment cannot be entered against several defendants when service of process against a portion of them has neither been made nor attempted: Proctor v. Lewis, 50 M. 329.

22. The contracts of the maker of a note and of the indorser are several, and do not authorize a joint judgment upon lawful service on only one of them: Church v. Edson, 39 M. 113.

23. A separate verdict against one of several joint parties will not authorize a judgment against all where there has been no assessment against the rest: Ellison v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 41 M. 222.

Joint judgment upon verdict against one defendant and assessment against the other, see BILLS AND NOTES, § 357.

24. In an action against two defendants, as upon their joint promise, plaintiff cannot recover if he fails to show a joint undertaking: Mace v. Page, 33 M. 88.

25. In an action upon a joint or upon a joint and several obligation, plaintiff cannot have judgment against less than all the defendants: Winslow v. Herrick, 9 M. 380; Bal-lou v. Hill, 23 M. 60; Larkin v. Butterfield, 29 M. 254; Anderson v. White, 39 M. 130; Detroit v. Houghton, 42 M. 459; Munn v. Haynes, 46 M. 140; Post v. Shafer, 63 M. 85; Seligman v. Gray, 66 M. 84 (June 18, '87).

26. Except where one debtor has been legally discharged, or where, in fact, there was never any joint obligation: Post v. Shafer, 63 M. 85.

27. And where an exception is admitted in consequence of some defence that is purely personal, like infancy, good practice requires that, as a preliminary to judgment against the others, there should be a discontinuance as to the exempt party and an amendment of the record. In a particular case a severance on the record before judgment, and the entry of separate judgments, were held to have accomplished substantial justice without circuity, and such action was sustained: Reading v. Beardsley, 41 M. 123.

28. Where two defendants against whom there had been a joint award were sued thereon, a judgment against one was held erroneous: Ballou v. Hill, 23 M. 60.

29. So, where a joint judgment is recovered on a joint demand and one defendant dies, pending appeal, judgment cannot be taken against the other in the circuit court: Anderson v. Robinson, 38 M. 407.

30. Suit cannot be brought against an individual party to a joint contract, and judgment taken upon it, without giving defendant an opportunity to plead non-joinder in abatement: Munn v. Haynes, 46 M. 140.

31. Where one of three joint debtors was proceeded against by garnishee process, and a judgment recovered, it was held that the judgment was void, and no bar to a subsequent suit against all three on the joint demand: Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 M. 555.

32. One who has sued a firm and obtained a verdict against one partner only cannot complain of a judgment rendered in his favor against the other partner, whatever such other might do: Roberts v. Pepple, 55 M. 367.

33. In an action upon a promissory note plaintiff need not include all the parties in one judgment, but may have judgment against any of the parties against whom he could have proceeded separately: Phelps v. Church, 65 M. 281 (Feb. 15, '87).

34. However, severance in the case of persons purporting to be joint makers of a note, and who are so sued, is not contemplated by H. S. §§ 7345-7347: Reading v. Beardsley, 41 M. 123.

35. Nor, where several persons are sued as copartners upon a note signed in the name of a company, does H. S. § 7347 allow judgment against those only who are shown to be members of the company: Anderson v. White, 89 M. 130.

36. H. S. § 8727, which allows judgment to be given against such defendants on a joint contract as remain liable while others are released by the statute of limitations, does not allow a separate judgment in a case where the party against whom the statute would otherwise have run was never legally bound; as where it appears that such party entered into the contract as a surety for her husband: Reading v. Beardsley, 41 M. 123.

37. In an action brought upon a joint obligation of husband and wife, a judgment against the husband alone is erroneous unless it is affirmatively shown that the obligation was one she could not legally make: Post v. Shafer, 68 M. 85.

38. In an action against the maker and indorser of a promissory note, where several pleas are filed and issue is joined as to both defendants, plaintiff cannot sever, but must proceed to trial against all, though he may move for judgment against one defendant only. But proper severance was presumed on error, and the judgment sustained, where the record showed no objection taken to the trial of the separate issue: Maynard v. Penniman, 10 M. 153.

(b) Upon what based.

See EQUITY, XII, (a), 2; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (a), 2.

See, as to defaults, DEFAULT, §§ 1-20.

39. A declaration for injuries inflicted by defendant's dogs contained two counts upon the common-law liability and one upon H. S. § 2119, allowing double damages. Held, that a verdict for defendant upon the common-law counts was not inconsistent with one for plaintiff on the other, as the counts could not, as matter of law, be said to be for the same cause of action, and that the court did not err in refusing to give judgment for defendant on the whole record with costs on the issues found in his favor: Swift v. Applebone, 23 M. 252.

As to judgment in cases where double or treble damages are claimed, see DAMAGES, §§ 410, 411, 434-443.

40. No final judgment as to costs can be given until the amount of damages is found: Hemingway v. Peter, 25 M. 202.

41. A judgment for interest, where there are no data showing how much was due, amounts to a mistrial: Bell v. Ardis, 38 M. 609.

42. A party on a note has always a right to suppose that judgment will not be taken upon it for a larger sum than appears upon its face to be due, and he is under no obligation to watch the proceedings to see that a judgment in excess is not taken: Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 M. 444.

43. A judgment in excess of the damages claimed in the declaration is erroneous, and cannot be cured by an amendment nunc pro tunc of the ad damnum clause: Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 M. 326.

44. An insignificant excess of interest allowed in a judgment will be overlooked: Bowen v. Rutland School District, 36 M. 149.

45. Judgment cannot be rendered on an alleged state of facts which has not been found, nor be given for damages if there is no finding of damages set forth in the record: Wiley v. Lovely, 46 M. 83.

46. When the jury's special findings refer directly to documents they can be understood only by comparing them with the documents, and where such reference is made, and a court is called upon to apply the verdict, it must be treated as embodying such documents by reference: Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 M. 400.

47. A verdict must always be read in the light of the pleadings, and when it refers to documents annexed to it, they must be regarded as incorporated in it; and if not annexed, the verdict may be aided by the judge's notes, where they will suffice for that purpose: Keeler v. Robertson, 27 M. 116.

48. In determining, for the purpose of judgment, the consistency of the general verdict with the special finding, the trial court may be aided by its knowledge of the facts as developed on the trial; more than a mere comparison of the language of the verdict and findings is required: Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 M. 400.

49. Judgment can be rendered upon special findings of fact, and against the general verdict, as being inconsistent therewith, only where, after all presumptions are made in favor of harmony, the special findings cannot be reconciled with the general one: Foster v. Gaffield, 84 M. 356.

50. Special questions to the jury and the answers thereto are to be applied to the record only, and not by outside explanations; and where the record leaves such question and finding meaningless or irrelevant, they cannot control a general verdict: Ibid.

51. A special finding that is immaterial in itself and is based on an erroneous instruction does not preclude the right to a judgment on other findings: Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Hayt, 55 M. 347.

52. When the cause is tried by the judge alone, and a finding of facts is seasonably demanded, there is nothing, until such finding is made, upon which to found a judgment: Stansell v. Corning, 21 M. 242.

53. A finding of facts will not support a judgment for plaintiff if it does not contain all that is essential to the plaintiff's recovery: Burdick v. Chamberlain, 38 M. 610; Peck v. City National Bank, 51 M. 353.

54. If the findings of fact support the judgment rendered, it is unimportant whether or not the conclusions of law, apart from the judgment, are correct: Nelson v. Ferris, 30 M. 497.

55. Where, upon a trial by the court without a jury, judgment has passed for defendant, and the facts found show the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment, the reasons stated by the court for its conclusions are immaterial: Botsford v. Simmons, 32 M. 352.

56. Where no basis is shown for a judgment for plaintiff, if there has been no mistrial defendant must have judgment; and it is immaterial whether the reason assigned for it is correct or not: Seeley v. Albrecht, 41 M. 525.

57. A judgment cannot be based upon a judge's special finding which consists merely of an informal statement made up of facts, items of evidence, offers of proof, rulings on objections and an opinion on the result: Steele v. Matteson, 50 M. 313.

58. A judgment for plaintiff cannot be based upon a mere statement by a referee as to what sums he should allow: Weirich v. Cook, 39 M. 134.

59. The power to render judgments against sureties on bonds in legal proceedings, without a separate action, is statutory, and cannot be extended by implication: Willard v. Fralick, 31 M. 431.

As to such judgments, see APPEAL, §§ 373, 374, 484, 485; CERTIORARI, §§ 213, 214; COSTS, §§ 349-354.

As to summary entry of judgment on forfeited criminal recognizance, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 39.

60. A judgment was taken against P. and F. on their joint covenant that P. should pay all costs and damages that should be awarded against him in a certain cause. The entry did not show that it was shown to the court, nor did the record show it to be certified by the clerk, which of the defendants was principal, and which surety or bail (R. S. 1838, p. 451, § 9). Held no ground for reversing the judgment: Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

61. Judgment for plaintiff cannot be rendered upon a stipulation of facts that does not unequivocally show a liability: Gillett v. Detroit Board of Trade, 46 M. 309.

As to conditional stipulation for judgment, see EVIDENCE, § 300.

(c) Confession of judgment.

See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (a), 3.

62. A judgment upon a bond and warrant of attorney as provided by the statute may be entered in vacation: Watkins v. Wallace, 19 M. 57.

63. It is no objection to a judgment entered up in the circuit court by confession that the warrant of attorney is upon the same piece of paper as the note it authorizes judgment to be taken upon. The warrant of attorney and note are still to be regarded as separate instruments (H. S. § 7662), notwithstanding they are thus connected: Trombly v. Parsons, 10 M. 272.

64. The note and warrant of attorney bearing different dates are presumed to have been executed at the times they respectively bear date, notwithstanding they are upon the same paper: Ibid.

65. But it would not be a valid objection to a judgment taken by confession that they were both executed at the same time: Ibid.

66. A warrant of attorney need not be proved to sustain a confession of judgment taken thereunder within a year and a day after its execution: Elliott v. Ives, 44 M. 190.

67. An infant cannot, in his own name, confess judgment: Soper v. Fry, 37 M. 286.

68. A judgment confessed by an infant's partner in the name of the firm is void, and will not support an attachment as against a previous assignee of the goods attached: Ibid.

69. Partners have no implied authority to confess judgment for each other: Ibid.

Of justices' judgments, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (a), 4.

70. A judgment does not exist until put in due form by the court: Green v. Eaton Probate Judge, 40 M. 244.

71. No formal judgment record need be made up in the circuit court except when required by one of the parties: Emery v. Whitwell, 6 M. 474.

72. Under our practice the files and journal entries of the circuit court are a substitute for the judgment record: Norvell v. McHenry, 1 M. 227; Crane v. Hardy, 1 M. 56; Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 M. 372; Whitwell v. Emory, 8 M. 84; Emery v. Whitwell, 6 M. 474; Kenyon v. Baker, 16 M. 373; Hovey v. Smith, 22 M. 170.

73. In an auxiliary proceeding in garnishment the judgment against the principal debtor may be proved by the judgment entry merely: Strong v. Hollon, 39 M. 411.

74. The practice of the courts of this state authorizing the files and journal entries to be used in place of a record does not dispense with any of the essential requisites and evidences of a judgment. An order for final judgment must not only ascertain the determination of the court upon the matters submitted, but the parties in favor of and against whom it operates: Whitwell v. Emory, 8 M. 84.

75. The time of entering judgment after verdict is a matter of practice within the discretion of the court: Harvey v. McAdams, 32 M. 472.

76. The entry of a judgment fifteen days after verdict, though a stay of proceedings granted for the purpose of giving time to make a motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial has not yet expired, is not error: the judgment is only provisional, and does not deprive a party of the right to move for a new trial: Ibid.

77. Judgment on a special finding filed in vacation in a civil case must be entered as of the last day of the preceding term or it will be irregular: Steele v. Matteson, 50 M. 313.

78. Entry of judgment nunc pro tunc will not cure an antecedent levy and sale as against persons who have bought the premises in good faith, and after the levy and sale were set aside, reasonably supposing the judicial proceedings to be abandoned. So held where judgment was not entered on a verdict for sixteen years and the premises were bought in eight: Ninde v. Clark, 62 M. 124.

79. A judgment, the entry of which was corrected by mandamus, was ordered to take effect from the date of the correction, so that full opportunity to ask for a review thereof might be saved: Frederick v. Mecosta Circuit Judge, 52 M. 529.

(e) Amendment.

See EQUITY, XII, (d); JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (a), 5.

80. A judgment cannot be materially changed, if at all, without giving notice to the party injured by such action: Green v. Eaton Probate Judge, 40 M. 244.

81. An entry of judgment in the journal of the court may properly be corrected by order of the judge if nobody has been misled by the error, and the party against whom the judgment was rendered knew what it actually was and took action accordingly: Souvais v. Leavitt, 53 M. 577.

82. The clerk's entries may, even after error brought, be amended in affirmance of the judgment: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

83. Where the files and records in the case clearly show that the court intended to render a certain judgment, to which the party was entitled, but the entry actually made was defective, the court may amend the record to what it should have been at any time thereafter: Emery v. Whitwell, 6 M. 474.

84. Notice of the application to amend the record is not necessary in such case, because the effect of the record is not changed by it, and no one's rights are affected: Ibid.

85. But no actual amendment need be made. The whole record shall be read, when brought up collaterally, precisely as if the amendments due as a matter of right had actually been made: Ibid.

86. Formal inaccuracies in the entry of a judgment are cured by the statute of amendments: Hall v. Grovier, 25 M. 428.

87. That statute also cures technical errors in awarding interlocutory judgment, ordering an assessment of damages and giving final judgment, if on the entire record the result should not be disturbed: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 578.

88. Where the judgment entered upon special findings of fact was one appropriate to assumpsit, not, as it should have been, to trespass, the imperfection is cured by the statute of amendments; and, moreover, a proper judgment could be entered in the supreme court on the findings: Ferton v. Feller, 83 M. 199.

89. After a trial without a jury and judgment for plaintiff in the ordinary form, defendant moved for a new trial, and the court set aside the order for judgment and immediately entered judgment again for the same amount, embodying therein a finding of the facts and law by the judge. Defendant brought error, contending that the court could not wholly set aside and vacate a judgment without granting a new trial. Held, that the action of the court amounted substantially to an amendment of the judgment, and was not erroneous. But the amendment was unnecessary, as the statute does not require the judge's finding to be embraced in the judgment: Lorman v. Benson, 9 M. 237.

90. Where, by clerical error in entering judgment in replevin, the damages for detention were recited at $120 instead of six cents, the error was held cured by the statute of jeofails: Lyman v. Becannon, 29 M. 466.

91. The right to amend ought not to be confined any further than safety requires, and should be liberally recognized wherever the record itself furnishes the data for the amendment. But where it is based on an outside showing, all practicable precautions should be taken to see that no one is wronged, and the party adversely interested ought always to be notified, where possible, especially if the proceedings are ancient: Montgomery v. Merrill, 86 M. 97.

92. An application for leave to amend defective proceedings comes too late when not made until seventeen years have passed; and though the defect remained for a long time undetected, a delay of three years or more after its detection is not excused by the mere fact that the circuit judge had been of counsel and was incompetent to hear the application. The utmost promptness is required in moving to correct mistakes in the record: Ibid.

93. Although under our statute courts may amend clerical errors at any time, yet, after the term, that which enters into the consideration of the court, and forms a part of the judgment, cannot be changed; nor can courts at a subsequent term, under the form of an amendment, render a judgment: Whitwell v. Emory, 3 M. 84.

94. A court of record, in which judgment has been rendered against two persons, may on motion amend the judgment record by striking out the name of one defendant who appears to have been sued as indorser of the note declared on, but who was not served: Arnold v. Nye, 23 M. 286.

95. When John R. Wyllie and John Wyllie were by mistake named as plaintiffs, instead of John R. Wyllie and Hannah Wyllie, an amendment was properly allowed on the trial inserting the right name wherever necessary, and the judgment was admissible in evidence although the entry thereof showed the same mistake: Barmon v. Clippert, 58 M. 877.

96. The incorporation by amendment into a judgment of matter that is mere surplusage does not vitiate: Lorman v. Benson, 9 M. 237.

97. The right to an amendment held to have been waived by delay for several terms and by proceeding on execution: Gray v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 49 M. 628.

II. VALIDITY AND EFFECT.

That judgment creates no lien, see LIENS, § 8.

(a) Setting aside or vacating.

See EQUITY, XII, (e); JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (b), 1.

As to granting new trials in general, see PRACTICE, III, (g).

Relief in chancery against judgments, see EQUITY, §§ 504-523.

96. A judgment rendered by the late supreme court when but two of the judges were present who had heard the argument of the case is irregular, and will be vacated on motion, though more than a term has elapsed since its entry: Jagger v. Coon, 5 M. 81.

99. A judgment on issue joined, which is rendered without notice of trial or appearance at the trial, though not void is irregular, and should be set aside: People v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

100. The circuit court may set aside a judgment at a term subsequent to its rendition: Van Renselaer v. Whiting, 12 M. 449; Campau v. Coates, 17 M. 285.

101. A client whose attorney has neglected his case and suffered judgment to pass against him, but who has himself been guilty of no laches, is not confined to his remedy against the attorney, but the court in the exercise of its discretion may set aside the judgment and allow him to defend though a term has elapsed: Loree v. Reeves, 2 M. 183.

102. In a suit against a non-resident the circuit court may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, set aside the judgment and permit defendant to plead, where he has had no notice of the proceedings and has been guilty of no laches. And this though a term has elapsed: Hurlburt v. Reed, 5 M. 80.

103. Where there has been no unnecessary delay, and where the rights of third persons will not be prejudiced, the circuit court has power to vacate, on motion, a judgment erroneously entered, and to enter the proper judgment: Frederick v. Mecosta Circuit Judge, 52 M. 529.

104. A motion to set aside a judgment for irregularity, made two years after it was rendered, the delay being unexplained, is too late: People v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

105. Where it is claimed that a judgment has been obtained by fraud the proper remedy, after a lapse of five or six years, is not a motion based on ex parte affidavits to set it aside, but resort should be had to an original suit, where a distinct issue may be made by pleadings, and tried upon oral examination of witnesses. An order setting aside judgment on such a motion after such a lapse of time, and while a suit in equity in which considerable progress had been made, and in which like relief was sought, was still pending, was held erroneous: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

106. Dismissal of an appeal from the probate of a will is a final judgment which re-mands the proceedings to the probate court, and which cannot be set aside if not complained of within the two years allowed for removing proceedings to the supreme court on error or certiorari: Ellair v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 46 M. 496.

107. After the probate court has put into the form of a decree its final adjudication upon the merits, it cannot review or set aside such decree: Grady v. Hughes, 64 M. 540; Holden v. Lathrop, 65 M. 652 (April 28, '87).

108. A stipulation between the parties that a judgment should be set aside without costs upon the reversal, on writ of error, of another judgment, upon certain specified conditions, has no binding force without compliance with the conditions, and the court should not act upon it: Roche v. Branch Circuit Judge, 26 M. 870.

109. Where a new trial is granted on conditions the judgment remains in force subject to the conditions, and is not absolutely vacated until they are performed: Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 81.

110. The discontinuance, upon stipulation, of a writ of error does not vacate the judgment below: Cummerford v. Paulus, 66 M. 648 (July 7, '87).

111. A payment or settlement of a judgment, not vacating it, leaves its judicial force continuing: Ibid.

112. A judgment in an attachment suit cannot be set aside for irregularity, on the motion of a person to whom the property attached had been conveyed by the defendant, after service of the attachment, but who is a stranger to the record: People v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

113. Where the court makes an order vacating a judgment as to one of two joint debtors, the effect is to vacate it as to both: Van Renselaer v. Whiting, 12 M. 449.

114. Where a judgment against two is set aside as to one, but all concerned treat it as set aside as to both, it may be so considered: McArthur v. Oliver, 53 M. 299, 305.

115. Where a written request is made seasonably for a finding of facts, and judgment is entered without such finding, it is not error to set aside the judgment and enter a new one after the finding is filed: Hunt v. Patterson, 88 M. 95.

116. Refusal to open a judgment that an affidavit of non-execution may be supplied is discretionary: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 40 M. 168.

117. Setting aside an irregular judgment may be compelled by mandamus: People v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

(b) How far conclusive; collateral attack.

See EQUITY, XII, (c), 2, 3; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (b), 2.

As to attacking judgment for want of jurisdiction, see JURISDICTION, §§ 6-15, 108-116.

As to conclusiveness and effect of judgments in ejectment, see EJECTMENT, §§ 198-206.

118. A judgment of a court of another state must be given the same credit here that it has by law or usage in the state where it was rendered; but it is not to be given more than its domestic force: Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 M. 371.

119. A foreign judgment may have great force or even be conclusive as evidence, but it cannot be enforced as a judgment outside of the jurisdiction in which it is given without being established in new legal proceedings: Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 M. 624.

120. A judgment in a proceeding for a forfeiture under the United States revenue laws, pro forma in rem, but practically against the claimant of the property, is not conclusive evidence against parties who have no notice of the proceedings, as to facts on which the judgment was founded: Dean v. Chapin, 22 M. 275.

121. The judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is, as a plea, a bar, and as evidence conclusive between the same parties and their privies: Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276; Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 M. 372.

122. Legal proceedings bind only parties and their privies; and though proceedings in rem bind every one, they must have been commenced by some authorized person: Besançon v. Brownson, 39 M. 888.

123. A judgment for plaintiff in an action for breach of warranty in a sale of chattels affirms the validity of the contract: Barker v. Cleveland, 19 M. 280.

124. A judgment between strangers cannot be allowed to prove anything more, whether presumptively or absolutely, than what was alleged and determined as between them: Hines v. Jenkins, 64 M. 469 (Jan. 20, '87).

125. In a proper case it seems that a judgment against a corporation, if obtained without fraud or collusion, is conclusive and binding upon one of its stockholders as to the nature and extent of the company's liability; but the questions whether the cause of action adjudicated was of a nature to render the stockholders liable under the statute, and whether the conditions as to ownership of stock, and the fact of such ownership at the time specified, existed, should be considered open: Bohn v. Brown, 38 M. 257.

126. Where a probate order adjudges a man incompetent to take care of his property and appoints a guardian, a recital in such order that the man is insane is not evidence that he lacks testamentary capacity: Rice v. Rice, 50 M. 448, 53 M. 432.

127. A judgment in trespass or in trespass on the case does not determine the title to land: Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 M. 455; Busch v. Nester, 62 M. 381; Fahey v. Crotty, 63 M. 383.

128. Dismissal of a writ of error leaves the judgment upon which it was sued out operative and conclusive: Hitchcock v. Pratt, 51 M. 263.

130. A judgment cannot be attacked by strangers to the record: Baugh v. Baugh, 37 M. 59.

131. A decree against an executor on his accounting, where nothing appears to put in question the jurisdiction of the probate court, cannot be attacked collaterally on the merits in a suit on the executor's bond: Holden v. Lathrop, 65 M. 653 (April 28, '87).

132. Where a court has jurisdiction its proceedings cannot be impeached collaterally: Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

133. Where the record of a case is questioned collaterally only such objections can be noticed as affect the jurisdiction to dispose of it: Pettiford v. Zoellner, 45 M. 358.

134. Mere irregularities or errors will not justify the rejection of a collateral judgment offered in evidence; to warrant such rejection its defects must make the judgment jurisdictionally invalid: Bigelow v. Barre, 80 M. 1.

135. Sureties are concluded by a judgment against their principal obtained in the customary manner and in the course of regular proceedings, but not by a secret confession of judgment fraudulently and collusively made between him and the obligee: Wright v. Hake, 38 M. 525.

136. A receiptor to the sheriff for property levied on under an execution is estopped from denying the validity of the execution: Burk v. Webb, 32 M. 173.

137. The regularity of a judgment cannot be inquired into on judgment creditor's bill: Williams v. Hubbard, 1 M. 446.

138. Where a judgment after due service against a married woman is not impeached on error or appeal, its conclusiveness cannot be questioned on account of the invalidity of the cause of action: Wilson v. Coolidge, 42 M. 112.

139. Where a judgment is regularly rendered and not appealed from, it cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the suit should have been brought in the name of a different official plaintiff: Somers v. Losey, 48 M. 294.

140. A sheriff sought to evade a writ of replevin by leaving the goods in the receptor's hands while the writ was served on himself, and afterwards selling them. As he was then prevented from delivering them, however, he afterwards, and without further process, again seized the goods, delivered them, and was again sued in replevin. In the first suit he suffered judgment for acting on void process. In the second the same issue was tried and he recovered. Held, that in the second suit the validity of the process was res adjudicata; that the first judgment could not be collaterally assailed by retrying that issue until the errors of the first trial, if there were any, had been corrected by an appellate court; and that in making the second seizure the sheriff was a trespasser and could confer no right under it: Mayhue v. Snell, 37 M. 305.

141. Defendants in an attachment proceeding in the federal court assigned a debt due them, and the debtor was afterward garnished and the assignee notified to appear in the federal court and maintain the rights conferred by the assignment. The assignee did not appear, and judgment was rendered against the garnishee upon the statutory issue provided for by H. S. § 8085. The assignee meanwhile sued the garnishee in the state courts and recovered judgment. Held, on error, that the assignee was bound by the proceedings in the federal court, which had possession of the principal controversy and could take cognizance of collateral issues: Rothschild v. Burton, 57 M. 540.

142. Where a claim against an estate is allowed, upon an appeal from commissioners, by a court which has jurisdiction, and no fraud is proved against the adjudication, the allowance is conclusive as against any collateral attempt to impeach it: O'Connor v. Boylan, 49 M. 209.

143. An adjudication by a bankruptcy court in a certain case, that an attachment was a valid lien on such property as was actually levied upon more than four months before the bankruptcy proceedings were begun, does not fix the identity of the property attached, and in itself is therefore incompetent as evidence to determine the validity of specific attachments: Rowley v. Grover, 37 M. 588.

That a discharge in bankruptcy is conclusive as to non-liability, and cannot be attacked collaterally, see BANKRUPTCY, §§ 18-22.

(c) Conclusiveness as to claims or defences that might have been pleaded.

See EQUITY, §§ 1367-1371, 1375.

144. A defence cannot be withheld to be used in the retrial of a dispute respecting the same subject-matter when a single suit could end the whole controversy: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

145. A defendant can withhold his claim of set-off to be litigated in another suit: McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 M. 215.

146. Objections to the validity of proceedings involved in a suit cannot be raised in a later case if purposely withheld or reserved in the first one: Clark v. Wiles, 54 M. 323.

147. One who is sued in respect to one subject-matter is not precluded in any after litigation involving the same questions, though relating to a different subject-matter, from introducing defences not used in the former suit: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

148. The subject-matter of a litigation is the right which one party claims as against the other, and on which he demands the judgment of the court: Ibid.

149. Where the execution of a paper is admitted by failure to deny it on oath, it is expressly left outside the issue, and, not being part of the subject-matter of the suit, can be put in issue in other litigation on the same paper: Ibid.

150. A claim which was a proper matter of defence in an action at law cannot afterwards be made the subject of an equitable set-off: Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

151. B. had a contract with M., but sued him on the common counts before a justice to recover back an overpayment. He did not put the contract in issue, though he gave M. credits under it. M. filed no set-off, but immediately sued B. before another justice for the whole amount of his bill. Held, that the judgment in the first suit did not bar the second: McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 M. 215.

152. If a counter-claim is not based on payments made, but constitutes proper set-off, the only effect of failing to appear and plead and prove it would be that, in any subsequent action to recover it, costs could not also be recovered: Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316.

153. A defendant who, when sued upon a contract, does not recoup his damages for plaintiff's negligent performance, but sues separately for such damages and gets judgment, cannot plead such judgment in bar of the action against him; nor is the plaintiff in the former action estopped from prosecuting it by the judgment in the latter: Mimnaugh v. Partlin, 67 M. 391 (Oct. 27, '87).

154. Where one has a demand which is capable of being used by way of recoupment, it is at his option whether he will so use it, or, or instead thereof, bring a separate action upon it: Ward v. Fellers, 3 M. 281; Morehouse v. Baker, 48 M. 335; Mimnaugh v. Partlin, 67 M. 391 (Oct. 27, '87).

155. One who fails in equity to have a judgment set aside for fraud may contest at law a void execution sale thereon, and is not debarred from doing so by not having put it in issue in his chancery suit: Bonker v. Charlesworth, 33 M. 81.

156. In a lawsuit involving the title to land, the plaintiff is not estopped from contesting the regularity of a statutory foreclosure under which the title has been obtained, by having omitted to raise that question in a former suit brought by him in chancery to set aside the mortgage as invalid: Ibid.

157. A tenant who had been evicted by another tenant claiming under a prior lease brought suit upon his landlord's alleged agreement to indemnify him for the costs and expenses of appealing from the eviction proceedings; judgment went for defendant. Held, that this barred a later action for outlays alleged to have been made under the same agreement but subsequent to the former suit: Cummerford v. Paulus, 66 M. 648 (July 7, '87).

158. Where a party has recovered on a contract the purchase price of staves that were to be delivered by him thereunder to defendant, his failure, by reason of the absence or drunkenness of a witness, to prove the delivery of a certain lot, and the withdrawal of that item in his claim, will not authorize him to bring another suit for it; this item was not a distinct cause of action, and the former judgment was a final determination of the damages he was entitled to recover under the contract: Dutton v. Shaw, 35 M. 431.

1. In general.

See EQUITY, XII, (c), 2, 3.

159. A decision once made in a case must continue to govern it, notwithstanding the point then decided is not held to be law in other cases: Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 M. 263.

160. The rule of law as laid down by the supreme court in the decision of a cause is to be applied upon the same state of facts in all the subsequent proceedings in the cause: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 67 M. 677 (Jan. 5, '88).

161. A decision made at the first hearing of a case in a court of review is not conclusive on the same point at a second hearing, if the latter record contains evidence of additional facts relating thereto: White v. Campbell, 25 M. 463.

162. Plaintiff below brought error to reverse the judgment below for a charge adverse to him. There was a variance between the declaration and the proof which would have precluded his recovering, but this was not suggested in the supreme court as an objection to reversal. A new trial being ordered, the same variance appeared, but plaintiff recovered. Held, that defendants bringing error could not for the first time insist that there was a variance, as that point had been constructively ruled against them, upon their tacit waiver, by the reversal: Great Western R. Co. v. Hawkins, 18 M. 427. See Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 M. 329, 338.

163. An affirmance of judgment by an equal division of the supreme court is as conclusive as any other judgment: Lyon v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 37 M. 877.

164. A decision by a majority of the supreme court is as conclusive as if it were unanimous: McCutcheon v. Homer, 43 M. 483; Feige v. M. C. R. Co., 62 M. 1.

165. And a change in the composition of the court will not warrant a reopening of the controversy unless the court itself orders a reargument: McCutcheon v. Homer, 43 M. 483.

166. An adjudication is conclusive in respect to (1) the subject-matter of the litigation, and (2) the point of fact or law, or both, necessarily settled in determining the issue on the subject-matter: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

167. Parties to a controversy cannot, after judgment, revive it in another court and cause, in order to raise again the questions already in issue and adjudicated: Hudson v. Superior Court Judge, 42 M. 239.

168. Adjudications upon the subject-matter of a suit are conclusive wherever any question respecting it arises afterwards in a collateral suit, and in any new suit in which the pleadings put any part of it in issue; and this is so whether the adjudication was obtained on default, or whether all possible questions were raised on the trial, or whether it was correct in fact or law: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

169. A judgment rendered upon confession has the same effect as one rendered upon a trial: Town v. Smith, 14 M. 848.

170. Estoppel by a previous judgment does not depend on its justice, but on the fact that the merits have been passed upon: Fifield v. Edwards, 39 M. 264.

171. An order's superfluous recital concerning a matter not necessarily involved in the main issue is not conclusive as an adjudication: Rice v. Rice, 58 M. 432.

172. To make a judgment in one case a bar to another action it is not essential that the object of the two suits should be the same; nor that the parties should stand in the same relative position to each other; nor that the point in controversy should have been actually litigated in the first suit; it is sufficient if its determination was necessarily involved in the judgment: Barker v. Cleveland, 19 M. 230.

173. To render a former judgment a bar to a subsequent action it must have been rendered upon the merits, upon the same subject-matter, and between the same parties: Tucker v. Rohrback, 13 M. 78; Love v. Francis, 63 M. 181.

174. To bar a set-off introduced in a suit between A. and B., the plaintiff put in evidence a former suit brought by B. and his wife against A., in which a recovery was sought upon the same claim now sought to be set off. It was shown that judgment was rendered in that case, but it did not appear whether it was upon the merits or not. Held no bar: Tucker v. Rohrback, 13 M. 78.

175. Estoppel from asserting a claim excluded from a former suit cannot apply where it was not within the issue in that suit, and there was therefore no opportunity to establish it: Fifield v. Edwards, 39 M. 264.

176. A party is not estopped by a former litigation from vindicating, in another suit, rights that were not involved and that could not properly be litigated in the former one: Nichols v. Marsh, 61 M. 509.

177. Where the execution and delivery of a lease are disputed in a suit for rent, the determination of the issue concludes the parties in any subsequent litigation involving the right to rent under the same lease: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

178. A judgment upon a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, so long as it remains in force, would be a conclusive adjudication upon any defence to the validity of the subscription: Gould v. Vaughan, 30 M. 376.

179. Judgment in an action for slander is a bar to any future action for any repetition thereof open to proof on the trial: Leonard v. Pope, 27 M. 145.

180. Where seduction has been proved in aggravation of damages in a breach of promise case the recovery will bar any future action for the seduction: Sheahan v. Parry, 27 M. 217.

181. A judgment of nonsuit is not a final disposition of the subject-matter in litigation, and ordinarily is not a bar to a subsequent suit for the same cause of action: Bowne v. Johnson, 1 D. 185.

182. Judgment which is ineffectual by reason of a mistake in the name of one of the plaintiffs will not prevent them from bringing a new suit upon it: Wixom v. Stephens, 17 M. 518.

183. A judgment rendered in a court that by statute could have no jurisdiction over defendant's person is no bar to a suit in a competent court: Basom v. Taylor, 39 M. 689.

184. A judgment in a proceeding begun before any cause of action has accrued can have no bearing on another proceeding begun by the same party; there can be no presumption of identity, and there is no occasion to inquire whether the judgment is pleadable in bar or in abatement: Hart v. Lindley, 50 M. 20.

185. The plea of former judgment cannot be sustained if it does not appear that plaintiff in the former suit had a right to bring his suit at the time he brought it, and that it was decided on its merits. And the contrary may be shown in meeting such a plea: Wood v. Faut, 55 M. 185.

186. Judgment for defendant for costs, on the ground that the claim sued was not yet due, is no bar to a new suit: Franks v. Fechheimer, 44 M. 177.

187. A judgment for plaintiff in an action for breach of warranty in a sale of chattels concludes nothing concerning payment on such contract, and does not bar an action for the purchase price: Barker v. Cleveland, 19 M. 230.

188. The fact that a judgment has been recovered on a note secured by mortgage is no answer to a suit by the mortgagors to have the mortgage set aside on showing that the note has actually been paid: Rickle v. Dow, 39 M. 91.

189. The result of a suit for the taxes of particular years is not res judicata in subsequent suits between the same parties for taxes of other years, and the decisions upon legal questions arising in the first case are important only as precedents: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193.

190. An adjudication that a claim filed under a general assignment could not be based on a contract of purchase of goods which the claimant vendors had rescinded for fraud does not bar a claim for the conversion of the goods: Farwell v. Myers, 64 M. 234.

191. A disallowance of a claim presented to commissioners on an estate is not a bar to a subsequent suit where the claim was not adjudicated upon the merits and where there was no opportunity for such adjudication: McKinney v. Curtiss, 60 M. 611.

192. A judgment for defendant on a general demurrer to the declaration is not a bar to a new action where a different state of facts is declared upon: Rodman v. M. C. R. Co., 59 M. 895.

193. A judgment for defendants in a joint action does not bar another proceeding against a portion of them on the same cause of action: Detroit v. Houghton, 42 M. 459.

194. If one sues in assumpsit for the value of chattels, where by strict rules only an action of tort would lie, and obtains judgment, the judgment will determine the matters in issue as conclusively as though the proper action had been brought: Jennings v. Sheldon, 44 M. 92.

195. A judgment for defendant in replevin, for exempt property taken by him on execution, bars trover against him for its conversion, unless after the return of the property and before its sale the claim of exemption is plainly made: McGuire v. Galligan, 57 M. 89.

196. A judgment in replevin of recovery and for damages for detention cannot, it seems, bar an action for unlawful trespass and personal wrongs distinct from the detention of the property; and certainly, to be used for any such purpose, it must be pleaded in bar: Briggs v. Milburn, 40 M. 512.

197. The validity of a will under which plaintiff in ejectment claims, and which was admitted to probate though contested by defendant, cannot be questioned by the latter in such action of ejectment: Johnson v. Johnson, 70 M. 65 (April 27, '88).

198. Judgment recovered in Michigan by a foreign executor suing in his own name on a note belonging to the estate and payable to bearer bars any subsequent proceeding against defendant: Knapp v. Lee, 42 M. 41.

199. A mortgagee of chattels brought replevin against an attaching creditor, and sought to show that the demand in one of the attachment cases, which had passed into judgment, had been paid before judgment. Held that, if there was no showing of collusion between the attachment creditor and the debtor, this would be an attempt to retry the question involved in the attachment suit: Wallen v. Rossman, 45 M. 833.

200. A judgment in replevin against an officer holding goods under an attachment does not estop the same or prevent any other officer from levying execution on the same goods in a different suit brought by another creditor of the party against whom the attachment was issued, where such creditor had no interest in the replevin suit nor the right to intervene therein. Nor would it be conclusive of the title as against a purchaser at the execution sale: McKay v. Kilburn, 42 M. 614.

201. The denial of a motion for a new trial, unless proceedings by mandamus are taken to review the decision as an abuse of discretion, is res adjudicata upon the ground urged in support of the motion: Gray v. Barton, 62 M. 186.

As to effect of denial or award of MANDAMUS, see that title, §§ 301-304.

That dismissal of writ of error does not bar new writ, see ERROR, §§ 222, 223.

202. Where the same transaction is involved in two cases the mere verdict of the jury in one of them cannot be shown in the other for the purpose of fixing the quality of the transaction. But the record in the former may operate as a bar in the latter: Wheeler v. Wallace, 58 M. 364.

203. If, when sued on his bond, a surety in certiorari shows as a defence a former judgment against himself, it is proper to rebut this by testimony that it was vacated because he had notified the plaintiff's attorney that no judgment could be given against him without a direct suit on the bond: Porter v. Leache, 56 M. 40.

204. Where the subject-matter of a suit has confessedly been in litigation before, the evidence that the merits were not passed on ought to exclude all other hypotheses: Baxter v. Aubrey, 41 M. 14.

205. In order to be a bar both the issue and judgment must be taken and rendered upon the merits; and briefs of counsel are inadmissible to show the basis of the judgment: Greenlee v. Lowing, 35 M. 63.

As to parol evidence to show basis of former judgment, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1251-1254.

2. Who are bound.

See EQUITY, XII, (c), 1.

206. A matter once fully adjudicated is conclusively adjudicated as between parties and privies: Hazen v. Reed, 30 M. 831.

207. Where one party to a contract claims that it has been rescinded and recovers judgment against the other party upon the quantum meruit, he is estopped, in a later litigation with the same party, from claiming the right to carry out the contract; and the record in the former action is admissible to establish the estoppel: Martin v. Boyce, 49 M. 122.

208. A party to a judgment is precluded by it from going behind it to dispute the grounds on which it was rendered: Pierson v. Reynolds, 49 M. 224.

209. A judgment not only fixes the extent of liability, but the party or parties liable, and if such party is a corporation it is not merely individual members thereof that are held: Brewer v. Michigan Salt Association, 58 M. 351.

210. The reason why judgments of courts having jurisdiction are conclusive on parties and privies is because such parties have had an opportunity to assert or defend their rights in the court giving judgment: Axford v. Graham, 57 M. 423.

211. As a general rule judgments bind only parties and their privies, and no one is bound by a proceeding to which he is not a party: Hale v. Chandler, 8 M. 531; Hodson v. Van Fossen, 26 M. 68; Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316; Bachelder v. Brown, 47 M. 366.

212. And to be a party in this sense one must be directly interested in the subject-matter, and have the right to make defence or control the proceedings, and appeal from the judgment: Hale v. Chandler, 8 M. 531.

213. One who sells chattels with warranty of title, and who, when his vendee is sued for their value by the real owner, takes upon himself the defence of the suit is bound by the result, whatever may have been the form of action: Jennings v. Sheldon, 44 M. 92.

214. Where the claimant of personalty sold by another assumes the defence of an action for the purchase price, brought by the vendor against the vendee, on the understanding that if the defence prevails the vendee will pay the claimant instead of the vendor, the judgment concludes the claimant's rights as between vendor and vendee: Estelle v. Peacock, 48 M. 469.

215. Where a third party in a suit upon negotiable paper claims such paper and takes upon himself the defence of the suit on that ground, the judgment binds him: Bachelder v. Brown, 47 M. 366.

216. A judgment for the amount of a lien does not prove breach of warranty unless rendered in a proceeding which the warrantors undertook to be concerned in or had proper notice to defend: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

217. A vendor of personalty notified by his vendee to defend title will be bound by the judgment but cannot hold his own vendor bound by it unless he has given the latter notice to defend; and this is so though the latter was a witness in the case: Axford v. Graham, 57 M. 423.

When covenantor is bound by judgment in ejectment against grantee, see EJECTMENT, §§ 202-205.

218. A judgment recovered by one who had assigned his claim to a third party after suit begun would be a bar to any future proceedings which the assignee might commence for the same cause of action: Peters v. Gallagher, 37 M. 407.

219. Plaintiffs in garnishment are bound by the judgment in a subsequent suit brought against the garnishee by his creditor's assignee which they have been notified to defend: Butler v. Wendell, 57 M. 62.

220. A constable seized a horse under a chattel mortgage, but the mortgagor recovered it in replevin and then sold it. The mortgagee then brought trover against the purchaser. Held, that he was not concluded by the judgment against the constable, even though the latter was his agent, and he had acted as attorney for him in the replevin suit: Warner v. Comstock, 55 M. 615.

221. Ejectment was brought against the executors of an estate, and they prevailed. The executor of one of the heirs, to whom the rest had conveyed their interests, afterwards brought ejectment for the same land against a grantee of the plaintiff in the first action. Held, that the former judgment operated as an estoppel against such grantee. And if all the heirs united in defending the first suit the estoppel would not be affected by a question whether, as between one of the heirs and the ancestor, the title was in one or the other: Whitford v. Crooks, 54 M. 261.

222. A proceeding to obtain widow's allowances is not binding upon a woman who had in good faith married decedent after the claimant had left him, and was living with him as his wife at the time of his death, but was not made a party to the proceeding brought by her predecessor: Young's Appeal, 52 M. 592.

223. While a probate decree allowing a claim on an insane decedent's bond might conclude the estate from questioning the bond, it cannot estop the widow from resisting a proceeding in aid of an execution thereon by a bill to set aside, for the grantor's insanity, a prior deed made to her by her husband:

Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Barnard, 48 M. 879.

224. No one legatee is estopped by a finding that has been set aside on the appeal of only one in a proceeding to determine the rights of all of them upon the distribution under the will: McClintock's Appeal, 58 M. 152.

225. The estate of a deceased judgment debtor has no better defence to an action on the judgment, or proceedings to collect it, than he would have had if living: Arnold v. Thompson, 19 M. 333.

226. A finding and report by commissioners on claims of an amount due the estate cannot be regarded as res adjudicata against one who has had no notice of their proposed action, and who never appeared in any way before the commissioners: Kimball v. Cannon, 59 M. 290.

227. A foreclosure for non-payment of interest only of a mortgage given to secure a note payable four years after the mortgagee's death to his heirs, interest payable to the mortgagee during his life-time only, held not to be res adjudicata as against the heirs in a contest between them and the mortgagee's administrator for the proceeds of the note: Love v. Francis, 63 M. 181.

228. Plaintiff brought an action against a sheriff for taking certain personal property, which, on final hearing, was determined against the plaintiff. After the sheriff had sold the property, plaintiff brought his action to recover the same against the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, but it was held that judgment in the suit against the sheriff was a bar to the action against the purchaser: Prentiss v. Holbrook, 2 M. 372.

229. A new township is not bound by a judgment upon bonds issued by the old township of which it formed a part, where such judgment was rendered in an action brought after the division and without making the new township a party: Hale v. Baldwin, 49 M. 270.

230. J.'s agent moved a division fence that stood between J.'s premises and P.'s. P. moved it back again in the night. J. tried to tear it down, and as P.'s wife resisted he assaulted her. In an action therefor by Mrs. P. she could not show, as res adjudicata, that in a former suit between the agent and a third person concerning other premises, but in which the principal matter in issue was the true location of a section line that P. claimed as the boundary to the premises in suit, the result was adverse to the agent: Phillips v. Jamieson, 51 M. 153.

231. A demand is merged in the judgment obtained thereon, and it no longer subsists for any purpose: Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316.

232. A debt is not merged in a judgment until a valid judgment has been obtained upon it: Wixom v. Stephens, 17 M. 518.

233. Where by mistake a judgment entered on confession on a note is for less than the amount due, the note is nevertheless merged in the judgment, and the plaintiff cannot maintain a suit for the balance: Town v. Smith, 14 M. 348.

234. And if the judgment could be treated as one for the whole amount confessed to be due, yet if plaintiff has taken execution and collected the lesser amount he must be regarded as having elected to treat it as a judgment for the lesser amount, and is as much bound by that election as if he had originally consented to have judgment taken for such amount: Ibid.

235. A note is not so merged in a judgment in attachment as to bar a personal action on it, or its assignment to a third person, if there has been no appearance in the attachment suit, and no part of the judgment satisfied: Smith v. Curtiss, 38 M. 393.

236. At common law a judgment against one joint debtor operates as a merger, and puts an end to any action on the original contract against either: Candee v. Clark, 2 M. 255; Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 M. 371.

237. A judgment rendered under the joint debtor act, in form against two joint debtors, one only of whom was served with process, is not an extinguishment of the demand sued upon: Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 M. 371; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 231.

238. Where suit was brought in the state of New York against two joint debtors, one of whom was not served with process, and did not appear in the action, and judgment in form was rendered against both under the joint debtor act, it was held that this judgment was not an extinguishment of the demand sued upon, and that an action brought subsequently in this state against the two was properly brought on the original demand instead of upon the judgment: Bonesteel v. Todd, 9 M. 371.

239. An order vacating a judgment as to one of two defendants cannot, in a subsequent suit against them both for the same cause of action, be treated as merging the whole claim in a judgment against the other defendant, if court, counsel and parties have meanwhile dealt with the judgment as wholly set aside: McArthur v. Oliver, 53 M. 299.

240. Judgments are under the control of the parties recovering them, or of their attorneys, and they may restrain the sheriff from proceeding to collect them: Peck v. City National Bank, 51 M. 354.

III. ASSIGNMENT.

241. An assignee of a judgment takes subject to such matters of set-off as existed in favor of the judgment debtor against the assignor up to the time when the debtor received notice of the assignment: Finn v. Corbitt, 36 M. 318.

242. If a defendant allows judgment to be taken for the full amount of a claim against him without setting up payments he has made thereon, he cannot set up such payments in an action afterwards brought by an assignee of the judgment, nor can he set off against such judgment a subsequent judgment obtained by him in a suit to recover back such payments from the assignor: Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316.

IV. SATISFACTION; DISCHARGE; STAY.

See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (c).

243. The levy of an execution upon sufficient personal property to pay the demand is prima facie a satisfaction of the judgment: Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150. See Henry v. Gregory, 29 M. 68.

244. But it is not conclusive evidence: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Kingsley, 2 D. 379.

245. Nor can one claim that a judgment is satisfied by a levy which he has himself unlawfully defeated: Nelson v. Ferris, 30 M. 497.

246. A levy on real estate is not a prima facie satisfaction of the judgment: Spafford v. Beach, 2 D. 150; Thurber v. Jewett, 3 M. 295.

247. Where separate judgments are obtained against two or more joint trespassers, the suing out of execution on one of them is an election by the plaintiff to enforce that judgment; and no action will afterwards lie on the others: Boardman v. Acer, 13 M. 77.

248. Defendant's attorney paid a judgment, agreeing with plaintiff's attorney that if defendant did not reimburse him plaintiff should pay it back to him, he to return the satisfaction of the judgment; but he took no assignment of the judgment to protect himself. Plaintiff supposed the judgment had been satisfied. Held, that the payment must, as far as plaintiff was concerned, be considered as one by defendant, and sufficient to cancel the judgment: Rogers v. Welte, 61 M. 258.

249. A. and B. being sued as makers of a note, A. employed an attorney and conducted the defence without help from B., taking a successful appeal and obtaining judgment for costs. B., who was insolvent, collusively receipted to plaintiff for the costs in the name of both defendants. Held, that the satisfaction should be set aside and a retaxation ordered in A.'s favor, and to protect the interests of A.'s attorney, to whom A. had turned over the bill of costs: Potter v. Hunt, 68 M. 243 (Jan. 19, '88).

250. A tender for the purpose of cancelling a judgment should include damages as well as costs, and a tender of the damages with the clerk's receipts for the costs is not sufficient: Thurber v. Jewett, 3 M. 295.

251. Voluntary payment of a judgment waives all objections to it, and there can be no relief: Hoag v. Breman, 3 M. 160.

252. On a showing of payment in full to plaintiff's attorney of a judgment, and of his authority to receive the same, a perpetual stay of proceedings is justifiable: Whitney v. McConnell, 30 M. 421.

253. Where the supreme court gave judgment of affirmance for the plaintiffs in an action upon a replevin bond, a motion in that court to stay proceedings on such judgment for the reason that the judgment for the return of the property in the replevin suit had been set aside in the circuit court upon a motion made on ex parte affidavits some five or six years after its rendition, was denied: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

When stay compelled by MANDAMUS, see that title, §§ 92-94.

Payment of judgment required in decree dismissing bill to enjoin execution, see EQUITY, § 1277.

Agreement to compromise judgment, see ESTOPPEL, § 149.

As to stay of execution, see EXECUTIONS, §§ 28-35; BANKRUPTCY, §§ 24, 25.

V. SET-OFF.

254. Whether, since the adoption of H. S. § 7710, governing the set-off of executions, there is any propriety in resorting to equity for the set-off of judgments, in the absence of special reasons, quere; at any rate, equity can give the moving party no greater advantages than the statute does: Wells v. Elsam, 40 M. 218.

255. Nor can a judgment assigned by a client to his attorney, in payment for the latter's services, be subjected to the set-off of a judgment recovered against the client, so far as it does not exceed the attorney's proper claims: Ibid.; Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

256. A judgment recovered before one justice can be ascertained and applied by another in satisfaction of a counter-claim recovered before him by the other party: McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 M. 215.

257. Where a judgment allowed to be taken for the full amount of a claim without deduction for payments has been assigned, a judgment subsequently obtained against the assignor in a suit to recover such payments cannot be set off against it in an action thereon by the assignee: Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 310.

258. A bill to compel the offset of judgments was dismissed, where one was a joint and the other a sole judgment, and that recovered by defendant had been lawfully assigned to a third person for a valuable consideration before there was any final judgment against which it could be set off: Ledyard v. Phillips, 58 M. 204.

259. Where, under H. S. § 7709, the sheriff has allowed a set-off of an execution against a larger one in his hands, and has received in money the balance of the latter, with the consent of both parties, and has returned the latter satisfied, a motion to set aside such return on the ground that the larger judgment had been previously assigned, and that consent to the set-off was given by mistake, should not be granted: Lyon v. Smith, 66 M. 676 (July 7, '87).

Discretionary refusal to compel set-off not reviewed, see MANDAMUS, § 95.

VI. ACTION UPON JUDGMENT; SCIRE FACIAS.

See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, V, (d).

260. In an action in one state upon a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction of another state, no plea or proof can be received in contradiction of any material fact appearing by the record, unless such plea or proof would be received in an action on the judgment in the state in which it was rendered: Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 M. 165.

261. Though by statute assumpsit may be brought, a judgment must be declared on specially and with accuracy. The count on an account stated will not lie thereon: Gooding v. Hingston, 20 M. 439.

262. A judgment rendered in favor of A. by mistake for B. cannot be sued on by B.

even if the mistake be proved: Gilbert v. Hanford, 13 M. 40.

263. Henry V. Libhart is not entitled to recover in an action upon a judgment in favor of H. V. Libhart, without any allegation or proof of his identity with the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered: Bennett v. Libhart, 27 M. 489.

264. The fact that the judgment was received in evidence by consent does not preclude the defendant from disputing the right to recover on it; proof of the judgment was only one of the steps necessary to make out a case: Ibid.

265. In an action to recover the balance due upon a foreign judgment, the declaration averred the recovery of judgment for a certain sum "and also the sum of $42.60 adjudged to said plaintiff," etc. The judgment record introduced in evidence showed a judgment for the sum named, "besides his costs and charges herein expended," and elsewhere showed that they had been fixed at the sum stated in the declaration. Held, that there was no fatal variance, and, though it was not shown how the costs were taxed, the proceedings fixing their amount could not be presumed illegal: Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 M. 448.

266. In a suit against a single defendant upon a judgment rendered in a foreign state against three defendants, and where the exemplification of the foreign judgment did not show any return of service upon the other two defendants, and contained recitals that they were proceeded against by publication, while the entry of judgment recited due service of summons upon all, and the judgment appeared to have been collected in part by seizure and sale of the property of one of the other defendants, and the plaintiff declared upon the judgments as one valid against all the defendants, giving no reason for proceeding against one alone, it was held that the judgment was not void on its face as against any of the defendants therein named, and that the plaintiff's declaration contained no allegations to warrant his going into evidence to show that the judgment bound the defendant alone. The foreign judgment, therefore, did not support a judgment against the single defendant: Dart v. Goss, 24 M. 266.

267. Writs of scire facias cannot issue to other counties than that in which the court sits: Burt v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 35 M. 228.

268. An insurance agent gave bond to his principals, conditioned to account for and pay over the moneys received by him as such.

Judgment having been recovered by them on this bond for money not accounted for and paid over, a scire facias was issued, assigning as a breach that the obligor had, before the judgment, received a further sum for which he failed to account, and the receipt of which he fraudulently concealed. On demurrer it was held that the fraudulent concealment was a sufficient reason for not including this sum in the original pleadings and judgment, and the demurrer was overruled: Johnson v. Provincial Ins. Co., 12 M. 216.

VII. JUDGMENT CREDITORS' PROCEEDING.

As to EXECUTIONS, see that title.

As to proceedings in equity, see EQUITY, II, (1).

269. The defects of the statute (H. S. §§ 8107-8121) providing a remedy at law in lieu of suits in equity by judgment creditors' bill pointed out, and resort to the statute deprecated: Reed v. Baker, 42 M. 272.

270. It seems to have been the intention of the legislature, when restoring (by act 120 of 1855) the remedy in equity, to abolish the whole statute as to proceedings at law, but apparently only the section forbidding creditors' bills was repealed: Ibid.

271. In such proceedings, an order holding that property in the hands of a person not made a party, and who has had no opportunity to be heard except as a witness, belongs to the judgment debtor, and is liable to execution against him, is void. Under H. S. §§ 8111, 8112, the appointment of a receiver who may sue directly the person supposed to be covering goods for such debtor is provided for: Ehlers v. Stoeckle, 37 M. 261.

As to appeals, see APPEAL, § 101.

V. ERRORS AND IRREGULARITIES; WANT OF JURISDICTION.

VI. CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION.

As to jurisdiction of particular courts, see COURTS, I; EQUITY, II; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, I.

As to jurisdiction of criminal prosecutions, see CRIMES, IV, (c), V, (a).

As to jurisdiction in particular proceedings, see their titles.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The jurisdiction of the state upon the lakes and their connecting waters extends to the national boundary: People v. Tyler, 7 M. 161.

2. The jurisdiction of our courts of actions for torts committed abroad is undoubted, but its exercise can only be claimed as matter of comity; and when it appears that our tribunals are resorted to for the purposes of an adjudication upon mere personal torts committed abroad, between persons who are all resident where the tort was committed, the court may properly decline to proceed: Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 M. 805.

3. The decision of a circuit judge that he has jurisdiction to hold a probate court — and his ignoring an objection is equivalent to such decision — cannot be attacked collaterally, and is final unless appealed from: Landon v. Comet, 62 M. 80.

4. While the policy of Michigan does not favor the action of judges in cases where they have been counsel, the jurisdiction of the court is not taken away because of the incapacity of the judge to sit in given cases; and every case must remain in the court where it originated until removed by lawful authority: Shannon v. Smith, 31 M. 451.

5. A court has no right to prevent suitors before it from insisting on its retention of jurisdiction in cases not properly removed from it: Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 31.

II. ESSENTIAL TO VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT.

6. If a court act without authority its judgments will be regarded as nullities; and the jurisdiction of a court exercising authority over a subject-matter may be inquired into in every court where the proceedings of the former are relied upon by a party claiming the benefit of such proceedings: Greenvault v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 2 D. 493.

7. It is immaterial how fair on its face may be any judgment, order, decree or license of a court when back of it lies an absolute legal impediment to making it: Eberstein v. Oswalt, 47 M. 254.

8. Where the want of jurisdiction appears on the record of a court of general jurisdiction the record is a nullity: Greenvault v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 2 D. 498; Wilson v. Arnold, 5 M. 98.

9. So with the judgment of a court of general jurisdiction of another state if the record shows a want of jurisdiction: Wilcox v. Casick, 2 M. 165.

10. The general doctrine is that no one can be subjected to a judgment without a suit against himself: Willard v. Fralick, 31 M. 431.

11. Parties whose interests are prejudiced may always take advantage of want of jurisdiction in the court where the injury occurred: Gillett v. Needham, 37 M. 143; Breen v. Pangborn, 51 M. 29; King v. Merritt, 67 M. 194 (Oct. 13, '87).

12. The rule that the judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter is binding until reversed, and cannot be attacked collaterally, applies only to parties and their privies and to such third persons, or strangers to the record, as would be prejudiced in regard to the same pre-existing right, if the judgment were given full credit and effect: Eureka Iron, etc. Works v. Bresnahan, 66 M. 489 (June 23, '87).

13. If, in fact, the subject-matter of a suit was not within the jurisdiction of the state from which the court derives its authority, its judgment is a nullity, and may be so treated everywhere: People v. Dawell, 25 M. 247.

14. The judicial proceedings to which full faith and credit must be given in every state besides that in which they are taken are those only in which the court was competent to act; and a prima facie showing of their regularity does not save them from impeachment by proper evidence: Reed v. Reed, 52 M. 117.

15. The record of an inferior court may be contradicted for the purpose of showing a want of jurisdiction of the person or of the subject-matter: Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 890.

III. How ACQUIRED.

(a) In general; notice.

See, also, PROCESS.

16. A court cannot give judgment against a party who has not appeared, without some evidence of jurisdiction, such as filing proof of publication or service: Denison v. Smith, 33 M. 155.

17. A defendant has a right to know from the record whether he is subject to the jurisdiction; where that depends on a previous service on some one else, it can be shown only by return of service or appearance: Ibid.

18. All extraordinary means of getting jurisdiction must be conformed to the legal authority: Platt v. Stewart, 10 M. 260; Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 M. 73.

19. Where jurisdiction is obtained by substituted in lieu of actual service the statutes must be strictly complied with or the proceedings cannot be sustained: Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 M. 73.

20. In special proceedings to acquire jurisdiction over non-residents without actual notice the necessary steps must appear affirmatively upon the record: Platt v. Stewart, 10 M. 260.

21. In special proceedings against parties not served or not appearing the substituted service must be strictly regular under the statutes: King v. Harrington, 14 M. 532.

22. A failure to comply with statutory requirements where the jurisdiction conferred is special, and no personal service is obtained, renders the judgment void, and the proceedings may be attacked collaterally: Nugent v. Nugent, 70 M. 52 (April 27, '89).

23. All exceptional modes of obtaining jurisdiction over persons, natural or artificial, not found within the state, must be confined to the cases and exercised in the manner precisely indicated in the statute: Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 M. 441; Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co., 33 M. 400; Steere v. Vanderberg, 67 M. 570 (Nov. 10, '87).

24. No jurisdiction of an action against a foreign corporation can be acquired by a service which does not comply with the statutory provisions therefor: American Express Co. v. Conant, 45 M. 642.

25. When service is made within a state upon an agent of a foreign corporation, it is essential, in order to support in a federal court the jurisdiction of the court to render a personal judgment, that it should appear somewhere in the record, either in the application for the writ, or accompanying its service, or in the pleadings or the findings of the court, that the corporation was engaged in business in the state: St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350.

26. Service of process beyond the jurisdiction of the court which issued it cannot oblige the party served to appear and defend in that court: McEwan v. Zimmer, 38 M. 765.

27. Under H. S. § 7317, providing that an action for work and labor may be commenced by service in any county adjoining that where suit is brought, no jurisdiction accrues unless the declaration shows not only that the work declared for was performed in the county where suit was brought, but also that plaintiff iff resided in that county at the time suit was begun: Smith v. Bresnahan, 59 M. 346.

28. Where the service of original process appears from the return to have been legal and proper, although false, it gives the court jurisdiction: Low v. Mills, 61 M. 35.

29. No man's rights can be affected by legal proceedings, without notice of them, actual or constructive, and an opportunity to be heard: Buck v. Sherman, 3 D. 176.

30. No court can lawfully adjudge any person to be responsible in any shape without giving him a proper opportunity to be heard in his own behalf. This notice is necessary to give the court jurisdiction: Montgomery v. Henry, 10 M. 19.

31. Every person having rights to be affected by the litigation is entitled to notice and a day in court, or reasonable opportunity to appear and defend his interests: Stoeckle v. Ehlers, 37 M. 260; Jewett v. Morris, 41 M. 689; Watson v. Hinchman, 41 M. 716; People v. Curtis, 41 M. 723; Noyes v. Hillier, 65 M. 686 (April 28, '87).

32. The ascertainment that a debt is due and unpaid, and the determination of the amount, are judicial acts, and can only be made where the party to be bound has had an opportunity of being heard in due course of law: Perkins v. Perkins, 16 M. 162.

33. An order finally disposing of one's property rights in a proceeding to which he is not a party, and in which he has no chance to be heard, unless as a witness, is void: Stoeckle v. Ehlers, 37 M. 261.

34. The opportunity for a hearing, if the circumstances admit, is always presumed to be preliminary to the exercise of judgment where the result is to deprive one party of a right or to give the other an advantage: Olmstead v. Farmers' F. Ins. Co., 50 M. 200.

35. There can be no constructive notice where there is no jurisdiction: Harbaugh v. Martin, 30 M. 284.

36. There can be no binding judgment against a party not actually served and not appearing: Hamilton v. Plumer, 67 M. 185 (Oct. 6, '87).

37. Personal judgments cannot rest on fictions of law nor be pronounced without an opportunity for hearing: Hilton v. Briggs, 54 M. 265.

38. Constructive notice of proceedings to enforce personal demands is insufficient: Probate Judge v. Abbott, 50 M. 279.

39. To give jurisdiction for the purpose of supporting proceedings against a garnishee some sort of service as to the principal defendant must be made within the county, either upon the person, or upon property or credits. Merely taking out a summons which is never served is not enough: McCloskey v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 26 M. 100.

40. Proceedings in rem bind every one, but they must have been commenced by the proper person: Besançon v. Brownson, 39 M. 388.

41. The theory upon which a judgment in rem is regarded as binding upon all the world is that all the world have constructive notice of the seizure, with the cause and purpose of the taking, and the time and place at which any person may appear before a competent tribunal, and have a trial before the condemnation of his property: Hibbard v. People, 4 M. 125; Wight v. Maxwell, 4 M. 45.

42. To sustain proceedings in rem it is essential that notice be given, either general to all the world, or special to the parties interested: Moore v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 55 M. 84.

43. A discharge in bankruptcy cannot be treated by another court as void as to any particular creditor of whose person the bankruptcy court did not obtain jurisdiction by service of notice; bankruptcy proceedings are not strictly in personam: Benedict v. Smith, 48 M. 593.

(b) Effect of appearance and plea.

As to what constitutes an appearance, see APPEARANCE.

44. A general demurrer waives objections to jurisdiction of the person: Thompson v. Mich. Mutual Benefit Assoc., 52 M. 522.

45. An appearance in an attachment case to object to the jurisdiction is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction to render judgment before thirty days, where there has been no personal service: Wright v. Russell, 19 M. 346.

46. A motion to set aside proceedings that are void for want of jurisdiction does not estop the moving party from objecting to their validity in a proceeding in which they are relied on by the opposite party: Gould v. Jacobson, 58 M. 288.

47. A plea in bar is a waiver of an objection to the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction: Webb v. Mann, 3 M. 139.

48. By voluntarily appearing and pleading to the merits one waives all defects in irregularities in the service and return of process, and he cannot thereafter object to the manner in which he was brought into court: Crane v. Hardy, 1 M. 56; Burson v. Huntington, 21 M. 415; Pardee v. Smith, 27 M. 33; Manhard v. Schott, 37 M. 234; Bryant v. Hendee, 40 M.

543; Austin v. Burroughs, 62 M. 181; Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 M. 208.

49. When defendant pleads to the merits the character of the process used to commence the action becomes immaterial: Miller v. Rosier, 31 M. 475.

50. One who joins issue, and goes to hearing on the merits, is generally understood to waive objections to the process which he does not distinctly make known: Maxwell v. Deens, 46 M. 35.

51. A defendant appeared and pleaded to the merits. The constable then amended his return so as to show that the service was bad. Defendant did not ask leave to withdraw his plea, but moved to dismiss, and his motion was properly denied, as his pleading to the merits raised an issue and made the question of service of no importance: Slattery v. Hilliker, 39 M. 573.

52. If a defendant whose motion, on special appearance, to quash the proceedings for defective service, is overruled, pleads to the action and goes to trial on the merits, he waives his objection and submits himself to the jurisdiction: Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 M. 208.

53. One who pleads the general issue submits to the jurisdiction and cannot first raise the question thereof in the supreme court: Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 38 M. 461; Gott v. Brigham, 41 M. 227.

54. If one appears as administrator when he is not named as such, and pleads the general issue, he cannot deny the jurisdiction: Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

55. The appearance of a defendant by putting in bail upon a capias ad respondendum is a waiver of any insufficiency in the affidavit for the writ: Stewart v. Hill, 1 M. 265.

56. After pleading and going to trial in an action begun by capias, defendant cannot insist on objections to the sufficiency of the affidavit for the writ: Taylor v. Adams, 58 M. 187.

57. One who pleads the general issue in an action on the case for deceit, and makes no defence to the jurisdiction, can hardly object afterwards to the affidavit for a capias in such proceeding: Wasey v. Mahoney, 55 M. 194.

58. Jurisdictional defects in an affidavit for a capias are not waived by putting in special bail and pleading in a cause: Stephen-son's Case, 32 M. 60.

59. Pleading to the merits does not waive the defects in an affidavit for the arrest of the defendant, if he has already moved to quash the proceedings and the motion has been denied: Warren v. Crane, 50 M. 300.

60. A defendant in the county court who, after arrest, applied for and obtained an adjournment, was too late to object to irregularities in the preliminary proceedings on the adjourned day: Stewart v. Hill, 1 M. 265.

61. Where jurisdictional objections may be waived, a party cannot go to trial upon the merits and afterwards question the jurisdiction: Home Ins. Co. v. Curtis, 32 M. 402.

62. Appearing in an action of replevin and pleading to the merits will waive the objection that the writ was returnable on Sunday: Pierce v. Rehfuß, 35 M. 53.

63. By appearing and joining issue in replevin defendant waives the right to have the writ set aside for defects in the affidavit and bond: Clark v. Dunlap, 50 M. 492.

64. The irregularity in noticing an action in tort for trial before all the defendants are brought in is waived by appearing and asking that the cause be set down for trial for a day certain: Cook v. Perry, 43 M. 623.

65. A general entry of appearance by an appellee before motion to dismiss gives the circuit court jurisdiction: McCombs v. Johnson, 47 M. 592.

66. Appearance in response to a summons to answer a complaint waives the informality where the proper process should have been an order to show cause: Curran v. Norris, 58 M. 512.

67. Want of publication of notice in condemnation proceedings is waived by voluntary appearance: East Saginaw & St. C. R. Co. v. Benham, 28 M. 459.

68. Jurisdiction to render judgment in rem cannot be obtained by appearance and plea to merits by one claiming as owner: Pine Sawlogs v. Sias, 43 M. 356.

As to effect of appearance in garnishment proceedings, see GARNISHMENT, §§ 104, 154, 155.

(c) Consent.

69. Parties with whose consent and concurrence a circuit judge has acted as judge of the probate court cannot, in a collateral proceeding, question his right to act: Landon v. Comet, 62 M. 80.

70. The jurisdiction of courts is not subject to be enlarged or dismissed at the discretion of parties, and it cannot rest upon consent or waiver in cases where general public interests are to be affected by the litigation: Youngblood v. Sexton, 22 M. 406.

71. Jurisdiction of the subject-matter cannot be given by consent: Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Spear v. Carter, 1 M. 19; Wilson v. Davis, 1 M. 156; Allen v. Carpenter, 15 M. 25, 32.

72. Nor can a want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter be waived by the parties: Farland v. Bentley, 6 M. 281; Moore v. Ellis, 18 M. 77.

73. Defects in jurisdiction of subject-matter cannot be waived, even where the nature of the action is local or any element of locality is necessary to the jurisdiction: Thompson v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Assoc., 53 M. 522.

74. Appearance and plea to the merits do not waive want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter: Woodruff v. Ives, 84 M. 330.

75. Jurisdictional objections are not waived by omission to insist upon them: Attorney-General v. Moliter, 26 M. 444.

76. Where a defect of jurisdiction exists, the defendant does not, by neglecting to take advantage of it on the first opportunity, waive the right to do so, as in case of a mere irregularity; but he may question the proceedings at any time: Turrill v. Walker, 4 M. 177.

77. A probate order, providing for the adjunction by the court of a claim against a decedent, contained the recital "the attorney for the executor of the last will and testament of said deceased being present in court and consenting thereto." Held insufficient in itself, and without at least identifying the attorney, to give the court jurisdiction: Probate Judge v. Abbott, 50 M. 278.

IV. HOW SHOWN; PRESUMPTIONS.

(a) Courts of general and courts of limited jurisdiction.

78. The American constitutional use of the word "inferior," as applied to courts, refers to relative rank and authority, and not to intrinsic quality: Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 M. 479 (Jan. 20, '87).

79. The orders, judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States cannot be collaterally impeached; nor need their records and proceedings show jurisdiction: Ward v. Cozzens, 8 M. 252.

80. The probate courts have, in probate matters, a general, and for the most part exclusive, jurisdiction; and their orders cannot be attacked collaterally upon any assumption that evidence was wanting to support jurisdictional allegations; their action, when properly invoked, is presumed to be rightful: Morford v. Dieffenbacker, 54 M. 598.

81. Probate courts have general jurisdiction in testamentary and other probate matters, and their action therein is not void where no fatal defect appears on the face of the proceedings; it may be reversible on appeal, but must stand if an appeal is not taken: Church v. Holcomb, 45 M. 29.

82. Municipal courts, though not inferior tribunals, are limited in their jurisdiction by the residence of parties; and their jurisdiction should be shown on the record, though their judgments and decrees are binding until reversed even if it is not shown: Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Gray, 88 M. 461.

83. A municipal court is presumptively inferior to a circuit court so far as its jurisdiction is not of equal character: Swift v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 64 M. 479.

84. When a court — e. g., the superior court of Grand Rapids — is of limited or special jurisdiction, its jurisdiction must be shown in serving defendants: Denison v. Smith, 83 M. 155.

85. Inferior jurisdictions, not proceeding according to the course of the common law, are confined strictly to the authority conferred upon them: Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Truesdale v. Hazzard, 2 M. 844, 848; Chandler v. Nash, 5 M. 409; Saunders v. Tioga Manuf. Co., 27 M. 520.

86. The facts necessary to give them jurisdiction must appear affirmatively in their proceedings and cannot be presumed: Ibid.

87. They must have jurisdiction of the person by means of the proper process or appearance of the party as well as of the subject-matter of the suit; and when they have not such jurisdiction their proceedings are absolutely void, and they become trespassers by any act to enforce them: Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

88. The jurisdiction of courts of inferior and limited jurisdiction must appear on the face of their proceedings: Rash v. Whitney, 4 M. 495.

89. In special proceedings, not according to the course of the common law, jurisdiction must affirmatively appear on the record: Chandler v. Nash, 5 M. 409.

90. In a special proceeding, regulated by and entirely dependent upon the statute, the officer before whom the proceeding takes place has no authority except what the statute gives him, and if the case presented does not come within all the requisites prescribed by the statute, he has no jurisdiction, and everything necessary to confer jurisdiction must appear upon the record: Elliott v. Dudley, 8 M. 62.

(b) Presumption in favor of court's action.

91. Presumptions support judicial action: Lymburner v. Jenkinson, 50 M. 488.

92. Every reasonable intendment will be made in favor of a jurisdiction once regularly and fully vested, and a legislative enactment will not be construed to operate to oust such a jurisdiction unless such an intent is clearly expressed: Crane v. Reeder, 28 M. 527.

93. It will be presumed in favor of a judgment of a court of record, which proceeds according to the course of the common law, that jurisdiction of the parties was duly obtained: Arnold v. Nye, 28 M. 286.

94. All reasonable intendments must be made in support of a judgment rendered in the proper tribunal on due service and without defence: Marquette & P. R. M. Co. v. Morgan, 41 M. 296.

95. Where a circuit judge has acted as judge of probate, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the necessary jurisdictional facts existed authorizing him to do so: Landon v. Comet, 62 M. 80.

96. Jurisdiction is not to be presumed in the absence of facts in the record to establish it: Gould v. Jacobson, 58 M. 288.

97. In aid of a replevin judgment of a court of record it is presumed that all proceedings essential to its validity were taken; as that an affidavit accompanied the writ: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

98. In special proceedings, such as attachments, jurisdiction is not to be presumed: Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 M. 39.

99. No presumption of jurisdiction can be indulged in special proceedings against non-residents: Platt v. Stewart, 10 M. 260.

100. The courts of a sister state, in a cause within and between parties subject to their jurisdiction, are entitled to so much respect, at least, that they should not, without proof, be presumed guilty of wrong and oppression: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 36.

101. If the record of a court of general jurisdiction of another state does not show either that the court had, or that it had not, jurisdiction, jurisdiction will be presumed: Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 M. 165.

102. When the record shows that the process was not personally served, and that the defendant did not appear personally in the suit, but that an attorney appeared for him and made defence, the authority of such attorney to appear for him will be presumed. But whether the authority may be disproved, quere: Ibid.

103. Where the record of a judgment discloses that an attorney of the court assumed to answer for a defendant, and consented in writing that a judgment might be entered against him, the supreme court will assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the attorney was duly authorized. This would be sufficient evidence of jurisdiction of the parties: Arnold v. Nye, 28 M. 286.

104. Until the contrary is shown it must be presumed that an attorney in the circuit court has authority to appear for a client whose appearance he has entered in due form: Norberg v. Heineman, 59 M. 210.

105. A justice's judgment cannot be held invalid upon a mere presumption that the justice had lost jurisdiction, if his docket shows the parties were regularly brought into court: Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 50 M. 315.

106. When the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is once shown, and the question is whether he has lost jurisdiction to determine the amount of costs, it must be presumed, in support of the judgment, that the justice acted regularly and that his proceedings were valid, unless the record shows the contrary: Saunders v. Tioga Manuf. Co., 27 M. 520.

V. ERRORS AND IRREGULARITIES AS AFFECTING JURISDICTION; WANT OF JURISDICTION.

107. An irregularity is such a defect in legal proceedings as may be waived; a nullity is one that cannot: Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 M. 469.

108. Proceedings in another court, when introduced collaterally, cannot be questioned for error or irregularities where no jurisdictional defect is alleged against them: Mitchell v. Chambers, 48 M. 150.

109. A complaint not technically accurate but sufficient to give jurisdiction is not open to collateral attack: Pardee v. Smith, 27 M. 38.

110. A court of law will not in a collateral case review irregularities in the procedure of a court of equity, if they were not jurisdictional: Ruggles v. First National Bank, 43 M. 192.

111. Where trover is brought against a foreign corporation and personal service of the writ is made upon the proper officer, the omission to notify the home office of the suit, as provided by law, is a mere irregularity and not a jurisdictional defect: Emerson, etc. v. McCormick Harvesting Co., 51 M. 5.

112. The special statutory methods of obtaining jurisdiction, where actual notice is not given, stand entirely on their own regularity, and, if not regular, proceedings based on them are nullities. But where personal service has been had, further proceedings are not necessarily fatally defective for all purposes, especially if rights based on them are allowed to become established by lapse of time without resorting to common-law remedies to set such proceedings aside: Granger v. Superior Court Judge, 44 M. 385.

113. Defects in notice are waived if no seasonable complaint is made where the party notified has already been regularly served and suit is fairly progressing: Ibid.

114. A non-resident waives his exemption from the process of even a local court of general jurisdiction if he does not object seasonably: Thompson v. Mut. Benefit Assoc., 52 M. 523.

115. After pleading and going to trial the right of a defendant to relief because of misconduct in the service of process upon him rests in the discretion of the court: Greeley v. Stilson, 27 M. 153.

116. A want of jurisdiction cannot be cured by statute: Hart v. Henderson, 17 M. 218.

VI. CONFLICT OF JURISDICTION.

117. When a court of competent jurisdiction has become possessed of a case, its authority continues subject only to the appellate authority, until the matter is finally and completely disposed of; and meanwhile, no court of co-ordinate authority is at liberty to interfere with its action; therefore a bill will not lie in one court to cancel for fraud a judgment entered in another court of competent jurisdiction to dispose of such a charge: Maclean v. Speed, 53 M. 257.

118. The court that first obtains jurisdiction of the cause has exclusive right to decide the matter in issue, and any other court, not appellate, which subsequently assumes to act in the matter, must, when this priority of jurisdiction is brought to its attention, proceed no further: Barnum Wire, etc. Works v. Speed, 59 M. 272.

119. The pendency of a merely colorable suit in another jurisdiction will not stay proceedings in a court which has jurisdiction of the matter: La Grange v. State Treasurer, 24 M. 468.

120. A suit for the surrender and cancellation of municipal bonds deposited with the state treasurer, but declared void under the laws of the state, will not be affected by proceedings to obtain them for the corporation, begun by stockholders thereof in a United States court, when the corporation itself could not lawfully sue the maker or depository in any but a state court, and would not then be permitted to recover the bonds. Such proceedings are a mere evasion of jurisdiction, and no court will be presumed to sanction them: Ibid.

121. A party will not be compelled to give up a legal remedy for an equitable one, and equitable jurisdiction can never supplant legal jurisdiction: Ibid.

122. The fact that there is a specific remedy in equity does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of a common-law court, but only appeals to its discretion, which may be exercised where the circumstances call for prompt interference by the courts: Tawcas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 M. 479.

123. If the process of a court is used in contempt of its authority or to the prejudice of its proceedings, it may be safely left to that court to assert its dignity and redress the wrong; but if a court allows its process to be abused to the injury or oppression of any person, any other court of competent authority should interfere for his protection: Watson v. Superior Court Judge, 40 M. 729.

124. A decree by a federal court cannot affect strangers to the record, or interfere with the regular probate of an estate in a state court which has jurisdiction: Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 M. 624.

125. The court of chancery will not restrain a suit or proceeding previously commenced in a court of a sister state or in any of the United States courts: Carroll v. Farmers', etc. Bank, H. 197.

126. A court of this state cannot restrain an action brought upon its judgment in a neighboring state, nor can it dictate the proceedings in such action; but it can entertain a bill to set aside for fraud such a judgment, even though it has been made the foundation of a suit in another state: Edson v. Cumings, 52 M. 52.

127. The process of a court is of no force or validity beyond its territorial jurisdiction: Tyler v. People, 8 M. 320.

128. The courts of one sovereignty cannot make orders or confer appointments to operate of their own force upon titles, or confer a right to exercise a trust in the disposition of property lying within the territory of another sovereignty: Sheldon v. Rice, 30 M. 296.

129. The jurisdiction of the courts of one state cannot operate directly, by their decrees or judgments, upon real property situated in another, or affect personal property or rights in action to the prejudice of creditors in the latter state: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 86.

130. The judgment of a Canadian or any foreign court upon service of its process made in Michigan is not binding on a defendant who refused to recognize its jurisdiction; and it will not support an action in our courts: McEwan v. Zimmer, 38 M. 765.

Effect of pending suit in admiralty on suit in common-law court, see ACTIONS, §§ 104, 105.

As to the jurisdiction of the federal and state courts with reference to each other, see COURTS, §§ 134-155.

V. SWEARING THE JURY.

As to the constitutional right of jury trial, and the waiver thereof, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 69-101, 260-276.

As to the right of jury trial and the waiver thereof, generally, see PRACTICE, II, (b); also, JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, IV, (b).

As to INSTRUCTIONS TO JURIES, see that title; also, CRIMES, IV, (c), 5.

As to conduct of jury, see CRIMES, IV, (c), 6; PRACTICE, III, (b).

As to verdict and findings, see CRIMES, IV, (c), 7; PRACTICE, III, (d), (e); JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, IV, (d).

I. SELECTING AND SUMMONING.

As to validity of certain statutory provisions as to selecting, etc., see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 76-80, 485, 645.

1. When a jury of persons possessing a particular qualification is required, the proper course is for the order of the court to direct the summoning of such persons: Manafield, Coldwater & L. M. R. Co. v. Clark, 23 M. 519.

2. H. S. § 7554, directing that the supervisor and township clerk of each township, and in cities the supervisor or assessors as the case may be, and alderman of each ward or assessment district, shall make a list of persons to serve as petit jurors, does not, it seems, apply to a city by whose charter the assessor is a city officer and assesses all the property of the city, but does apply to cities incorporated under the general law, in which the assessor is a ward officer acting only within the limits of his ward: Hewitt v. Gage, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

3. And said § 7554 did not repeal the provision in the charter of East Saginaw (Local Acts 1869, p. 432) requiring the city assessor to prepare the jury list from that city, and, if it did, the repealed provision was re-enacted by Local Laws 1885, p. 365, § 5: Ibid.

4. H. S. § 7556 provides that the jury lists "shall contain not less than one for every 100 inhabitants of such township or ward, computing according to the last preceding census, and having regard to the population of the county, so that the whole number of jurors selected in the county shall amount to at least 100, and not exceeding 400, one-half of whom shall be designated as petit jurors, and one-half as grand jurors." Held, that where the population of a county exceeds 40,000, as shown by such census, the ratio of population to the juror must be increased; that an excess of jurors returned is ground of challenge to the array, but does not wholly invalidate the list, which may be corrected by striking off all names listed below the statutory number first appearing: Ibid.

5. The officer who makes the jury list must be disinterested: People v. Felker, 61 M. 114.

6. Unless the contrary is shown it will be presumed that officers charged with the drawing and summoning of jurors have correctly performed their duty: People v. Coughlin, 67 M. 466 (Nov. 8, '87).

7. An order of court directing that a jury be "drawn and summoned in pursuance of the statute" for the general purposes of the term means that the jury be drawn from the county at large (H. S. § 7578), and is legal; it need not specify the townships or supervisor districts: Ibid.

8. An order under H. S. § 7578, directing petit jurors to be drawn and summoned for the general purposes of the term, may properly direct more than twenty-four to be drawn: Ibid.

9. The court having ordered a jury to be drawn and summoned from the body of the county for the general purposes of the term, as provided by H. S. § 7578, the respondent in a criminal case challenged the array because two townships, including the vicinage of the crime, were not represented. It not appearing that the officers who drew the jury had arbitrarily left the townships out, or that the lists of those townships had not already been exhausted, the challenge was held bad: Ibid.

10. Where the court ordered fifty additional jurors (instead of twenty-four, as provided by H. S. § 7576), some of whom sat on defendant's trial with full knowledge, on his part, of all the facts, and without objection from him, it was held that the irregularity was waived: Bronson v. People, 32 M. 34.

11. Under H. S. 7578 the jurors should be drawn from the vicinity of the place where the court is held; and the order for the drawing should purport to be made for the purpose of getting jurors near the county seat, and upon the judge's motion and for the general purposes of the term, and not for any particular case: People v. Hall, 48 M. 483.

12. Under H. S. § 7567, a jury drawn three weeks before trial for a particular case of homicide is illegal if taken from only part of the townships in the county, and those not adjoining the county seat, nor including the locality of the offence: Ibid.

13. A challenge to the array cannot be based on the neglect to return jury lists from certain townships in the county; nor on the omission of the county clerk, on drawing a jury, to return the names drawn to the proper packages for each township, until the whole list for all the townships is exhausted: People v. Coffman, 59 M. 1.

14. This court was equally divided on the question whether a challenge to the array in the superior court of Detroit was properly overruled where interposed on the ground (1) that the judge was not present when the names of the jurors were deposited in the jury box and those of former jurors removed; (2) that he did not determine the number to be drawn for the term, but that twenty-four were drawn, and he was not present at the drawing; (3) that they were drawn by the sheriff and the minute was kept by the clerk; (4) that the affidavit accompanying the list of 300 jurors filed in the clerk's office did not show in detail the proceedings taken to select the list, but only alleged that, as affiant verily believes, it was done in accordance with the statute: Gott v. Brigham, 45 M. 424.

15. Under H. S. § 7567 the clerk must draw the names of the jurors from the box, and it is cause for challenge to the array that the sheriff drew the names, and that the clerk only announced and made a minute of those drawn: People v. Labadie, 66 M. 702 (July 7, '87).

16. H. S. § 7600 provides that when a jury has been sworn to try an issue the ballots containing their names shall be kept apart from the other ballots until the jury is discharged. Held, that it is not necessary to wait until the jury is discharged and the ballots returned to the slip-box before proceeding to draw another jury from the slip-box for the trial of the next case, whether criminal or civil: People v. Craig, 48 M. 502.

17. Where two persons have been indicted jointly and have demanded separate trials, and one has been tried and the jury discharged, it seems that the clerk of the court is not bound to return the names of the jurors to the slip-box before drawing a jury for the trial of the other: Ibid.

18. Where a person jointly indicted with another, but tried separately, challenged the array on the ground that their names had been drawn from a box to which the names of the jurors who tried the other person had not been returned, though the jury had been discharged, it was held that the error, if any, was cured by the judge's offer to have a new jury drawn from a box containing the names of all the jurors, the challenged jury not having been sworn, or the prisoner put in jeopardy: Ibid.

19. Where the lists of grand and petit jurors were put into one box, and several of the jury drawn from the box turned out to have been returned as grand jurors, and not as petit jurors, it was proper to discharge all the panel, and to order a new jury drawn from the names properly returned: Atkinson v. Morse, 63 M. 276.

20. Jurors drawn under C. L. 1871, § 6001 (as amended, H. S. § 7578), were drawn not merely for a particular case, but for the term, or balance of the term, and it was competent for the court to direct them to be drawn from the jury-box or to be selected by the sheriff, and to order them to be summoned to attend forthwith, or at a subsequent or adjourned day of the term: People v. Jones, 24 M. 215.

21. Where the jurors so summoned actually attended it was held that misrecitals in the copy of the order upon which the sheriff made his return were immaterial, as was also the manner of service, and that respondent could not object on the ground of defects in the mode of notifying the jurors: Ibid.

22. A conviction by jurors properly drawn and impanelled will not be disturbed because the jurors were not summoned by the proper officer: People v. Williams, 24 M. 156.

23. An order made by the county judge, under laws of 1848, p. 237, for summoning a jury to try a cause before the circuit judge, more than three days before the day assigned for the trial, was held sufficient: People v. Doe, 1 M. 451.

24. It is no ground of challenge to the array that the jury-lists were not returned until after the time designated by law: Thomas v. People, 39 M. 309.

II. COMPETENCY.

25. A nephew of one of the parties is an incompetent juror at the common law: Hasceig v. Tripp, 20 M. 216.

26. A juror in a criminal prosecution is not rendered incompetent by the fact that he is an own cousin of the prosecuting attorney within the second degree of consanguinity: People v. Waller, 70 M. 237 (May 11, '88).

27. It is not error to reject as juror one who is in the employ of one of the parties: Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 M. 89.

28. A juror who has already sat upon one trial during the same term is not challengeable under H. S. § 7584, authorizing the challenge of those who have served upon the regular panel within the year. *The service intended is for a whole term and not merely one case: Burden v. People, 26 M. 162.

29. Whether a talesman who has sat upon one case during the term may be challenged for that cause if called again during the same term, quere. But it is not error to reject him: Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 M. 308.

30. H. S. § 7584a, in providing that it shall be a ground for challenge if a juror has already served in the same court within a year, excludes one who has served as talesman in a street-opening case: Williams v. Grand Rapids, 53 M. 271.

31. It is within the discretion of a court to sustain a challenge for cause where the juror is shown to have been seen talking with the agent of the adverse party and the agent suspended the conversation on the appearance of opposing counsel: Monaghan v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co., 53 M. 238.

32. It is not good ground for a challenge for cause that the juror has already been peremptorily challenged upon the trial of another prisoner charged with the same crime; it cannot be assumed that it will prejudice him in a different case: Cargen v. People, 89 M. 549.

33. The presence upon jury of talesman over sixty years old is not ground for challenge to the array, but will sustain a challenge for cause, as the only persons qualified for talesmen are those who are not exempt from jury duty (H. S. § 7555): People v. Bauermann, 52 M. 584.

34. The fact that a juror summoned as a talesman was not named on any of the assessment rolls of the county either for the year in which the trial took place or for any preceding year did not disqualify him from jury duty: Stewart v. People, 23 M. 63.

35. The incompetency of some of the jurors returned by the sheriff does not affect the array if those sworn were competent: Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 58 M. 642.

36. If, in a street-opening case, a juror is specially interested he is disqualified, and may be challenged for cause: Kunding v. Sagnaw, 59 M. 355.

37. The record in error showed that talesmen were called and sworn on a jury, but did not show that they had the requisite qualification of jurors. It was held — no challenge appearing to have been taken on that ground — that they must be presumed to have been properly qualified: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

38. An alien (who is not an elector) is not a competent juror; and if one of the panel is an alien, and the prisoner is not aware of that fact until after verdict, it is a mistrial: Hill v. People, 16 M. 351.

39. But in a civil case a juror's disqualification by alienage not discovered until after verdict is not ground for a new trial: Johr v. People, 26 M. 427.

40. A juror, like an elector, may be a foreigner not yet naturalized, but who has declared his intention to become a citizen; the simple fact of alienage does not disqualify him, and nothing will be presumed against his right to act: People v. Scott, 56 M. 154.

41. An alien can be a juror if he can vote: People v. Rosevear, 56 M. 158.

(c) Opinions or impressions.

42. A juror who testifies that he is so impressed with the guilt of the accused as to need evidence to overcome his impressions is partial and incompetent: People v. Shufelt, 61 M. 237.

43. A juror who has no fixed or positive belief, but who would have an opinion if rumors that he has heard are true, is not incompetent: Ibid.

44. The opinion entertained by a juror which disqualifies him is an opinion of that fixed character which repels the presumption of innocence in a criminal case, and by which in the juror's mind the accused stands condemned already: People v. Barker, 60 M. 277.

45. A juror has no impressions that will disqualify him if he says he could neither acquit nor convict without knowing more of the case: People v. Gage, 62 M. 271.

46. A person who has formed and holds an opinion that mill-dams generally in that part of the country are nuisances, and that all he is acquainted with are such, is not a competent juror for the trial of an indictment for nuisance in keeping up a mill-dam, though he states that he is not much acquainted with the dam in question, and has not formed or expressed any opinion in regard to it: Crippen v. People, 8 M. 117.

47. The law does not require a juror to be entirely unimpressed with any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the person on trial, but simply that he shall not have an opinion of such a fixed and definite character as to leave a bias on his mind which will preclude his giving due weight to the presumption of innocence: Holt v. People, 13 M. 224.

48. The statement of one called as a juror that he has formed a partial opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, from rumors heard in the streets, but not a positive opinion, does not establish his incompetency: Ibid.

49. A juror's belief that the crime with which the prisoner is charged has been committed by some one is not ground for a challenge for cause: Stewart v. People, 23 M. 63.

50. A juror who is so impressed with the guilt of the accused as to need evidence to overcome his impressions is not impartial; and it is useless to ask him whether he can return a just and impartial verdict: Stephens v. People, 38 M. 739.

51. A juror's opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused must not be such as will prevent his giving due weight to the presumption of innocence: Ibid.

52. A juror who believes that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence is not disqualified by having read a newspaper item from which he has formed an opinion which, though not of a fixed character, it would take evidence to remove: Ulrich v. People, 39 M. 245.

53. A juror in a murder case who testifies that he has a positive opinion as to whether deceased had been murdered, but has formed none as to the guilt of the accused and has no bias, and believes that he can render an impartial verdict according to the evidence, is not disqualified: Cargen v. People, 39 M. 549.

54. Where a juror challenged for opinion shows by his answer that he has no definite recollections there is no apparent ground for holding him disqualified: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

III. EXCLUSION BY COURT.

55. A court may reject a juror in its discretion, on a ground which would not be strictly sufficient to sustain a challenge for cause. Where a jury was finally obtained to which neither party objected, the fact that the court set aside two jurors without any challenge, because from their examinations they did not seem to be entirely impartial, and excused a third because he was deaf and did not sufficiently understand English, was not a ground of error: Atlas Mining Co. v. Johnston, 23 M. 36.

56. A juror may be excused at any time before he has been sworn, for any reason personal to himself which seems sufficient to the judge. So held where the excuse was that he was to be a witness in the next case on call: People v. Carrier, 46 M. 442.

57. Courts should protect the rights of parties in selecting jurors, and may properly exclude any incompetent or drunken person, even against objection: Torrent v. Yager, 53 M. 506.

58. The circuit judge is invested with a certain degree of discretion in selecting jurors for a panel. Such discretion is to be exercised in seeing that proper and competent men are selected; and so long as the case of the parties is not prejudiced by the exercise of such discretion, they cannot complain: People v. Barker, 60 M. 277.

59. A juror who had been selected, the panel, however, not having been completed, failed to appear in court after an adjournment, and was found in a room of an hotel playing pool. Held, that such reckless disregard of his duty showed that he was unfit to serve, and that the court was justified in excluding him from the panel: Ibid.

60. After the jury had been completed and sworn, but before any further proceedings, it was discovered that one of the members of the panel was an alien. Held, that it was proper for the court to order him to stand aside and be discharged and another juror to be drawn in his stead, allowing respondent in the meantime to challenge the remaining eleven either for cause or peremptorily if he wished to do so: Ibid.

61. The fact that a party has exhausted all his peremptory challenges does not make it error for the judge to excuse of his own motion a juror already examined who is not sufficiently acquainted with the English language to qualify him to sit: O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 67 M. 560 (Nov. 10, '87).

IV. CHALLENGES.

62. It seems that a challenge to the array will lie on the action of jury commissioners wherever at common law it would lie to the action of the sheriff or his subordinates in selecting or summoning the jury: People v. Harding, 53 M. 49.

63. The right of challenge for cause exists in all cases where the jury is a common-law one, and it cannot be taken away by statute, or abrogated by a statute's omission to provide for it: Kundinger v. Saginaw, 59 M. 355.

64. Where counts for different offences are joined respondent has a right to the full number of challenges to which he is entitled on each count: People v. Sweeney, 55 M. 586.

65. The distinction between challenges for favor and challenges for cause is practically abolished by H. S. § 7607, all challenges being now for cause, and to be tried in the same manner; and when there is no dispute about the facts upon which a challenge is based, the question arising upon it is purely one of law, and open to review upon exceptions: Holt v. People, 13 M. 224.

66. There is no practical difference in criminal cases between a challenge for principal cause and a challenge for favor; and a judge in ruling upon a challenge should make his ruling cover both grounds: Stephens v. People, 38 M. 739.

67. Challenges for cause can be made by either side until the jury is sworn: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

68. The number of peremptory challenges to which an accused person is entitled depends upon the statute relating to the crime with which he is charged: People v. Comstock, 55 M. 406.

69. Each defendant who pleads separately by different counsel is separately entitled to the two peremptory challenges allowed by statute. C. L. § 6027 (see H. S. § 7607): Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 M. 490.

70. The right to the peremptory challenge of a juror examined on his voir dire is not lost because not exercised until the rest of the panel had been examined. It may be exercised at any time before the juror is sworn: Hunter v. Parsons, 22 M. 96.

71. The statutory right of challenging peremptorily may be exercised so long as the jury is not sworn, and notwithstanding the previous declaration of the party exercising it that he is satisfied with the jury: Jhons v.

People, 25 M. 499; People v. Carrier, 46 M. 442; Hamper's Appeal, 51 M. 71.

72. A peremptory challenge is not allowable in a criminal case after the jury has been sworn: People v. Dolan, 51 M. 610.

73. H. S. § 7607, allowing peremptory challenges in "civil cases," does not apply to special proceedings not in the ordinary course of law, and which are regulated entirely by particular statute. Challenges for cause are necessary in all inquiries by jury, but peremptory challenges in other than criminal proceedings are confined to cases where the statutes have directly provided for them: Convers v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 18 M. 459.

74. Where parties impleaded together appear by the same counsel, and after their right of peremptory challenge is exhausted other counsel take charge of the case for part of them, the latter have no further right of challenge: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

75. Overruling a challenge for cause and compelling the party to resort to a peremptory challenge does not prejudice him where he still has a right of peremptory challenge which he does not use: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408; People v. Barker, 60 M. 277.

76. A challenge to the array must be in writing: People v. Doe, 1 M. 451; Ryder v. People, 38 M. 269.

77. On the impanelling of a jury it is irregular for counsel to put questions to the jurors called, without interposing any challenge; and no error can be assigned to the action of the court in allowing jurors thus questioned, but not challenged, to be sworn to try the case: Crippen v. People, 8 M. 117.

78. A person called as a juror is presumed to be qualified and impartial; and the party challenging assumes the burden of proving the contrary. He does not relieve himself of that burden until he has made out a prima facie case, or, in criminal cases, such a case as leaves the partiality of the juror in reasonable doubt: Holt v. People, 13 M. 224.

79. In a criminal case if the examination of a juror upon challenge leaves a reasonable doubt of his impartiality, the prisoner should have the benefit of the doubt, and the juror be excluded: Ibid.

80. The judge may examine jurors on the part of the prosecution if he chooses, but defendant's counsel are entitled to re-examine them: Stephens v. People, 38 M. 739.

81. Prejudice disqualifies a juror, and a party entitled to peremptory challenges should be allowed to ask any reasonable questions that will tend to disclose it; as, e. g., which way the juror would be inclined if the evidence was evenly balanced: Monaghan v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co., 53 M. 288.

82. Where a juror is challenged for favor, the usual mode of trying his impartiality is by triers appointed for the purpose, on the demand of the challenging party. If the challenging party, when asked by the court how he will have the challenge tried, refuses to indicate the mode of trial, it may be tried by the court, by administering an oath to the juror, and propounding questions to him: People v. Doe, 1 M. 451.

83. If a party or his counsel interposes a challenge for favor, or raises any other preliminary question involving an inquiry, and then neglects or refuses to move the trial or examination thereof, he thereby waives such challenge or question: Ibid.

84. By going to trial without challenge a party waives any objection to the want of proper qualification of jurors, as well as to the sufficiency of the oath administered to the jury: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

85. In civil causes the proper time to make the necessary inquiries into the qualifications of jurors is before the trial, and not afterwards, and if not made then the objection will be deemed to have been waived: Johr v. People, 26 M. 427.

86. In a criminal case it is the defendant's duty to raise objection to any irregularity in the summoning and impanelling of the jury before the trial, and if he omits to do so, or to take exception, if overruled, he will be deemed to have waived the irregularity: Bronson v. People, 82 M. 34.

87. Where a party is informed during the progress of the trial that a juror is disqualified, but he omits to object until after verdict, on the ground that evidence of the disqualification is not sooner accessible, he will be held bound by the verdict: Sleight v. Henning, 12 M. 371.

88. The objection that jurors in a criminal case were accepted and sworn, whose examination showed that they were disqualified by opinions formed, is not considered on writ of error, where no exception was taken at the time and the question was first raised on a motion for a new trial after conviction: Bronson v. People, 82 M. 34.

89. Where one of the jurors had sat on a former trial of the same cause, and this fact was known to the counsel of one of the parties before the verdict was rendered, and he omitted to object until afterwards, it was held that he was bound by the verdict: Bourke v. James, 4 M. 386.

90. Where the record shows that both parties have announced themselves contented with the jury, the previous rejection of a challenged talesman against objection will not be considered. Whether this rule will apply where a juror is admitted against a challenge for cause, quere: Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 80 M. 303.

91. A party who aids in striking the panel, and who declares himself satisfied with it, cannot afterwards object that one of the jurors, to whom he made no objection, was not a freeholder as required by the statute: Clark v. Drain Commissioner, 50 M. 618.

92. The impanelling and final acceptance of a jury by a court is a judicial determination that the jurors are competent; and if any objection to the qualifications of a juror is known to a party before such determination, it cannot be raised afterward unless on exception to the overruling of a challenge: People v. Scott, 56 M. 154.

93. Where a juror on being examined as to his residence stated that he had come to the place to get work and had not got any yet, his answer suggested that he was not qualified; but if no objection was then made, or further examination had, it would be too late after the trial: People v. Lange, 56 M. 550.

94. No reasons for a challenge can be given on error to review the court's action in overruling it, except those given at the time: Detroit, W. T. & J. R. Co. v. Crane, 50 M. 182.

V. SWEARING JURY.

95. Where the record showed that the jury were "duly elected, tried and sworn," instead of that they were "sworn well and truly to try the issue," etc., it was held that the error, if any, must be regarded as clerical, and under R. S. 1838, pp. 461-2, might be amended after error brought: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

96. A stipulation was made between the plaintiffs on a note and one of the defendants that the cause might be dismissed as to him, but he did not avail himself of it, and no order of discontinuance was entered. Only one of the other defendants pleaded. Held, that the technical irregularity of swearing the jury to try the issue between the plaintiffs and the defendants, when no issue had been joined with two of them, was a harmless blunder, and as no order was entered on the stipulation the party with whom it was made remained a defendant in form: Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 M. 44.

I. JURISDICTION.

- (a) In general.

1. Within the limits provided for by the state constitution, justices' courts are ordinary courts of justice, not within the rigid rules applying to courts of special and limited jurisdiction proceeding contrary to the course of the common law; and all courts take judicial notice of the extent of their jurisdiction and powers: Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 M. 374.

2. The jurisdiction conferred upon justices' courts by the constitution is beyond the reach of legislation: Allen v. Kent Circuit Judge, 87 M. 474.

3. Justices of the peace have constitutional jurisdiction in civil cases, and are necessary magistrates in cities, as well as outside of them; their criminal jurisdiction is given them by the general statutes, but is to some extent contemplated by the constitution, and in cities can only be restrained by the special municipal criminal jurisdiction: Allor v. Wayne County Auditors, 48 M. 76.

As to the criminal jurisdiction of justices, see CRIMES, V, (a).

4. A justice represents the state rather than his township; his officers may be any constables of the county as well as the sheriff: Faulks v. People, 39 M. 200.

5. A justice's court, being one of inferior and limited jurisdiction, is confined strictly to the powers conferred upon it, and its proceedings must appear to be within those powers: Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 M. 85.

6. The jurisdiction of justices of the peace cannot be presumed, but must appear affirmatively in their proceedings: Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 384; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Spear v. Carter, 1 M. 19; Saunders v. Tioga Manuf. Co., 27 M. 520.

7. A justice is not required to hold courts always at one place; he may hold them sometimes in one place and sometimes in another, according to temporary convenience: Faulks v. People, 39 M. 200.

8. And a justice who lives in a village that lies in two townships may be authorized by statute to hold court in that part of the village that lies in the township he does not live in: Ibid.

9. That a justice placed by change of boundaries beyond his township loses his office, see People v. Geddes, 8 M. 70.

10. Where a cause was called in a bar-room and adjourned to an adjoining room in the same house for trial, the justice having no knowledge that spirituous liquors were sold there, and there being no proof of such sales, judgment was held good (see H. S. § 6831): Savner v. Chipman, 1 M. 116.

11. A justice of the peace cannot be both magistrate and counsel: Stensrud v. Delamater, 56 M. 144.

12. Suit upon a promissory note cannot be brought before a justice to whom it has been indorsed for collection, as he thereby becomes the plaintiff's agent therefor: West v. Wheeler, 49 M. 505.

13. A justice to whom a claim has been sent for collection with instructions that it is not to be sued until he has notified defendant that it will be sued if not paid is not thereby disqualified from hearing the case, as an interested party, even though he is to be compensated whether suit is brought or not: Moon v. Stevens, 53 M. 144.

14. One justice cannot garnish a judgment rendered by another. The judgment may always be paid to the justice who renders it, and he must issue execution on application by the prevailing party, unless he has some excuse for refusing it. No other justice has any statutory right to stay his acts or direct his conduct: Stevens v. Woodburn Sarven Wheel Co., 48 M. 275.

And see GARNISHMENT, § 68.

15. The jurisdiction of justices in cases of forcible entry and detainer is wholly derived from H. S. ch. 286, "Of forcible entries and detainers," and its amendatory acts, and when exercising such jurisdiction they are not bound by any of the provisions of the justices' act (H. S. ch. 249), except so far as chapter 286 or its amendments may have adopted certain proceedings of the former, so as to make them substantially a part of the latter: Dibell v. Brinkerhoff, 22 M. 371.

16. Discontinuance of a suit after appeal is not a discontinuance of the appeal within the meaning of H. S. § 7023, which provides that on the discontinuance or dismissal of an appeal a justice shall proceed as if it never had been taken: Franks v. Fecheimer, 44 M. 177.

Security for costs need not be filed before process issues, to give jurisdiction: See COSTS, §§ 340, 341.

(b) Amount.

17. R. S. 1846 gave to justices of the peace original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction in actions wherein the debt or amount demanded did not exceed $100: Webb v. Mann, 8 M. 189.

18. Justices have exclusive jurisdiction in civil matters where the debt or damages do not exceed $100: Strong v. Daniels, 8 M. 466; Raymond v. Hinkson, 15 M. 113.

19. Assumpsit for breach of promise of marriage must be brought in justice's court if the damages do not exceed $100: Stortz v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 38 M. 243.

20. H. S. § 6820, permitting an action of covenant to be brought in justice's court where there shall be a bond with a penalty exceeding $150, is confined to bonds conditioned for the payment of a sum of money not exceeding $150, or for the payment of instalments of money not exceeding in the aggregate $150: Bishop v. Freeman, 42 M. 533; Gray v. Stafford, 53 M. 497.

21. Assumpsit will lie in justice's court upon an ordinary money bond for any amount within its jurisdiction that may be necessary to indemnify for the breach thereof, whatever the penalty of the bond may be: Durfee v. Dean, 53 M. 387.

22. Debt upon a probate bond whereof the penalty exceeds the jurisdictional limit of justices' courts cannot be brought therein: Ibid.

23. A bond not conditioned for the payment of any particular sum of money by the obligor, and containing no covenants, cannot be sued in justice's court if the penalty exceeds $300: Bishop v. Freeman, 42 M. 533.

24. But otherwise if the penalty does not exceed that sum: Gray v. Stafford, 53 M. 497.

25. Justices have no jurisdiction in actions founded on tort, where the damages exceed $100: Wells v. Scott, 4 M. 347.

26. Jurisdiction as to amount depends on the sum or damages claimed in the writ and declaration: Strong v. Daniels, 8 M. 466. See COURTS, § 23.

27. The amount claimed in the ad damnum clause is what determines a justice's jurisdiction in assumpsit, and plaintiff may remit part of the amount proved, or abandon and omit to prove part of the amount claimed: Cilley v. Van Patten, 68 M. 90 (Jan. 5, '88).

28. Where, in a justice's court, plaintiff obtains a verdict for $100, in a case where double damages are allowed by statute, doubling such verdict does not oust jurisdiction: Rosevelt v. Hanold, 65 M. 414 (April 14, '87).

29. A justice's jurisdiction in garnishment does not depend on the amount due from the garnishee to the principal debtor, but upon the sum claimed to be due from the latter to the former: Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 M. 555.

30. An affidavit for a writ of replevin will not give a justice jurisdiction if it does not state that the property sought does not exceed $100 in value; and the defect, unless waived, is fatal if seasonably urged. Sager v. Shutts, 53 M. 116.

31. Where the affidavit and declaration in replevin allege the value as less than $100, testimony by plaintiff on appeal that the value is greater does not oust jurisdiction: Dinnen v. Baxter, 18 M. 457.

32. Where the affidavit, writ and declaration in replevin set forth the value of the property as not exceeding $100, and defendant pleads the general issue, the fact that plaintiff's testimony on the trial shows the value to be greater does not oust the justice's jurisdiction: Henderson v. Desborough, 28 M. 170.

33. By pleading the general issue in such case defendant admits a justice's jurisdiction, and cannot afterwards question it on the ground that the value of the property exceeded the jurisdictional limit of $100: Ibid.

34. A defendant who prevails in replevin before a justice may recover the value of the property replevied, not exceeding $500, which is the constitutional limit of the jurisdiction of justices: Ibid.; Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 M. 565; Chilson v. Jennison, 60 M. 285.

35. The objection that the amount in controversy is beyond a justice's jurisdiction comes too late if raised for the first time on error after appeal: Wells v. Scott, 4 M. 347; Tower v. Lamb, 6 M. 362.

(c) Corporations.

36. Whether the recorder of the city of Grand Haven has jurisdiction, under the charter of that city, as an ex officio justice of the peace, to try an action for the tuition of non-resident pupils, brought by a school district, no part of which is within the city, quere: Thompson v. Crockery School District, 25 M. 488.

37. Under Const., art. 6, § 18, the legislature may lawfully exempt municipal corporations from the jurisdiction of justices: Root v. Ann Arbor, 3 M. 483.

38. Under present statutes justices have no jurisdiction of suits against municipal corporations: Root v. Ann Arbor, 3 M. 483; Gurney v. St. Clair, 11 M. 202.

39. The statute (H. S. § 5107) which in some cases allows school districts to be sued in justices' courts, held not applicable to a certain district: Seeley v. Port Huron Board of Education, 39 M. 486.

40. H. S. § 8055 does not allow garnishment before justices of municipal corporations: Marathon School District v. Gage, 39 M. 484.

41. But justices have jurisdiction of suits brought by municipal corporations: Hart v. Port Huron, 46 M. 428; Eaton Rapids v. Hought, 63 M. 871.

42. And in an action brought by a municipality defendant is entitled to all defences, including the right of set-off, that he would have if sued by an individual: Eaton Rapids v. Hought, 63 M. 871.

43. A poundmaster sued by a city before a justice, for fees collected, may set off a claim which he has against the city: Ibid.

44. An action will lie in justice's court against a foreign express company doing business in the county (H. S. § 3723); and if plaintiff is a non-resident, defendant may be brought in by short summons: Gallagher v. American Express Co., 56 M. 13.

45. Since act 155 of 1873 (H. S. §§ 4362-4368) whatever may have been the case before, justices of the peace have no jurisdiction over foreign insurance companies: Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 80 M. 441.

46. An action on a labor debt may be brought in a justice's court against a corporation and stockholders jointly under H. S. § 4110: Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Mining Co., 48 M. 281.

47. Said § 4110 provides that in actions on labor debts the clerk of the court shall indorse directions on the execution. Held to refer to the officer issuing the execution, and not to exclude the justices' courts in which the justice is his own clerk from jurisdiction of such actions: Ibid.

48. Whether corporations were garnishable in justices' courts under C. L. 1871, § 5290, quere: Hewett v. Wagar Lumber Co., 38 M. 701.

49. Under the justices' act of 1855, justices had no jurisdiction to issue attachments against foreign corporations: Brigham v. Eglington, 7 M. 291.

(d) Lands; easements.

50. A justice has no jurisdiction to try a cause in which the title to land comes in question, unless plaintiff's title be admitted: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184; Brooks v. Delrymple, 1 M. 145; Highway Commissioner v. Withey, 52 M. 50.

51. Such admission would be a demurrer to a declaration alleging title: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

52. A question of title to land is raised in an action of trespass brought before a justice, if plaintiff offers deeds in evidence of his right of possession, or claims such right under a third person whose ownership he proposes to show: Gay v. Hults, 55 M. 327.

53. Under a declaration against defendant for falsely representing himself to have title to a piece of land, which plaintiff was induced to buy of him, the title to the land must necessarily come in question: Brooks v. Delrymple, 1 M. 145.

54. Where a declaration in trespass avers title in fee and possession of the locus in quo, describing the land, and defendants' plea denies such title, averring that the freehold is in one of the defendants and that both entered upon the premises by lawful right, the question of title to the land is involved: Labeau v. Labeau, 61 M. 81.

55. Where, in an action in justice's court for trespass to land, the declaration avoids claim of title, but plaintiff's evidence shows that the locus was in the public highway, plaintiff to sustain his action must show title to the adjoining land, and when he does so, if defendant does not admit it, the title to land is necessarily in issue, and H. S. § 6895 requires the justice to certify the cause to the circuit court: Ostrom v. Potter, 71 M. 44 (June 22, '38).

56. Deeds of land may be admissible as evidence in a justice's court for many purposes; and their admission will not sustain a presumption that the judgment in the suit was rendered in a case of which he had no jurisdiction as determining the title to real property: Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 50 M. 315.

57. For the purpose of identifying and proving his title to personal property a party may show that it was taken off from certain lands, and that he was the owner thereof, but this does not bring the title to lands in question: Hart v. Hart, 48 M. 175.

58. A justice has no jurisdiction of an action for the disturbance of a right of way: Fowler v. Hyland, 48 M. 179.

59. Trespass quare clausum, consisting in allowing logs to accumulate upon the premises of another in consequence of the closing up of a navigable stream upon which they were floating, is not an action for the legal obstruction of a public easement within the meaning of H. S. § 6815, and is cognizable by a justice: Williamson v. Haskell, 50 M. 864.

60. Under R. S. 1838 justices had no jurisdiction in replevin: People v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 303.

61. Justices have jurisdiction in replevin for beasts distrained or impounded: Pistorius v. Swarthout, 67 M. 186 (Oct. 13, '87).

62. H. S. § 6815, prohibiting suit in justice's court against an executor or administrator as such, precludes suit in that tribunal upon the representative's liability for any charge against the estate, whether he is sued in his official or in his individual capacity: Basom v. Taylor, 89 M. 682.

63. A justice has jurisdiction of an action of replevin against an administrator: Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

64. A justice's jurisdiction of an action against an administrator cannot be questioned where defendant is not named as such and does not plead in abatement, but pleads the general issue and goes to trial on the merits: Ibid.

65. Where a mechanic, suing for his wages, makes the owner of a building on which he works a joint defendant with the contractor who hired him, and sues them in an appropriate form of action before a justice of the peace, the justice has jurisdiction to try the issue; and though he cannot enforce a mechanic's lien, an error in rendering judgment therefor, or in holding the owner personally liable, will not destroy his jurisdiction or make his judgment void and open to attack in a collateral action; and unless reversed on appeal or certiorari it must stand: Smith v. Pearce, 52 M. 870.

II. VENUE; REMOVAL OF CAUSE.

66. A justice has no jurisdiction of the person where neither of the parties, though resident in the state, lives in his county; but if any one of the parties on either side lives there, suit will lie in any township of the county where he resides and happens to be (H. S. § 6819): Hall v. Shank, 57 M. 36.

67. A justice of the peace of a city which lies within the limits of a township that corners with the township where defendant resides has jurisdiction of a suit against such defendant, though the city itself neither adjoins nor corners with such township: Jebb v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 67 M. 180 (Oct. 13, '87).

68. The provision in the justice's act (H. S. § 6937) for the removal of a cause from before a justice who is a material witness applies only to suits at law, and has no application to a proceeding for the opening of a village street: People v. Brighton, 20 M. 57.

69. Until all the statutory conditions to the removal of a cause to another justice for trial have been complied with, e. g., payment or offer of payment of the fees for making the transcript, as well as the costs of suit, the justice before whom the cause was commenced retains jurisdiction: Oakley v. Dunn, 63 M. 494.

70. As to transfer of replevin suit after abatement by justice's removal from the township, see Kidder v. Merryhew, 82 M. 470.

III. COMMENCEMENT OF ACTIONS; PROCEEDINGS BEFORE TRIAL.

1. Issuance, form, etc.

71. Under the justice's act, process of a justice's court in civil cases is not authorized to run into another county, or to be served beyond the bailiwick: Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 M. 441.

72. Issue of justice's summons is a mere ministerial act and valid though done on a legal holiday: Smith v. Ihling, 47 M. 614.

73. Under H. S. §§ 6826, 6829, 6830, a long summons only is authorized if both plaintiff and defendants are residents of the county; and if either is a non-resident a short summons only is authorized (the latter point is not wholly accurate; see infra, § 74): Allen v. Mills, 26 M. 123.

74. Under H. S. § 6829, if the defendant be a non-resident of the county, the summons may be either long or short; but by § 6830, if the defendant be a non-resident, the summons must be a short one: Moore v. Vrooman, 32 M. 526.

75. Where the transcript of a justice's judgment shows nothing as to the residence of the parties, its validity will not be affected by the fact that the action in which it was rendered was begun by short summons and that the defendant did not appear. It will not be presumed, for defeating jurisdiction, that both parties resided in the county: Allen v. Mills, 26 M. 123.

76. The objection that plaintiff in an action brought in justice's court had improperly sued by a long summons is one that is waived by joining issue: Hart v. Blake, 81 M. 278.

77. The objection that a short summons was issued where a long one was prescribed by the statute may be raised in the cause itself before the justice, or on appeal or certiorari: Allen v. Mills, 26 M. 123.

78. Sunday is not included in the two days in which a justice's short summons may be made returnable (H. S. §§ 6829, 6830): Simonson v. Durfee, 50 M. 80.

79. A justice's summons, returnable not less than two days from its date, is defective if made returnable on the second day after it was issued: Everts v. Fisk, 44 M. 515.

80. In computing the time allowed for returning a justice's summons the day of service and the day of return are excluded: Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co., 57 M. 120.

81. A justice's summons is not issued if merely delivered to the plaintiff and kept in his hands: Howell v. Shepard, 48 M. 472.

82. The filling up or alteration by a sheriff, under the authority of the justice, of the teste and return day of a justice's summons is forbidden by H. S. § 590, and, being illegal, makes the summons void: Garrison v. Hoyt, 25 M. 509.

83. Any alteration of the date and return day of a justice's summons, not made by the justice himself, or by another in his presence and under his direction, renders the summons void: Ibid.

84. A justice has no jurisdiction to issue a second summons and follow it with an attachment unless the statutory requirements as to service have been complied with; e. g., in making a diligent effort to obtain personal service and in taking the full time allowed therefor before returning defendant "not found": Isabelle v. Iron Cliffs Co., 57 M. 120.

85. A justice's summons was made returnable at one o'clock in the afternoon. It was read to defendant and a copy given him, which, however, specified one o'clock in the forenoon as the time for appearance. Defendant appeared at one in the morning, got the justice out of bed, and in plaintiff's absence took a nonsuit. But before the real time arrived he saw the original summons, which stated it correctly. Held, that the nonsuit was void: Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 M. 196.

2. Service and return.

86. The "competent person" empowered by H. S. § 6827 to serve a justice's summons must appear to have been personally designated by the justice, and must be selected upon sufficient inquiry to determine his competency: Rasch v. Moore, 57 M. 54.

87. The authority of a private person to serve a justice's summons must be indorsed thereon or no jurisdiction is acquired: Rasch v. Moore, 57 M. 54; Union Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 M. 72.

88. In indorsing upon a summons a deputization of authority to serve it the justice need not certify that the person authorized is of age and not interested in the suit. It is not presumed that he selects an incompetent person: Buel v. Duke, 38 M. 167.

89. A justice of the peace who authorizes a private person to serve a summons must assure himself that such person is not interested in the case: Union Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Page, 61 M. 72.

90. An officer of a plaintiff corporation is not a disinterested person competent to serve a summons in the case: Ibid.

91. A constable cannot serve a summons in a cause wherein he is plaintiff: Morton v. Crane, 39 M. 526.

92. But such service is only an irregularity and is not ground for avoiding a judgment attacked collaterally: Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 M. 242.

93. A justice's summons under H. S. § 8055 in garnishment against a corporation cannot be served outside of the county: Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co., 33 M. 400.

94. The service upon foreign insurance companies provided by H. S. § 4331 is not applicable to justices' courts: Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 M. 441.

95. The act of 1849 (H. S. § 8147), authorizing the service of process against railroad companies upon conductors, etc., is not repealed, as respects justices' courts, by § 49 of the justices' act of 1855 (H. S. § 6862): Fowler v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 7 M. 79.

96. The return to a summons in these words: "Served the within by reading personally,"—the statute requiring it to be served by reading it to defendant and delivering to him a copy,—is bad, and does not give the justice jurisdiction: Campau v. Fairbanks, 1 M. 151.

97. But under R. S. 1846 (p. 389, § 15), which required that summons should be served "by reading the same to defendant, and (if required by him) delivering a copy thereof," a return in these words, "Personally served true copies of the within by reading," properly dated and signed, was held sufficient: Shaw v. Moser, 3 M. 71.

98. The following return of service of a justice's summons is prima facie sufficient to give the justice jurisdiction: "I hereby certify that I have personally served the within summons on the within named defendant, by reading the same and by giving a copy, on the 5th day of August, 1874:" Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 M. 196.

99. A justice acquires no jurisdiction over a defendant who does not appear, where the return to the summons only shows that it was served at his last place of residence upon a specified person described as a person of suitable age and discretion, but not as a member of the family, and does not show that it was served in the presence of some one of the family: Laidlaw v. Morrow, 44 M. 547.

100. Strict grammatical rules of construction are not to be applied in determining the fair import and meaning of a constable's return of a summons: Shaw v. Moser, 3 M. 71.

(b) Warrant.

101. The affidavit required by H. S. § 6834 for a justice's warrant of arrest under § 6833 must set forth facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the affiant, and not mere conclusions of law; and the facts must be such as in law tend to make out the cause of complaint: Brown v. Kelley, 20 M. 27.

102. The constitutional prohibition against the issue of any warrant for arrest "without probable cause supported by oath or affirmation" makes it needful to set forth in the affidavit for the warrant the facts which support the belief that probable cause exists: DeLong v. Briggs, 47 M. 624.

103. A showing under oath of probable cause is required to justify the issue of a warrant for arrest for trespass: Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 M. 172.

104. A justice's warrant for arrest for trespass cannot issue on an affidavit which sets forth merely that affiant "has, as he has good reason to believe, a just cause of action against [defendant, etc.], against whom he applies for process by warrant for trespass committed by said [defendant] upon lands owned by this deponent, said lands being," etc.: DeLong v. Briggs, 47 M. 624; Maxwell v. Deens, 46 M. 85; Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 M. 172.

105. Where suit is begun before a justice of the peace for the wrongful conversion of goods belonging to the plaintiffs, authority to make an affidavit for a civil warrant is presumed if the affidavit is made by one of two plaintiffs who were co-tenants of the property converted: Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 M. 308.

106. An affidavit showing that defendant has taken the property of the plaintiffs from the possession of their bailee and converted it to his own use is sufficient to authorize a justice to issue a civil warrant; the affidavit need not negative any possible defence, e. g., the bailee's consent, if that would be a defence: Ibid.

107. Giving bail on arrest upon warrant, and an adjournment obtained before pleading by the party arrested, do not waive the right of the party to object to the proceedings on which the arrest was founded: Brown v. Kelley, 20 M. 27.

108. The fact that an affidavit for the arrest of a trespasser on land is defective does not affect the issue on the merits: Maxwell v. Deens, 46 M. 85.

(c) Appearance.

1. In general.

109.*A justice must wait an hour for defendant to appear in any case where H. S. § 6938 allows plaintiff that time: Bossence v. Jones, 46 M. 492; Noyes v. Hillier, 65 M. 636 (April 28, '87).

110. The justice's failure to wait an hour for defendant is at most error, and is not such a jurisdictional defect as is open to collateral attack: Smith v. Brown, 34 M. 455.

111. A justice acquires jurisdiction when proper service is made or defendant appears. But the fact of actual notice without any appearance will not give it, and is no reason for refusing or dismissing a certiorari to bring up the proceedings: Vliet v. Westenhaver, 42 M. 593.

112. Plaintiff's failure to appear on the return day of the summons and within an hour after the time fixed therein works a discontinuance: Redman v. White, 25 M. 523; Mudge v. Yaples, 58 M. 307.

113. The failure of the plaintiff to appear within an hour of the time to which a cause in justice's court has been adjourned for the completion of the trial operates, under H. S. § 6938, as a discontinuance, and deprives the justice of all jurisdiction thereafter to render any judgment against the defendant or any judgment whatever, except that of nonsuit, and for costs: Brady v. Taber, 29 M. 199; Post v. Harper, 61 M. 434.

114. A defendant who does not appear in justice's court waives nothing; for plaintiff must in all cases prove his cause of action as upon appearance: Gilbert v. Hanford, 18 M. 40. S. P., Barber v. Taylor, 1 M. 352.

115. A party who does not appear in a suit before a justice waives nothing, but may raise the objection upon appeal or certiorari: Campau v. Fairbanks, 1 M. 152.

116. A defendant may confer jurisdiction upon the court by a voluntary appearance after an irregular or void service upon him: Dailey v. Kennedy, 64 M. 208.

117. An appearance for the purpose of objecting to irregularities does not waive them, but if it is for some other purpose, as for obtaining a continuance, it is a waiver, and no objection can afterwards be taken to prior defects even though the motion for which the appearance was made was denied: Lane v. Leech, 44 M. 163.

118. A special appearance for the sole purpose of making an objection is not a submission to jurisdiction: McLean v. Isbell, 44 M. 129.

119. A general appearance before a justice cannot be considered a submission to the jurisdiction in attachment when taken in connection with defendant's motion to dismiss the writ for want of proper service: Michels v. Stork, 44 M. 2.

120. Special appearance in a justice's court for the sole purpose of moving to quash a writ gives no right to thereafter serve the attorney with notice of an amendment of the constable's return: Bushey v. Raths, 45 M. 181.

121. Where the docket shows that defendant appeared for the purpose of objecting to the jurisdiction, and that the justice proceeded to a trial on the merits, that is equivalent to a decision of the motion: Wright v. Russell, 19 M. 346.

122. A justice before whom a suit was begun fell sick and directed it to be tried before another justice who had jurisdiction over the subject-matter. Held, that as the parties appeared on the adjourned day and tried the case on the merits without objection, they waived all questions of regularity and the judgment was binding: Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 M. 338.

2. Attorney's authority.

123. Where the attorney appearing for plaintiff on the return day failed to prove his authority when requested by defendant, the action was defeated. The demand is not mere matter of form, but a right conferred by statute: Spier v. M'Queen, 1 M. 252.

124. The requirement of H. S. § 6870 that an attorney shall prove his authority in all cases where the opposite party does not appear is peremptory, and failure to make such proof is not cured by H. S. § 7046: Scofield v. Cahoon, 31 M. 206.

125. The fact that plaintiff's attorney did not prove his authority is ground for reversing a justice's judgment for plaintiff, if neither party appeared, and the objection may be taken by special appeal: Woodbridge v. Robinson, 49 M. 228.

126. The right to object to an appearance as attorney in justice's court for want of authority to do so is not waived by having demanded a plea before the question of adjournment was considered: Westbrook v. Blood, 50 M. 443.

127. A justice's attachment was not personally served, nor did defendant appear; on the return day plaintiff appeared by attorney, and the justice, as required by H. S. § 6848, adjourned the case for thirty days. Held, that it was of no importance how plaintiff appeared on the return day, and as the docket showed that his appearance on the adjourned day was regular, a judgment in his favor cannot be objected to on the ground that his attorney did not prove his authority as required by H. S. § 6870: Churchill v. Goldsmith, 64 M. 250.

128. A justice's action in passing upon an attorney's authority to appear where the opposite party is absent is judicial, and he is not personally liable for not requiring a showing under oath: Morton v. Crane, 89 M. 526.

129. The judgment cannot be attacked collaterally for failure to prove an attorney's authority: Reed v. Gage, 88 M. 179.

As to what constitutes authority and when authority is collaterally presumed, see ATTORNEYS, §§ 9-16.

(d) Pleadings.

1. In general.

130. Technicality and form are neither expected nor required in the proceedings of justice's courts: Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 M. 16.

131. The judicial proceedings of justices should always be reviewed with some degree of liberality, and their judgments should never be set aside, or reversed, for defects in mere matters of form, where it sufficiently appears that the proceedings are substantially correct: Howard v. People, 8 M. 207.

132. The proceedings of justices should be liberally viewed with respect to regularity and form: Wight v. Warner, 1 D. 884.

133. The court will overlook matters of form in proceedings before justices, and regard them according to the merits: People v. Foote, 1 D. 103.

134. Formal defects in the proceedings in justices' courts will be overlooked if no objection is made to them until evidence is offered: Holbrook v. Cooper, 44 M. 873.

135. The pleadings should be viewed with liberality, technicalities discountenanced, and substance instead of form required: Hurtford v. Holmes, 3 M. 460; Cicotte v. Morse, 8 M. 424; Comstock v. Howd, 15 M. 287; Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 M. 584; Snyder v. Winsor, 44 M. 140; First National Bank v. Carson, 60 M. 432; Whittle v. Bailes, 65 M. 640 (April 28, '87); Nugent v. Teachout, 67 M. 571 (Nov. 10, '87).

136. Where the pleadings are oral, only matters of substance are regarded, and judgment should not be reversed for objections not made at the trial: Smith v. Dodge, 87 M. 354.

137. Special pleading is not required; it is sufficient that plaintiff set forth his cause of action, and defendant his defence, to entitle the cause to be heard upon its merits: Bancroft v. Peters, 4 M. 619.

138. Though the rules of pleading in justices' courts are more liberal than at the circuit, yet the nature of the claim of the parties litigant must be stated so as to show a cause of action, and with sufficient certainty to prevent surprise of the other party as to what he will be called upon to meet with his proofs; and the notice of recoupment comes within this rule: Watkins v. Ford, 69 M. 357 (April 18, '88).

139. Oral pleadings in replevin suits are admissible: Smith v. Dodge, 87 M. 354.

2. The declaration.

140. Where a party declares in writing the declaration must be conformed in substance to the rules of the circuit courts (H. S. § 6875): Benalleck v. People, 81 M. 200.

141. The declaration if in writing should be signed by some one: Ibid.

142. Whenever the declaration in a suit in justice's court contains a substantial statement of a cause of action it must be held sufficient. Substance is required, not form: Barber v. Taylor, 1 M. 852.

143. Declarations in justices' courts are to be liberally construed: Fletcher v. Bradford, 45 M. 349.

144. And defects will be waived by defendant if he pleads issuably and goes to trial on the merits: Hurtford v. Holmes, 8 M. 460.

145. Where a declaration in justice's court is good in substance, and defendant is present and pleads to the merits, he waives any objection on the ground of its being too general: Whelpley v. Nash, 46 M. 25.

146. Pleading to the merits and going to trial precludes the defendant from objecting to evidence on the ground that the declaration was not specific enough to warrant it, if it sufficiently states a cause of action and he was not misled: Chancey v. Skeels, 43 M. 847.

147. Where a declaration, though informal, fairly apprises the defendant of the claim made against him, it will be held sufficient if not demurred to: Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 M. 584.

148. Suit on a conditional promise to pay money to the order of a railroad company. The promise was in writing, and was filed with the justice as the sole cause of action. Upon it was indorsed the name of a person who added to his name the word "assignee." The defendant pleaded the general issue and went to trial. It was shown on the trial that the payee in the promise had been put in bankruptcy, and the indorser of the paper was assignee in bankruptcy thereof. Held, that the objection that the plaintiff did not by its declaration aver its right to recover as assignee would not be sustained on the final submission of the case: Ibid.

149. A declaration that "defendant and divers other persons, desiring to celebrate the 4th day of July, 1865, and also on that day to serve a free dinner to the soldiers and their families of G. county, and also desiring to raise a sum of money for the said purpose, did designate the said plaintiff as a proper person to raise such sum of money by subscription as would be necessary to defray the expenses of said celebration," etc., and that "the said defendant for the carrying out of said purpose became indebted to the said plaintiff in the sum of $10," referring to the subscription on file, held sufficient: Comstock v. Howd, 15 M. 237.

150. A justice's return set forth that "the plaintiff declared verbally against said defendants on common counts in assumpsit, and also on breach of a written contract, now on file in court, in all for $300 or under." Held a sufficient declaration to warrant the admission of the contract in evidence: Bradshaw v. McLoughlin, 39 M. 480.

151. Plaintiff in a justice's court declared on the common counts, and filed, as specifying the exact nature of his demand, an instrument which in itself constituted a contract sufficient to sustain an action and on which the transferee could sue. It was in terms payable to bearer, but bore the indorsement "without recourse" signed by the payee. It was understood by both parties as the substance of the declaration, and it fairly imported that the plaintiff was the transferee. There was no demurrer for uncertainty. Held, that under the liberal rules for construing pleadings in a justice's court there was enough to entitle plaintiff to show that he was the lawful transferee and to put the instrument itself in evidence: Soper v. Mills, 50 M. 75.

152. Where, in a declaration in justice's court, a special count for a failure to accept certain barrels contracted for was followed by "one other count for the sale of said barrels, and delivery of part, and refusal of defendant to receive same as agreed upon; also the common counts," held, that this could hardly be called a special count, but was good as to the common counts: Hinman v. Eakins, 26 M. 80.

153. Where a plaintiff in justice's court declared orally on "all the common counts" in assumpsit, and filed a bill of particulars claiming the balance of the purchase price of land sold to defendant, held that, while the common counts as used in our practice do not usually include a count for real property sold and conveyed, yet the bill of particulars sufficiently apprised defendant of plaintiff's claim and rendered the pleading sufficient: Nugent v. Teachout, 67 M. 571 (Nov. 10, '87).

154. Where the plaintiff exhibited a promissory note and stated that he declared against the defendant as indorser, without making any averment or statement as to the presentation of the note for payment, and notice of non-payment to the defendant, the declaration was held bad in substance, and judgment thereon for the plaintiff — the defendant not appearing — was reversed: Barber v. Taylor, 1 M. 352.

155. A declaration in a justice's court, entered upon his docket, and set out in the record as follows: "Plaintiff declared in trespass to his damage, one hundred dollars for injury to buggy and horse," and to which no objection was taken before the justice, held sufficient: Daniels v. Clegg, 28 M. 32.

156. A declaration for false imprisonment, averring that plaintiff was "thereby delayed and injured in his business," to wit, at the venue stated, was held sufficient to admit, in justice's court, evidence of damage: Thompson v. Ellsworth, 39 M. 719.

157. A declaration in a justice's court for breach of warranty must show the nature of the warranty and state the breach: Smith v. Hobart, 43 M. 465.

158. A declaration claiming to recover back as damages money which defendant had caused to be extorted from plaintiff by duress of imprisonment on criminal process procured by him for that purpose states a lawful ground of action with sufficient precision, if not demurred to, to be sustained: Holbrook v. Cooper, 44 M. 373.

159. A general ad damnum clause at the end of a declaration in justice's court will apply to a count for assault and battery, especially if the other counts are invalid; and if there were any defect in making it general it would be within the statute of amendments: Sheldon v. Sullivan, 45 M. 324.

160. A declaration in case before a justice for overflowing defendant's land sufficiently sets forth the cause of action in alleging that defendant dammed, or caused to be dammed, a ditch which plaintiff had used as a matter of right for more than twenty years, and was situated on a road laid out by the commissioners of highways, and that by the obstruction of the ditch the plaintiff had suffered damage as specified: Enright v. Hartsig, 46 M. 469.

161. In a declaration in justice's court, an ad damnum stating plaintiff's damages at $100, and his right to have them doubled because of the statutory provision applicable thereto, is sufficient: Rosevelt v. Hanold, 65 M. 414 (April 14, '87).

3. Pleas.

162. A party arrested and brought before a justice on a civil warrant has a right to a reasonable time for pleading. If the justice requires him to plead immediately, and he pleads the general issue and the case is then adjourned, he is entitled of right to amend his pleadings and put in any justification he may have on the adjourned day: Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 M. 172.

163. No plea in abatement is necessary to destroy the jurisdiction of a justice depending on the sum in controversy, if shown on the trial to be excessive: Chilson v. Jennison, 60 M. 235.

164. Whether a plea in abatement to an action of trespass brought before a justice raises a question of title which cannot properly be entertained without the filing of the bond required by H. S. § 6892 is unimportant if the plea is bad in itself: East v. Cain, 49 M. 473.

165. The requirement that in cases tried before a justice the plea shall be the general issue in all cases, with notice of any special defence, is mere matter of form, and will not invalidate a special defence pleaded alone: Eddy v. Manshaun, 42 M. 532.

166. A plea in a justice's court is sufficient if it fully apprises the plaintiff as to what the defence is: Ibid.

167. Suit was brought on a promissory note which was payable one day after date, and had run eight years. The defendant pleaded non assumpsit within six years, when he should have pleaded actio non accrevit within six years. The error being pointed out, he asked leave to amend, but the justice refused it. Held, that the plea as it stood fairly apprised the plaintiff of the defence relied upon, namely, the statute of limitations, and the justice should have allowed the defendant the benefit of it, either with or without the amendment: Snyder v. Winsor, 44 M. 140.

168. If a notice given under the general issue fairly apprises plaintiff of the defence intended to be made it is sufficient: Whittle v. Bailes, 65 M. 640 (April 28, '87).

169. A justice enters what he understands to be the substance of a plea in his docket, and if none but a plainly untenable objection has been taken to it, a court of review will presume that it was otherwise sufficient: Preston v. People, 45 M. 486.

170. A justice should enter an oral defence on his docket unless it is imperfect in substance, but his failure to do so will not deprive the defendant of his defence. If it is imperfect the defendant should be allowed to amend: Eddy v. Manshaun, 42 M. 532.

171. Where defendant "pleaded the general issue, and gave notice of set-off and recoupment," such notice was held too general to authorize admission of evidence as to the damages sought to be recouped: Ritter v. Daniels, 47 M. 617; Watkins v. Ford, 69 M. 357 (April 13, '88).

4. Bills of particulars.

172. It is an abuse of discretion for a justice, acting solely on his own motion, to exclude a defendant's bill of particulars of his claim of set-off merely because it was not filed within the time allowed for that purpose after being demanded by plaintiff, if it was in fact filed before trial, and if there was nothing to show that its reception would prejudice plaintiff: Boatz v. Berg, 51 M. 8.

5. Amendment.

173. Amendments to obviate merely technical errors are to be favored: Snyder v. Winsor, 44 M. 140.

174. Amendments in matters of form or substance in the furtherance of justice can be allowed at any time before the final submission of the cause; and whether allowed or not, if they were not such as would cause surprise, and, after the evidence is introduced, if the amendment is such as would be allowed as matter of course, the declaration should be treated as amended: Webster v. Williams, 69 M. 135 (March 2, '88).

175. After submission of the cause the justice has no authority to make or allow any substantial amendments to the declaration: Ibid.

176. Defendants arrested on a warrant issued upon an affidavit fatally defective were required to plead immediately and did so. On the adjourned day they asked leave to amend by giving notice of justification under an execution. The justice refused leave unless they would consent to an adjournment to accommodate the plaintiff, which they declined to do. Held, that under the circumstances they should have been permitted to amend without conditions: Meddaugh v. Williams, 48 M. 172.

177. After judgment in a justice's court there is no implied authority in the attorney to receive service in subsequent proceedings for amendment: Clark v. McGregor, 55 M. 412.

178. H. S. § 6872, permitting a suit in justice's court to be instituted in the firm name, amendable by inserting the partners' names before the pleadings are closed, does not apply where there is no partnership in fact: Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 M. 449.

(e) Payment into court.

179. A defendant may pay money into a justice's court before or after filing plea, without any rule or order for the purpose, and with the same effect upon the rights of parties as when money is paid into a court of record under the practice there prevailing: Phelps v. Town, 14 M. 374.

180. If such payment is after plea, it seems that a motion for leave should be made: Ibid.

As to application of payments upon judgments, see infra, §§ 806-809.

IV. TRIAL.

(a) Adjournment.

181. A justice of the peace cannot, upon a service made on the return day of an attachment, proceed at once, upon such return day, to a trial of the cause: Noyes v. Hillier, 65 M. 636 (April 28, '87).

182. The three months in which, under H. S. § 6899, postponements may be had, date from the return day of a writ of replevin: Hatch v. Christmas, 68 M. 84 (Jan. 5, '88).

183. A justice of the peace has no authority, except under H. S. § 6903, which only allows an adjournment not exceeding six days, to adjourn a cause against defendant's objection without a showing under oath (H. S. § 6899); and such adjournment discontinues the suit: Scullen v. George, 65 M. 215 (Feb. 15, '87).

184. A justice loses jurisdiction of the subject-matter by adjourning the suit on his own motion where all the parties live outside the county and there are joint defendants, only part of whom have been personally served, and none of whom have appeared (H. S. § 6903): Hall v. Shank, 57 M. 36.

185. An adjournment of a cause in a justice's court for more than four days after the trial is completed, for the purpose of rendering judgment, deprives the justice of jurisdiction: Brady v. Taber, 29 M. 199.

186. Where a suit in justice's court is continued by consent of parties, without pleading, the case is regularly in court on the adjourned day: Patridge v. Lott, 15 M. 251.

187. It is no objection to the judgment of a justice that he had adjourned the cause upon the written stipulation of counsel, without the presence of the parties: Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 M. 242.

188. On the adjourned day of a cause, the absence of the justice for a few minutes more than an hour after the time to which the cause had been adjourned, for the purpose of holding a coroner's inquest, will not operate as a discontinuance of the cause: Stadler v. Moors, 9 M. 264.

189. An adjournment by a justice, on his own motion, in the absence and without the consent of the defendant, at any other time than on the return day of the writ, is a discontinuance of the cause: Ibid.

190. Where, on the adjourned day of a cause, a justice was absent half an hour over time in the performance of official duties not pertaining to his judicial office, and on his return, upon defendant's refusal to appear, adjourned the cause in his absence and gave him notice of the adjournment, and on the next adjourned day gave judgment against him in his absence, the judgment was held void: Roberts v. Hathaway, 42 M. 592.

191. Where, on special appeal, a justice's return shows that he had adjourned the case, but does not show that he had done so without proper application and evidence, it is presumed that the adjournment was proper: Deitz v. Groesbeck, 32 M. 303.

192. A defendant who has requested, or at least consented, to an adjournment of a suit in a justice's court on account of the sickness of the justice, cannot complain that the adjournment was on the justice's own motion, and, being for more than six days, wrought a discontinuance depriving the justice of jurisdiction to proceed further with the cause: Patterson v. McRea, 29 M. 258.

193. A defendant in an attachment suit before a justice asked for its adjournment to a specified day, but the justice refused and adjourned it instead to the hour fixed for the hearing of an application for a dissolution of the attachment before a circuit court commissioner in a remote township; though the defendant showed that the presence of himself and of two witnesses was necessary at both places on the adjourned day, the justice refused a continuance asked for by defendant's attorney; held, that as the justice's refusal to adjourn to the day specified occasioned the necessity for a continuance, it was a valid reason for asking the continuance, and a refusal to continue, knowing why the continuance was asked, was an abuse of whatever discretion might belong to the justice in the matter: Mercer v. Lowell National Bank, 29 M. 248.

194. It is error for a justice to refuse an adjournment on a return day of summons upon a sworn showing that defendant is too unwell to attend to business or leave his house: Locke v. Leonard Silk Co., 87 M. 479.

195. The showing for a continuance need not be as complete upon the return day of summons as would be required later in the case: Ibid.

196. It is not a legal cause for the adjournment of proceedings on the return day that the party asking it wants the assistance of counsel: Warner v. Comstock, 55 M. 615.

197. Defendant's refusal to submit to cross-examination upon his affidavit for continuance is sufficient reason for denying the continuance: Boatz v. Berg, 51 M. 9.

198. The objection that the case had been illegally adjourned is unavailable if not taken before the trial: Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherspoon, 49 M. 877.

199. Whether an adjournment on plaintiff's motion, after defendant, under his notice of set-off, had filed an account of said set-off, verified by affidavit as provided by H. S. § 7525, operated as a waiver of the service of the account, affidavit, etc., quere, court being equally divided: Lamb v. McGowan, 66 M. 615 (July 7, '87).

(b) Jury.

200. Where a party has failed to demand a jury at the joining of issue and before adjournment, it is nevertheless competent for the justice to order one to be called on his demand on the adjourned day. The failure of the party to demand a jury within the time allowed by law is only a waiver of the right; but the justice possesses the same power to order one afterwards as is possessed by the circuit court: Van Sickle v. Kellogg, 19 M. 49.

201. If a justice of the peace has any doubt, or is not able to certify in positive terms, that no jury was demanded at the time provided for by the statute, he should entertain the demand and allow a jury: Pontiac & L. P. R. Co. v. Hopkinson, 69 M. 10 (March 2, '88).

202. If a jury is demanded at the time of joining issue and before adjournment, the jury fee may be paid at the day to which the cause stands adjourned at any time before the trial is entered upon by the swearing of witnesses: Ibid.

203. One who demands a jury in justice's court, and pays their fees, has no right, if this jury disagrees, to insist upon trial by another without advancing an additional jury fee: McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 M. 426; Roberts v. Tremayne, 61 M. 264.

204. H. S. § 6935, in so far as it limits the time for the selection and summoning of a new jury in justice's court to forty-eight hours, unless the parties agree to a shorter time, applies only to cases where such jury has been properly demanded and the statutory fees paid: Roberts v. Tremayne, 61 M. 264.

205. A justice's jury was discharged upon failure to agree, and another trial was set for the next day, with notice to defendant, who did not appear at the time set, made no motion for a continuance, and did not request or pay for a second jury. Held, that the justice after waiting an hour for defendant could try the case in his absence and render judgment: Ibid.

206. Defendant's absence from further proceedings in justice's court after demanding a jury and paying the jury fee does not amount to a waiver of the jury, and the justice cannot proceed to try the case alone: Boatz v. Berg, 51 M. 9.

207. A justice's juries may be summoned from the county at large: Faulks v. People, 39 M. 200.

208. A justice of the peace has no right to go alone into the jury room to advise the jury, even at their request, unless the parties or their counsel consent: Galloway v. Corbitt, 53 M. 460.

209. But where the justice, at the request of the jury and with the consent of the parties, went to the jury room with the latter to answer a question the jury wished to ask him as to their right to find for an amount less than the face of the note sued on, held no error: Smoke v. Jones, 35 M. 409.

210. If the parties to a suit in justice's court allow the justice to participate with the jury's consultations in the jury room, they constitute a tribunal of their own to determine what verdict shall be rendered, and after the rendition of the same, all having been done by consent, the justice may render judgment upon it, and if the verdict was wrong the parties are remediless by certiorari: Snyder v. Wilson, 65 M. 336 (April 14, '87).

211. Jury fees are not included in the fixed sum to which the prevailing party's costs are limited by H. S. § 6940: Overpack v. Ruggles, 27 M. 65; McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 M. 426.

As to testimony of parties in justices' courts, see EVIDENCE, § 1707.

212. A cause of action must be as fully proved in a justice's court as in any other: Cicotte v. Morse, 8 M. 424.

213. By H. S. §§ 6875, 6928, if the written instrument declared on or set off before a justice is filed at the time of declaring or pleading, or giving notice of set-off, its execution must be denied on oath at the time of such filing, and not afterwards: Fish v. Hale, 4 M. 506.

214. Such written instrument may be filed previous to declaring, etc., and if it is on file at that time it will be sufficient: Smoke v. Jones, 35 M. 409.

And further, as to denial of execution of written instruments, or admission by failure to deny, see BILLS AND NOTES, §§ 274-298.

215. In replevin brought by one claiming a special lien on the property for freight, defendant, under the general issue, without notice, may give evidence to reduce the lien by showing injury to the property while in transit: Bancroft v. Peters, 4 M. 619.

216. A declaration in trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close without asserting and describing a title in plaintiff in the lands is not such a claim of title as, under H. S. § 6894, is admitted by the plea of the general issue. The land is plaintiff's close if he had peaceable possession, even though he had no title; and it was not plaintiff's close if defendant was in peaceable possession: Vandoozer v. Dayton, 45 M. 247.

217. Under such a declaration plaintiff relies upon his possession, and defendant may disprove it under the general issue: Ibid.

218. But if plaintiff claims and describes a title in himself in the declaration, it seems that defendant, under the general issue merely, will not be allowed to dispute it, or claim any right or possession in himself inconsistent therewith: Ibid.

219. Tenancy of any sort is a species of title; and where a defendant, in an action brought before a justice and involving title, has not given notice that title will come in question, he cannot rely upon his tenancy as a defence: Ibid.

220. In an action of trover, brought before a justice for the conversion of a quantity of hoops, it was held proper to show, under the plea of the general issue, that they were cut from lands belonging to a certain estate, and to put in evidence the government patent to the former owner and a power of attorney from his heirs, including plaintiff, empowering the defendant to sell and convey any of the property belonging to them. The introduction of such testimony would not be litigating a claim of title, and the evidence would be admissible for the purpose of identifying the property in suit: Hart v. Hart, 48 M. 175.

221. It is discretionary with a justice to allow proof to be made after the argument as to the time when the summons was delivered for service, provided such proof does not prejudice the opposite party: Gray v. Willcox, 56 M. 58.

222. A justice trying a case without a jury does not clearly err in striking out evidence as immaterial if he returns the facts truly for review: Mann v. Tyler, 56 M. 564.

223. Where an issue formed upon a plea of not guilty in replevin was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict as follows: "This jury find for the plaintiff," held that, although not a formal verdict in replevin, yet it sufficiently indicated for which party the jury had found the issue, and that it was the duty of the justice to enter the verdict in the proper form, according to the substantial finding, and to render judgment thereon; and he may be compelled by mandamus to do so: Lamberton v. Foote, 1 D. 102.

224. Unless the facts in a replevin suit before a justice require a special finding, a verdict that "this jury finds for the plaintiff" is sufficient, and judgment must be entered on it: Smith v. Dodge, 37 M. 354.

225. Trespass was brought in justice's court on three counts, two based on the statute against forcible dispossession and one at common law for damage to plaintiff's goods. The jury's verdict was in these words: "Damages on goods twenty-seven dollars and seventy-five cents. Actual exemplary or personal damages twenty dollars, trebled sixty dollars." Held, that this would sustain judgment; the assessment of damages was sufficiently specific and the actual damages sufficiently indicated: Wilson v. McCrillies, 50 M. 347.

226. A justice must construe and apply the verdict of a jury reasonably in the light of the proceedings: Ibid.

227. The verdict of a jury in justice's court is equivalent to judgment and will support issue of execution: Gaines v. Betts, 2 D. 98; Overall v. Pero, 7 M. 815.

228. Where the jury have found a verdict the justice cannot award a venire de novo, thus in effect granting a new trial of the cause: Lamberton v. Foote, 1 D. 102.

229. A jury's verdict in justice's court is conclusive; the justice cannot set it aside nor make it invalid by neglecting to enter judgment on it at once. The law supplies the judgment if not entered, and its subsequent entry in accordance with the verdict is proper: Alt v. Lalone, 54 M. 802.

V. JUDGMENT; DOCKET.

As to proof of justice's judgments, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1101-1108, 1112.

1. Nature; form.

230. It is a judicial act for a justice of the peace to render judgment, and the performance of it involves the "holding of court." This is forbidden by H. S. § 1591, for statutory holidays, or for the day following where they fall on Sunday, and a judgment so rendered is void: Hemmens v. Bentley, 32 M. 89.

231. Where a justice, when a cause is submitted, informs the parties he shall take time to decide the cause, but does not say how much, he is not obliged to wait four days: Draper v. Tooker, 16 M. 74.

232. When the justice does not fix the time within the four days allowed by the statute upon which to render his judgment, the parties are bound to take notice when the judgment is rendered: Ibid.

233. If a justice determines, when a cause is submitted to him, to decide it on some particular day within the four days allowed by statute, this is in legal effect a continuance of the cause until that day, and should be so announced to the parties and so entered upon his docket: Ibid.

234. A judgment not rendered within four days after the cause has been submitted to the justice is void: Harrison v. Sager, 27 M. 476; Brady v. Tuber, 29 M. 199; Hall v. Howard, 39 M. 219; Weaver v. Lammon, 62 M. 366.

235. If the fourth day is Sunday, judgment must be rendered before that day: Harrison v. Sager, 27 M. 476.

236. Where a justice's return on appeal states that the cause was tried by him without a jury on the 12th, and that he rendered judgment on the 17th, it will not be presumed in support of the judgment, in the absence of any showing that such is the fact, that the cause was not finally submitted to him until the 13th: Ibid.

237. A justice cannot render judgment on a bill or note against part of the defendants: Berend v. Avery, 39 M. 182.

238. Judgment for a joint conversion cannot be entered against a defendant who had not been served with process: McLean v. Isbell, 44 M. 129.

2. Upon what based.

239. A justice should require distinct lawful evidence that summons has been served personally, before rendering judgment on its return against a defendant who has not appeared: Smalley v. Lighthall, 87 M. 848.

240. If a justice, whether properly or not, has erased his docket entry of the appearance of a defendant, he ought not to proceed in the case without giving notice of his purpose to the defendant, or the attorney who had assumed to appear for him: King v. McKenzie, 51 M. 461.

241. A judgment rendered in plaintiff's favor before the return hour of the summons, without defendant's consent or appearance, or when plaintiff has failed to appear in one hour thereafter, is void: Mudge v. Yaples, 58 M. 307.

242. Where defendants sued in their firm name in justice's court pleaded in such name, and were allowed to recover upon a set-off, a judgment in their favor on certiorari was affirmed by a divided court: Lamb v. McGowan, 66 M. 615 (July 7, '87).

3. Confession of judgment.

243. A justice's authority to render judgment on confession is derived solely from the statute, and the docket entries of the proceedings must show that the law has been complied with: Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Spear v. Carter, 1 M. 19; Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 M. 85.

244. A confession of judgment before a justice is void unless in accordance with the statute authorizing it: Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390; Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Spear v. Carter, 1 M. 19; Wilson v. Davis, 1 M. 156; Dodge v. Bird, 19 M. 518; Wilson v. Davis, 1 M. 156; Austin v. Grant, 1 M. 490.

245. A justice can render judgment on confession of the party only in those actions which he has jurisdiction to try: Spear v. Carter, 1 M. 19.

246. Under R. S. 1838, p. 389, § 2, a judgment by confession was held void where it did not appear to be "signed by the person making the same, in the presence of the justice and of one or more competent witnesses." The statute was construed to require the witnesses to subscribe their names as such: Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Austin v. Grant, 1 M. 490.

247. A judgment entered on confession without process is void if the paper treated as a confession is a mere due-bill: Dodge v. Bird, 19 M. 518.

248. To give an oral admission of indebtedness the effect of a cognovit, in a case where a money demand is in suit, it must not only admit that the plaintiff has a demand, but it must either definitely fix the amount or furnish the means of fixing it by some process of mere calculation. Otherwise no judgment is confessed and the case requires evidence: Morrison v. Riker, 26 M. 385.

249. It is only where the parties appear without process that a written confession signed by the defendant is required by the statute. If the defendant appears after due service of process, and orally admits the cause of action for which the plaintiff declares, this is sufficient to authorize judgment to be entered against him: Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 M. 479.

250. Judgment against two, on confession of one, after return day of summons, and without continuance, is void: Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

251. A judgment was rendered by a justice in these words, after the title of the cause: "Judgment by written confession of the above named defendants, in favor of the above named plaintiff, for eighty-eight dollars and eighteen cents damages and costs of suit." Held, that the judgment did not show, and was not prima facie evidence, that the justice had jurisdiction of either the persons of the defendants, or of the subject-matter of the suit, and that it was therefore void: Spear v. Carter, 1 M. 19.

252. A judgment by confession without process is void, unless the confession is in writing signed by the defendant in the presence of the justice: Wilson v. Davis, 1 M. 156.

253. Where no suit has been commenced by process, judgment can only be taken in justice's court upon confession signed in the justice's presence: Cox v. Crippen, 18 M. 502.

254. Where parties appeared before a justice, and confessed judgment in favor of another, on a demand arising upon contract, for a sum specified, and authorized judgment to be entered thereupon, it was held a substantial acknowledgment of their indebtedness, and sufficient under this statute: Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 M. 16.

255. Where two persons thus confessed judgment, and the judgment entry recited that "the parties appeared," it was held that this phrase purports that the creditor, as well as the debtors, was present and participated in the proceedings: Ibid.

256. A justice's judgment rendered on a confession in writing, signed by the defendant in due form, is valid though the justice's docket does not affirmatively show that no process was issued. A confession that is sufficient without process, and where the defendant appears voluntarily, is certainly good with it: Hollister v. Giddings, 24 M. 501.

257. Where a judgment by confession in an attachment suit is entered by the justice in a different docket from that in which the attachment suit is entered, and the docket entries are connected in the two dockets as the proceedings in the attachment suit, they are sufficient to establish that the judgment entered was one in the attachment suit: Hahn v. Seifert, 64 M. 647 (Feb. 8, '87).

258. Whether confession by the president of a corporation without a showing of authority from the directors gives jurisdiction to render judgment, quere: Jones v. Avery, 50 M. 326.

4. Entry; docket.

259. The statute requiring a justice of the peace to keep a docket and to enter therein the judgments rendered by him is directory only, and the entry when made is not the judgment itself, but only the evidence of it: Hickey v. Hinsdale, 8 M. 267.

260. A justice's judgment which was rendered upon the verdict, and entered by the justice in his minutes, is not void because it was not forthwith transcribed upon his docket: Saunders v. Tioga Manuf. Co., 27 M. 520.

261. Where a justice had entered judgment in his minutes, leaving a blank for the costs, which were not entered for four days afterward, it was held that the judgment was valid as to the damages; and as to costs, that on good cause shown or by consent, and by making due announcement on the day of the trial, the justice might hold the court open even for four days to hear evidence as to the different items of costs, the determination of which would relate back and take effect as of the date of the judgment: Ibid.

262. The entry of judgment should be officially signed by the justice: Howard v. People, 3 M. 207.

263. Where the entry of a judgment on a justice's docket is followed immediately by a stay of execution in the same case — each being dated separately, but the dates being the same — and it is inferable from the docket that both entries were made at the same time as one transaction, and the official signature of the justice is appended at the foot of the entry of the stay, the judgment is not void for want of signature, nor the stay for want of attestation: Hollister v. Giddings, 24 M. 501.

264. Under the proper entitling of a cause with the names of the parties, an award of judgment was entered as follows: "It is therefore considered that the said P. do recover of the said D. the sum," etc. Debt being brought on this judgment it was held that the entry did not show with sufficient certainty in whose favor and against whom the judgment was rendered, and that therefore a transcript thereof offered in evidence was inadmissible: Rood v. Bloomfield School District, 1 D. 502.

265. Held, also, that parol evidence was not admissible to prove that the letters P. and D. in the docket entry meant plaintiff and defendant: Ibid.

266. A justice's judgment, though not technically a record, has all the effect of a record, and the docket entry thereof should be as explicit and certain as to all matters of substance as a judgment in a court of record: Ibid.; Howard v. People, 3 M. 207.

267. The docket entry of a justice showed that, on default of appearance by the defendants in a suit against the maker and indorser of a note, he proceeded to hear the cause on a return of service of summons on the within named defendant, and entered judgment as follows: "And after considering the evidence judgment is this day rendered for $300 damages and $3 costs." Held, that this judgment was indefinite and void on its face: Sherman v. Palmer, 37 M. 509.

268. The docket of a justice stated that a cause was called and judgment rendered "on the return of process." Held to mean on the return day of process, and not the time of its actual return: Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 M. 205.

269. A statement in the docket that judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff — there being only one defendant — sufficiently shows that judgment was rendered against defendant: Ibid.

270. The judgment to be rendered in justice's court on a joint debt when only one defendant is served is prescribed by statute, and the use of the word "defendant" instead of "defendants" in entering judgment is a mere clerical mispision, and leaves the judgment, if not taken up for review, valid as against the defendant who was served: Zimmer v. Davis, 35 M. 39; Holcomb v. Tift, 54 M. 647.

271. The record of the court of a justice of the peace consists of the entries required by the statute to be made upon his docket: Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 M. 39.

272. The docket of a justice is a public record, at all times open for proper entries: Cox v. Crippen, 13 M. 502.

273. A justice's docket record must disclose jurisdiction and show everything which the statute requires to be entered upon it; but it must also be construed fairly and reasonably, and in view of the fact that the justice is not presumed to be a legal expert. Reasonable certainty, or perhaps "certainty to a common intent," is all that is necessary: Vroman v. Thompson, 51 M. 452.

274. The records of proceedings before a justice are only required to be certain to a common intent: Shaw v. Moser, 3 M. 71.

275. When a justice's docket entries comply with the statute, the ordinary presumption in favor of the correctness of official action must support the proceedings: Peck v. Cavell, 16 M. 9.

276. The justice's docket is entitled to a fair and reasonable interpretation, but it must show by reasonable intendment that the justice had jurisdiction: Mudge v. Yaples, 58 M. 307.

277. It is proper that in every case the justice should make his docket show in what manner the parties appear, but he is not expressly required by statute to do so: Morton v. Crane, 39 M. 526.

278. The recital on the docket of a justice that parties appeared and pleaded, held conclusive: Facey v. Fuller, 13 M. 527.

279. The justice's docket must show affirmatively the day and hour of the appearance of the parties, and if defendant is absent that plaintiff appeared on the return day of the summons, and within one hour after the time fixed therein: Mudge v. Yaples, 58 M. 307.

280. Where there has been no appearance on defendant's part the justice's docket must affirmatively show that plaintiff appeared within one hour of the time to which the cause was adjourned: Post v. Harper, 61 M. 434.

281. A justice's docket entry reciting the date and return day of the summons, and containing no other date except to repeat at the end of it the date of the return day, and which does not state on what day the parties were called, and the plaintiff appeared and the defendant failed to appear, is not enough to comply with H. S. § 7053, which was not meant to leave the time of appearance to be referred to the date of the judgment in a case affording room, on the face of the docket, for the two acts on separate days: Redman v. White, 25 M. 523.

282. A docket entry which does not show whether the plaintiff appeared on any particular day out of several does not show that he appeared within an hour after the return day of process; and as (H. S. § 6938, clause 2) his failure to appear within that time works a discontinuance, such a docket entry fails to show that the justice was authorized to render the judgment, and is, therefore, not admissible to prove the validity of the judgment: Ibid.

283. The docket of a justice of the peace, verified by his own oath, is competent evidence of the facts stated therein, but a docket entry in an attachment suit is not sufficient to prove a valid judgment in the absence of any proof of the affidavit upon which the writ issued and which is essential to the jurisdiction to issue the writ at all: Goodrich v. Burdick, 26 M. 39.

284. The objection that the hour to which a case was continued does not appear in a justice's docket is frivolous and properly overruled if it appears that the hour was fixed and that it appeared in the justice's minutes, but had not been transferred to his docket: Gray v. Willcox, 56 M. 58.

285. A justice's neglect to record in his docket the place to which a case is adjourned is a clerical irregularity for which judgment cannot be reversed if the defendant is not misled and appears and answers: Whelpley v. Nash, 46 M. 25.

286. Where plaintiff declared orally on a note then present on file, and the justice, in entering the substance on his docket, described the note as dated in 1874, when in fact it bore date in 1871, there was no variance; the incorrect date in the docket was substantially corrected by the note itself, and the mistake might have been cured in fact by correcting the entry: Smoke v. Jones, 35 M. 409.

287. Oral evidence is inadmissible to vary or explain a justice's docket so as to give him jurisdiction that does not appear on its face: Mudge v. Yaples, 58 M. 307.

288. It seems that when a justice's docket shows jurisdiction no proof can be given to contradict its recitals: Clark v. Holmes, 1 D. 390.

289. But the want of jurisdiction either over the person or the subject-matter may be shown by evidence, even when it tends to contradict the minutes or docket: Ibid.

290. A justice's jurisdiction to proceed as in case of personal service is not established by his docket entry, to the exclusion of proof that service was not personal, when the return does not show that it was; Smalley v. Lighthall, 87 M. 348.

291. The docket entry as to the date of a judgment cannot be contradicted by the justice's return to a certiorari showing that judgment was really rendered on the day before the date named in the docket: Weaver v. Lammon, 63 M. 366.

292. Whether, after the allowance of a writ of certiorari, a justice of the peace can, on motion, change the entry on his docket so as to make it show the true date of a return of service of an attachment, or permit an officer who has omitted to date his return to affix the correct date, quere: Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 M. 395.

5. Amendment.

293. A justice cannot amend a judgment by substituting another name for that of the defendant, even by consent of the plaintiff and the person whose name is to be substituted: Foster v. Alden, 21 M. 507.

294. Where a justice enters judgment as against Peter Mayo in a suit begun by process against Peter Mayhue, it is competent to amend the error by following the summons: Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 M. 196.

(b) Validity and effect.

1. Setting aside or vacating.

295. When a justice of the peace has once rendered judgment in a cause he has no power to vacate the same, or set it aside, or to render a new judgment; and if he attempt this, though it be done in obedience to a writ of mandamus from the circuit court, the new judgment so attempted to be rendered will be a mere nullity, and the prior judgment will remain in full force: O'Brien v. Tallman, 36 M. 13.

2. Collateral attack.

296. A justice's judgment cannot be attacked collaterally for failure to prove the authority of plaintiff's attorney where defendant did not appear: Reed v. Gage, 33 M. 179; Mayhew v. Snell, 38 M. 182.

297. Or for the justice's failure to wait an hour for defendant to appear: Smith v. Brown, 34 M. 455.

298. Or because the summons was served by a constable, it being in his own favor: Parmalee v. Loomis, 24 M. 242.

299. Or for want of a signature to the affidavit for a transcript of the judgment: Mayhew v. Snell, 33 M. 182.

300. Or on the ground that the docket does not show that the note, whereon the judgment appears to have been rendered, was negotiable, or to whom it was payable: Van Kleek v. Eggleston, 7 M. 511.

301. Where, in an action before a justice on a joint note, summons was returned as served on only one of the makers, the other not being found, and judgment was rendered against this one only, this fact does not go to the jurisdiction of the justice, and is no ground for collaterally attacking the judgment while it remains unreversed, although the error is one for which it might be reversed on certiorari: Allen v. Mills, 26 M. 123.

302. To review the validity of a justice's judgment on certiorari sued out to review the action of a circuit court in denying a motion to vacate a judgment docketed there on a transcript, filed in the circuit, from the justice's judgment, would be to assail the latter collaterally, and it is not allowable: Mayhew v. Snell, 33 M. 182.

303. Where a justice's execution is relied on by an officer sued in replevin, plaintiff may show that there was no service of process and that the attorney appeared without authority: Hunt v. Strew, 33 M. 85.

304. Rendering judgment for the amount of a mechanic's lien and holding the owner personally liable will not destroy a justice's jurisdiction of a suit for wages; nor is the judgment void or open to collateral attack, but it must stand unless reversed: Smith v. Pearce, 52 M. 370.

(c) Satisfaction; payment; discharge.

305. In the absence of special instructions a justice of the peace can receive nothing but current money of the United States in satisfaction of a judgment on his docket: Heald v. Bennett, 1 D. 513; Welch v. Frost, 1 M. 30.

306. A judgment recovered before one justice can be ascertained and applied by another in satisfaction of a counter-claim recovered before him by the other party: McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 M. 215.

307. A justice before whom a judgment had been obtained, and to whom the same had been paid pending proceedings in garnishment to reach the avails thereof, applied such payment upon the judgment subsequently rendered by him in garnishment, after the time for appealing therefrom had expired. Mandamus to compel him to pay over the amount to the first judgment creditor was denied: Griffin v. Potter, 27 M. 166.

308. Payment by a garnishee defendant upon a particular demand is in the hands of a justice as payment on that demand only, and on no other; and the justice is not liable for the money received to one who holds a judgment against the same garnishee on another demand: Dane v. Holmes, 41 M. 661.

309. Money paid to a justice to be applied upon a judgment in garnishment cannot be used to satisfy a different judgment against the same party, even though the time had expired during which the fund could be bound by the proceedings in garnishment: McDonald v. Lewis, 42 M. 135.

310. A justice entered across a judgment on his docket that it was paid, stating the day, and signed the entry in his official capacity. Held, that such entry was prima facie evidence that the judgment was satisfied, and that this evidence was not rebutted by proof, unaccompanied by any explanatory testimony, of another entry immediately below the former, on the same docket, without date, and signed by the justice in his individual capacity, stating in effect that the judgment had not been paid, according to the import of the former entry: Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199.

311. The entry of the words "Judgment discharged," written by a justice across the face of a judgment, is no more conclusive than a receipt; it is only prima facie evidence of payment and can be shown to be incorrect: Dane v. Holmes, 41 M. 661.

312. A justice's docket entry that money paid into court is in satisfaction of a particular judgment cannot make him liable to the judgment creditor for the money, if it was actually meant to be applied upon a different judgment: McDonald v. Lewis, 42 M. 135.

(d) Actions on judgments.

313. An action of debt lies on a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace immediately on its rendition, notwithstanding execution upon it has been stayed pursuant to the statute: McDonald v. Butler, 3 M. 558.

314. A justice's judgment is not necessarily invalidated by an excessive allowance of costs, and such judgment may be sued over again for the damages only: Whelpley v. Nash, 46 M. 25.

315. And plaintiff may recover the costs of the second action; he has "good cause" as required by H. S. § 6941: Ibid.

316. Where a justice's docket recites that plaintiff declared "orally in assumpsit on the common counts and specially in writing," it cannot, in an action on the judgment, be assumed that, in declaring specially, he added a count upon a cause of action not cognizable by the justice, or that, even if he did, the judgment was rendered upon the bad count: Schlatterer v. Nickodemus, 50 M. 315.

317. A declaration on a justice's judgment requires no further allegation in regard to jurisdiction than would be required in a suit upon the judgment of a court of record: Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 M. 374.

318. A justice's judgment, though joint in form, is not in law a joint obligation binding both defendants alike if only one was served, and it does not merge the debt so as to preclude suing both over again. The one who was not served is not personally bound, and cannot be until he is sued on the original obligation. The judgment, therefore, may be sued as an individual obligation against the one who was served, and the case may be discontinued as to the other: Holcomb v. Tift, 54 M. 647.

319. All the proceedings relating to transcripts are statutory, and the statute (H. S. §§ 6947, 6948) must be strictly followed: Jewett v. Bennett, 3 M. 198; O'Brien v. O'Brien, 42 M. 15; Doty v. Dexter, 61 M. 348.

320. The issue and return unsatisfied of a justice's execution is not necessary before taking out a transcript: Udell v. Kahn, 31 M. 195.

321. A transcript cannot be made and filed in the circuit court until the time when execution would be issuable by the justice on the judgment. A transcript made before five days after rendition of judgment in a case where execution could not issue earlier is void: O'Brien v. O'Brien, 42 M. 15; Vroman v. Thompson, 42 M. 145.

322. If the transcript is a correct copy from the docket entries it will be sufficient: Udell v. Kahn, 31 M. 195.

323. In making out the transcript the justice corrected the docket entry of the judgment so as to follow the summons, which ran against Peter Mayhue, instead of Peter Mayo, as the judgment entry had it. Held, that the transcript was good, there being no question of identity: Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 M. 196.

324. The transcript must be officially signed by the justice; his name appearing in the body of the judgment is not sufficient: Bigelow v. Booth, 39 M. 622.

325. And it must be certified by him: Peck v. Cavell, 16 M. 9.

326. Where a transcript was authenticated by a certificate of the justice in this form: "I hereby certify that the above is a true transcript of the above judgment, and of the subsequent proceedings thereon," the certificate was insufficient to authorize the filing of the transcript and issuing execution thereon: Jewett v. Bennett, 3 M. 198.

327. The affidavit required by H. S. § 6947 of insufficiency of goods and chattels need not state the amount due upon the judgment; but it may do so: Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 M. 338.

328. The affiant's signature to the affidavit of insufficiency of goods, etc., is not necessary to its validity, if it is actually sworn to: Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 M. 196.

329. An affidavit of the amount due at the time of filing the transcript is necessary to authorize the clerk to enter and docket the judgment: Peck v. Cavell, 16 M. 9; Monaghan v. McKimmie, 32 M. 40; Bigelow v. Booth, 39 M. 622.

330. The affidavit of the amount due is a necessary jurisdictional fact in order to give the clerk any authority to act in the matter: Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 M. 338.

331. Where there has been no substantial delay in preparing and filing the transcript, and the affidavit for the transcript contains a statement of the amount due, the transcript is not void for want of a separate affidavit of the amount due, and an execution issued on the transcript from the circuit is valid: Udell v. Kahn, 31 M. 195; Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 M. 338.

332. But where there was a delay of eight days in filing the transcript after the affidavit of insufficiency of goods, etc., was made, it was held that a statement therein of the amount due would not obviate the necessity of making a separate affidavit: Bigelow v. Booth, 39 M. 622.

333. An affidavit of amount due is good if filed without such delay as would give rise to a presumption that payment had been made since it was sworn to, and it is generally good if filed on the day after it was made: Smith v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 46 M. 338.

334. The affidavit for a transcript is jurisdictional, and it cannot be made by the administrator of the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered; nor can it be made by the attorney who obtained the judgment, for his authority was revoked by his client's death: Doty v. Dexter, 61 M. 348.

335. The omission by the clerk of the circuit court to enter the transcript in a book will not avoid an execution where there are no intervening interests of third persons; and such entry may be rectified by proper steps so as to relate back to the filing: Udell v. Kahn, 31 M. 195.

336. Where the transcript of a justice's judgment filed in the circuit court fails to show, in a case where defendant did not appear, that there was any proper service of process, or whether plaintiff appeared and took judgment before or at the time the writ was returnable, it does not disclose that the justice had jurisdiction to render the judgment, and parol proof cannot supply the defect: Wedel v. Green, 70 M. 642 (June 15, '88).

337. A transcript properly certified and docketed renders the judgment a judgment of a court of record from the time of such filing and docketing; thus changing in some degree its nature, and very materially the rights, powers and liabilities of the parties to it: Jewett v. Bennett, 3 M. 198.

338. A justice's judgment duly docketed in the circuit court has the same effect as a judgment rendered in that court, and is to be enforced, discharged, cancelled, or affected by the statute of limitations in the same way: Arnold v. Thompson, 19 M. 333.

339. While for certain purposes a transcript of a justice's judgment has the effect of a circuit court judgment, it is not "a judgment rendered in a circuit court" within the meaning of the statute permitting garnishment to be based on a judgment so rendered: Weimeister v. Singer, 44 M. 406.

I. THE RELATION.

(a) What constitutes, generally.

1. A tenancy exists where one has let real estate to another to hold of him as tenant: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

2. The usual incidents of a tenancy are possession with right of enjoyment, and rent: Ibid.

3. A tenancy does not necessarily imply a right to complete and exclusive possession; it may be created with implied or express reservation of a right to possession on the landlord's part for all purposes not inconsistent with the privileges granted to the tenant: Ibid.

4. The privilege granted by deed, and for an annual compensation, to flow lands for an indefinite period creates a tenancy in them: Ibid.

5. The contract relation of landlord and tenant cannot impliedly exist unless the person charged as tenant has either accepted possession from the landlord, or done some other act in plain recognition of the relationship whereby he is equitably estopped from denying it: Lockwood v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 42 M. 536.

6. An adverse use or holding by the party sought to be charged as tenant is incompatible with the relationship of landlord and tenant: Ward v. Warner, 8 M. 508; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351; Wilmarth v. Palmer, 34 M. 347.

7. Where an occupant of land was in possession as tenant merely, it is presumable that he was in as tenant under the party claiming title: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

8. The fact of A.'s occupancy of B.'s land is prima facie evidence that A. is B.'s tenant, which can only be rebutted by showing some fact or circumstance tending to rebut this inference: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

9. An agreement whereby one party lets certain land, for a year, to the other, for a certain sum, and authorizes him to enter and harvest a crop which the former agrees to put in, is a lease and not a mortgage, and gives the lessee title to the crops, so that it cannot be attached in a proceeding against the lessor: Stadden v. Hazzard, 34 M. 76.

10. While a mere agreement for a lease does not create a tenancy or give the other party a right of possession, yet if the latter has possession for the purpose of putting up a building and is to continue in possession as tenant until his rent pays for the construction, his tenancy begins immediately on the completion of the building: Billings v. Canney, 57 M. 425.

11. Tender of a sum of money as rent, by a party affirming the existence of an agreement for a lease to a party denying it, has no tendency to prove the agreement: Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 M. 117.

12. The purchaser of lumber becomes presumptively the tenant of the owner of the premises on which it is piled if he does not remove it within a reasonable time and on being notified that he must take it away; and if such notice is accompanied by a statement that a specified rent will be charged for their occupancy, he is presumed to assent to the terms if he does not remove it: Ducey Lumber Co. v. Lane, 58 M. 521.

13. One who goes into possession, admitting the title of the owner, cannot, after remaining quietly in possession for a long period, render his holding adverse by a mere silent determination of his own mind, so as to avoid a liability for the use of the premises: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

14. Where a lessee of a water-front which he had used for the storage of logs ended his lease by proper notice, and removed all his logs, no subsequent acts would operate as a renewal or continuance of the tenure, which were not equivalent to a re-entry, or to the exclusion of any other possession. Merely leaving a boom there, which could be removed by the owner as well as by himself, would not operate as an assertion of continued possession: Thomas v. Frost, 29 M. 336.

15. Nor would passing rafts across the front to premises below, and closing the boom during their passage to prevent their floating into it, be an act of possession or tenancy unless accompanied by an assertion or design to that effect: Ibid.

(b) Attornment; denying title.

16. A tenant cannot, by his own act merely, change the tenure, so as to enable himself to hold against his landlord. He cannot, during the continuance of the lease or tenancy, make a valid attornment to a third person without his landlord's consent: Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D.

179; Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117; Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106; Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 M. 339; Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 237; Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518; Hoffman v. Clark, 63 M. 175.

17. The tenant of a mortgagee, put into possession of a part of the mortgaged land under a parol agreement with the mortgager's grantee, cannot attorn to the latter, and a share of a crop raised by him and delivered as rent to his landlord cannot be seized by the grantee because the mortgagee begins a foreclosure: Byers v. Byers, 65 M. 596 (April 28, '87).

18. A contract by which a tenant is induced to desert his landlord is corrupt and void, and no action can be maintained upon it. If he accepts a lease from a third person, either he or his landlord may defend his possession against proceedings by such third person, by showing the prior existence of the tenancy: Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179.

19. Though a mortgagee's lessee cannot dispute the right of his landlord to make the lease to him, he can attorn to, and take a lease from, the mortgagee after foreclosure; or he may show that the landlord's title has ceased and has become vested in himself through the mortgage: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 338.

20. The mortgagee cannot recover rent of one who has gone into possession of the land since the mortgage was given, as tenant of the mortgager, without an attornment by the tenant to him: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

21. A notice by a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale to a tenant of the mortgager, of such purchase, coupled with a claim of title and statement that rent is due and payable to him, the purchaser, and that he desires to hear from the tenant, must be personally served to make it a legal foundation for any proceeding to put the tenant in responsibility: Williams v. Shelden, 61 M. 311.

22. An attornment by a tenant to a third party, who has recovered the premises from him by an action of ejectment and writ of possession, is not voluntary in any such sense as to make it a wrong against the tenant's original landlord: Foss v. Van Driele, 47 M. 201.

23. Beyond its application to prevent a tenant from denying his landlord's title the doctrine of attornment serves but little, if any, useful purpose here; and it is inconsistent with our laws, customs and institutions: Perrin v. Lepper, 34 M. 292.

24. A tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title: Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179; Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117; Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106; Blanchard v. Tyler, 12 M. 339; Hogsett v.

Ellis, 17 M. 351, 373; Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 M. 12, 22; Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 287; Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518; Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45; Campau v. Lafferty, 43 M. 429; Bertram v. Cook, 44 M. 396; Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 M. 33; Whitford v. Crooks, 50 M. 40; Henderson v. Miller, 53 M. 590.

25. One who holds under a lease cannot buy in an outstanding title, or do anything inconsistent with the relation of tenant to landlord, without first yielding possession to the latter: Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518.

26. A tenant cannot, by buying in a title adverse to his landlord's, relieve himself of the obligations of his tenancy; and if he does so and repudiates the tenancy the landlord can dispossess him: Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

27. Where one abandons his right to occupy under contract, and continues to occupy, his possession is that of a tenant estopped to deny his landlord's title: Henderson v. Miller, 53 M. 590.

Further on this subject, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 84-98.

Estoppel to set up tax-title against landlord, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 118, 119.

(c) Tenancies from year to year.

28. As the statute of frauds permits leases for a year to be created by parol, and as a parol lease for more than a year, and under which the lessee has been put in possession, is good as a lease from year to year, until terminated by notice, no action, except for the agreed compensation, can be maintained against one in possession under a parol agreement, without notice to quit: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

29. The owner of an undivided half of certain premises accepted a parol proposal from one who claimed as owner of a half-interest in the remainder, to rent the latter's undivided fourth at a specific rental per annum, payable quarterly in advance, without stating any period of time; held, that if this arrangement could be governed by the analogies of an ordinary lease, it was at most only a lease at will in its origin, and became after the lapse of a year no more than a lease from year to year, subject to be ended by the will of either party on notice to the other. A refusal to pay further rent under such an arrangement, and a disclaimer of tenancy, serve the purpose of a notice to terminate the tenancy: Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 237.

30. Where land has been occupied on shares, an oral agreement that the tenant should have it three years more on shares, although within the statute of frauds, will support a holding from year to year until ended by notice: Coan v. Mole, 39 M. 454.

31. A tenant under an oral lease for an indefinite period, but whose rent is to be paid annually, is a tenant from year to year: Judd v. Fairs, 53 M. 518.

32. An oral lease was made for two years at so much a month the first year and a higher rate the second. After the first year had expired and the rent therefor had been fully paid, a new arrangement was made and rent was received for a few months. Held, that the tenancy was from year to year, notwithstanding the monthly payments: Schneider v. Lord, 62 M. 141.

33. When the parties agreed orally to make a written lease for twenty-one months, and, after going into possession, the lessees refused to accept a written lease, and no other contract was made, held, an indefinite holding, not a tenancy from year to year: Huyser v. Chase, 13 M. 98.

(d) Tenancies at will and by sufferance; notice to quit.

34. The common-law definition of a tenancy at will prevails in Michigan in the absence of a statutory definition: Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 M. 468.

35. Tenancy at will rests on the actual or presumed consent of the owner of the premises: Gault v. Stormont, 51 M. 636.

36. A tenant holding over is not a tenant at will unless he holds over by the express or implied consent of his landlord: Benfey v. Congdon, 40 M. 283.

37. A tenant who wrongfully holds over his lease does not acquire equities as a tenant at will by any brief delay in proceeding against him, and is not entitled to such notice to quit as a tenant at will could claim: Ibid.

38. A tenant by sufferance who is allowed to continue in possession under a new arrangement becomes a tenant at will: Ramsdell v. Maxwell, 33 M. 285.

39. Where a lease is invalid by the statute of frauds, the lessee having taken possession is a tenant at will; and if the agreement was to pay rent monthly, he is entitled to a month's notice to surrender possession before the proceedings can be taken to dispossess him. And such notice must terminate with one of the monthly periods: Huyser v. Chase, 13 M. 98.

40. Where premises are let at a fixed monthly rent, with the understanding that the tenant shall give up possession whenever the landlord may require them for his own use, the letting creates a tenancy at will, which can only be terminated by a full month's notice to quit at the end of one of the regular monthly periods: Woodrow v. Michael, 13 M. 187.

41. A tenancy from month to month without other limitation, and determinable at the choice of either party to the lease, is a tenancy at will, and so is a holding over pending negotiations for a renewal of the lease; and the tenant is entitled to notice to quit even if he holds over without paying (H. S. § 5774): Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 M. 468.

42. A tenant who is allowed to hold from year to year so long as no other tenant is found before the expiration of his term is a tenant at will; and if he pays rent monthly he is entitled to a full month's notice ending with the year before proceedings can be taken to evict him: Le Tourneau v. Smith, 53 M. 473.

43. Where a house was sold under a contract and the vendee waived the contract right to its completion by a certain date, and was allowed to take possession in advance, it was held that the contract had been varied, and that the vendee did not hold under its conditions, but under the subsequent provisions, and was therefore a tenant at will, and entitled under H. S. § 5774 to three months' notice to quit: Williams v. Hodges, 41 M. 695.

44. A. sold a house to B., reserving the possession and use thereof four months as part of the consideration of the sale, but continued to occupy it twenty days after that time without any special arrangement. Held, that B.'s consent to such occupation was implied, and that A. became a tenant at will, entitled, in the absence of an agreement to pay rent at shorter intervals, to three months' notice to quit: Hoffman v. Clark, 63 M. 175.

45. One who has moved upon another's land with his consent is a tenant at will, and entitled to notice before he can be dispossessed by a grantee of the premises: Appleton v. Buskirk, 67 M. 407 (Oct. 27, '87).

46. A divorced wife, who with her husband's consent has kept possession of lands to which he holds the legal title, is at least a tenant at will, and entitled to notice before she can be disturbed: Wilson v. Merrill, 38 M. 507.

47. A sale of the premises to a third party does not of itself determine the tenancy at will existing between the vendor and vendee in an executory contract of purchase of land; under H. S. § 5774 notice is required: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

48. A tenancy at will is determined by the destruction of the building tenanted, and the ouster of the tenant: O'Brien v. Cavanaugh, 61 M. 368.

49. The right of possession transferred to the grantee by a deed absolute on its face is not defeated by a subsequent contract to reconvey in the future upon certain conditions, which is silent upon the subject of possession; and the grantor, holding over, becomes tenant, either by sufferance or at will, of his grantee: Bennett v. Robinson, 27 M. 26.

50. One who enters under lawful title and holds over without right and by reason of his landlord's laches after the termination of his interest is a tenant by sufferance: Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 M. 384; Abeel v. Hubbell, 53 M. 37.

51. The notice to quit to which a tenant at sufferance is entitled cannot be claimed by one who has asserted any title that directly or impliedly negatives the right to put an end to his interest: Kunzie v. Wixom, 39 M. 384.

52. A grantor who remains in possession without any contract becomes a tenant at sufferance, and as such is not liable for rent: Stevens v. Hulin, 53 M. 93.

53. A tenant in possession who has attorned to a stranger to the title is not entitled to notice to quit: Steinhauser v. Kuhn, 50 M. 367.

54. Under what circumstances a person holding over after foreclosure of a mortgage on the premises will be entitled to notice to quit, quere: Allen v. Carpenter, 15 M. 25.

55. A notice specifying fourteen days is a good notice to quit at the end of three months, if no proceeding is instituted upon it within that time: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

56. In proceedings to obtain possession of lands, three months' notice is required whether tenancy is at will or by sufferance, so that it is immaterial, after notice given, whether the tenancy change from one form to the other: Bennett v. Robinson, 27 M. 26.

57. Notice to quit, where premises are held from month to month, must be given a full month before the day on which a new holding would begin. Where such holding begins on the first of the month a notice given May 6th would not be operative until July 1st: Hart v. Lindley, 50 M. 20.

58. Where the holding under a lease is from half month to half month, the terms expiring in the middle and at the end of the month, a notice to quit which fixes the expiration of the lease on the first day of a month is not materially erroneous, though it should not extend into the half month: Detroit Savings Bank v. Bellamy, 49 M. 317.

59. The statutes of 1838, requiring the landlord to demand possession of the premises, in writing, from his tenant, at least twenty days before summary proceedings to recover possession, it was held that a demand requiring the tenant to quit the premises in ten days, but which was served twenty days before proceedings were instituted, was sufficient: Chamberlain v. Brown, 2 D. 120.

60. Where a lease permitted the tenant to keep possession until another building should be put in proper shape, the efficacy of a notice to quit, unless a monthly rent at a higher figure should be paid, would depend on whether the other building was ready; if it was, proceedings to recover possession could be based on the notice if the tenant failed to pay the higher rent for seven days after demand thereof: D'Arcy v. Martyn, 63 M. 602.

61. Summary proceedings to recover possession can hardly be based on a notice to quit that leaves the tenant an option to remain on payment of a stated rental: Ibid.

62. Lapse of time after a notice to quit may create a new tenancy: Ibid.

63. A tenant at will can waive notice to quit: Moody v. Seaman, 46 M. 74.

64. A notice to quit waives a previous notice: D'Arcy v. Martyn, 63 M. 602.

65. Where a sufficient notice to quit has been given, and the tenant has promised to leave at a fixed date, a repetition of the demand does not impair the effect of the original notice: Moody v. Seaman, 46 M. 74.

66. A five years' lease containing a clause by which the lessee agrees to give up the lease if his lessor concludes to build on the premises does not create a tenancy at will strictly, but rather a tenancy upon condition; the lessee is entitled to reasonable notice of the lessor's determination to build, and of his desire that the lease should be given up under said clause; the analogy of statutory notices to terminate a tenancy at will governs in determining what is reasonable notice. Where the lessor actually seized and held possession of the premises, and began building on them, it was held, though a trespass and wholly wrongful, to be a clear notice of the lessor's wish to terminate the tenancy and have possession of the premises, and to have the same effect as notice that a formal notice given at the time would have: Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 M. 162.

67. Where a tenant holds a portion of a lot under a lease stipulating that he shall give up the lease if his lessor concludes to build on the premises, his tenancy is not terminated by the landlord's taking possession of another portion of the lot, not leased, for the purpose of building on that; such taking possession is not even notice of the lessor's intention to build on the leased portion: Ibid.

68. Notice to quit and demand of possession operate as an assertion of the intention to forfeit as well as a notice to quit: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

69. If a purchaser by contract has leased the premises and left the country, notice to quit may be served on his lessee: Ibid.

70. The contents of a notice to quit are provable by compared copy or by parol without notice to produce the original: Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117. See EVIDENCE, § 1219.

II. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

(a) In general.

As to what constitutes WASTE, and the remedies therefor, see that title.

71. Where a tenant rents premises from a firm, paying rent to it as landlord and owner, the question of legal title is unimportant in determining the firm's responsibility to the tenant for what it has assumed to do as lessor in the firm name: Williams v. Shelden, 61 M. 311.

72. Where a lease empowers a tenant to put in machinery and remove it at the expiration of his lease, the tenant cannot be held liable for such necessary damage to the freehold as is occasioned by removing the machinery with due care; especially if the particular damage is not specially counted on and proved: Hunt v. Potter, 47 M. 197.

73. The owner of premises in possession of a tenant will not be liable for an injury occasioned by the premises becoming, subsequent to the leasing, out of repair, in a case where the obligation to repair is on the tenant, and the owner has no legal control of the premises: Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 M. 1.

74. As between landlord and tenant the tenant is presumptively liable for a nuisance on the premises unless the lease contemplated its continuance, in which case both would be liable: Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Mining Co., 49 M. 164.

75. The tenant, and not the landlord, is liable for nuisances originating and kept up during the tenant's exclusive occupancy, unless the landlord is shown to be responsible for repairs. So held where the nuisance consisted in overflowing a neighbor's cellar by means of leaky and defective supply and water pipes: Harris v. Cohen, 50 M. 324.

76. Defendant rented the lower floor of his building to plaintiff, who had a dry-goods store there. Upon the upper floor, which was.

rented to other tenants, was a water-closet, under their control, but to which plaintiff had access, defendant having no control over it. Through improper use by some unknown person the closet became obstructed, the water overflowed, and plaintiff's store was damaged. Held, that defendant was not liable: Kenney v. Barns, 67 M. 336 (Oct. 20, '87).

77. The owner of premises who has leased them to a tenant without covenanting to keep them in repair is not liable to a third party who is injured by reason of their being out of repair while they are in the tenant's control, if the defect complained of did not exist at the time they were leased: Johnson v. McMillan, 69 M. 86 (March 2, '88).

78. So far as regards any injury by third persons to the use of land during a term of lease, no distinction exists between the rights of tenants for years or other terms and those of owners of the fee in possession. A term for years is as clearly property as ownership in fee, and just as much entitled to the protection of the law: Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 80 M. 308.

79. One who is entitled to the possession of premises can remove the property left there by a previous tenant, if he exercises such care in doing so as the nature of the property demands; and if he leaves it in such a condition that the owner, by reasonable diligence, can take it uninjured, he is not bound to house it or otherwise protect it until the owner sees fit to take possession: United States Manuf. Co. v. Stevens, 52 M. 331.

Damages for interference, trespass or unlawful eviction by landlord, see DAMAGES, §§ 69, 98, 104, 181, 262-269, 384, 385.

Treble damages for wrongful entry or eviction by landlord, see DAMAGES, §§ 421-427, 433-443.

Recoupment by tenant of damages by landlord to goods on premises, see DAMAGES, § 527.

Damages to tenant for years from flowage, see DAMAGES, § 287.

(b) Repairs.

80. A lessor is under no general obligation to put premises in repair, and his covenants to do so are not to be enlarged beyond their fair intent, and he is not responsible for any damages not contemplated by the lease as chargeable to him, as the result of a failure: Clark v. Babcock, 23 M. 164.

81. The owner of a building owes a sub-tenant, who is in possession without his knowledge or consent, no duty to keep the premises in repair: Donaldson v. Wilson, 60 M. 86.

82. Where, in consequence of the lessor's failure to repair, as he has covenanted, the flume of a saw-mill, the mill becomes useless, the lessee is not obliged to make the repairs himself, deducting the expense thereof from the rent, but may abandon the premises: Bostwick v. Losey, 67 M. 554 (Nov. 10, '87).

Damages for failure to repair, see DAMAGES, § 192.

Recoupment for breach of covenant to repair not allowed in summary proceedings, see DAMAGES, § 528.

Further as to repairs, see supra, §§ 73-77.

(c) Improvements; erections.

83. To entitle a tenant to be paid for improvements he has made, there must be between him and his landlord as definite an agreement as any other contract of employment: Leslie v. Smith, 32 M. 65.

84. A tenant's erections are not brought within a subsequent mortgage on the premises by the tenant's neglect to remove them on a renewal of his lease by a new landlord: Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 M. 150.

85. A tenant's sale as personalty of permanent fixtures and the taking back of a chattel mortgage upon them does not affect the landlord's rights: O'Brien v. Kusterer, 27 M. 289. And see FIXTURES, II.

(d) Emblements.

86. Under an arrangement for raising a single crop on shares, the possession of the premises is held by the owner of the land, either alone or in common with the party who sowed the seed: Wells v. Hollenbeck, 87 M. 504.

87. A tenant's right to sell growing crops on abandoning the land during the life of his lease is not shown to be lost by failure to perform the conditions of the lease, unless it also appears that there was a clause of forfeiture for non-performance: Dayton v. Vandoozer, 39 M. 749.

88. After a lease was cancelled the landlord told the tenant to put in and harvest fall wheat, and promised that he should have his just and lawful share of it, but afterwards harvested and kept it himself. Held, that they were tenants in common of the wheat under a valid agreement, and that the tenant could maintain assumpsit on the common counts for the value of his share: McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 M. 219.

89. One who buys a growing crop of wheat from a tenant who owes no rent and whose lease is good is not divested of title by the latter's subsequent default and abandonment of the premises to his landlord: Nye v. Puttersen, 85 M. 413.

90. The rights of one who has bought a crop from a tenant will be protected against a subsequent forfeiture of the lease and the landlord's re-entry: Miller v. Havens, 51 M. 482.

91. Where a lessee whose lease gave him the option of renewing it at the same rate if the premises were not sold wrote to the lessor in the July preceding the expiration of the lease, while the two were negotiating for a surrender at the end of the term, a letter stating the terms upon which he would surrender, and adding "I shall want to know soon, as I shall want to commence plowing next week," held that, in the absence of any response from the lessor, the lessee was authorized to proceed and put in his wheat crop in the full belief that he was to hold the farm for another year; that the fact that the lessee was notified in the spring immediately preceding the expiration of his lease that the farm had been sold, and he could stay no longer, whereupon he left the premises, is immaterial; and that where the lessee, after leaving, returned and harvested his wheat, the lessor's grantee could not bring replevin for any portion of the wheat: Starkey v. Horton, 65 M. 96 (Feb. 10, '87).

92. One who, without fault on the landlord's part, rescinds his contract to farm another's land, and abandons the premises, yields his right to the crop sown: Kiplinger v. Green, 61 M. 340.

93. Under a contract by which lessees work a farm on shares, it seems to be their duty to deliver to the lessor his share, and not his duty to parcel their shares out to them: Coe v. Wager, 42 M. 49.

Damages for landlord's wrongful conversion of crop, see DAMAGES, § 322.

94. A lien on property given by a lease to secure the performance of its conditions is inseparable from the lease, and can only be enforced against the lessee by the landlord or his assignee: Hansen v. Prince, 45 M. 519.

95. A clause in a lease providing that anything placed on the premises shall be liable for the rent, and that the lease shall constitute a mortgage to secure it, and that on default the lessor may seize and sell the property on certain notice and may retain from the proceeds the rent and the "costs of such sale," does not justify the detention of property so seized if the rent is paid without sale and there is no showing of actual costs or of information thereof to the lessee, or of any notice of proceedings to be taken: Hamilton v. Langley, 52 M. 549.

96. A clause in a lease stipulating, by way of securing the payment of rent, that "all goods, wares and merchandise, household furniture, fixtures or other property which are or shall be placed in or on said premises by them, shall be liable, and this lease shall constitute a lien or mortgage on said property," does not cover the dwelling-house upon the premises: Kuschell v. Campau, 49 M. 84.

97. By the terms of a lease of a planing-mill the lessors were to have a lien for unpaid rent upon all improvements made by the lessee on the premises, and the lessee was authorized to remove — in case the rent should be paid — all machinery placed thereon by him, such machinery to be treated by both parties as "chattel property." Held, that no present lien upon or interest in the machinery was created by the lease, and that it was subject to mortgage by the lessee as personalty: Booth v. Oliver, 67 M. 664 (Jan. 5, '88).

III. LEASES.

As to validity of lease under the STATUTE OF FRAUDS, see that title, §§ 90-94, 166.

(a) In general.

98. A lease for years does not contravene the statute against perpetuities: Toms v. Williams, 41 M. 558.

99. An agreement for a lease and the lease itself are different things: Tillman v. Fuller, 13 M. 118; Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 M. 462.

100. A lease may be made to take effect in the future, and the estate does not begin with the contract, but with the future period: Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 M. 462.

101. It seems that usage permits a lease to be executed by exchanging duplicates, each of which is signed only by the other party: Campau v. Lafferty, 43 M. 429.

102. Where the assignee of an invalid lease has abandoned his family and a new lease is given to his wife, running in his name but signed by her by attaching her mark to his name without authority from him, he is not a party to the lease, and if she and her minor children farm the land she is entitled to the crops: Cody v. Phelps, 47 M. 481.

103. There is no error in rejecting vague evidence offered by an alleged lessee to show that he did not understand he was making a lease when he signed the instrument, where such evidence is opposed to the testimony of the subscribing witnesses, and where the lessee has made no protest for sixteen years after discovering the alleged mistake: Campau v. Lafferty, 50 M. 114.

104. Neglect to cultivate does not authorize cancelling a lease on the ground that the lessee obtained it by the fraudulent representation that he was a skilful farmer: Arnold v. Bright, 41 M. 207.

105. An agreement by a lessee, in a memorandum signed by him at the foot of the lease, constitutes a part of the lease: Norris v. Showerman, W. 206, 2 D. 16.

106. In determining, in an action for rent upon an oral lease, the time when the lease commenced, it is proper to consider the time when defendant went into possession, the time from which he paid the rent, and all other circumstances throwing light upon the question: Pendill v. Neuberger, 67 M. 562 (Nov. 10, '87).

107. The parties to a lease do not, as matter of law, continue subject to its terms, where the tenant, against the landlord's will, holds over and continues in possession, and seeks to bind the landlord by provisions of the lease which have become inapplicable in consequence of changes in the premises: Ives v. Williams, 50 M. 100.

108. Leases by the special guardian of an incompetent person do not continue of their own force beyond the ward's life-time: Campau v. Shaw, 15 M. 226.

109. Leases to secure the payment of bonds can have no greater force than the bonds: McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. St. R. Co., 41 M. 274.

(b) Construction and effect.

110. The intent of a written lease must be gathered from an examination thereof as a whole, and such a construction must be put on it, if possible, as will render all its clauses harmonious and consistent; it is against well settled rules to give it a narrow and technical interpretation based on some particular word or clause: Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 M. 105.

111. Where, at the time a lease is executed, a third party executes under seal, upon the back thereof, an agreement to become surety for the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants mentioned in the lease, such agreement becomes a part of the lease, and he may be sued jointly with the lessees for the rent due; and a subsequent reduction of the rent without his knowledge or consent does not discharge him: Preston v. Huntington, 67 M. 139 (Oct. 6, '87).

112. No particular form of words is necessary, in a lease from month to month, to constitute a condition precedent to the vesting of the tenant's estate, but unless the mutual intention that it shall be a condition appears from the language or circumstances, it will be treated only as a covenant: Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 M. 468.

113. A mere agreement by a tenant from month to month to pay rent in advance is a personal covenant, and not a condition precedent to the right of possession: Ibid.

114. An oral stipulation for rent at a specified annual rate, but without stating for how long, amounts to a lease for a year only: Benfey v. Congdon, 40 M. 283.

115. For the construction of the terms of a lease of water-power, see Norris v. Showerman, W. 206, 2 D. 16.

116. A lease of land to a tenant, "to have and to hold, to use and control as he thinks proper, for his benefit during his natural life," is a lease without impeachment for waste: Stevens v. Rose, 69 M. 259 (April 6, '88).

117. A lease of a salt-well implies no covenant that the well shall be of any particular productive capacity. In the absence of any distinct agreement the lessee takes it as he finds it: Clark v. Babcock, 23 M. 164.

118. Where the lessor of salt-works was made liable to a deduction of rent for delays caused by breakage, etc., and was required to have the works in order by a given time before the opening of the business season, in default of which the lessee was authorized to complete the work at his expense and deduct the same from the first payments, it was held that the lease contemplated that the lessee, having the same time allowed him as was given to the lessor, would be able, after the lessor's default, to finish the work before the business season, and that it did not authorize any claim for damages for delay from the lessor's failure to do the work in time, the remedy in the lease being evidently deemed sufficient to prevent any probable loss to the lessee from such delay: Ibid.

119. A lease of a farm, granting to the tenant "the privilege to keep and harvest all the crops (in case the land is sold) which he may have put in, and have either pay for what he may do in preparing to put in other crops, or the privilege of putting them in and harvesting the same, for the term of one year, with the privilege of three years, if not sooner sold, from and after the 1st day of April, A. D. 1866," the lease containing an agreement on the tenant's part to "hire the said premises for the term of one or more years, as above mentioned," and that he would "not put in more than twenty acres of wheat in any one year," was held to confer upon the tenant the right to harvest a field of wheat of not more than twenty acres, after the expiration of the lease: Brown v. Parsons, 23 M. 24.

120. "Damages by the elements," which are ordinarily excepted from a lessee's covenants to keep in repair, cover destruction by fire occurring without fault or negligence in the lessee: Van Wormer v. Crane, 51 M. 363.

121. A covenant in the lease of a wooden building, binding the landlord to rebuild in case it burns, is released by the passage of a valid municipal ordinance forbidding the erection of wooden buildings: Cordes v. Miller, 89 M. 581.

122. Under a covenant to surrender premises in as good condition as when taken, reasonable use and wear and injury by the elements excepted, a tenant cannot tear out improvements which he has himself put in, if their removal injures the freehold: Murray v. Moross, 27 M. 203.

123. A lease of an hotel covenanted that new furniture added by the lessees should be included in the inventory to be made up when the lease expired, and accounted for accordingly, and that the lessor should have the right to take possession of it. Held, that this covenant could not cover furniture belonging to a third person but allowed by the lessee to be placed on the premises: Beecher v. Bartlett, 42 M. 60.

124. A lease for a term of years stipulated that after the term had elapsed either party might notify the other of the selection of an appraiser to make a valuation of the property, and if the other did not select another appraiser within thirty days he might do it himself, and the appraiser so chosen might make a valuation of the property which the lessor must pay on surrender of the premises and buildings, within thirty days after such surrender, the amount of the valuation to be a lien on the premises until paid. Held, that the lessee is not entitled to remain in possession while the appraisal is in progress: Bressler v. Darmstaetter, 57 M. 311.

125. Where a lease does not provide for re-entry on breach of condition, and there is no agreement that a failure to perform shall operate as a forfeiture or termination of the lease, the tenant cannot for such cause be said to "hold over" contrary to the terms of the lease: Pickard v. Kleis, 56 M. 604.

126. The re-entry clause in a lease provides for its termination if the tenant holds over contrary to the conditions or covenants thereof. Held, that this refers to such conditions and covenants as are in the nature of limitations, and not to the lessee's mere agreement to do certain things: Langley v. Ross, 55 M. 163.

127. The erasure of a re-entry clause in a lease divests the landlord of the statutory remedy for recovering possession on the tenant's default in paying rent, because no terms of limitation are left in the lease, and the covenants are no longer linked with a condition: Ibid.

128. D. agreed by written lease dated August 12 to let M. "have possession of the building in which this business is kept till the brick store on the corner is in a proper shape for business, for the sum of fifty dollars, payable on the 1st day of January." Held, that D. could not show that the original understanding was for $100 a year, while the proposition to pay fifty dollars was conditional on the speedy completion of the corner store; also that M. was not liable for more than fifty dollars, and his tenancy continued until that store was "in proper shape for business," however distant that event might be: D'Arcy v. Martyn, 63 M. 602.

129. A stipulation in a two years' lease that if the lessor sells within the first year the sale shall be subject to the lease for that year, and if afterwards, that it shall be subject to the lease for the second year or to such compromise as the parties may enter into, requires the lessee to give up possession at the end of the first year if sale is made within that period: Jochen v. Tibbells, 50 M. 33.

130. A lease provided that the lessee should "have the privilege of renting said premises for another year at the same rate, provided the lessor does not sell the same." Held, that the sale meant was an open, notorious one, that should be brought home to the lessee's knowledge; and until such notice he is entitled to deal with the lessor, the apparent owner of the title, the same as if he were the actual owner, and the grantee in a secret conveyance will be bound by the acts and declarations of his grantor, the lessor, until he takes some steps to inform the lessee of the sale: Starkey v. Horton, 65 M. 96.

131. Premises were leased for one year, the lease to be renewed "if both parties are suited, for eight years, reserving the right to sell," and after six years' occupation the lessors sold the premises to their nephews and nieces for $3, and a promise to give their sympathy and good-will to the grantors. Held, that the sale terminated the lease: Wallace v. Bahlhorn, 68 M. 87.

132. Lease "for the term of one year with the privilege of having the same three years at the same rate," at lessee's option, and containing a covenant that the lessee would, at the end of said term, deliver up quiet possession of the premises." Held, that the lessee by continuing in possession after the end of the first year elected to hold the premises for the full term of three years: Delashman v. Berry, 20 M. 292.

133. A year's lease gave the privilege of an extension for three years if written notice of the intention to continue should be given thirty days before the expiration of the year. Held, that the estate created by the lease terminated at the end of the year if the notice was not given as stipulated; and that an additional estate for three years could not, under H. S. § 6181, be created by any oral agreements or any waiver of the stipulation, actual or constructive, even though the tenant held over (distinguishing Delashman v. Berry, supra, § 132, in that the option allowed in that case did not have to be expressed in writing): Beller v. Robinson, 50 M. 264.

134. A three years' lease of a farm stipulated that if the land were sold for a certain sum the tenant should immediately surrender possession on being reimbursed for his labor and crops; it further provided that if the landlord did not return to his farm to occupy it himself the tenant was to have the privilege of continuing to farm the premises as heretofore. Held, that in summary proceedings to recover possession for violation of the provisions of the lease the return of the landlord was properly treated as on the same footing as a sale to a third person, and that on coming in at the end of the second year after three months' notice, and offering to pay for labor and crops, the landlord had a right to resume possession: Lord v. Walker, 49 M. 606.

(c) Assignment and sub-lease.

135. One of two lessors, even if the other be his wife, cannot assign the lease: Hecht v. Ferris, 45 M. 376.

136. A lease upon shares is a personal contract and not assignable where the amount of rent received must depend on the character and skill of the lessee, or where it gives the lessee the use of the lessor's tools on condition that they may be properly kept: Randall v. Chubb, 46 M. 311.

137. An agent executed a lease to certain parties for his principal. While it was still in force the principal executed an independent lease of the same premises to the agent, who then orally leased them for a smaller rent than before to the original tenants, who continued in possession without change. Held, that the original lease was surrendered by operation of law, and not assigned to the agent, and therefore that he could not claim from the tenants the difference in rent between the two: Donkersley v. Levy, 38 M. 54.

138. Where the lessee assigns his interest in the whole or a part of the demised premises for the residue of the unexpired term, the assignee is substituted in place of the original lessee as tenant, and stands in that relation to the original lessor. But where the demised premises are let for a part only of the unexpired term, the assignee is only a sub-lessee, and the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between him and the original landlord: Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106.

139. A covenant by a lessee not to transfer the lease without the consent of the lessor does not inhibit a sub-letting by the lessee: Copland v. Parker, 4 M. 660.

140. A lease by the lessee of the three lower stories and the cellar of a four-story store, which the lessee held under a lease in which he had covenanted "not to transfer this lease," was held no breach of this covenant: Ibid.

141. The lease of a building excepted all the upper story but the front room, and stipulated that if the tenant re-leased, or assigned the lease, without the landlord's written consent, the latter might re-enter. Held, that a license from the tenant to a third person to use a single apartment on the ground floor for thirty days, or even a sub-lease of the apartment for such a period, was not a breach of the condition, and that even if it was, the landlord was bound to show that it was without his written consent, before he could recover possession of the premises in summary proceedings: Leduke v. Barnett, 47 M. 158.

142. One who has taken a tenant's interest without the landlord's knowledge or consent takes subject to the obligations assumed by the tenant, and cannot be allowed, through their non-performance, to gain any advantage as against the landlord: Bertram v. Cook, 32 M. 518.

143. Forfeiture clauses in a lease are not favored by the courts, and their effect will be restricted as far as possible; but when the lease explicitly provides that the landlord may treat it as void upon breach of condition by the tenant, his election to do so dissolves the relation between him and his tenant: Miller v. Havens, 51 M. 482.

144. Where a tenant had covenanted in the lease to pay certain taxes, it is no breach if, under a warrant for the collection of the assessment, the tax was paid by a sale of his leasehold interest and of buildings erected by him upon the premises. It was satisfied out of the tenant's and not the landlord's property: Goode v. Ruehle, 23 M. 30.

145. Where one of the conditions of a lease is the payment of taxes by the lessee, and a clause provides for re-entry upon breach of condition, it cannot be held that this clause does not apply to a failure to pay taxes, on the ground that another clause makes a building on the premises security for their payment; a lessor may have double security if his lessee consents to give it: Brand v. Frumveller, 32 M. 215.

146. A lessee's omission to pay a paving assessment could not properly be treated as a breach of his contract, if it arose from a question as to the validity of the assessment, and if he paid it when its validity was settled: Eberts v. Fisher, 54 M. 294.

147. The condition that the tenant shall not cease to use the house as a dwelling is a reasonable ground of forfeiture: Marsh v. Bristol, 65 M. 378 (April 14, '87).

148. A lessee's covenant to insure the property and to assign the insurance policy to the lessor was held not to have been broken where the insurance was in fact effected, but where, apparently by tacit consent of all parties, the practice of assigning was discontinued after a year or two. A court of equity would treat the stipulated insurance as held in trust for the lessor: Eberts v. Fisher, 54 M. 294.

149. A lease of wine and billiard rooms provided for re-entry in case of non-performance of any of the covenants at any of the times mentioned for the performance thereof. There were conditions against encumbering furniture or violating the law and ordinances relating to the business. Held, that as these conditions were continuous in their nature, any breach of them would be a breach of the time mentioned for their performance; and would be a cause of forfeiture: Alexander v. Hodges, 41 M. 691.

150. In a particular case the court held that there had been no such breach of the covenant to repair as would operate as a forfeiture of the lessee's rights under the lease: Eberts v. Fisher, 54 M. 294.

151. A personal lease is forfeited by an assignment and attempt to give the assignee possession, and the lessor may take immediate steps to recover the premises: Randall v. Chubb, 46 M. 311.

152. A lease provided for forfeiture in case of assignment by S., the lessee. It was to expire in 1884. In 1881 it was indorsed by the lessor, "For a valuable consideration I hereby give S. the privilege of occupying the store mentioned in this lease for ten years from 1884," the indorsement providing further that the rent should be the same, and all improvements were to be the lessor's property "as part of the consideration for extending lease." Held, that the indorsement constituted a new letting, cancelling the old lease, and could not be forfeited by an assignment: Walsh v. Martin, 69 M. 29.

153. A lease of a billiard-room provided that, in case of the violation of conditions, the lessor might re-enter, have again, retain, repossess, etc. Held, that absolute notice to quit and demand of possession, made at such a time and place that if complied with possession would be at once secured, constituted a sufficient re-entry: Alexander v. Hodges, 41 M. 691.

154. Where a lease is forfeited for non-performance of its conditions, no notice of re-entry or of intention to re-enter is necessary: Pendill v. Union Mining Co., 64 M. 172.

155. At common law and by statute a demand for the rent or royalty due is necessary before the lessor can re-enter, but such demand can be waived by the parties: Ibid.

156. Where the agreed mode of declaring a lessor's election to forfeit the lease is by re-entry and taking possession, he has the right, and it is his duty, in the first instance to resort to it; and if prevented from so doing he may adopt any other lawful mode to obtain possession: Ibid.

157. The party entitled to the possession of property may take it in any manner that does not involve a breach of the peace, and H. S. § 8295, making a demand for payment of rent a condition precedent to re-entry, does not take away this right: Ibid.

158. Though a lease gives the lessor the right to terminate it without notice, yet if proceedings to gain possession are necessary they must be taken by the statutory summary method or by action of ejectment: Ibid.

159. Continuing conditions in a lease are not necessarily waived by receipt of rent after they have been violated; the lessor can exercise forbearance in furtherance of his own interests and those of the tenant: Alexander v. Hodges, 41 M. 691.

160. The mere receipt of rent due before forfeiture, after the lease has been forfeited, is not a waiver of the forfeiture: Pendill v. Union Mining Co., 64 M. 172.

161. Where, after agreeing to surrender a lease, the lessee says to the lessor, "you may consider the ground in your possession this evening," and acting upon that statement the lessor takes possession without hindrance, and keeps it, the surrender is as effective and valid as if the lessor had broken a twig over the land, or made any other symbolical delivery: Baumier v. Antiau, 65 M. 81.

162. A., by deed, leased premises to B., who afterwards assigned the lease to C. A. assented to the assignment, and agreed, by parol, to accept C. as his tenant, and to look to him for the rent. Held, that there had been a sufficient surrender of the lease by operation of law to satisfy the statute — Code of 1833, p. 342, § 9 (see H. S. § 6179) — which declared that "no lease, etc., shall at any time hereafter be assigned, granted or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed," etc., "or by operation of law;" and that A. could not afterwards maintain covenant against B. for the rent: Logan v. Anderson, 2 D. 101.

163. A voluntary surrender of leased premises to a landlord prior to the expiration of the term by the lessee's assignee in bankruptcy, who is informed by the landlord that he intends to hold the lessee for the rent for the residue of the term, does not, though the landlord afterwards rents the premises to others, amount to an eviction or to a surrender of the term; surrender must be by mutual consent of the parties to the lease: Stewart v. Sprague, 71 M. 50.

164. In an action to recover rent, where the defence set up is that the tenants surrendered and abandoned the lease and premises with the landlord's assent, evidence of the occupancy of the premises or a part of them by third parties, of the delivery of the key to the landlord, and of negotiations between the landlord and third parties for a new lease, is competent upon the question of surrender in fact: Hill v. Robinson, 28 M. 24.

165. The abandonment or surrender by a lessee of his interest under a lease cannot be inferred from a mere non-user: Doty v. Gillett, 43 M. 203.

166. For a case where it was held that there had been a final abandonment by the lessees of their rights under leases of mining lands, see Porter v. Noyes, 47 M. 55.

167. Where one let premises for six months on monthly payments in advance, and before the first month expired the lessee turned over the lease to another, who, at the lessor's request, agreed in writing to comply with the terms of the original lease, but soon after the opening of the second month surrendered possession of the premises on demand of the original lessee, but without notice to the lessor, who thereupon sued him for the rent of the second month, it was held that this was not a case of novation. To have made it such the defendant must have been liable to the lessee for the rent sued for, and must have promised to pay it to the lessor in consideration of such liability, and by the lessee's order or consent, and in discharge of the lessee's obligation: Meister v. Birney, 24 M. 485.

168. A tenant who has refused to pay rent until repairs are made, and is accordingly notified to quit, has a right to regard the lease as ended, and if the landlord then agrees to make the repairs provided the tenant will stay, the lease is a new one: Conkling v. Tuttle, 53 M. 630.

169. Whether or not a covenant for a renewal of a lease implies a renewal on the same terms, or binds the lessor to any covenants whatever, quere: Brand v. Frumveller, 33 M. 215.

170. Where a lease provides for its own renewal upon terms to be decided by referees, and they vary its terms and their award is accepted, the party accepting it must be held bound by the terms of the original lease as varied by the referees: Ibid.

171. It is always a presumption that a lease for one year with the privilege of several is to be continued on the same terms and with the same rights and privileges to the tenant as during the first year, unless some other intention is expressed: Brown v. Parsons, 23 M. 24.

172. Where a lease gives the lessor the right to elect, at the end of the term, whether or not to renew the lease, such election may be made on or before the last day of the term: Darling v. Hoban, 53 M. 599.

173. Assent to the continued occupancy of farming lands upon the same terms as before may fairly be presumed if, at the beginning of the planting season, the owner silently permits the occupant to continue in possession for some weeks longer, and does not enforce a contingent arrangement for the surrender of the premises at that time. And in subsequent proceedings to recover possession as from a tenant holding over. he is estopped from showing that any such arrangement existed: Pickard v. Kleis, 56 M. 604.

174. A lessee of land agreed to put up a building thereon, the value of which was to be appraised at the expiration of the lease, when the lessor, after proper notice, could have the building on paying its value, or the lease should be extended. Held, that an appraisal of the building was unnecessary where no notice was given of a purpose to terminate the lease. And an appraisal of the land by mutual consent was equivalent to an agreement that the lease should be continued, and should not be interfered with by partition where the parties to the lease were tenants in common: Eberts v. Fisher, 54 M. 294.

175. Notice of a landlord's election to renew a lease need not be in writing, unless the lease so stipulates, so long as the lease itself contains all the terms and conditions of renewal and the tenant is in possession. Nor need a new lease be tendered, especially if the tenant has declared that he will not accept a renewal: Darling v. Hoban, 53 M. 599.

IV. RENT.

(a) In general; liability.

176. Rent is a sum stipulated to be paid for the actual use and enjoyment of another's land, and is supposed to come out of the profits of the estate: Marsh v. Butterworth, 4 M. 575.

177. Rent, strictly so-called, always grows out of express contract, and is fixed and definite in amount; consequently a tenant by sufferance is not liable therefor, though he is liable for reasonable compensation for use, etc.: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

As to recovery for use and occupation, see ASSUMPSIT, §§ 30-42; CONTRACTS, §§ 89-91.

178. A parol promise by one in possession to pay rent to one out of possession, and who has no title, is void for want of consideration: Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 237.

179. A contract to pay rent is not to be inferred from the mere continued occupancy by a grantor after he has conveyed the premises: Stevens v. Hulin, 53 M. 93.

180. One who enters upon the use of another's property with full knowledge of the rent demanded therefor is under contract obligation to pay such rent, even though he has originally refused to or has said that he would only pay under protest: Thompson v. Sanborn, 52 M. 141.

181. The lessees of a dam covenanted to pay half "of all tolls and money that may be earned by the use of said dam for driving logs or other purposes." Held, that the rent was not confined to tolls but included any earnings from log driving that could fairly be traced to the benefits of the dam: Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 M. 273.

182. The owner of a water-power leased a portion of it for ninety-nine years, at a specified rent for the first seven years, after which a rent was to be paid equal to that asked of others using the water-power, not to exceed $20 per horse-power. At the expiration of the seven years there were no other parties using the water-power. Held, that the rate fixed for the seven years must continue until other parties should rent at a different one: Lamb v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 59 M. 597.

183. A three years' lease of farm lands began in March, 1877, and the rent was to be paid annually, Oct. 15. Sept. 2, 1878, the parties terminated the lease, but it was agreed that the tenant might keep possession until he could harvest his crops; that he was to pay no rent from that date, and that this stipulation was not to affect the rent to become due in October. Held, that this did not bind him to pay the rent for the whole year, but only until Sept. 2, the date of the stipulation: Bates v. Phinney, 45 M. 388.

184. By the terms of a lease of an hotel the rent was made payable in monthly instalments, and the lessor agreed to take one-half the same "in board as the same falls due." Held, that it was not optional with the lessee to pay in money or board, but that he was under the same obligation to pay the board, if demanded, as the lessor to receive it: Evans v. Norris, 6 M. 369.

185. The lessee was under no obligation to call upon the lessor, and demand that boarders be sent, but the lessor was bound to call for the board within the term, and substantially as the same fell due: Ibid.

186. A lessee has the whole of the day on which his rent falls due for making payment, and a taking, under a lease purporting to give a lien, of property for default in payment of rent before the day has expired, is a taking before default, and consequently a trespass: Dalton v. Laudahn, 27 M. 529.

As to the damages for such trespass, see DAMAGES, §§ 313, 314.

187. Where rent is payable weekly, or at other stated intervals, in advance, the tenant has the whole of the first day of each succeeding week, or other interval of time, in which to make the payment: Sherlock v. Thayer, 4 M. 355.

188. Where a lease provides for monthly payments, but does not fix the time for payment, rent is not due till the end of the month; but it is competent to agree that it shall be paid in advance and to make such payment a condition to the vesting of any estate in the tenant: Hilsendegen v. Scheich, 55 M. 468.

189. Where a lease for half-months expires with the last day of a month the period for which rent is due ends at midnight and the lessee cannot be required to leave before: Detroit Savings Bank v. Bellamy, 49 M. 317.

190. Where a tenant is dispossessed by one who enters under a paramount title, such entry is equivalent to an eviction by legal process, and will excuse the tenant from paying rent to the landlord. The tenant is not bound to retain possession until actually expelled by legal process; but may quietly yield possession, incurring the risk of being able to show that the entry was under a paramount title: Marsh v. Butterworth, 4 M. 575.

191. Where a landlord, during the continuance of a lease, without the consent of the tenant, enters upon the demised premises, which have been vacated by the tenant, and the entry is followed by a continuous possession inconsistent with the possessory right assured to the tenant by the lease, such possession amounts to an eviction, and precludes the recovery of rent while it continues: Day v. Watson, 8 M. 535.

192. And this is so whether the entry be for condition broken or not. If for condition broken, it signifies an intention to terminate the lease entirely; while, if the landlord regard the lease as still continuing, the right to rent is suspended during the occupancy: Ibid.

193. Rent is the consideration for occupancy, and there is no consideration for its payment when the enjoyment of the rented premises ceases: Bates v. Phinney, 45 M. 388.

194. Where the consideration of a lease fails, the lessee is justified in leaving and in refusing to pay further rent: and when premises are rented with the distinct understanding that they are in good condition, that becomes part of the consideration: Tyler v. Disbrow, 40 M. 415.

195. A lessor who exacts covenants that the lessee has received the premises in good condition, and will so keep and return them, cannot, in assumpsit for unpaid rent, deny that their condition was a consideration for the lease: Ibid.

196. One who leases premises to an Odd Fellows lodge, contracting in the lease that they shall be suitable for the lessee's purposes, cannot recover rent therefor if the premises are not suitable or rendered suitable within a reasonable time; Youngs v. Collett, 68 M. 331.

197. Where premises leased for the purposes of an Odd Fellows lodge were given up to the landlord, who took up the floor, rendering the room untenable, and then neglected to make the needed changes and repairs, such neglect amounted to an eviction, excusing non-payment of rent: Ibid.

198. A water-lot, extending by the terms of the lease to the channel-bank of the river, and including "all the liberties and privileges belonging to the premises," was rented to be used for a boat house. During part of the term the landlord caused his propeller to be moored at the docks, on either side of the slip and in front of the premises, shutting off ingress and egress, and thereby depriving the lessee of the particular and only use for which the premises were rented. Held, such an eviction as would abate the rent during its continuance: Pridgeon v. Excelsior Boat Club, 66 M. 326 (June 16, '87).

199. One who holds land under a contract of purchase is not liable for rent while the contract remains open, and no notice to quit or pay rent, or of an intention to forfeit, has been given: Dwight v. Cutler, 8 M. 566; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

200. Where a lessor rents to others premises that have been given up to him by the lessees before their term expires, he does not release the payment of any deficiency in rent that may arise: Stewart v. Sprague, 71 M. 50 (June 22, '88).

201. Where, as security additional to a mortgage, a paid-up lease for ten years of other than the mortgaged premises was given, which provided that it should be at the lessees' option to keep possession after a certain date, on or after which, also, the lessees might cancel the lease if the bond should be fully paid, held, that when the mortgagees had satisfied their debt by a foreclosure, they could not keep possession without paying rent: Dutton v. Merritt, 41 M. 537.

202. But if there is a deficiency the mortgagees have a right to apply the amount of rent due from them and unpaid in satisfaction of the foreclosure decree, and an assignment by the mortgager to a third person of his claim for rent cannot prevent this: Storey v. Dutton, 46 M. 539.

(b) Rights and liabilities of others than the original parties.

203. A deed of land under lease conveys the landlord's rights, as against the lessee, without further ceremony: Hansen v. Prince, 45 M. 519.

204. A conveyance of leased lands with the reversion, remainder, "rents, issues and profits thereof," transfers to the grantee the right to collect and sue for the rent thereafter accruing, and the tenant cannot defeat his action by refusing to attorn to him: Perrin v. Lepper, 84 M. 292.

205. An assignment by a wife to her husband of "all the use" of certain premises leased to other persons but held in her name, "for his use and benefit," is not specific enough to give him the right to rents under existing leases: Spicer v. Bonker, 45 M. 630.

206. Past-due rents cannot be recovered by the grantee of a lessor unless his deed confers the right to them: Pendill v. Eells, 67 M. 657 (Jan. 5, '88).

207. A deed intended as a mortgage will not sustain a claim by the grantee for the rent of the premises if the grantor remains in possession: Stevens v. Hulin, 53 M. 93.

208. The surrender of a lease by the tenant before the expiration of his term, with the lessor's knowledge, will defeat a suit for subsequent rent by the lessor's grantee, who takes a deed while the premises are unoccupied: Foster v. Fleishans, 69 M. 543 (April 20, '88).

209. Where a paid-up lease for a certain period is given to mortgagees as additional security, the assignee of the mortgagor's claim for rent of the leased premises has no greater rights than his assignor: Storey v. Dutton, 46 M. 539.

210. B. and S. held mortgages on certain rented premises already heavily encumbered. S. obtained an assignment of B.'s mortgage, and in order that his own might not be merged procured a deed of the premises to be made to his wife, intending to collect the rents until a foreclosure of prior mortgages. His wife assigned to him "all the use of" the premises "for his use and benefit." B., who understood these arrangements, meanwhile procured assignments of the leases and collected the rents himself in advance. S. sued him for money had and received to plaintiff's use. Held, that an instruction to find for defendant did not prejudice the plaintiff, whose right of action arose under the assignment from his wife, and as she did not hold the leases, her right to collect the rents, if she had that right, rested on her ownership of the equity of redemption and on whatever estoppel may have arisen against B.; but the word "use" in her assignment was too uncertain to cover rents under leases which she did not hold: Spicer v. Bonker, 45 M. 630.

211. Plaintiff's knowledge of the actual possession by tenants was notice enough to exclude any benefit from defendant's neglect to inform plaintiff of the advance payment: Ibid.

212. That there can be no recovery for use and occupation of leased premises against others than the lessees while lease is in force and not surrendered or assigned, see Doty v. Gillett, 43 M. 203.

As to the action for use and occupation, see ASSUMPT, §§ 30-42.

213. An action for rent must be brought in the names of the lessors if the lease has not been assigned: Hecht v. Ferris, 45 M. 376.

214. A lessor may convey the reversion with the rent, or, retaining the reversion, may assign the rent; and in either case the grantee or assignee may sue for the rent, irrespective of any formal attornment by the tenant: Perrin v. Lepper, 84 M. 292.

215. An agreement that a person who retains no ownership in the lease, and has sold the land, should receive certain portions of the rent thereafter payable, gives him no title to enforce such payment by any action founded directly on the lease itself. All rights of that kind belong to the grantee of the land under lease, where they cannot be separated from the ownership of that instrument, and the beneficial interest in the partial revenues must be enforced in some other way: Hansen v. Prince, 45 M. 519.

216. In an action for rent the non-joinder of a co-tenant as plaintiff can only be set up in abatement, and where not so pleaded it will go merely to apportion the damages: Perrin v. Lepper, 84 M. 292.

217. One named as the payee of the rent in a lease executed by another party may in her own name sue the lessee therefor: Toan v. Pline, 60 M. 385.

218. In declaring on an agreement as a demise, there are but two proper modes of stating it: first, by its legal effect; or, second, by setting it forth in such a manner that its legal character can be seen: Tillman v. Fuller, 18 M. 113.

219. Suit to recover rents. The declaration set forth an agreement on the part of the plaintiff to lease the premises to the defendant, in consideration of which the defendant did actually rent and hire the premises. It was held that such agreement to lease could not be a consideration for an actual renting, unless it was so stated as to amount to a present demise: Ibid.

220. In an action for the recovery of rent on a [parol lease, the time of the commencement of the term must be stated, and must be proved as alleged: Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 M. 230.

221. Where the tenant's possession is not received from the party who claims rent, it is proper to authorize the claimant's title to be investigated, unless there is some other ground of estoppel: Fuller v. Sweet, 30 M. 237.

222. There can be no implied grant of possession by one who could not have put the tenant out of possession if he had refused to make an arrangement: Ibid.

223. In an action for rent against the sureties on an appeal bond bringing up proceedings for the recovery of the premises leased by a man and his wife, an order payable out of the rent, signed by the man but not by the wife, and drawn upon the tenant, is inadmissible where there is no assignment of the lease by both lessors: Hecht v. Ferris, 45 M. 376.

In action for rent, receipts for prior months irrelevant: See EVIDENCE, § 23.

LIBEL.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES.

- (a) What is libellous.
- (b) Malice.
- (c) Privileged communications.
- (d) Interpretation of the language.

II. PLEADING; EVIDENCE; DAMAGES; JUSTIFICATION AND MITIGATION.

As to criminal prosecutions for libel, see CRIMES, §§ 574-576.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES.

- (a) What is libellous.

1. Every false and malicious publication of language concerning a man or his affairs, which, as a natural or necessary and proximate consequence, occasions him pecuniary loss, is prima facie a libel, if the publication be by writing: Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 M. 366.

2. The rules which divest spoken words of an actionable quality do not necessarily apply to written or printed libels: Foster v. Scripps, 39 M. 376.

3. Private persons cannot lawfully be made the subject of ill-natured remarks in the public press, where they have done nothing to expose themselves to public censure; and where such things, having an injurious tendency, are published, the persons giving them publicity must find some justification, or be responsible for the mischief: O'Connor v. Sill, 60 M. 175.

4. All newspaper mention of private persons must be made under the private obligation of publishing no untruths to their prejudice, and the public obligation of saying nothing at all to their prejudice unless on adequate occasion. Otherwise the statements made may be libellous even though they would not be actionable if unwritten: Tryon v. Evening News Assoc., 39 M. 636.

5. It is not libellous to publish of and concerning one who is a druggist: "The above druggist in the city of Detroit refusing to contribute his mite with his fellow merchants for watering Jefferson avenue, I have concluded to water said avenue in front of T.'s store, for the week ending June 27, 1846:" People v. Jerome, 1 M. 142.

6. To render a publication libellous it must indicate the person intended by name, or connect him with some fact or circumstance, known to those to whom the publication is addressed, by which they may understand who is meant. And to enable a jury to determine upon the application, such fact or circumstance should be in proof; and that cannot be unless it is pleaded: Lewis v. Soule, 3 M. 514; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

7. Action based upon the publication of the following words: "It must be and is painful to all who feel the force of conscientious impulses, and who regard the solemn responsibility of an oath, to witness at our elections the frequent violations of truth, committed by those brought forward at the polls. The recurrence of false swearing is too common to pass unpunished. No casuistry can palliate or excuse it." The inducement set forth was that plaintiff was supervisor of the township; that there was a general election; that plaintiff was a member of the board of election; and also a candidate for re-election. Held, that the alleged libellous words were too vague and uncertain to constitute a charge of perjury; and that in connection with the intrinsic facts pleaded, the perjury was not sufficiently alleged: Lewis v. Soule, 3 M. 514.

8. A railroad company supplied certain of its agents with a tabulated list of employees who had been discharged, stating in parallel columns the name and occupation of the employee, and under the heading "Why discharged," the reason. Held, where the reason given was "stealing," the statement was libellous, and its issue to agents was a publication: Bacon v. M. C. R. Co., 55 M. 224.

See infra, § 19, 41.

9. It is libellous to publish to the injury of a newspaper reporter an untrue statement showing that he has violated a private confidence by tale-bearing: Tryon v. Evening News Assoc., 39 M. 636.

10. A newspaper article charging a druggist with making as well as selling counterfeit Haarlem Oil, and putting it in counterfeit wrappers, is libellous: Steketee v. Kimm, 48 M. 322.

11. A newspaper article, after stating that P. had murdered a certain girl, said she was known as P.'s woman, and that he had told an alleged confederate that he need have no fears about her murder, and had hired him to steal a sack, which he received [to put the body in]; that he had furnished a wagon in which to take her body to the river; that he had intimated to his wife that the girl had been murdered to get rid of her, and that he had confessed adultery to his wife, for which the wife had left him. Held, that these were all libellous charges, for which P. was entitled to damages unless it was proved that he had murdered the girl: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

12. It is libellous to publish of a lawyer an article charging him with giving dishonest, unprofessional advice, with making false statements in professional dealings, with incurring loss of confidence by misconduct, with embezzling moneys, and with making false charges for services and extorting excessive compensation: Atkinson v. Free Press, 46 M. 841.

13. A printer's mistakes, made without wrongful intent in printing a self-laudatory article furnished for publication by the subject of it, cannot be held a malicious libel: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

14. A publication that charges plaintiff with gross misconduct in the office of deputy-sheriff, with arresting and handcuffing men without right, merely to get the legal fees, and oppressing the poor and friendless under color of office, is libellous per se: Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

15. Whether, where dismissal from employment as agent is the special injury complained of in a case of libel, the words, to be libellous, impute some charge or matter in relation to the plaintiff's business, trade or avocation, which, if true, would render him unworthy of employment, quere: Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 M. 366.

16. A civil action for newspaper libel was based on the publication of an article shown by defendant to have been handed to him for publication by plaintiff himself, but which was illegibly written, and was not published as written; there was no showing that it had been intentionally altered nor any plain proof of negligence; and it was also shown by defendant that plaintiff had said he would be satisfied if it could be corrected and put in the weekly edition. Plaintiff did not deny this and was not examined as to the article, and there was no testimony indicating what words were changed. Held, that the article could not go to the jury as a basis of damages: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

As to libel of fellow-member of corporation, see CORPORATIONS, § 168.

(b) Malice.

17. The wilful publication of injurious statements involves the design to produce whatever injury must necessarily follow; and when done purposely, knowingly and for no good purpose or justifiable end, it is malicious in the sight of the law even if done without any actual personal ill-will: Maclean v. Scripps, 52 M. 214.

18. A false and injurious publication made in a public journal "for sensation and increase of circulation" is, in a legal sense, malicious: Ibid.

19. Where in a "discharge list" sent by a division of a railroad company to a fellow-agent, the reason given for the discharge of an employee was "stealing," and it appeared that he was turned off because he had taken a good coat of a passenger from a train on which he was riding, and left his own, which was much worn, in its place, and that the investigation of his explanation, that he did it by mistake, while hurriedly leaving the cars at his station, was not fairly conducted, there was evidence tending to show express malice on the company's part, and it was error to direct a verdict in its favor: Bacon v. M. C. R. Co., 66 M. 166 (June 9, '87).

20. Other similar publications made by defendant on the same or the following day may be shown as bearing on the question of malice: Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 M. 348.

21. In an action of libel for a publication not privileged, it is error to direct a verdict for defendant where plaintiff's evidence tends to show that defendant authorized the publication, and also express malice on defendant's part in so doing: Wheaton v. Beecher, 66 M. 307 (June 16, '87).

(c) Privileged communications.

22. Newspapers have no privilege that will excuse them in printing libels of which any other publication would not be excused: Foster v. Scripps, 39 M. 376.

23. While the mischief which may be caused by an abuse of the press is such as to render its conductors responsible for great care in guarding against the danger, yet the necessities of civilization require that no unreasonable or vexatious restrictions should be imposed upon them: Detroit Daily Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 M. 447.

24. It is the right and duty of newspapers to discuss measures relating to the health, welfare, comfort and happiness of the people. But this will not justify libellous statements: Scripps v. Foster, 41 M. 742.

25. Newspapers may discuss what relates to the life, habits, comfort, happiness and welfare of the people, and in doing so may state facts, draw inferences therefrom and express views upon the facts. Their deductions, even if false, are not actionable unless they cause special damages, but damage is presumed if they impute the commission of crime: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

26. A newspaper statement imputing the commission of crime, but based on facts that have no legal tendency to prove it, is not privileged: Ibid.

27. A newspaper statement to the effect that a designated city physician, appointed by the common council and not chosen at a public election, has caused the death of a patient by reckless treatment, is not privileged, and if false is libellous: Foster v. Scripps, 39 M. 376.

28. It is matter of privilege to call public attention to the act of a judicial officer in ordering a person into confinement without a charge against him, or in requiring bail in an amount which, considering the prisoner's probable means and position in life, he is unable to pay; these are violations of the most important guaranties of constitutional freedom, and are matters of public concern: Miner v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 49 M. 358.

29. A publication in a newspaper falsely imputing a charge of crime against a candidate for an elective office is not privileged though made in an honest belief of its truth; though the fact that it was published in good faith and after reasonable investigation may go in mitigation of damages: Bronson v. Bruce, 59 M. 467.

30. An article in a newspaper falsely charging a public officer with gross misconduct in office cannot be claimed to be privileged on the ground of its publication being a public good: Bourresau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

31. A superintendent of public schools, who, in order to vindicate himself from a newspaper attack emanating from a member of the board of education and involving his opposition to a certain teacher, authorizes the publication of an article criticising the teacher's method and her conduct toward him, cannot be held responsible for libel unless he makes serious false charges of fact or wanton or irrelevant assaults on such teacher: O'Connor v. Sill, 60 M. 175.

32. Pending plaintiff's candidacy for the appointive office of city controller, defendant, a citizen, said in an interview with a reporter that he "shouldn't wonder if the city would have the same experience with plaintiff that England had with Cyprus, in which England thought it secured a great bargain, but which turned out a huge graveyard." The interview being published in a newspaper, held, that the publication was not privileged: Wheaton v. Beecher, 66 M. 307 (June 16, '87).

33. Whether the publication of libellous allegations contained in a bill of complaint upon the files of a court is privileged, quere: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 371.

34. The publication of court proceedings is not so far privileged as to justify a sensational accompaniment of defamatory comments upon the characters of those in relation to whom the proceedings are taken: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

35. The publication of judicial proceedings is not privileged to the extent of protecting statements made in connection therewith but drawn from other sources and without stating the judicial conclusion: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

36. Statements in an affidavit made in support of an answer to be used in opposition to an application for an injunction are privileged, provided they are not irrelevant and impertinent: Hart v. Baxter, 47 M. 198.

37. Where a bill was filed by a mortgager to reform the mortgage, and the bill charged an agent of the mortgagee with fraud in connection with the drafting of the mortgage, and the agent made his affidavit in support of the answer, and averred therein that the charge of fraud was wilfully and maliciously false, held, that an action counting on these words as a libel would not lie: Ibid.

38. A communication, representing that a certain person was of bad moral character, and wholly unfit to teach and have the care of a district school, was made to a township superintendent, by persons interested in a particular school within his jurisdiction, for the sole purpose of preventing the issue to the person so charged of a license to teach the school. Held, that it was a privileged communication, and abundantly justified by proof that he was an habitual blasphemer and profane person, and an open violator of the Sabbath: Wieman v. Mabee, 45 M. 484.

39. An action for libel will not lie on a communication relating to personal character, if made in good faith and for an honest purpose by persons concerned, and to the proper person. Nor will it lie when such a communication is untrue, if it is not maliciously made: Ibid.

40. Qualified privilege extends to all communications made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty to a person having a corresponding interest or duty; and it embraces cases where the duty is not a legal one, but where it is of a moral or social character of imperfect obligation: Bacon v. M. C. R. Co., 66 M. 166 (June 9, '87).

41. The "discharge lists" which each division of a railroad company sends monthly to his fellow agents to put them on their guard against men whom he has discharged are qualifiedly privileged: Ibid. See supra, §§ 8, 19.

42. In an action for newspaper libel the judge instructed the jury that a portion of the article complained of was privileged, but permitted them to consider it with the rest in deciding from the general spirit of the article whether that part which was left to their consideration was malicious. Held error: Miner v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 49 M. 358.

43. It is for the court to determine whether the subject-matter of a libel, and its author's interest in and relations to it, make it a privileged communication; but it is for the jury to decide as to his good faith, belief in the statement and actual malice: Bacon v. M. C. R. Co., 55 M. 224.

44. The question whether a libel was not privileged cannot properly be raised in an appellate court after it has been excluded below by a ruling that publication has not been shown: Ibid.

(d) Interpretation of the language.

45. A published article, to test its libellous quality, must all be read together. Parts of it cannot be severed from the rest so as to give them a meaning which the whole would not justify; and the spirit of the whole article must be determined from the occasion that led to it: O'Connor v. Sill, 60 M. 175.

46. A person is responsible for such meaning of his language as is most natural, and is actually by his own fault accepted under the particular circumstances. But there is no responsibility for any other meaning than that which is shown to have been intended and actually understood: Wieman v. Mabee, 45 M. 484.

47. Where an action of libel is based on a newspaper article casting ridicule upon plaintiff, and there is evidence tending to show that it arose out of mutual banter, and that defendant told plaintiff he was going to publish it, and that plaintiff assented, it is for the jury to find under proper instructions whether the article is really libellous, even though it would be if unexplained: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

48. If there is any doubt as to the meaning of the publication, so that extrinsic evidence is needed to determine its character as actionable or otherwise, it is a question for the jury, under proper instructions: Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

49. Where a publication is plainly libellous upon its face, or manifestly wanting in defamatory meaning, the court should so instruct the jury: Ibid.

50. A letter contained the following language concerning plaintiff: "It is wondered at how he can live in more than ordinary style, as he does, while having merely the honorable receipts of his agency to live upon." The letter had previously accused him of vexatious acts, and of charging unusual rates. Held, that this did not necessarily imply that he had embezzled or stolen, but was ambiguous, and was properly submitted to the jury: Edwards v. Chandler, 14 M. 471.

51. Defendant was sued for publishing of a clergyman: "Then there was that Iowa Beecher business of his which beat him out of a station at Grand Lake." This was set forth in the declaration as intended to charge adultery, and a general justification was put in. Held, that it was error for the court to leave such a charge to the jury as one that they might regard as not involving an accusation of adultery: Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 M. 251.

52. The term "pettifogging shyster," as used in a newspaper article attacking a candidate for congress, means an unscrupulous practitioner who disgraces his profession by doing mean work, and resorts to sharp practice to do it: Ibid.

And see infra, §§ 57, 58.

53. It is presumed that an article in the Dutch language, printed in a local Dutch newspaper of large circulation, is understood by its readers without an English translation: Steketee v. Kimm, 48 M. 322.

II. PLEADINGS; EVIDENCE; DAMAGES; JUSTIFICATION AND MITIGATION.

54. Where, under the allegation in a declaration for libel, no other person than the plaintiff can be presumed to be meant, the declaration is sufficient, even if it does not show by name and in precise terms the application to him of the language claimed to be libellous. The rule of certainty applicable to a declaration never required it to negative every possible implication: Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 M. 366.

55. If a declaration for libel alleges that the publication deprived the plaintiff of divers great gains and profits which would have accrued to him, it is sufficiently clear to indicate the kind of injury to be proved, and to sustain judgment if admitted by the defendants. But such language would not apply to an agent on a salary, and if the plaintiff were an agent it would indicate that he received part of the profits or a commission on the sales: Ibid.

56. In a declaration for libel a general allegation of the loss of trade is sufficient, ordinarily, without setting out the names of the customers lost, and it may be supported by evidence of such general loss: Ibid.

57. In giving a construction to words declared upon as libellous resort cannot be had to the innuendo, the office of which is to explain the context, not to add to it: Lewis v. Soule, 8 M. 514.

58. The office of an innuendo is to aver the meaning of the language published; it cannot change the import of the words, or add to or enlarge their sense; and if the meaning of the publication is plain on its face, no innuendo is needed: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629; Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

59. The notice of justification attached to the plea in a libel suit stated that "the defendant would prove the truth of the allegations in said declaration contained." Held, that this evidently meant the allegations in the libels complained of, and that it was not too general: Bailey v. Kalamazoo Publishing Co., 40 M. 251.

60. Where the notice of justification contained no specific averments, and was confined to the statements in the libel concerning the plaintiff, other acts not mentioned in the libel and not justified could not be proved either in justification or mitigation: Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

61. Where a publication complained of in its entirety as a libel charged the several offences of seduction, adultery and abortion, which, while distinct in themselves, were parts of a single and continuous transaction, it was held that the plaintiff could not, by so using the innuendo as to confine his cause of action to the charge of abortion alone, limit defendants' right to show that plaintiff's previous reputation was such that nothing in the publication could have injured it: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

62. If a plaintiff counts upon a publication as an entirety, he cannot, by confining the innuendo to a portion of it only, limit defendants' right to justify it as an entirety and show that he had no reputation that would be injured by any part of it: Ibid.

63. A declaration averring injury to plaintiff's business and reputation among his Holland fellow-citizens does not put plaintiff to proof that they are citizens in the technical sense. All persons are citizens in the ordinary popular sense: Steketee v. Kimm, 48 M. 322.

64. It is not competent to prove distinct facts in defence that have not been made part of the issue as framed: Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 63 M. 425.

65. Where sworn statements, made before a justice, apparently furnish legal cause for an arrest, but the justice does not issue a warrant, it is proper, in an action for libel based on a report of the facts stated, to ask him why he did not issue it: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

66. A physician accused of illicit intercourse with a patient sued his defamer for libel. Held, that he could show the patient's physical condition as bearing on the probability of the charge. But in contradicting the patient's testimony that she was weak and sick at home, the defence was properly confined to that issue, and it was not error to exclude their testimony as to her mode of employment there and her visiting elsewhere: Maclean v. Scripps, 52 M. 214.

67. Where plaintiff, in an action for libel, sets out the published article complained of in his declaration, such article containing charges against plaintiff, a public officer, and also against other officers in the township, the court will restrict the evidence for the defence to the particular charges against plaintiff: Bourreseau v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 68 M. 425.

68. It is not error to allow defendant to show on what ground he based his information: Bailey v. Kalamazoo Publishing Co., 40 M. 251.

69. In an action for newspaper libel an offer was made to show that the declaration was afterward published with head-lines referring to the plaintiff's attorney but not to plaintiff. Held proper to exclude proof of the head-lines: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

70. In an action for newspaper libel the editor was properly allowed to testify that at the request of plaintiff's counsel he had previously published a synopsis of the declaration in a similar suit brought by the same plaintiff against another paper: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

71. A newspaper article complained of as libellous did not name the plaintiff, but it was practically conceded that he was the person referred to. Held, that the exclusion of a subsequent article, naming him, when offered merely for the purpose of establishing identity and objected to as incompetent for that purpose, was not material error: Peoples v. Evening News Assoc., 51 M. 11.

72. Repetition of a newspaper libel may be shown by proving the publication of the declaration containing the libellous articles in full: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

73. In an action for newspaper libel an article published in the same paper more than a month after the article complained of is too remote to be admissible as bearing on the care and prudence with which the paper was managed at the time of the libel; its management afterwards is immaterial: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 371.

74. Copies of a newspaper containing specimen articles may be put in evidence to show the character it has established, as bearing on the question what degree of care and prudence was exercised in publishing an article complained of as libellous: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

75. Where an alleged libellous article is one of a series relating to a matter of public concern, defendant may introduce them all to show good faith on his part: Scripps v. Foster, 41 M. 742.

76. In an action for newspaper libel, the haste incident to issuing the paper, the time at which the libellous article was handed in, and the sufficiency of the force employed on the paper for gathering the news and preparing and supervising articles for publication, may be considered as bearing on the question of the publisher's negligence: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

77. The burden of proving the negligence of a newspaper proprietor in retaining employees through whose recklessness or malice a libel has been published is on plaintiff: Ibid.

78. In an action for newspaper libel the motive of a subordinate in publishing the article complained of is irrelevant if not communicated to his principal, the defendant, and if a showing has been made of everything that passed between principal and subordinate before publication. And where defendant, besides testifying that he had no ill-will toward plaintiff and did not know him, and that he had put implicit confidence in his subordinate, had also been allowed to show all that took place before the publication, and the information on which he acted, there was no material error in excluding a question as to whether he had any purpose to injure plaintiff in assenting to the publication, especially where it was put by his own counsel in cross-examining him when called by plaintiff to show his control of the paper: Maclean v. Scripps, 52 M. 214.

79. In a civil action for libel based on a newspaper article tending to throw ridicule upon plaintiff, it is competent for defendant to show how far the facts alleged or any part of them were true, and how far their truth would leave any cause of action remaining. It is also admissible to show under what circumstances the article was prepared and published: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

80. In a civil action for newspaper libel, defendant, who was publisher of the paper, was properly allowed to state, on cross-examination, that the article complained of was not written by him: Ibid.

81. In a trial for libel based on a charge of seduction it was not clearly error to exclude the fact that the girl alleged to have been seduced committed suicide just as the trial was about to take place: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

82. In an action for libel based on a newspaper article imputing the murder of a girl, defendant sought to justify by proving it. Held, that plaintiff, on producing evidence that tended to show that the girl was the victim of an abortion procured by some one else, was entitled to have the case submitted on that theory, and it was error to exclude a question put to a competent witness as to whether the facts shown were inconsistent with death by abortion. Held proper also to cross-examine one who had testified as to the victim's relations with plaintiff, upon the impressions witness had received therefrom as to her feelings toward this person thus charged with the murder: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

83. One who sues for libel puts his previous reputation in issue, and defendant can show that even if the charge was false it probably did not injure him: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

84. In showing that the reputation of the plaintiff in a libel suit was such that the charge could not have injured him, the defence is properly confined to the testimony of witnesses who could testify that they knew plaintiff's reputation before the charge was published: Ibid.

85. Where a physician complaining of a libel claims that it injures his medical character, evidence as to his medical standing becomes relevant: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 48 M. 408.

86. Where the declaration for libel alleges injury to plaintiff's business, the amount of his sales for the year in which the libel was published may be shown, though covering some time previous to the publication, but defendant is entitled to draw out all the facts in detail afterwards, so as to enable the jury to distinguish between the business before and after the publication: Whittemore v. Weiss, 88 M. 348.

87. In an action for newspaper libel questions to the editor as to the purpose of the publication and the publisher's feelings toward the libelled person, and as to what the editor, before publishing the libel, had thought of its veracity, were admissible as bearing on the questions of damages and the malice or good faith of defendant: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

88. Where a declaration for a libel published in a daily newspaper does not aver its publication in the weekly edition, an offer to prove the circulation of the weekly is properly rejected until proof is made that it was published in that edition: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

89. In an action for newspaper libel the editor, on testifying that on hearing that other papers which had published it had retracted, he had caused inquiries to be made as to the accuracy of the statements it embodied, should also have been allowed to testify what the result of those inquiries was: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

90. The character and doings of private persons, not developed in legal proceedings or voluntarily made public, cannot be properly discussed in print, and for all libels, every publisher, whether an individual or a corporation, is responsible to the extent of any special damages, and any estimated damage to credit or reputation; but he is only liable to such damage to injured feeling as must inevitably be inferred from the libel itself, published in a paper of such character and circulation as his, provided he has used such precaution as he reasonably could to prevent an abuse of his columns: Detroit Daily Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 M. 447.

91. Every publisher in whose paper a libel appears is liable for estimated damages to credit and reputation and such special damages as may appear, and also for such damages on account of injured feelings as must be inferred considering the standing and circulation of the paper: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

92. The employment of competent editors, the supervision by proper persons of all that is to be inserted, and the establishment and habitual enforcement of such rules as would probably exclude improper items, should exempt a publisher from any aggravation of damages on account of the express malice of his subordinates, for any libel published without his privity or approval. But if it should appear that he was wanting in reasonable care to prevent abuses, he would be liable to increased damages for his own misconduct, which might fairly be regarded as identifying him with facts which he took no pains to suppress: Detroit Daily Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 M. 447.

93. Where there is evidence tending to show that the proprietor of a newspaper has retained employees who ought not to have been kept, and that through their recklessness or malice a libel has been published, the proprietor will be held liable: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

94. One who publishes an untrue article intended and reasonably adapted to harm the person to whom it refers is liable in such damages as may be lawfully awarded according to the determination of a jury as to the injury done and its compensation: Tryon v. Evening News Assoc., 89 M. 636.

95. A publication that is libellous per se is presumed to be voluntary and with malicious motive, and is therefore ground for exemplary damages: Evening News Assoc. v. Tryon, 49 M. 549.

96. Where the publication is actionable per se, if maliciously published, the recovery, though the declaration alleges as damages only a loss of trade to plaintiff, cannot properly be limited to nominal damages merely, whatever the proof as to the influence upon plaintiff's business: Whittemore v. Weiss, 38 M. 348.

97. Damages for a libel upon a candidate for public office are reduced to a minimum if the libel results from an honest mistake made in an honest effort to enlighten the public as to his character: Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 M. 251.

98. Where it appears that a libel was published with no intent to injure the person libelled, and that all proper precautions were observed in publishing it, the recovery of damages is limited by the actual injury: Evening News Assoc. v. Tryon, 42 M. 549.

99. In a civil action for libel no damages are recoverable for a libel that contains no falsehoods: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 408.

100. An absolute charge of crime is not necessarily wanton; and even if not privileged, or if mitigating circumstances are not shown, it does not necessarily carry every element of damages known to the law; as, where the person charged with crime ignores a portion of the charge in basing a libel suit thereon: Bathrick v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 50 M. 629.

101. In an action for libel, libellous publications from the same paper, relating to other persons, may be put in evidence to show that the paper was recklessly conducted, and therefore liable to punitive damages: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 871.

102. Where exemplary damages are sought for libel, defendant may introduce circumstances tending to show that he acted in good faith and with all proper precautions, and had good cause to believe that the statement complained of was true: Scripps v. Foster, 41 M. 742.

103. In an action for libel, if the communication was privileged, the plaintiff is bound to prove both the falsity of the publication and the malice in making it, and the defendant is entitled to give evidence of its truth under the general issue without special notice: Edwards v. Chandler, 14 M. 471.

104. Privilege is to be shown in an action for libel as a justification, after publication has been proved: Bacon v. M. C. R. Co., 55 M. 224.

105. Where the defendant in a libel suit gives notice of a general justification without serving particulars, he must prove the truth of the libellous statements precisely as charged in the declaration: Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 M. 251.

106. The following words were printed of a clergyman: "Then there was that Iowa Beecher business of his which beat him out of a station at Grass Lake." He sued for libel, alleging that they implied a charge of adultery. A general notice of justification was filed with the plea. Held, that to justify the words, the defendant must have shown a loss of position at Grass Lake upon some charge of immoral conduct affecting the plaintiff's clerical character: Ibid.

107. Where a libellous charge is made against a candidate for office, and there is only a technical variance between the charge and its justification, proof that the party making it honestly believed it should be received to show that there was no wrong intent: Ibid.

108. In an action for libel an allegation that a person has been "indicted" is supported by proof that he has been prosecuted and convicted in justice's court on information: Ibid.

109. But a charge made against a justice of the peace that he stole whiskey-fines is not supported by proof that he has not paid over a fine which he had imposed for an assault: Ibid.

110. General reputation is sufficient to justify the charge that a lawyer is a pettifogging shyster: Ibid.

111. A charge of bad moral character, if made generally, is not fully justified by proof of profanity and Sabbath-breaking: Wieman v. Mabee, 45 M. 484.

112. In business a reasonable latitude for puffing should be allowed. But this right must be so far limited that no agent, for the purpose of adding to his own sales and diminishing those of a rival agent, should be allowed to place his rival in the false position of having recommended the article supported by his opponent as better than his own, since both are supposed to be experts upon whose judgment the public will greatly rely. Nothing short of the truth of such a representation will justify its publication: Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 M. 366.

113. A lawyer brought an action for libel based on a newspaper article which charged him with having appropriated more than a fair share of the moneys which a client had caused to be placed in his charge just after departing for a foreign jurisdiction where his creditors could less easily trouble him. Under a plea of justification evidence was admitted of the statements of a couple of creditors who had pursued their debtor and who professed that he had intimated some suspicion as to the safety of his funds. There was no evidence that plaintiff had done anything to have the money sent back to him, but the evidence was admitted as res gestæ and on the ground that the lawyer and client and the go-between who carried the money were "all together in the transaction." Held, error. Such declarations could not be treated as res gestæ, nor could the conduct of creditors among themselves out of the plaintiff's presence and not communicated to or acted on by him: Atkinson v. Detroit F. P. Co., 46 M. 341.

114. A newspaper charged a city physician with causing death by the careless use of the trocar in vaccination after its use had been forbidden by the board of health. Held, that in an action for libel defendant might show that plaintiff had, in his presence, justified its use: Scripps v. Foster, 41 M. 742.

115. A libel suit was based on an article charging the plaintiff with arson to defraud insurers and with murder. Held proper to permit the defendant, in justifying, and as bearing upon the malice of the libel, to show that plaintiff's claim for insurance on the house that was burned was contested: Peoples v. Evening News Assoc., 51 M. 11.

116. Evidence to justify statements published after the commencement of a suit for libel is not admissible: Bailey v. Kalamazoo Pub. Co., 40 M. 251.

117. Good faith cannot protect a false publication, nor can one excuse himself for making a mistaken assault upon his neighbor's reputation by showing the absence of malice when, even had his charge been true, there was no proper purpose in bringing the matter to public notice: Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 M. 348.

118. Counter publications that are not libellous, and could have no force as a provocation, are not admissible in evidence in mitigation of damages: Ibid.

119. It seems that a retraction of a libellous article, published after suit is begun for the libel, cannot be considered in mitigation of damages: Evening News Assoc. v. Tryon, 42 M. 549.

120. The fact that an article falsely charging a candidate for an elective office with crime was copied from and credited to a paper published in an adjoining county, does not necessarily go in mitigation of damages. It must depend upon the circumstances of the particular case: Bronson v. Bruce, 59 M. 467.

121. Two newspapers accused a man of murder and he sued them separately for libel. The affidavit of a convict that he was present when the murder was committed was procured for one of the cases, but it conclusively appeared that he was elsewhere at the time sworn to, and the affidavit was not used. Held, that though it might perhaps be admissible in the other case to show defendant's good faith, it could not be used as proof of the murder: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

(b) Extent and effect.

(c) Pleading and evidence.

II. REVOCATION.

License of sale of liquor, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, §§ 2-11.

Licenses under ordinances, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, XI.

As to probate licenses, see ESTATES OF DECEASED; GUARDIANSHIP.

I. IN GENERAL.

(a) What constitutes; nature of.

1. A license is a permission to do something which without the license would not be allowable: Chilvers v. People, 11 M. 43; Youngblood v. Sexton, 32 M. 406.

2. A license is a permission to do some act or series of acts on the land of the licensor without having any permanent interest in it. It is founded on personal confidence, and is therefore not assignable; it may be in writing or by parol; or without consideration or subject to revocation: Morrill v. Mackman, 24 M. 279.

3. Where something is promised beyond a mere temporary use of the land, and the promise is not founded on personal confidence, but has reference to the ownership and occupancy of other lands, and is made to facilitate the use of those lands in a particular manner and for an indefinite period, so that the right to revoke at any time would be inconsistent with the evident purpose of the permission, the interest is something more than a license, if the proper formalities for conveyance have been observed. It may be an easement or a leasehold interest or otherwise, according to the character of the possession, occupancy or use of the promisee, the time it is to continue, and perhaps the mode in which compensation, if any, is to be made for it: Ibid.

4. A written agreement permitting the establishment of a dam, granting a right of flowage, providing for a perpetual use and for the settlement of damages, and containing no clause of forfeiture on default, is not a revocable license, but an absolute sale on time for credit: Fitch v. Constantine Hydraulic Co., 44 M. 74.

5. Oral permission to the trustees of a church to build, upon premises contingently contracted to be conveyed to them, sheds for the convenience of attendants upon worship, was held to be a revocable license, not a lease; and a resumption of possession and fencing of the property, allowing a sufficient time after notice to remove the sheds, was lawful: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439, 26 M. 189.

6. Where wooden sheds had been erected on another's land after the revocation of the license to erect them, fifteen months were held to have exceeded any reasonable or necessary time for their removal: Ibid.

7. A land contract, unless so conditioned, does not operate as a license to use the land: Ibid.

8. Oral permission by the vendor of land to the vendee to take possession at any time is a mere license, revocable at pleasure so long as the terms of the sale are unfulfilled: Gault v. Stormont, 51 M. 636.

9. Where the vendor and vendees in a land contract enter into a parol agreement whereby the latter are allowed to remove the timber in violation of the terms of the contract, such permission amounts, so long as it remains unperformed, to a mere license: Stickney v. Parmenter, 35 M. 287.

10. The consent of a riparian owner to the building of a bridge on his premises amounts to a revocable license: Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 M. 454.

11. An oral permission by the owner of land to cut timber thereon is a mere license: Estelle v. Peacock, 48 M. 469.

12. A parol agreement for the sale of standing timber is good as a license so far as acted upon: Greeley v. Stilson, 27 M. 158; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 M. 362; Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 M. 181; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 M. 365.

13. So is a parol extension of the time allowed by a contract of sale for taking off timber: Haskell v. Ayres, 35 M. 89.

14. Whether a parol agreement to extend the time limited for the removal of standing timber sold was to be regarded as a license protecting the vendee until revocation, or as something more than a revocable license, quere; the court being equally divided: Williams v. Flood, 63 M. 487.

(b) Extent and effect.

15. A license creates an estoppel against complaining of acts done under it before revocation, or from preventing the enjoyment of the results of what was thus done: Greeley v. Stilson, 27 M. 158.

16. A license, like an estoppel, is limited to the fair understanding on which the parties are at liberty to act; it does not give the licensee a general authority to do what he pleases: Ortmann v. Sovereign, 43 M. 1.

17. Permission to a grantor to remain upon the premises after his deed is a mere license, which, even while unrevoked, does not preclude the licensor from taking actual possession of the premises generally, and putting his stock upon them. Any occupation by the grantor inconsistent with this general right in the grantee would be unwarranted; and if, while so allowed to remain, the grantor uses the land so as to make it the means of communicating an infectious disease, he will be held liable in damages to the licensor: Eaton v. Winnie, 20 M. 156.

18. A license to come upon one's premises, especially if in the licensor's interest, imposes upon him the duty to warn those who come of any danger in coming of which he knows or ought to know and they do not: Powers v. Harlow, 58 M. 507.

19. Where a tenant is obliged to cross his landlord's premises in going to and from those which he occupies, and is allowed to do so without objection, the arrangement being for the benefit of both parties, his children or members of his family may also go upon such premises to carry him his dinner or to help him: Ibid.

20. A tenant gave his landlord a written license to occupy as much of the premises as should be reasonably necessary in putting up an elevator. Held, that in suing the landlord for exceeding his privileges, the tenant could not show that the space to be occupied by him was marked out upon the floor; the license controlled, and the necessary space was a question for the jury: Ives v. Williams, 50 M. 100.

21. Permission to build a road over one's land implies authority to use it afterwards: Harlow v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 41 M. 386.

22. An unrevoked parol license to flow lands, given by a third person, who at the time had the right to flow, is a good defence to an action for flowing lands: Millard v. Reeves, 1 M. 107.

23. A mere license to enter upon land and cut timber will confer no legal right to do so, and need not be in any particular form, but it will, until revoked, protect the licensee, so far as he has acted under it: Wetherbee v. Green, 22 M. 811.

24. The license implied from an oral agreement for the sale of timber or from the parol extension of time for removal under such an agreement protects the licensee in regard to all trees cut seasonably and before revocation: Greeley v. Stilson, 27 M. 153; Haskell v. Ayres, 85 M. 89; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 M. 862; Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 M. 181; Spalding v. Archibald, 53 M. 365.

25. And when the timber is cut the title to it passes because the right thereto has become a chattel interest: Spalding v. Archibald, 53 M. 365.

26. Where standing timber is sold to be cut and removed by a certain date the license to enter and remove continues until that date: Utley v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 59 M. 263.

27. A parol license to cut timber is binding on the licensor if executed before revocation: Wait v. Baldwin, 60 M. 622.

28. A licensor's actual knowledge that his consent has been acted on is not necessary to the protection of the licensee; he is bound to assume that it has: Spalding v. Archibald, 53 M. 365.

(c) Pleading and evidence.

29. A license is to be set up in the notice of special defence under the general issue: Druse v. Wheeler, 23 M. 439.

30. The defence of license cannot be made under the general issue in trespass; there must be a special notice: Vanderkarr v. Thompson, 19 M. 82; Senecal v. Labadie, 42 M. 126.

31. The special notice of justification under the general issue in trespass may be leave be amended so as to aver a denial: Hopkins v. Briggs, 41 M. 175.

32. A parol license to remove timber should be very clearly shown when relied on to avoid a forfeiture set up in defence to a bill for specific performance of a land-contract: Stickney v. Parmenter, 85 M. 237.

II. REVOCATION.

33. A parol license — whatever right it may give to remove erections under it — is revocable at any time: Druse v. Wheeler, 23 M. 439.

34. An oral permission by the owner of land to cut timber thereon is revoked by the death of the licensor: Estelle v. Peacock, 48 M. 469.

35. A mere license from a wife to her husband to hold her property ceases at her death: Bassett v. Shepardson, 52 M. 3.

36. A license to two or more is in general revoked by the death of one of the licensees. Whether such would be the rule under the peculiar facts of this case, quere: Rust v. Conrad, 47 M. 449.

37. A license to use a road over one's premises is revoked by closing the road: Fowler v. Hyland, 48 M. 179.

38. A license coupled with an interest is not revocable while the interest continues; as where a license from a landlord to cross his land is necessary to the tenant's enjoyment of the premises for which he pays rent, and is therefore for the benefit of both: Powers v. Harlow, 53 M. 507.

39. An oral license to go upon lands to ditch is revocable by parol, and an oral agreement to give a written license if a neighbor will do likewise cannot operate as a license where, after the neighbor had done as requested, the party making such agreement declined to abide by it and forbade the digging of the ditch: Hitchens v. Shaller, 82 M. 495.

40. Where a petitioner for a village street across his land orally stated to the authorities that he claimed no damages, it was merely a license that would be binding only when they proceeded to take the land, and might be previously revoked by a written notice: Turner v. Stanton, 42 M. 506.

41. Where the vendor in a land contract has given oral permission to the vendee to take possession, such permission is revoked by the vendor's return to him of a partial payment on failing to get his wife to unite with him in the sale: Gault v. Stormont, 51 M. 636.

42. Where the vendor of land assigns his contract to one who knows nothing of an oral agreement between the vendor and vendee whereby the latter may remove timber in violation of the contract's terms, the agreement is revoked: Stickney v. Parmenter, 85 M. 237.

43. The consent of a riparian owner to the building of a bridge on his premises is revoked by his conveying the property: Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 M. 454.

44. Where a licensee to use land has made costly improvements in reliance on the license, it seems that he should have adequate protection against revocation: Ibid.

45. A license, given by one tenant in common, with his co-tenant's consent, to a third person to cut timber, is not necessarily revoked by a conveyance of the licensor's interest: Wetherbee v. Green, 22 M. 811.

46. The owner of land gave permission through her agent to a railroad company to build its road over her land, but with the understanding that it should not thereby acquire any rights to the soil. Held, that the permission was not revoked and its effect was not changed by the fact that the agent, from time to time thereafter, claimed that the company was trespassing: Harlow v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 41 M. 336.

47. Where the owner of land has allowed the construction of a railroad over it, he is chargeable with knowledge that the road is of such a permanent nature that it cannot well be removed or abandoned: Ibid.

48. Where the owner of certain lands, after contracting for their sale, had given oral license to the other party, who were trustees of a church, to erect sheds thereon, but had afterwards forbidden such erection "until the contract should be carried out," and the other party privately determined not to fulfil the contract, such prohibition operated as an absolute revocation of the license. It was held that the use of the sheds for fifteen months afterwards without interference did not tend to show a new license or the withdrawal of the revocation: Druse v. Wheeler, 26 M. 189.

49. A revocation in such case made to and in the presence of one of the trustees had the same effect as if made to all: Ibid.

50. One has a license to enter another's business office to transact his business with him, but the license is revoked when he is ordered to leave: Breitenbach v. Trowbridge, 64 M. 393.

51. Revocation of a license to appropriate part of a street to private use does not immediately make the licensee a wrong-doer: Everett v. Marquette, 53 M. 450.

IV. MISCELLANEOUS LIENS.

As to lien by mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES; MORTGAGES.

As to lien of ATTACHMENT or EXECUTION, see those titles.

Taking one's property from licensee is larceny, see CRIMES, § 375.

That an hotel-keeper's lien on guest's baggage gives him no power to dispose of it, see CRIMES, § 261.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. A lien is a tie, hold or security upon goods or other things, which a man has in his custody, till he is paid what is due him: Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1.

2. In its largest sense the word lien embraces every case in which property is charged with the payment of any debt or duty: Bidwell v. Whitaker, 1 M. 469.

3. A common-law lien implies that the party by whom it is claimed is either in the actual or constructive possession of the thing; and his right to detain the thing continues until his claim is satisfied; but maritime liens exist independently of possession: Wight v. Maxwell, 4 M. 45.

4. There must be contract, express or implied, to support a common-law lien, and, unless by express provision of statute, it never arises where no contract relations exist: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

5. A trespasser who cuts another's trees acquires no lien upon the logs for the expense of cutting and transporting them: Gates v. Rifle Boom Co., 70 M. 309 (May 18, '83).

6. By signing a note or a bond one creates no lien on his property, legal or equitable: West v. Laraway, 28 M. 464.

7. Courts cannot create liens, but can only declare and enforce them: Lyster's Appeal, 54 M. 325.

8. One who has discharged a lien on goods by advancing money therefor at the request of the owner has a right to the possession of the goods till reimbursed: Edwards v. Frank, 40 M. 616.

9. A judgment in this state creates no lien: Campau v. Barnard, 25 M. 381; West v. Laraway, 28 M. 464, 470; Udell v. Kahn, 31 M. 195.

10. Charges cannot be imposed on real estate by oral agreements unless there are distinct and positive provisions enabling it to be done: Hammond v. Wells, 45 M. 11.

11. Equity cannot, unless allowed by statute, create a lien upon real estate to secure a personal debt, not contracted on its credit, and not charged on it by agreement: Bennett v. Nichols, 12 M. 22; Perkins v. Perkins, 16 M. 162.

As to declaring alimony a lien, see DIVORCE, §§ 216, 217.

12. An equitable lien upon real estate requires (1) a written contract identifying the property as security for the debt; or (2) such relations between the parties as will make it right and just to declare the lien; as, for example, in the case of a joint owner or bona fide purchaser making improvements in good faith, or in the case of partners' liens: Kelly v. Kelly, 54 M. 30.

13. The doctrine of equitable lien is to prevent fraud and do justice, and should never be applied where the establishment of an equitable lien would not be carrying out the intent of the parties: Ibid.

14. Land conveyed to a fiduciary agent by a party who was in a position rendering him an easy subject for imposition was in equity subjected to a lien for any balance that might be found due on final accounting for its full value: Rath v. Vanderlyn, 44 M. 597.

15. Where a party had failed to execute a mortgage as agreed, chancery enforced a lien on the property under the equitable circumstances of the case: Williams v. Rice, 60 M. 102.

16. An oral agreement to give a mortgage upon lands cannot be sustained as an equitable lien if uncertain in its terms: McClintock v. Laing, 23 M. 212.

17. Where liens on property are accompanied by a personal responsibility the creditor has a right to rely on both: Stebbins v. Walker, 46 M. 6.

18. Whether a lien may not continue, if so agreed, where other collaterals are taken, quere: Ortmann v. Plummer, 52 M. 76.

19. A contract not to avoid a valid lien differs from a promise to pay a third person a debt that is entirely unsecured; such a promise is binding only as between the parties to the agreement: Hunt v. Strew, 39 M. 368.

20. One who buys at an auction subject to liens must take the transfer subject to such liens, notwithstanding they are not such as could have been legally enforced against the title sold: Eames v. Eames, 16 M. 348.

(b) How discharged, lost or waived; reinstatement.

That a lien is discharged by a proper tender, see TENDER, III.

21. For a case where a party, under an agreement to pay for lands by taking up encumbrances upon it, was held to have satisfied an encumbrance by buying it in, see Kibbee v. Thompson, 6 M. 410.

22. A lien for redemption from foreclosure can only be satisfied by a payment or voluntary discharge: Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 M. 468.

23. One who seeks to break a lien on the ground that the demand is excessive should tender what he himself considers reasonable: Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 M. 377.

24. One who holds property under claim of a lien is under no obligation to take it to a certain point, at the owner's request, merely to enable the owner to replevy it: Ibid.

25. An unconditional surrender of possession or conduct showing a design to discharge the lien, or plainly inconsistent with it, usually puts an end to it: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

26. But the holder of the lien may allow the owner of the property to take it into his possession and remove it without prejudice to the lien, if so agreed: Ibid.

27. Nor can a lien be destroyed by a removal, without the lienor's consent, from his lienor's possession: Ibid.

28. All previous liens upon the land are cut off by a valid tax-title: Robbins v. Barron, 32 M. 86.

29. A lien once waived is permanently lost: Au Sable River Boom Co. v. Sanborn, 36 M. 353.

30. All liens created by implication may be waived by implication: McMaster v. Merrick, 41 M. 505.

31. A lien is waived if the parties entitled to it acquiesce in the action of third persons taking possession of the property on execution without notifying them of their own adverse claims: Ibid.

32. A lien is waived by implication if privileged and unprivileged claims are commingled in the same dealings so that the lien is not kept ascertainable without restating and charging the accounts: Ibid.

33. A lien is not lost by merely restating the account and deducting certain items: Comstock v. McCracken, 53 M. 123.

34. Equity contemplates a lien discharged by mistake as still in existence: French v. De Bow, 38 M. 708.

35. It seems that a complainant seeking to reinstate a lien which he has discharged by mistake on lands of which he has since been in possession might be required to account for rents and profits if the pleadings raise the question: Ibid.

And see EQUITY, §§ 331, 332.

II. LIENS OF MECHANICS, BUILDERS AND CONTRACTORS.

(a) When and against what enforceable; effect; discharge.

36. The statute providing for these liens is in derogation of the common law, must be strictly pursued, and cannot be extended beyond its terms: Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 M. 587.

37. Builders' liens cannot attach to public buildings unless permitted by statute: Knapp v. Swaney, 56 M. 345.

38. A builder's lien would not attach — under the statute prior to the amendment of 1869 — if the contract provided for securing the debt otherwise, as by mortgage upon the premises: Barroes v. Baughman, 9 M. 213.

39. The lien (under code of 1833, p. 406) of a mechanic or material-man, for labor or materials furnished in the construction of a building, attached only upon the interest of the person for whom it was erected; and did not encumber any pre-existing right or title of any other person: Scales v. Griffin, 2 D. 54.

40. If, therefore, when the lien attached, the person causing the building to be erected had no title to the premises on which it stood, but a mere right, resting in contract, to a conveyance on the performance of a condition precedent, and that right was afterwards lost by his failure to perform the condition, subsequent proceedings to enforce the lien would convey no right or title to the purchaser: Ibid.

41. A mechanic's lien cannot attach to a cistern built by A. for B. in C.'s ground under permission granted to B. by C.: Eaton v. Monroe, 63 M. 525.

42. Whether dredging out a slip and distributing the dirt for the construction of a wharf is work upon which a mechanic's lien could be based, quere: Clark v. Raymond, 27 M. 456.

43. When work is alleged to have been done under an oral contract, the terms of which are disputed, a mechanic's lien will not be sustained unless the evidence in support of it is clear and decisive enough to satisfy all reasonable and just minds without much hesitation as to the real nature and terms of the arrangement: Ibid.

44. A mechanic's lien attaches to an entire interest of the debtor in premises considered only as real estate, and not to chattels separated from it: Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 M. 587.

45. A mechanic's lien for building materials can arise only on a contract made by the owner, part owner or lessee of the land to be affected; and cannot attach to anything besides his actual interest: Ibid.

46. One cannot at the time of contracting for building material, and by that act alone, impose a mechanic's lien against land upon which the building is to be put up, if he had then no legal or equitable title to it: Ibid.

47. The contract must relate to and be performed upon the lands against which the lien is sought to be enforced. No lien arises under H. S. § 8377 in favor of parties who merely sell machinery or materials which may or may not go into a building, as the purchaser may determine: Stout v. Sawyer, 37 M. 313; Coleman v. Stearns Manuf. Co., 38 M. 30, 35.

48. The contract relation prescribed by the statute is a necessary prerequisite to the lien, and it must distinctly exist before, or at all events at the time when, the lien is sought to be instituted: Willard v. Magoon, 30 M. 273.

49. Where husband and wife had been living in a building owned by her which was destroyed by fire, and he bought articles for repairing the building in his own name and on his own credit, it was held that no privity of contract existed between the wife and the vendors so as to authorize a lien against her property: Ibid.

50. Prior to the amendment of C. L. 1871, § 6789, by act 258 of 1879 (H. S. § 8377), a wife's land was not bound for improvements made upon it on the credit of her husband, even though with her knowledge and consent: Ibid.; Newcomb v. Andrews, 41 M. 513; Morrison v. Berry, 42 M. 389.

51. A builder's lien will not attach to any interest in real estate which defendant did not have when materials began to be furnished (H. S. § 8377); nor will filing notice of the lien operate retrospectively; the lien will not, as against bona fide purchasers, attach to property that has been transferred to them before the filing of notice: Sisson v. Holcomb, 58 M. 634.

52. A lien will not attach to a debtor's homestead for building a house thereon under a written contract for furnishing material and building a dwelling-house, which does not in any way describe or specify what land the building is to be erected upon: Hammond v. Wells, 45 M. 11.

53. A mechanic's lien in favor of the vendor of materials cannot be predicated merely on the purchaser's statement that he has a house and is building an addition to it and wants the materials for that purpose: People v. McAllister, 49 M. 12.

54. A mechanic's lien does not preclude the general owner from replevying the goods as against a stranger: Bodine v. Simmons, 88 M. 682.

55. A mechanic's lien is terminable on redemption, and therefore gives no fixed right of possession for any particular period and does not concern third persons if not asserted by the parties: Ibid.

56. A builder under a contract cannot, as against the owner of the building, retain possession of it after the time has expired for the performance of the contract, and after he has ceased work, to enforce payment of the contract price: Beller v. Stange, 27 M. 812.

57. A vendor's lien secured by a duly recorded chattel mortgage takes precedence of a mechanic's lien for repairs subsequently done at the purchaser's request: Denison v. Shuler, 47 M. 598.

58. A tender, sufficient in amount, will discharge a mechanic's lien for the repair of personal property; and, if not accepted, the creditor must thereafter rely upon the personal responsibility of his employer: Moynehan v. Moore, 9 M. 9.

(b) Enforcement.

1. Proceedings generally.

As to jurisdiction by amount, see EQUITY, § 81.

59. A title secured under the mechanic's lien law is purely statutory, and its validity depends on an affirmative showing that every essential statutory step in the creation, continuance or enforcement of the lien has been duly taken: Wagar v. Briscoe, 88 M. 587.

60. One who seeks to enforce a mechanic's lien for material furnished is required by statute to file an affidavit of the amount due within thirty days after furnishing the material, and also proof of service of notice of the lien. If he does not, it is provided that the lien shall cease as to all persons except the owner of the premises. It is further provided that the lien shall not continue more than sixty days after the filing of the affidavit of amount due, unless proceedings to enforce the lien have been begun. Held, that if no affidavit is filed at all, the lien will be lost after ninety days have passed since the material was supplied: Comstock v. McEvoy, 52 M. 824.

61. The filing of a bill or petition, not the service of process, is the beginning of suit in the meaning of the statute which requires proceedings to be begun within sixty days: Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 M. 680 (April 28, '87).

62. In proceedings by subcontractors to enforce a mechanic's lien, the original contractors must be brought in as parties, since the contract relation and state of accounts between the defendant and the original contractors, and between the original and subcontractors, must be adjudicated before the lien can be established, and the rights and liabilities of the parties be ascertained: Kerns v. Flynn, 51 M. 573.

63. The objection that a petition for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien does not implead necessary parties may be taken in the answer thereto, or at the hearing; and it is not lost by putting in an answer after demurring: Ibid.

64. Under C. L. 1871, §§ 6789-94 (see H. S. §§ 8377-82), for the enforcement of mechanics' liens upon real property, a declaration that the contract was made with a particular party, and subsequently fully performed, would not comprehend the substance of the facts involved in the idea of a lien under said law, under which no lien will attach unless the contract be with the owner, part owner, or lessee. Simple performance of the contract is insufficient. It is a fatal defect not to show the interest of the contracting party in the land, and the defect will not be cured by an admission of ownership on the part of the respondent. Every fact essential to jurisdiction must appear on the record: Clark v. Raymond, 27 M. 456.

65. In proceedings under the statute to enforce a lien, the existence and terms of the contract upon which the alleged lien is based must be distinctly and affirmatively proved. As the statute looks to somewhat summary proceedings in relation to real property, all matters of substance, and proceedings essential to the security of rights and titles, should be strictly adhered to: Willard v. Magoon, 80 M. 273.

66. In setting up the respondent's title to certain lands, in a petition for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien against the lands for materials supplied, it should be made to appear that the respondent had some interest in the lands at the time the materials were supplied or when the certificate of the lien was filed, and it is not sufficient to set forth only the state of the title at the point of time when the petition was filed: Ibid.

67. A petition in chancery filed to enforce a mechanic's lien need not contain a prayer for process: Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 M. 690 (April 28, '87).

68. Though a purely statutory lien must conform exactly to the statutory conditions, yet when it once attaches and is put in process of foreclosure, the proceedings, while in part definitely fixed, are largely left to the general course of practice, and no strained construction should be used to defeat them: Ibid.

69. The chief purpose of the notice lis pendens required by the statute is to bind subsequent interests. Semble that it is unnecessary as against the original parties to the bill: Ibid.

70. In proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien upon realty, an answer should be put in by the defendant so that an issue may be properly framed: Roberts v. Miller, 33 M. 289.

71. Prior to the amendment of 1879 (see H. S. § 8882) the bill or petition though sworn to was not evidence, and therefore a sworn averment of service upon defendant of notice of the filing of the lien with the register of deeds did not cure the want of proof thereof, unless the answer admitted it: Ibid.

72. The complainants have the burden of proving on the trial their compliance with all that the statute requires for giving them a lien on the defendant's premises: Ibid.

73. The final decree in proceedings sustaining a mechanic's lien ought expressly to adjudge the existence of contract relations between the parties, and the establishment of the alleged lien upon the property described: Willard v. Magoon, 30 M. 273.

74. A mechanic's lien enforced against a simple equity must be confined to that, and a sale of the equitable interest must be subject to the rights of the legal owner: Wagar v. Briscoe, 38 M. 587.

75. Notice of a sale for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien must be posted and published as in cases of execution sales of real estate, except that twelve days must intervene between the completion of the act of notification and the time of sale: Ibid.

2. Appeals.

76. Prior to act 84 of 1873, no appeal lay from statutory proceedings to enforce the liens of mechanics, etc., who, by contract with the owner, etc., of lands, had furnished labor or materials for constructing or repairing any building, etc., upon such lands: Clark v. Raymond, 26 M. 415.

77. The supreme court has no jurisdiction to review proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien under H. S. ch. 290, except by virtue of H. S. §§ 8409-8411, which excludes any other mode of review, or rule or course of proceeding on appeal, than is provided by law in relation to appeals in ordinary chancery cases; the finding of a jury, therefore, in such proceedings, instead of being decisive as at common law, is a mere provisional and assistant inquisition analogous to a verdict or a feigned issue in chancery, and, as the court may ignore it, points raised upon the charge to the jury, rulings, etc., will not be considered: Willard v. Magoon, 30 M. 273.

78. Without a proper authentication of what seems to have been returned and treated as the evidence in proceedings to enforce a mechanic's lien upon lands, the supreme court will not hear an appeal therefrom; the defect is not cured by a stipulation of the solicitors; the solemn judgments of courts will not be disturbed on records made for them by the counsel or attorneys: Roberts v. Miller, 31 M. 78.

79. The record on an appeal should contain a copy of the testimony duly certified by the register as a true copy of the testimony filed in the cause: Ibid.

80. In reviewing statutory proceedings in chancery to enforce a mechanic's lien in which the complainant obtained a verdict, the supreme court will not be disposed to disturb the result where the case depends mainly on the weight of oral testimony, and the testimony is irreconcilably opposed, and the trial court saw the witnesses examined: Begin v. Henderson, 50 M. 468.

III. LIENS FOR LABOR AND SERVICES ON LOGS, ETC.

As to recovery of compensation for running and booming logs, etc., see WATERS, VIII, (b).

(a) In general.

1. Validity.

81. Act 185 of 1873, providing for a lien for labor on lumber and logs, criticised as crude and incomplete: Clark v. Adams, 33 M. 159; Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

82. Act 145 of 1881 (H. S. §§ 8412-8427), establishing a lien for labor and services on logs, etc., is remedial, and was enacted to provide additional security for the laborer; and it should be liberally construed to effectuate that object: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

83. It is competent for the legislature to provide for security by way of a lien in behalf of a laborer, and also to provide a remedy for the enforcement of such lien by attachment, in cases where the possession of the property upon which the labor is performed is not retained by the person performing such labor: Ibid.

84. Whether the act of 1881, in declaring that the word "person" or "persons" in the first section thereof (H. S. § 8412) shall be interpreted to include cooks, blacksmiths, artisans and all others usually employed in performing such labor and services, would operate to give a lien to cooks, blacksmiths, etc., between whom and the owner there exist no contract relations, quere: Ibid.

85. Such an objection to the validity of the statute, and the further objection that it provides for seizure without service of process of any kind, cannot be raised by defendants shown to have been in contract relation with defendants, and to have been personally served with the process by which the suit was begun: Ibid.

86. Said act of 1881 gives laborers for a contractor a lien against the owner of the logs, though there is no privity of contract between such laborers and owner; and in so doing the act is constitutional: Reilly v. Stephenson, 62 M. 509.

87. An independent contractor, that is, one who enters into a contract with the owner of logs to drive and deliver them, is entitled to a lien under act 145 of 1881: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

88. The lien for cutting logs provided by act 185 of 1878 could not be enforced as against those who had purchased from the debtor without notice of the claimant's lien as shown by his petition on file or by his actual possession: Haifley v. Haynes, 37 M. 535.

89. H. S. § 2035, prior to its amendment by act 66 of 1887, did not give a lien for removing obstructions upon a stream that required the aid of artificial means in running the logs by means of dams, etc.: Kroll v. Nester, 52 M. 70; Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

90. A contract for manufacturing lumber from logs was held to give a lien for the saw-bill, notwithstanding a provision for the payment of the bill for sawing "as often as once a month after the lumber is delivered out of said mill:" Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 M. 6.

91. A saw-mill was leased without rent, but the lessees were to saw all logs furnished by the lessor and ship and season lumber as ordered. This agreement was to be in force through the whole period of the lease. Held, that this contract evidently did not contemplate a lien, since (a) the amount of work agreed for was indefinite and consisted of various items, and the rental value could not well be apportioned on it; (b) work was to continue until the end of the lease, when the lessee would be bound to quit and could not remain on the premises to enforce his lien; and (c) the obligation to ship was unlimited and might exhaust the whole of the lumber: McMaster v. Merrick, 41 M. 505.

92. Where a contract for the sale of stumpage permits the vendee to have the logs manufactured, and consequently to create a lien upon them for the labor, the vendor, in subsequently dealing with the vendee's assignee with regard to the sawed lumber, is bound at his peril to ascertain whether the lien has been satisfied or waived, or whether the assignee has such possession of the lumber as to warrant the inference that no lien then exists; and he cannot claim the rights of a bona fide purchaser under the assignee's mere formal oral transfer to him of the lumber in consideration of a pre-existing debt for the purchase price of the logs: Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 M. 6.

93. Where a contract for sawing logs provided that the quantity sawed was to be determined by the sales or inspection bills at the place of shipment, it was held that any possession that might be taken by purchasers of the sawed lumber, as the inspection proceeded, must be regarded as only inchoate and conditional until payment should be made for the sawing, and that purchasers participating in the transaction and necessarily apprised of the lien were not wronged by its being insisted upon: Ibid.

94. Boom companies have a lien for their services in breaking jams and driving logs whose owners have not put on a sufficient force to do it, not only under the statute relating to such companies (H. S. § 3922), but under the general act relating to log-driving: Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 M. 377.

95. A boom company's statutory lien for running logs is acquired if the work is done by one who has contracted with the company to do it as the company's agent, and who is to be paid a gross sum for the job: Ibid.

96. In an action involving the existence of a lien for services, a full showing should be had as to the items that go to make up the claim, and full cross-examination should be permitted. The reasonableness of the claim is for the jury, and they cannot be instructed as to their conclusions thereon: Ibid.

97. In replevin for logs on which defendant claims a lien for driving them and for storage, the jury cannot be instructed that the charge for storage should be proportioned to the length of time they were held, as this involves considerations of fact, and it might be unjust that an owner who should be favored with an early delivery of his property should also be favored with the smaller charges: Ibid.

Prospective lien as consideration, see CONTRACTS, § 205.

2. How lost or waived.

98. By allowing sale and delivery of lumber upon which he has a lien, to purchasers ignorant of his rights, a sawyer waives his lien to the extent of such sales: Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 M. 6.

99. A lien upon lumber for the saw-bill was not lost by the removal of the lumber from the mill-yard to a distant place of shipment, where, under the agreement, the possession remains in the sawyer until inspection at such place: Ibid.

100. Where a boom company has taken time-acceptances for its claim for services upon rafts of logs delivered to the owners thereof, such owners have a right to demand and receive the residue of their logs, released from any lien for services upon the rafts delivered. There being no agreement or understanding that the logs on hand might be retained as security for a future payment of a demand not then payable, such an agreement cannot rest in implication. And the lien being thus once lost could not be revived by the maturing of the acceptances: Au Sable River Boom Co. v. Sanborn, 36 M. 358.

101. Whether, as between a boom company and the original owners of logs rafted by it, there could be any question that the taking of time-acceptances for its claim for services would be a waiver of any lien therefor on logs remaining in their custody, there could be none as between the company and a third person to whom the property has been sold without notice of any claim for services in respect to logs previously delivered. If one by his purchase acquires an immediate right to remove his property he cannot lose it by any subsequent default of his vendor: Ibid.

102. Where a log-owner demands all his logs from a boom company which claims a lien for its services in driving them, the latter does not lose its lien by detaining more of the logs than is necessary to preserve it, though such a detention may possibly give ground for an action: Hall v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 51 M. 377.

103. Where the logs of an individual owner have become intermingled with those in the charge of a boom company without his consent, but without the fault of the company, the latter acquires a lien for its services in driving them which it does not waive by refusing to deliver them to the owner on demand, unless he tenders not only a reasonable compensation for the services, but enough to cover the cost of separating his logs from the rest: Ibid.

104. A lienholder cannot be said to refuse to state the amount he claims when he merely refuses to vary from schedule rates of which both parties have knowledge: Ibid.

(b) Enforcement.

See, also, WATERS, VIII, (b).

That these liens do not give jurisdiction to equity, see INJUNCTIONS, § 40.

105. Act 185 of 1873 authorized no personal judgment as for damages, but simply a proceeding in rem to enforce a lien, and those who avail themselves of it must show that they have strictly followed its provisions: Clark v. Adams, 83 M. 159.

106. But act 145 of 1881 (H. S. §§ 8412-8427) authorizes a personal judgment as well where a lien is found to exist as where the amount found due is not a lien upon the property: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

107. Under said law of 1881 an owner's logs cannot be seized to pay the debt of his contractor or other person without reasonable notice and an opportunity of contesting the suit: Reilly v. Stephenson, 62 M. 509.

108. Proceedings under act 185 of 1873 are special and must conform strictly to the statute; the affidavit for attachment, therein provided for, is jurisdictional, and if it omits any material allegation which the statute requires, the writ will afford no protection to the officer executing it, and he will be guilty of conversion for seizing property upon it: Woodruff v. Ives, 34 M. 320.

109. Where an affidavit for writ of attachment under said act of 1873 alleges that plaintiffs performed labor upon the logs sought to be attached, but fails to specify the kind of labor or services performed, or to show that it was labor or services of the specific character prescribed by the statute, it is fatally defective. The defect cannot be waived by appearing and pleading to the merits: Ibid.

110. A judgment enforcing a lien upon logs for labor done thereon (H. S. §§ 8412-8427) was affirmed by the equal division of the supreme court, which did not agree that the affidavit filed by the claimants was sufficient to sustain the judgment, if not objected to before. The objections considered fatal were that it did not allege that the parties represented by plaintiff had united their claims, or that they had designated plaintiff as their agent or attorney to enforce the lien, or that the respective sums claimed were less than $100 each, or as to who was the owner of the logs: Babcock v. Cook, 55 M. 1.

111. An affidavit under H. S. § 8419 showed that the logs were separate lots belonging to different owners, and that some of the labor mentioned was not such as entitled plaintiff to a lien, and it did not show that the labor not conferring a lien was not the only labor performed upon the logs of the objecting defendant. Held, that the affidavit was sufficient: Pack v. Simpson, 70 M. 185 (May 8, '88).

112. Under H. S. § 8419 the affidavit need not show how much work was done on each lot of logs, where the work was done for a contractor on four lots, all of which were attached: Ibid.

113. Under said § 8419 an affidavit which states that "the said plaintiff, and each of said claimants, have filed a claim for the amount due each," sufficiently avers the filing of a statement of the lien: Ibid.

114. An affidavit under said § 8419 need not describe the logs as the property mentioned in the annexed writ, where the writ and affidavit described the logs by certain marks and as being in a certain drive: Ibid.

115. A petition under H. S. § 2038 to enforce a lien on logs is fatally defective if it does not allege the jurisdictional fact that they are within the county where the suit is begun: Pine Saw-Logs v. Sias, 48 M. 356.

116. Where such petition alleged that the petitioner had run the logs to a certain boom, held, that the court could not take judicial notice that the boom was within the county where the suit was begun so as to cure the omission of the averment that the logs were within the county and therefore subject to the jurisdiction: Ibid.

117. In proceedings to enforce a lien on logs the appearance and plea of a claimant does not waive previous jurisdictional defects in the proceedings, where the judgment is in form against the logs and there is no judicial determination that the claimant is the sole owner of them: Ibid.

118. An allegation in a declaration under act 185 of 1873 that the plaintiffs, on a day named, "caused to be mailed to each of said defendants a notice of the filing of said petition or statement, as required by the act aforesaid," is not an explicit statement of the service of such notice, "by depositing the same in the postoffice directed to the owner of the logs or timber, his agent or attorney, at his or their place of residence, and paying the full postage thereon," which is the mode of service by mail expressly specified by the statute: Clark v. Adams, 33 M. 159.

119. The officer's return should show that the owner of logs attached could not be found in his balliwick, as a preliminary fact to authorize substituted service upon the agent of such owner: Noyes v. Hillier, 65 M. 636 (April 28, '87).

120. Where execution in an attachment suit brought to enforce a lien for labor on logs has been returned unsatisfied because the defendant owners, who were duly served in the suit, have removed the logs attached beyond the officer's reach, plaintiff may recover the amount of his lien in trover or case against such owners: Goodrow v. Buckley, 70 M. 513 (June 8, '88).

IV. MISCELLANEOUS LIENS.

121. No common-law lien upon personal property manufactured attaches where the manufacturer parts with the possession in the first instance after the manufacture: Smith v. Greenop, 60 M. 61.

122. A lien for the keep of a horse is subject to that of a valid, prior chattel mortgage, and the mortgagee need not tender the amount thereof to entitle him to possession: Reynolds v. Case, 60 M. 76.

123. A clerk or agent whose wages are measured by profits has no lien on property in his possession as against a chattel mortgage given by his employer, but if he were a partner he would have a lien: Wilcox v. Matthews, 44 M. 192.

124. Brokers who, without consideration therefor, merely express a willingness to hold until it rises, wheat bought for their principal, lose no existing lien upon it: Stebbins v. Walker, 46 M. 5.

125. One who contracts to drive logs to a certain point at a fixed rate is bound to discharge any lien for tolls imposed by a river-improvement company: Johnson v. Cranage, 45 M. 14.

126. Whether one who sells merchandise to another on credit can establish a lien upon the proceeds of sales made by the debtor by stipulating that they shall be held in trust for him, quere: Adriance v. Rutherford, 57 M. 170.

127. A vendee who has paid the purchase money punctually has a lien, as against the vendor, analogous to that of a vendor against a vendee who has not paid the purchase money: Payne v. Atterbury, H. 414.

As to lien of vendor, see SALES, IV, (e); VENDORS, V.

128. A carrier has a lien on the cargo for the freight earned: Strong v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 M. 206, 216.

Further as to lien for freight, see CARRIERS, §§ 95, 96, 98.

129. It seems that the guardian ad litem of an infant litigant or his solicitor has a lien upon the infant's funds in court: Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 M. 69.

As to lien of attorney, see ATTORNEY, V, (c).

As to lien of complainant in interpleader, see COSTS, § 177.

As to lien for finding LOST GOODS, see that title, §§ 5, 6.

As to liens on vessels for supplies, etc., see SHIPPING, IX.

As to lien on property on leased premises, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, II, (e).

As to liens for taxes or for taxes paid, see TAXES, VI, (c), (d), 3.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES; CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT OF THE STATUTE.

1. The statute of limitations is favorably regarded by the courts as one of repose as well as of presumption, and as affording security against stale claims; and it is not to be defeated by undue strictness of construction, but must be fairly construed to give effect to the legislative intent: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40; Jewett v. Petit, 4 M. 506; Jenny v. Perkins, 17 M. 28; Gorman v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 27 M. 188; Palmer v. Palmcr, 36 M. 487; Toll v. Wright, 37 M. 93; Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 M. 282.

2. Statutes of limitation have regard specially to the laches of the owner, and they deny him a remedy for the recovery of his rights because he has failed to pursue them within a reasonable time: Showers v. Robinson, 43 M. 502.

3. Where there is no express exception to the statute the court can create none: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40.

4. If there is no saving in a statute as to absentees, *feme covert*s, or residents beyond seas, the court will make none: Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (U. S.) 190.

5. The bar of the statute must be as broad as the remedy was which it extinguishes: National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Mining Co., 57 M. 83.

6. Statutes of limitation are construed to operate prospectively only unless their terms clearly indicate a different intent: Harrison v. Metz, 17 M. 377.

7. Act 86 of 1842, fixing limitations as to actions of ejectment brought by or against those claiming under tax-deeds, applied only to conveyances on sales for delinquent taxes assessed thereafter: Porter v. Van Dyke, 31 M. 176.

8. H. S. § 8736, limiting the time within which actions upon judgments can be brought, applies only to judgments rendered after the act took effect: Harrison v. Metz, 17 M. 377.

9. But it applies to causes of action existing at the time of its passage (see CONSTITUTIONS, § 210): Parsons v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 37 M. 237.

10. Act 145 of 1871 (H. S. § 8718), whereby the statute is made to run against Canadian as well as domestic creditors, held applicable to causes of action already existing (see CONSTITUTIONS, § 209): Krone v. Krone, 37 M. 308.

11. Whether, by § 3 of the repealing act contained in R. S. 1838, it was intended to continue in force the provisions of the acts of limitation repealed by that act, where the time had "begun to run," or whether the time prescribed in R. S. 1838 was intended as the period at the expiration of which the suits should be barred, quere: McLean v. Barton, H. 279.

12. The act of May 15, 1820, limited the time for bringing ejectment, for causes of action thereafter accruing, to twenty years. An act of Nov. 15, 1829, limited the period to ten years, where the cause of action had then accrued. R. S. 1838 repealed these acts and substituted a new limitation of twenty years, with a proviso, however, that causes of action already accrued should not be affected, but be determined by the law under which the same accrued. In ejectment commenced in 1840 for a cause of action which accrued in 1822, it was held, in view of the various provisions of R. S. 1838 relating to the same subject, that the action was barred by the act of 1829: Lastly v. Cramer, 2 D. 307.

13. Defendant went into actual possession of lands, under a tax-title, in August, 1842, and by the act of Feb. 17, 1842 (Laws of 1842, p. 133), the time for bringing action of ejectment in such case was limited to ten years. This act was repealed by R. S. 1846, but it was held that § 9 of chap. 139 of those statutes continued it in force as to all rights of action which had accrued under it, and an action commenced more than ten years from the time defendant entered in possession was barred: Perry v. Hepburne, 4 M. 165.

14. Act 227 of 1863 (H. S. § 8693), amending the limitations of actions for the recovery of lands, does not apply to causes of action that accrued before Jan. 1, 1864, the date when said statute took effect. A right of action that accrued before that date would be controlled by the statute in force at the time (see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 202, 203): Price v. Hopkin, 13 M. 318; Ludwig v. Stewart, 32 M. 27; Stambaugh v. Snoblin, 32 M. 296.

15. The provision of H. S. § 8706, that the rights of parties are to be determined by the law in force when the right of action accrued, relates not to the subject of disabilities, but to the time when the statute became a law: King v. Merritt, 67 M. 194 (Oct. 13, '87).

16. The statute of limitations adopted by the governor and judges, May 15, 1820, continued in force as adopted until repealed in 1838; and its provisions ran against the claims of persons who were, at the time the cause of action accrued, out of this state, but not without the United States, and who had not, from the time of the accruing of said cause of action, come within the state: Hulburt v. Merriam, 3 M. 144. Contra, Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 595.

17. Statutes of limitation will not operate against the state without express words declaring such to be the purpose of the act: Crane v. Reeder, 21 M. 24.

18. The state is bound by statutes of limitation, and can give no title by selling, after twenty years, an old tax-bid for premises that have meanwhile been held adversely long enough to bar ejectment for them: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

That H. S. § 8698 limits actions for recovery of dower, see DOWER, § 80.

That the general provisions of the statute of limitations apply to claims against ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, see that title, § 215.

19. If one's title has become perfected under the statute of limitations so that it cannot be questioned in a suit brought against him, neither can it in a suit brought by him: Toll v. Wright, 37 M. 93.

20. Where, by reason of an adverse possession of lands for twenty years, the occupant has acquired a perfect right in the law to defend his possession, he has for all practical purposes a title, and may maintain suits upon it against parties afterwards found upon the land: Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 M. 542.

21. A surety on a joint note, whose liability is barred by the statute of limitations, can waive his privilege if he chooses and take up the note and enforce it against his principal, if the latter has kept it alive against himself: McClatchie v. Durham, 44 M. 435.

22. A defendant in possession is not estopped from taking advantage of the statute of limitations by any neglect to speed the cause: Dubois v. Campau, 37 M. 248.

II. WHEN THE STATUTORY PERIOD COMMENCES TO RUN.

(a) In general.

23. In computing the ten years within which an action upon a judgment must be brought to avoid the statute of limitations, the day of entering the judgment is excluded: Warren v. Slade, 23 M. 1.

24. The statute of limitations runs against an action on the covenants of a deed from the date of the deed, where the covenants are broken as soon as the deed is given; as where the grantor has no title: Matteson v. Vaughn, 38 M. 873; Vaughn v. Matteson, 39 M. 758.

25. Assumpsit on a covenant of seizin is barred within six years from the time the covenant was made if the grantor had no title: Sherwood v. Landon, 57 M. 219.

26. A right of action in assumpsit upon a covenant against encumbrances is barred in six years, and does not pass with the land: Guerin v. Smith, 62 M. 369.

27. Upon certificates of deposit, and obligations payable on demand, when not excepted by H. S. § 8716, the time runs from the date thereof: Tripp v. Curtenius, 36 M. 494.

28. The statute runs from delivery of a note payable on demand; and in the case of a note payable thirty days after demand it runs from the expiration of thirty days after delivery: Palmer v. Palmer, 36 M. 487.

29. As against a receipt of notes for collection, the statute does not begin to run until an accounting has been called for: Kimball v. Kimball, 16 M. 211.

30. Receipt for money and personal property to be accounted for. Held that, as to the personal property, the statute did not begin to run until after demand, but the money was to be considered due immediately: Ibid.

31. Receipt for money to be paid on a demand held by another. Suit brought thereon fourteen years after its date. Held, that the receiptor was bound to pay over the money within a reasonable time, and in the absence of all explanation the reasonable time must be deemed to have elapsed more than six years before suit, and therefore the action was barred: Ibid.

32. Where an agreement to provide for one by will is binding on an estate the statute of limitations does not begin to run until after the death of the person executing it, and under H. S. § 8722 the period of limitation, in case of the death of the party liable, is extended thirty days beyond the six years otherwise allowed: Sword v. Keith, 31 M. 247.

33. An administrator's claim for moneys paid by him to redeem lands for the estate dates from the payment, and the statute begins to run at that time: Goodrich v. Leland, 18 M. 110.

34. The statute runs in favor of one who converts property from the time of the conversion, although another afterwards intermeddles with the property in such a way as to make him a joint wrong-doer with the person guilty of the original conversion: Kniesly v. Stein, 52 M. 880.

35. A contract for cutting logs into lumber and shingles had been in force for several years, and the parties in the last year of cutting figured up their account for the whole period. Held, in an action for the balance due on the contract, that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the last item of the account for that year: Burch v. Woodworth, 68 M. 519 (March 2, '88).

36. Where a person goes into the service of another upon an indefinite promise of payment, and no price and no period is fixed, the bargain and service are alike continuous, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run against the claim until the service is concluded; the right of action at the close of the service is an entire right and applies to the entire service, and the employee is entitled to claim for the whole amount of all unpaid wages for all the service rendered under the agreement: Carter v. Carter, 36 M. 207.

37. A cause of action accrues to set the statute of limitations in motion, at least where no delay is contemplated, as soon as the creditor, by his own act and in spite of the debtor, can make his demand payable: Palmer v. Palmer, 36 M. 487.

38. Where a demand is a necessary preliminary to an action, it is barred unless made within the period of the statute of limitations, and the right of action falls with it: Ibid.

39. If B. borrows from A. to lend to C., the running of the statute of limitations on C.'s debt to B. is not postponed to the date of the enforcement of B.'s liability to A.: Howard v. Pontiac Presbyterian Church, 51 M. 125.

40. Where a contract for the sale of machinery contemplates that it shall be tested and put in running order, a cause of action does not arise upon the warranty therein until a reasonable time has been allowed for the necessary tests; and the time taken by the parties in trying to make the machinery fulfil the conditions of the contract is a proper criterion as to what is reasonable: Felt v. Reynolds R. F. E. Co., 52 M. 602.

(b) In cases of fraudulent concealment.

41. The statute of limitations does not apply against a cause of action fraudulently concealed, before the fraud is discovered: Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 M. 470.

42. The fraudulent concealment of a cause of action which, under H. S. § 8724, prevents the running of the statute of limitations may be a concealment of law as well as of fact: Ibid.

43. There can be no "fraudulent concealment," within the meaning of the statute of limitations, of matters that are of record and of which plaintiff must be presumed to have knowledge: Robert v. Morrin, 27 M. 306; Me-costa Supervisors v. Vincent, 65 M. 503 (April 21, '87).

44. The "fraudulent concealment" which will take a claim out of the statute of limitations must be that of the person sought to be charged and not that of his clerk without the employer's fault: Stevenson v. Robinson, 39 M. 160.

(c) In cases of mutual account.

45. On a running account the time of limitations only begins when there is a special occasion for making a new departure: Tripp v. Curtenius, 36 M. 494.

46. There is no account current or mutual account within the statute unless there are accounts on both sides. A credit given by one to the other without the concurrence of the other is not sufficient: Kimball v. Kimball, 16 M. 211.

47. Where a defendant relies on the statute of limitations on the ground that the claim has been by his assent converted into an account stated, he must show that such assent was expressed by some unequivocal word or act; it is not sufficient that after the exhibition of the account to him he remained passive: White v. Campbell, 25 M. 463; Payne v. Walker, 26 M. 60.

48. Items of credit to defendant, entered on plaintiff's books for goods or money "returned," have no tendency to prove the existence of a mutual and open account between the plaintiff and defendant, within the meaning of H. S. § 8717. Such entries denote merely that the transactions to which they relate are stricken out of the account entirely; Campbell v. White, 23 M. 178.

49. Where, for mutual convenience, credit is given in the course of a running account for an article that has been returned without being paid for, the transaction is complete in itself and gives neither party a right to make it a matter of account within the statute of limitations. But if cash had been paid for it, which the vendor was allowed to retain, it is a proper item on the credit side, and sufficient to convert the account into a mutual one: White v. Campbell, 25 M. 463.

50. Payments upon an account are sufficient to render it such an open and mutual account as to prevent the statute of limitations from barring the remedy thereon: Payne v. Walker, 26 M. 60.

51. If an attorney's services are minuted in his register and other proper memorandum books, it is sufficient for the purpose of an account current; there is no requirement that the books upon which entries are made shall be of any particular kind, or the entries of any particular form, and the fact that the amount of the charges was not entered is immaterial: Ibid.

53. One who defends against a claim originating in 1869, with items of set-off arising in 1865, 1868 and 1869, cannot show as an additional offset that the plaintiff boarded with him in 1858 and before, in the absence of any showing that there were mutual accounts between them in the meantime; the claim for such board is barred by the statute of limitations and the case cannot be treated as one of mutual accounts renewed after a suspension for a period: Mandigo v. Mandigo, 26 M. 349.

54. A son made a claim against his father's estate for the amount of earnings which he had paid over to his father, and for certain outlays on his behalf. One item of the earnings had accrued so long ago as to be outlawed if standing alone, but it was averred to have entered into an account stated within the period of limitation. Held, that if set up as a single demand, not reduced by mutual credits, it would be barred, but if properly declared on, it might be shown to have belonged to a series of open dealings which were not closed until within the period of limitation: Hillebrands v. Nibelink, 40 M. 647.

55. A claimant against an estate sought to free an open account from the bar of the statute of limitations by showing that within the statutory period the decedent had orally admitted that the price of a bull bought from a firm of which he was a member was properly credited to him individually; also that by his oral consent an order drawn by the claimant on another firm of which he was a member was carried to his individual credit. But there was testimony that no one had accounted for the price of the bull, and there was nothing to show decedent's right to apply the price of it as a set-off to any account held by the claimant against him, and the defence also claimed that decedent had not assumed to apply to his benefit the credit arising from the payment of the order. The jury found against the claimant. Held, that the account was not released from the bar of the statute: Sperry v. Moore's Estate, 42 M. 353.

56. Testimony by a third party that he had heard a decedent orally admit having bought certain property and become a debtor therefor at some previous time not specified, but which the witness inferred was comparatively recent, did not avail to release from the bar of the statute of limitations a claim against his estate upon an open account: Ibid.

57. An account stated may doubtless be worked out without any written undertaking or acknowledgment, and may be proved by unsigned writings; but it cannot overcome the bar of the statute of limitations unless it is supported by evidence of some writing signed by the party to be charged: Ibid.

III. WHEN THE STATUTORY BAR BECOMES COMPLETE.

(a) In general.

58. After the statute has commenced to run, no subsequent disability or devolution of the estate will arrest it: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40; De Mill v. Moffat, 49 M. 125; King v. Merritt, 67 M. 194 (Oct. 18, '87).

59. Plaintiffs in ejectment, claiming as heirs, cannot defeat the plea of adverse possession for the period of the statute of limitations by relying upon a disability which arose before the transmission of the estate from their ancestor and after the statute of limitations began to run: De Mill v. Moffat, 49 M. 125.

60. An assignment for the benefit of creditors does not prevent the running of the statute of limitations: Parsons v. Clark, 59 M. 414.

61. Issuing execution on a judgment does not arrest the running of the statute of limitations: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40.

62. A mortgage does not keep alive the personal obligation to pay the debt it secures: Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 M. 124.

63. Where one mining company has broken through the partition wall of an adjoining mine, the flow of water through the opening after the right of action for the original breaking has been barred cannot be connected therewith so as to defeat the running of the statute of limitations: National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Mining Co., 57 M. 83.

64. Where the statute (Laws 1833, p. 571) prescribed that actions of debt or scire facias on judgments should be commenced within eight years next after the rendition of such judgments, with a saving in the cases of arrest and reversal of judgments, of judgments on plea in abatement and upon demurrer, it was held that the saving clause could not be extended so as to include a case where plaintiff had been delayed by an injunction issued out of chancery after the statute had commenced to run: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40.

65. The defendant in a bill to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage by him given filed a cross-bill relying on frauds in the sale and on breaches of covenant. In a subsequent action by him on the covenants, held, that the chancery proceedings did not prevent the running of the statute of limitations. H. S. § 8738 does not make an equitable suit suspend the statute except where instituted or prosecuted on behalf of the person who wishes to plead the statute: Sweet v. Haldane, 68 M. 639 (March 2, '88).

66. The two periods of limitation fixed for the recovery of land by R. S. 1838, pt. 3, tit. 6, chap. 1, § 1, p. 578, cannot be blended, but stand by themselves for different classes of cases. Right of action against an independent intruder must date back only to the origin of his possession, while if one succeeds to another by transfer of title or claim, the right of action goes back to the first occupant in the chain of adverse possession, and action must be brought within twenty-five years after disseizin. Every action shall be brought within twenty years from the time it accrued: Riopelle v. Gilman, 23 M. 83.

67. Under a mortgage executed in 1839 the mortgagee could take possession by way of security; but this was a mere right of entry that would be barred after twenty years: Albright v. Cobb, 84 M. 816.

68. A right of entry must be enforced within the period of limitations: Cook v. Hopkins, 68 M. 514 (March 2, '88).

69. Under R. S. 1838 the right of possession of lands was barred if entry was not made within twenty years from its origin: Van Fleet v. Blackwood, 39 M. 728.

70. Under R. S. 1838 a mortgagee had a right of entry on default in the payment of the mortgage; but if he made no entry he could have no such possession as would enable him to enter within twenty-five years, or bring an action for the recovery of the land; and an entry without right by a stranger would not enure to his benefit so as to enable him to make his original entry or bring suit within twenty years from the origin of his right: Ibid.

71. Since 1846 a conveyance by an excluded owner of lands held adversely would carry what title he had, and his grantee, like himself, could sue within the statutory period of limitation: Campau v. Dubois, 39 M. 274.

72. The statute of limitations of 1829 barred recovery of lands after an adverse undisturbed holding of ten years: Ibid.

73. A land contract provided for seven annual payments, the first to fall due in 1857. It gave the vendee possession, breach of a condition to work forfeiture. The vendee failed to pay the instalment due in 1860, and left the premises, and in the same year parties who had been occupying under him attorned to an adverse claimant. Held, that under H. S. § 8700, subd. 4, the vendor's right of entry accrued in 1860, or, at the latest, in 1863, and that a suit begun by him in 1884 was barred: Cook v. Hopkins, 68 M. 514 (March 2, '88).

74. Land was conveyed to a village upon the condition subsequent that the same should be cleared and ornamented for a public walk or promenade within ten years, title to revert on breach, etc. Held, that under H. S. § 8700, providing that when any one claims under a title arising from forfeiture or breach of condition his right should be deemed to have accrued when the forfeiture was incurred or the condition was broken, proceedings begun more than twenty-five years after said rights had so accrued were barred: Hatch v. St. Joseph, 68 M. 220 (Jan. 19, '88).

75. Action on an implied assumpsit to pay for services performed by plaintiff while living in a relation's house is barred by a lapse of six years after performance ceased: Robinson v. McAfee, 59 M. 875.

76. The statute of limitations cannot bar the right to an easement unless there has been an enjoyment adverse to the easement for the statutory period: Day v. Walden, 46 M. 575.

(b) In case of infancy or coverture.

77. An infant's right of action for seduction is not barred by the statute of limitations until after she has reached her majority, if the circumstances are such that she has to bring suit in her own name and not by another: Watson v. Watson, 53 M. 169.

78. The married woman's act of 1855 (H. S. § 6295), removing the disability of coverture and permitting a wife to bring suit for her sole property, impliedly repealed the exception created in her favor by R. S. 1846 (C. L. 1857, § 5354): King v. Merritt, 87 M. 194 (Oct. 13, '87); Curbay v. Bellemer, 70 M. 106 (April 27, '88).

79. And this exception was not continued in force by the amendment of 1863 to said § 5354, C. L. 1857, (H. S. § 8702), which was not intended to do more than to introduce the clause relating to the suspension of the running of the statute "unless within one of the British provinces of North America:" Curbay v. Bellemer, 70 M. 106 (April 27, '88).

(c) In case of non-residence or absence.

80. Residence out of the state, in order to take a case out of the statute of limitations, must be something more than a mere place of abode; it must be the party's domicile, which can only be in one place, and it must have the incidents, which may vary under different circumstances, but which determine the place of his home which he has adopted with the intention of remaining there, and to which, when he is absent, he intends to return: Campbell v. White, 23 M. 178.

81. Neither absence from the state nor residence out of it will alone suspend the running of the statute of limitations within the meaning of H. S. § 8721: both must exist to take the case out of the statute. Where the absence has not been continuous, the different occasions when a debtor has been within the state — if his presence was sufficiently notorious, or lasted long enough, to fairly enable the creditor, by exercising reasonable diligence, to subject him to service of process — may be reckoned together, and the statute will run during the period thus computed, it being the legislative intent that the operation of the exception should be concurrent with the existence of the obstacle which prevents a service upon the debtor: Ibid.

82. Under H. S. § 9507, deducting from the period of limitation the time "during which the party charged was not usually and publicly a resident within the state," not mere absence from the state is referred to, but such absence as destroys residence: People v. McCausey, 65 M. 72 (Feb. 10, '87).

83. Where the statute of limitations is pleaded to an action of debt on a judgment, it cannot be held that the residence of defendant's family can, by itself, as matter of law, determine the place of his own residence: Conrad v. Nall, 24 M. 275.

84. The provision (H. S. § 8721) for a deduction from the period of limitation of the time the debtor is absent from and resides out of the state applies to every cause of action mentioned in H. S. ch. 302, which includes debtors by judgment recovered in courts of record as well as those recovered in courts not of record; § 8736, also, was not intended to operate independently of the other provisions of the same chapter: Ibid.

85. Where a defendant who relies on the statute of limitations had resided a part of the time in a foreign country, the burden is upon him to show that the sum of the times of his presence within the jurisdiction was sufficient to satisfy the statute: White v. Campbell, 25 M. 463.

86. Prior to the amendment of 1871 to C. L. 1857, § 5366 (see H. S. § 8718), a cause of action which accrued in Canada upon a promissory note in favor of a Canadian resident who had never been within the United States was not barred by the defendant's residing more than ten years in Michigan; the disability of absence from the United States applied to such a case and prevented the limitation from running: Erskine v. Messicar, 27 M. 84.

87. The term "persons beyond seas," in the statute of 1820 (code of 1833, p. 569), meant persons out of the state: Hulburt v. Merriam, 3 M. 144. See Pease v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 595.

88. A finding that defendant with his family moved to Joliet, Illinois, in 1873, "and at that place resided up to the time of the commencement of this suit," is equivalent to a finding that during the intervening period he was absent from Michigan, and brings the case within the exception to the statute of limitations: McKenzie v. Boylan, 40 M. 329.

(d) Adverse possession.

1. General principles.

89. The doctrine of title by adverse possession must be strictly construed: Yelverton v. Steele, 40 M. 538.

90. Adverse possession is a defence resting wholly upon facts: Demill v. Moffat, 45 M. 410.

91. Adverse possession must be clearly shown and not left to inference: Yelverton v. Steele, 40 M. 538.

92. Adverse possession must be clear and distinct, and plainly proved, to establish title: Campau v. Campau, 45 M. 367.

93. Title by adverse possession, whatever the extent of the claim, must be clear and distinct, especially as against co-tenants in common: Campau v. Campau, 44 M. 81.

94. When title is claimed by an adverse possession for the statutory period, it should appear that the possession had been actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile. And where the circuit judge was requested so to instruct the jury, and refused, but instructed them only that the possession must be actual, continued and visible, held to be error: Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 M. 63.

95. Adverse possession, to give title, must be an actual, continued, visible, notorious, distinct and hostile possession, and a finding of adverse possession must set forth in explicit terms a state of facts that will satisfy the legal definition: Yelverton v. Steele, 40 M. 538.

96. In an ejectment case the court instructed the jury, upon the question of adverse possession, that to bar a recovery the premises must have been occupied by defendant for fifteen years by an open and notorious possession, adverse to plaintiff, but did not tell them that this possession, in order to be adverse, must be distinct and hostile to plaintiff's rights. Held, in the absence of any request for a definition, that there was no error: Miller v. Beck, 68 M. 76 (Jan. 5, '88).

97. There must be an adverse possession before the statute of limitations can commence to run: May v. Rumney, 1 M. 1.

98. An action of ejectment is not barred after ten years' occupancy by defendant if it does not appear that his possession was adverse to the plaintiff: Perkins v. Nugent, 45 M. 156.

99. Adverse possession cannot arise until there is some one to dispute the right claimed: Marble v. Price, 54 M. 466.

100. There can be no adverse possession against one whose legal title or right of entry is incomplete: Cook v. Knowles, 38 M. 316.

101. Adverse possession requires exclusive occupancy known to and against the will and consent of those who are interested and have a right to contest the possession: Whitford v. Crooks, 54 M. 261.

102. Constructive possession is co-extensive with the title which creates it, and actual possession is limited by the occupant's title: Campau v. Campau, 44 M. 81.

103. Twenty years' adverse possession by one heir to an estate, following a parol sale to him of the interest of another heir, gives the former a sufficient title: Hynes v. Osborn, 63 M. 235.

104. Where the line of a building on a street has been occupied and used by the public as the line of the street for twenty-five years, title is gained as against the public to all the ground occupied by the building: Big Rapids v. Comstock, 65 M. 78 (Feb. 10, '87).

105. The acquiescence which will prevent the running of the statute must be that of the possessor in the owner's claim, and not that of the owner in possession not acknowledged to be held under him: Bower v. Earl, 18 M. 367.

2. What constitutes.

106. Possession is adverse if under color of title and a claim of right, and exclusive, held so openly and notoriously that the community understand and recognize the claim of ownership: Murray v. Hudson, 65 M. 670.

107. A claim under a tax-title is necessarily hostile to the owner of the original title: Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 M. 63.

108. An adverse holding may exist though the holder does not believe in his title: Campau v. Lafferty, 43 M. 429.

109. Color of title, under a deed, and occupancy of a part, will be sufficient proof to constitute an adverse possession to a single lot: Millerd v. Reeves, 1 M. 107.

110. Adverse possession need not be based on color of title, and it may become perfect even though the possessor originally had no shadow of title. But it must plainly appear, in such a case, that the real owner has been given a cause of action; and if the possession began in subordination to his right he is entitled to assume that his right is continuously admitted until he finds that it is disputed, or that the possessor has renounced the title under which he entered; and until then the owner cannot be prejudiced by not bringing suit: Campau v. Lafferty, 50 M. 114.

111. Where one sells part of a parcel of land and delivers possession up to a certain line, and continues the occupancy of the remainder to that line, he is to be considered, as against his grantee, in adverse possession to that line, and if such possession is continuous for twenty years the grantee cannot insist that such line was not the true boundary: Bower v. Earl, 18 M. 367.

112. Proof that a person entered into possession under a contract with a party under whom the claimant holds — it appearing that he never received a deed and that he has ceased to occupy the premises — is not evidence of possession adverse to claimant: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

113. Adverse possession is held as against one's grantor by one who has taken a warranty deed of the premises in reliance on the record title and in ignorance of any life-lease outstanding in the grantor: Case v. Green, 53 M. 615.

114. One who buys lots which his deed describes according to a recorded plat is estopped from disputing the dedication and acceptance of an alley which appears thereon as bounding his lots and passing between them; and a mere occupancy by him of the space designed for the alley, without claim or color of title, does not establish an adverse possession until the interests of some one else are affected by it, nor will it entitle him to maintain trespass against a neighboring lot-owner for driving through the alley and tearing down obstructions placed there to prevent his using it: Marble v. Price, 54 M. 466.

115. An owner of outlots which he does not fence or cultivate may establish an adverse possession by cutting grass and timber, ditching, paying general and special taxes, and openly and notoriously claiming and using the land: Curtis v. Campbell, 54 M. 340.

116. Use of land as a wood lot appurtenant to one's farm, and the exercise of such acts of ownership as are necessary to such use, amount, if continuous and uninterrupted, to actual possession: Murray v. Hudson, 65 M. 670 (April 28, '87).

117. To constitute adverse possession it is not necessary that the occupation should be such that a mere stranger passing by the land would know that some one was asserting title to and dominion over it, nor is it necessary that the land be cleared or fenced or any building be placed upon it: Ibid.

118. Payment of taxes on land by a person claiming ownership is admissible in an action of ejectment against him, as tending not only to establish his claim of ownership, but to show adverse possession, the taxes being assessed to him: Ibid.

119. Where possession is shown to have been once acquired by those under whom a party claims, evidence that the land has since been assessed as resident land, and that the taxes have been paid by some one in such party's chain of title, is admissible as tending to show that the possession was continued: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

120. The mere payment of taxes on land is not such an assertion of ownership as to affect the adverse possession of another party, or to weaken the force of the payer's other acts and conduct looking to an abandonment of his claim of title: Cook v. Rounds, 60 M. 310.

121. Plaintiffs in ejectment cannot affect a claim of long continued adverse possession by showing that the land was assessed to their ancestor for several years after his death, when it does not appear that defendants' ancestor, who had paid the taxes, had anything to do with having them assessed to plaintiffs' ancestor: Dubois v. Campau, 28 M. 304.

122. Adverse possession and its character may be shown by the claims and assertions of occupants, and if these are made in the ordinary course of possession and not during litigation, they are admissible as explanatory and for what they are worth: Jacobs v. Callaghan, 57 M. 11.

123. Adverse possession up to a boundary for fifteen years being sufficient to bar a recovery by the contiguous owner, actual knowledge of the adverse holding is not required where the circumstances are such that the contiguous owner should have known it: Bird v. Stark, 66 M. 654 (July 7, '87).

124. Possession, when taken wrongfully, should put the real owner on his guard; but when held in apparent subordination to the owner's rights, and without his knowledge that it is in opposition to them, it cannot be considered adverse: Campau v. Lafferty, 50 M. 114.

125. Where notwithstanding a deed to one person another went into exclusive possession and exercised acts of ownership, and such possession was recognized by all mesne grantees of the first, the occupant's adverse title is a question for the jury in an action of ejectment against him by one claiming under the deed: McCall v. Wells, 55 M. 171.

126. An adverse holding must formerly have been under claim of title to make void a deed given by one out of possession; but no claim of title has been necessary to perfect an adverse title under the statute of limitations: Campau v. Dubois, 39 M. 274.

127. Actual possession with a claim of ownership in fee establishes a presumptive title as against every one but those whose title is better: Loomis v. Roberts, 57 M. 284.

128. Occupation by one tenant in common, giving leases and receiving rents for more than twenty years, with the knowledge of the co-tenant, but without actual knowledge of the latter's rights, and without any claim by the co-tenant for a share of the rents and profits, constitutes adverse possession in the absence of anything to show that it is other than adverse: Dubois v. Campau, 28 M. 804.

129. Whether it is error to rule that occupation by one tenant in common, giving leases and receiving rents for more than twenty years with the knowledge of his co-tenant, without actual acknowledgment of the latter's rights, and without any claim by such co-tenant for a share of the rents and profits, will bar a recovery in ejectment by the latter, quere, two justices holding that upon such facts the inference or presumption of title is one of law, and the other two holding it to be one of fact for the jury: Ibid.

130. Where one of several heirs had taken exclusive possession of land to which all were entitled as tenants in common, and had improved it without interference from the others, though they lived in the immediate neighborhood, and no possessory action was brought by them, or by their heirs or representatives for more than twenty-five years after their death, it was held that no possession could properly be found that was not adverse and exclusive within the statutory period of limitation, and that there could be no recovery in the right of the excluded parties: Campau v. Dubois, 39 M. 274.

131. There is no statute disposing of the controversies which may arise from the exclusive possession of one tenant in common during a longer period than will otherwise bar the recovery of real property: Ibid.

132. Tenancy in common extends to the entire premises, but sole possession by any one tenant is not presumed adverse as against the rest and does not affect their rights, unless held under a claim of exclusive right whereof they have express or implied notice: Campau v. Campau, 44 M. 31; Gower v. Quinlan, 40 M. 573.

133. A claim of adverse possession by one tenant in common, as against another, must be clear and unambiguous because the mere possession in a tenant in common would be rightful and would not imply an adverse holding, and the tenant is presumed to hold in recognition of the rights of his co-tenant unless his acts and declarations are clearly inconsistent with such presumption: Campau v. Campau, 45 M. 387.

134. The lessee of one tenant in common told the son of the other, while the father was living, that he (the lessee) had more right on the premises than he (the son) had. Held, that this had no tendency to prove that the tenant in common under whom he occupied the premises held adversely to the other: Ibid.

135. A tenant in common who has entered upon a portion of the premises is not thereby precluded from claiming the whole, since he is not barred from buying the remainder of the title: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

136. A husband cannot hold adversely to his wife premises of which they are in joint occupancy as a family: Hendricks v. Rason, 53 M. 575.

3. How interrupted or arrested.

137. Adverse possession is not broken by negotiating with other claimants if there is no waiver or non-claim on the occupant's part: Chapin v. Hunt, 40 M. 595.

138. The continuity of adverse possession is broken by a decree requiring the occupant to convey the land, even if the actual possession is not disturbed. The decree has the effect of a voluntary conveyance: Gower v. Quinlan, 40 M. 572.

139. A parol lease for a single year, if accepted, is enough to break a period of adverse possession and bar the statute of limitations against actions for real estate: Campau v. Lafferty, 43 M. 429.

140. Adverse possession is not broken by deeding the land away if the grantor continues in possession and takes back a mortgage for purchase money which he afterwards forecloses, and under which he himself becomes foreclosure purchaser. And it is immaterial that the foreclosure proceedings are defective if the possession is retained: Whitford v. Crooks, 54 M. 261.

141. Tearing down the fence between one's self and one's next neighbor after asserting a right to premises enclosed by it is a mere trespass; and though perhaps a common-law entry, it does not break his adverse possession of the premises enclosed, nor of itself disseize him: Donovan v. Bissell, 53 M. 462.

142. The effect of evidence of continuous possession as the basis of a claim of title is not destroyed by proof of occasional interruptions in the actual occupancy of the premises, nor by the fact that at times they were actually occupied by persons not distinctly shown to be in under any of the parties in the claimant's chain of title; there being no proof of any adverse occupancy, or of any intention of the claimant or his grantors to abandon the possession. It is a just presumption that such persons were in, as tenants merely, under the parties claiming title: Rayner v. Lee, 20 M. 384.

143. Any presumption that the adverse character of a possession of land ceases when the holder buys the original title to a part of the premises may be overcome by evidence that the possession held continued under the claim of an exclusive right, and with the intention to exclude co-owners of the original title from any right or interest: Cook v. Clinton, 64 M. 309.

IV. COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION IN PROPER TIME.

144. A suit is not begun, for the purposes of the statute of limitations, by merely filling out a summons and leaving it in the justice's office until the return day, or by retaining it in the plaintiff's custody; it must be issued with the intent that, if practicable, it shall be served: Howell v. Shepard, 48 M. 472.

145. H. S. § 6828 provides that a plaintiff who has taken out an alias summons that has been returned not personally served "may, in further continuation of the suit, have an attachment against the defendant" on which property may be taken. Held, that this is an alternative remedy, and that instead of resorting to it the plaintiff may take out successive writs of summons for the purpose of keeping a suit alive under the statute of limitations: Ibid.

146. Where the continuity of an action is interrupted by an interval between the return day of one writ of summons and the issue of an alias writ, the institution of the action will not bar the operation of the statute of limitations: Johnson v. Mead, 58 M. 67.

147. Suit being commenced in justice's court, the plaintiff employed an attorney to appear and prosecute the suit for him on the return day. The attorney was prevented from attending to the suit on that day, and requested another to appear, who did so, but his authority being required he was not able to prove it, and the action failed. It was held that these facts did not make out a case within H. S. § 8723, allowing a new action within one year where "in any action duly commenced," etc., "the suit shall fail of a sufficient return, by any unavoidable accident, or by any neglect or default of the officer to whom it is committed, or if the writ shall be abated, or the action otherwise avoided or defeated, by the death of any party thereto, or for any matter of form; or if, after verdict for the plaintiff, the judgment shall be arrested, or if a judgment for the plaintiff shall be reversed on writ or error:" Spier v. M'Queen, 1 M. 252.

148. The erroneous dismissal by the circuit court of a regular appeal from a justice is an avoidance of the action "for matter of form," and a new suit may be brought within one year from such dismissal: Pattridge v. Lott, 15 M. 251.

149. H. S. § 8723, allowing a "new action" to be commenced within one year after abatement or reversal, etc., gives no further delay on account of plaintiff's death in the interval, but requires the personal representative, no matter when appointed or qualified, to sue in the same year: Foote v. Pfeiffer, 70 M. 581 (June 8, '88).

150. Said H. S. § 8723 applies to reversals on writs of certiorari: McOmber v. Chapman, 42 M. 117.

V. REMOVAL OF BAR BY ADMISSION OR NEW PROMISE.

151. An oral promise made since, to pay a simple contract debt barred by the statute of limitations before R. S. 1838 took effect, will not revive the cause of action, but such promise must be in writing as required by R. S. 1839, p. 578, § 13: Joy v. Thompson, 1 D. 378.

152. And such requirement does not violate the obligation of contracts: Ibid.

153. Where a new promise is set up it ought to be proved in a clear and explicit manner, either expressly or by such an unqualified acknowledgment as authorizes its implication: Ten Eyck v. Wing, 1 M. 40.

154. The acknowledgment should contain an unqualified and direct admission of a present subsisting debt, which the party is liable and willing to pay, and be unaccompanied by circumstances or declarations which repel the presumption of a promise or intention to pay: Ibid.

155. A stipulation between the parties in a chancery suit brought to restrain proceedings on an execution under a judgment, that the injunction be dissolved, the execution be set aside, and a reference be taken to state an account, etc., was held not to be such an acknowledgment of debt as to warrant the implication of a new promise: Ibid.

156. The original consideration is sufficient, if recognized, to uphold a new promise to pay a debt barred by the statute: Ibid.

157. In order to avoid suit and to gain time to procure evidence of set-off, a debtor signed this writing in her creditor's book: "I extend this book account four months from April 30, 1886." Held a sufficient acknowledgment of the debt to take it out of the operation of the statute: Crane v. Abel, 87 M. 242 (Oct. 13, '87).

158. An oral promise to pay an old debt does not renew it so as to take it out of the statute of limitations, if it is not kept open by mutual dealings: Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 M. 647.

159. Part payment of a demand, though neither a contract nor in itself a promise, is an acknowledgment of the continued existence of the demand, and waives the right to plead the statute of limitations upon such lapse of time as may have preceded the payment. And it renews from its date whatever right of action existed before: Miner v. Lorman, 56 M. 212.

160. Where payments are made on a barred claim, there need be no written promise to make further payments: Miner v. Lorman, 56 M. 490.

161. A promise to pay the balance of a barred debt cannot be implied as an inference of law from the mere fact of part payment; that fact is merely evidence of such a promise, and the inference that such a promise was made or intended must be found as a fact on the trial: Parsons v. Clark, 59 M. 414.

162. If the acknowledgment of a debt, or a partial payment of it, is accompanied by declarations or circumstances which rebut the implication of a promise to pay, or that the debtor, by the partial payment, admitted his obligation to pay the residue, the demand is not revived: Jewett v. Petit, 4 M. 508.

163. The indorsement of a partial payment upon a promissory note, written by the party to be charged thereby, is competent evidence of such payment to take the case out of the statute: Chandler v. Lawrence, 3 M. 261.

164. Although the statute requires a new promise to be in writing, the fact of payment may be proved by the admission of defendant or by other competent parol evidence: Ibid.

165. Unexplained indorsements and indorsements written by or for the payee are not sufficient proof of payment as against the debtor to take a case out of the statute of limitations: Michigan Ins. Co. v. Brown, 11 M. 265; Rogers v. Anderson, 40 M. 290.

166. A note purporting on its face to be eight years overdue had upon it two indorsements, dated within six years of the time of bringing suit upon it. The only proof offered by the plaintiff in the case was that no other payments than those indorsed had been made. Held, that this did not prove or tend to prove the indorsed payments: Snyder v. Winsor, 44 M. 140.

167. An outlawed note cannot be revived by applying upon it a payment not intended to be made on it, nor supposed to be so by the parties: Krone v. Krone, 38 M. 661.

168. A part payment by an assignee for the benefit of creditors does not operate to take a debt out of the statute of limitations: Parsons v. Clark, 59 M. 414.

169. A payment by the estate of a joint and several promisor does not prevent another promisor from taking the benefit of the statute of limitations (H. S. § 8730): Holcomb v. Sloan, 39 M. 173.

170. One joint maker of a note does not lose the benefit of the statute of limitations by reason of payments made by another: Rogers v. Anderson, 40 M. 290.

171. A payment or new promise by one of several joint debtors will not keep the obligation alive as to another who had no part or privity therein: Tate v. Stevenson, 55 M. 820.

172. A partnership note is a joint contract within the meaning of H. S. § 8730, so that a payment thereon by one partner within the period of the statute of limitations will not bind the other if the firm had previously dissolved to the payee's knowledge: Gates v. Fisk, 45 M. 522.

173. Where one partner in writing authorizes the other to make a separate composition with the firm creditors, and he does so, payments made by the latter on such composition will not keep alive the demand as to the other: Sigler v. Platt, 16 M. 206.

174. A payment made by a wife with her own means upon a note in which she is a surety for her husband, he having nothing to do with such payment, does not take the note out of the statute as to him; nor would it were she liable on the note as a joint debtor: Littlefield v. Dingwall, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

175. Where a debtor and his surety go to the creditor together for the express purpose of making a payment, and for that alone, and both apparently co-operate in the transaction, though the debtor alone handles the money, the creditor has a right to consider it a joint payment binding the surety under the statute of limitations, unless the surety notifies him that it is not so: Mainzinger v. Mohr, 41 M. 685.

VI. PERIOD OF LIMITATION IN PARTICULAR CASES.

For recovery of dower, see DOWER, §§ 79, 80.

As to limitation of time for suits between assignee in bankruptcy and adverse claimants, see BANKRUPTCY, § 43.

176. Suits against a corporation whose charter has expired must be commenced within three years after expiration: Montgomery v. Merrill, 18 M. 388.

177. A corporation formed under a general law can begin suits in its own name at any time within three years after the end of its period, and continue them to a close, unless superseded by trustees or receivers; and this though such general law is repealed (H. S. § 4867): Bewick v. Alpena Harbor Co., 39 M. 700.

178. The occupation of land by a city for market purposes is not a public easement, but a proprietary occupation, and private adverse rights will be barred by the same lapse of time as if the occupation was by a private person: Cooper v. Detroit, 42 M. 584.

179. The judgment of a court of record is good for ten years: Ward v. Citizens' Bank, 46 M. 332.

180. A justice's judgment is barred in six years by H. S. § 8713, and execution cannot thereafter issue: Jerome v. Williams, 13 M. 521.

181. A justice's judgment docketed on transcript in the circuit court is not barred in less than ten years (settling the query in Jerome v. Williams, 13 M. 521): Arnold v. Thompson, 19 M. 333.

As to period of limitation of issue of execution against stay, see EXECUTIONS, § 5.

182. An action of assumpsit is barred after six years whether brought on a sealed or an unsealed contract: Sigler v. Platt, 16 M. 206.

183. H. S. § 7778 does not compel a resort to the action of assumpsit upon a sealed instrument; debt may be brought thereon, and is not barred until ten years: Goodrich v. Leland, 18 M. 110.

184. H. S. § 7778 permits assumpsit to be brought where covenant might be maintained, but § 8713 bars any action in assumpsit after six years. Held, that it is the form, and not the cause of action, which fixes the bar, and the remedy elected is governed by the limitation appropriate to itself: Christy v. Farlin, 49 M. 319.

185. Debt on sealed lease for rent may be brought any time within ten years; the period is governed by H. S. § 8719, and is not affected by §§ 8713, 7778: Stewart v. Sprague, 71 M. 50.

186. A partner's right to an accounting is not barred in six years where the partnership articles are under seal and contain covenants. No claim under such articles would be barred in that time unless raised in an action of assumpsit: Near v. Lowe, 49 M. 482.

187. The statute of limitations, if it runs at all against a partner's right to an accounting, is barred by dealings in the shape of a showing of balances: Ibid.

As to bar of proceedings in equity for accounting, see EQUITY, §§ 601-604.

188. An action by a private person as for continuing injury in keeping a railway track in the street near his premises is subject to the six-year limitation, if defendant relies on permission given longer ago, and plaintiff seeks to show by such evidence as remains that his permission was obtained by fraud: Krueger v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 51 M. 142.

189. The ten years' limitation in the law of 1842 (S. L. p. 133) does not apply in favor of one who was in possession under some other claim at the time of obtaining his tax-title. The statute intends that the party who seeks the benefit of the limitation shall enter, or shall have entered, under his tax-deed: Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 M. 145.

190. H. S. § 8698, barring, after ten years' adverse possession, ejectment for land held under a tax-deed, applies to a claim under a tax-deed that conveys an undivided half of the premises, but does not specify which half; it is only necessary that the claim be consistent with the face of the deed; and the deed need not be good: Chamberlain v. Ahrens, 55 M. 111.

191. One who enters under tax-titles is protected by a ten years' occupancy, whatever equities there may have been to estop the original purchaser of the titles from buying them: Reilly v. Blaser, 61 M. 399.

192. A sale on execution on a judgment void for want of jurisdiction will not authorize the purchaser to claim the benefit of H. S. § 8698, requiring action to be brought within five years where title is claimed under a deed made upon a sale by an officer under judgment of a court: Millar v. Babcock, 29 M. 526. See McVickar v. Filer, 31 M. 304.

193. So, an administrator's sale void for want of jurisdiction is not protected by H. S. § 8698: Toll v. Wright, 37 M. 98.

194. Ten years' actual possession under an administrator's deed is prima facie evidence of the regularity of title, and in an action upon a covenant of warranty neutralizes the prima facie showing which a judgment in ejectment establishes against the covenantor: Mason v. Kellogg, 38 M. 132.

As to limitation of time for bringing action to attack an administrator's or a guardian's sale, see EQUITY, § 597; ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 328-331; GUARDIANSHIP, § 161.

195. Where the probate court has neglected to decree payment of debts and distribution of assets four years and a half after issuing letters of administration in accordance with H. S. §§ 5925, 5926, the right of action on the administrator's bond begins to run at that time, and in due course is barred by the statute of limitations: Biddle v. Wendell, 37 M. 452.

As to limitation of time for suing administrators or guardians and their sureties, see, also, ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, §§ 40, 254; GUARDIANSHIP, §§ 55, 56.

196. Whether the statute of limitations applies to mandamus proceedings for collection of a liquidated liability, quere. Certainly the period is not less than ten years (H. S. § 8719): Oceana v. Hart, 48 M. 319. See Merrell v. Gladwin County Treasurer, 61 M. 95.

197. Where six years have elapsed since the issue of township orders for work and labor performed, and payment was refused nearly that long ago, they cannot be enforced: Owen v. Lincoln, 41 M. 415.

VII. PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

That the defence of the statute of limitations may be taken by demurrer in chancery, see EQUITY, § 858.

198. To avoid the statute of limitations on the ground of a fraud of the defendants in concealing the cause of action, the pleading should set out the particular acts of fraud or concealment and the time when discovered: Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. (U. S.) 190.

199. A plea of the statute of limitations, that the plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue within six years next before the filing of the plaintiff's amended declaration, is bad: Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 M. 165.

200. By pleading that the cause of action did not accrue within ten years defendant waives objection to the filing of a declaration in debt where suit had been begun by summons in assumpsit: Brewer v. Boynton, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

201. The defence of the statute of limitations is available upon the trial of an appeal from the allowance of a claim against a decedent's estate, and an issue need not be framed to admit it: McGee v. McDonald, 66 M. 628 (July 7, '87).

202. A declaration cannot be amended so as to set forth a new cause of action that has become barred by the statute since the original declaration was filed: Gorman v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 27 M. 138; M. C. R. Co. v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 35 M. 227.

203. A notice under the general issue in justice's court, apprising plaintiffs that defendant relies on the statute of limitations, is sufficient; and where he pleaded non assumpsit within six years, instead of actio non accrevit, he should have been allowed the benefit of the defence, with or without amendment: Snyder v. Winsor, 44 M. 140.

204. A doctor, suing for professional services, filed a bill of particulars including a credit which, if true, made the account an open one, and barred by the statute of limitations. On a second trial he obtained leave to amend his bill by adding another credit of later date than the last debit item. Held, that leave should not have been granted, and that it was proper to exclude proof of the credit, which could not have had any effect on the statute of limitations: Hollywood v. Reed, 57 M. 234.

205. An amendment to permit the defendant to interpose the defence of the statute of limitations is in the discretion of the court, and the denial of an application for that purpose is not reviewable: Ripley v. Davis, 15 M. 75.

206. Refusing on the trial to allow defendant to interpose the statute of limitations is not error: Marx v. Hilsendegen, 46 M. 336.

207. A declaration on a residuary legatee's bond, alleging as a breach a failure to pay a claim allowed in plaintiff's favor, is amendable by adding a count alleging the failure to pay a note, which constituted the claim, even though such note is six years overdue; no new cause of action is introduced by such amendment: Abbott v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 55 M. 410.

208. Prima facie outlawry of a note does not prevent its introduction in evidence under a declaration on the common counts with copy served: Michael v. Tuttle, 37 M. 502.

209. The fact that a claim is apparently outlawed does not necessarily exclude evidence thereon; the question whether or not it is barred is one to be dealt with when the testimony is all in: Cotherman v. Cotherman, 58 M. 465.

210. Where one who has been under guardianship as a minor brings ejectment to test the validity of a sale made by his guardian, he has the burden of proving the continuance of his infancy to a date not more than five years before he began suit: Stewart v. Ashley, 34 M. 183.

211. Where the parties in ejectment, being co-tenants, rely upon an ouster, and defendant claims title by adverse possession, plaintiff has the burden of showing that he was ousted within the period of the statute of limitations, and the defendant of showing that he had ousted the adverse claimant so long before that the period of limitation had run since: Highstone v. Burdette, 54 M. 329.

LIVERY-STABLE KEEPER.

See BAILMENT, §§ 5-10, 24; DAMAGES, § 147; LIEN, § 121.

As to driving and booming, and as to the powers, rights and liabilities of companies and individuals engaged therein, see WATERS, VIII.

As to liens for labor and logs, and the enforcement thereof, see LIENS, III.

LOST GOODS.

1. At common law the finder of lost goods has a complete title as against all but the owner: Cummings v. Stone, 13 M. 70.

2. It is a question of fact and not of law whether the finder of lost property has given fair and reasonable opportunity for its identification before restoring it, and whether the claimant should have been given an opportunity to inspect it in order to decide whether it belonged to him. The jury's attention must be confined to the state of things preceding the beginning of suit: Wood v. Pierson, 45 M. 313.

3. In an action against the finder of lost property for its conversion by refusing to give it up, the fact that after suit was begun the finder learned that it really belonged to the claimant has no tendency to show that he had fair and reasonable evidence thereof before suit: Ibid.

4. A right of action against the finder of property for which a reward has been offered is not defeated by neglect to tender the reward: Ibid.

5. The finder of lost goods who has been at trouble and expense about them has no lien upon the goods for compensation, unless they were lost at sea; then he has a lien for salvage: Fitch v. Newberry, 1 D. 1, 16.

6. A finder of lost property has no lien upon it as finder after he knows to whom it belongs; but he has a lien upon it for whatever reward may be offered for its recovery: Wood v. Pierson, 45 M. 313.

7. A reward for lost property is not waived by insisting on its identification or any legal advantage connected with the finding: Ibid.

8. While plaintiff's tug-boat was towing defendant's raft in St. Clair river, the tow-line caught and raised from the river an anchor and chain, which were secured by defendant and brought upon the raft. Held, that the parties were joint finders of the property, and that the interest of the plaintiff was a sufficient consideration for the agreement of the defendant to sell it and divide the proceeds: Cummings v. Stone, 13 M. 70.

9. Under H. S. § 2068 the right to sell goods found does not accrue until a year from the finding. It not appearing that the property was found in that part of St. Clair river which lies in Michigan, such agreement for division could not be held void under our statute of frauds, as not in writing, and — because of said § 2068 — not capable of performance in one year: Ibid.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

I. WHEN THE ACTION LIES; PROBABLE CAUSE; MALICE.

II. PLEADING.

III. EVIDENCE.

IV. DAMAGES.

I. WHEN THE ACTION LIES; PROBABLE CAUSE; MALICE.

Liability of insurance company for prosecution by agent, see INSURANCE, § 360.

1. An action for malicious prosecution cannot be maintained against the complainant in a criminal proceeding who, after fully and fairly disclosing to the prosecuting officer everything within his knowledge which would tend to cause or to exclude belief in plaintiff's criminality, left him to determine on his sole responsibility whether the proceeding should be instituted, even though the case were not a proper one for prosecution: Smith v. Austin, 49 M. 286.

2. To sustain an action for malicious prosecution of a criminal proceeding there must be an acquittal, or such proceedings as determine the case in favor of the accused person without any settlement by him of the criminal charges, or any connivance on his part to obtain his discharge: Brand v. Hinchman, 68 M. 590 (March 2, '88).

3. An action for malicious prosecution lies against one who has caused the arrest of another on a criminal charge, even when the latter, after much delay, and an unsuccessful endeavor to obtain a trial, has been discharged on a nolle prosequi: Stanton v. Hart, 27 M. 539.

4. It seems that this action may be allowed whenever the particular proceeding on which it is based has come to an end so that the prisoner can be no farther pressed upon it: Ibid.

5. The action will not lie if plaintiff was convicted before a justice of the peace, but was discharged on appeal, unless the conviction was procured by fraud, perjury or subornation, or was otherwise exceptional. And if any exception is relied on the plaintiff must allege the facts which create it: Phillips v. Kalamazoo, 53 M. 33.

6. Where an accusation of felony is withdrawn and respondent is convicted of a misdemeanor included in it, but is acquitted on appeal, the conviction is not such evidence of probable cause as will defeat an action for malicious prosecution based on the charge of felony: Labar v. Crane, 49 M. 561.

7. One is properly found guilty of having instituted a malicious prosecution for larceny where his information was obtained from a discharged convict then under criminal accusation; where the source of information was not disclosed to the magistrate from whom the warrant was obtained; where the arrest was made in the night-time, defendant being present, and where the prosecution was voluntarily abandoned: Chapman v. Dunn, 56 M. 31.

8. Whether an action for a malicious prosecution, based on an illegal civil arrest, must be postponed until judgment has been rendered in the proceedings on which it is founded, quere: Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 M. 300.

9. As a general rule this action cannot be grounded on the prosecution of a malicious civil suit until such suit has terminated in favor of the defendant therein; but this rule does not apply to the suing out of a false and malicious attachment: Brand v. Hinchman, 68 M. 590 (March 2, '88).

10. Where want of jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the warrant, but only by evidence aliunde, the party arrested and prosecuted may, when acquitted, maintain an action for malicious prosecution on a showing that it was malicious, and in the absence of proof of probable cause, or that defendant acted in good faith: Sweet v. Negus, 80 M. 406.

11. The action will not lie unless defendant acted from malicious motives and without probable cause: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222; Spalding v. Lowe, 56 M. 367.

12. Good faith and honest motives, where there is not even probable cause for making a criminal complaint, are not a defence to an action for malicious prosecution: Wilson v. Bowen, 64 M. 133.

13. A justice's mistake in filling out a complaint as one for assault and battery, when the actual complaint on which the warrant was issued was for an assault only, cannot in an action for malicious prosecution prejudice the person making the complaint: Carter v. Sutherland, 53 M. 597.

14. This action cannot be maintained against the complainant in a criminal proceeding for which there was probable cause, no matter how evil or malicious his motives may have been in making complaint: Smith v. Austin, 49 M. 286.

15. The conclusion reached by a justice upon examination in a criminal proceeding as to whether there is probable cause for commitment is not final upon that question: Spalding v. Lowe, 56 M. 387.

16. The existence of probable cause for an alleged malicious prosecution depends on the state of facts found by the jury under proper instructions as to the rule of law to be applied according as they find one state of facts or another: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

17. "Probable cause" for prosecution depends on the circumstances of the case, and exists where the generality of business men of ordinary care, prudence and discretion would prosecute under the same conditions: Ibid.; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 M. 590 (March 2, '88).

18. The true inquiry upon the subject of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution is, not what the actual facts were as to plaintiff's guilt or innocence, but what defendant had reason to believe and did believe they were: Galloway v. Burr, 32 M. 332.

19. Facts which came to the knowledge of defendant's counsel while investigating the alleged offence, and which were communicated to them before they caused plaintiff's arrest, may be given in evidence on the question of probable cause: Ibid.

20. The mere belief of a person making a criminal complaint, that it is true, does not alone justify a prosecution thereunder; it must rest on reasonable grounds and on such facts as would lead a person of ordinary caution to honestly suspect the accused of guilt: Spalding v. Lowe, 56 M. 387; Wilson v. Bowen, 64 M. 183.

21. Probable cause cannot rest on mere conjecture, nor on an unreasonable interpretation of appearances, especially if the accuser knew of facts that would have explained them, or knew that they were contrived by conspiracy, or other corrupt means, to give a colorable basis for prosecution, or to entrap the accused into admitting guilt of other offences: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

22. Want of probable cause can never be inferred from malice: Ibid.

23. The burden of proving the want of probable cause is on the plaintiff: Ibid.

24. Malice, in cases of malicious prosecution, may lie only in its being wilful, wanton or reckless, or against the accuser's sense of duty, and for ends that he is bound to know are wrong and against public policy: Ibid.; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 M. 590.

25. Malice may be inferred from the want of probable cause: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222; Carson v. Edgeworth, 43 M. 241; Brand v. Hinchman, 68 M. 590.

26. Malice may be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

27. Malice is not implied from an unfounded prosecution: Carson v. Edgeworth, 43 M. 241.

28. The question of malice in an action for malicious prosecution is for the jury alone: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

29. The institution of a criminal prosecution for the recovery of a private claim is strong, if not conclusive, evidence of malice: Galloway v. Burr, 32 M. 332.

30. An unfounded prosecution cannot be justified, or the prosecutor's malice disproved, by evidence of offences committed by the plaintiff other than those for which he was prosecuted by the defendant: Carson v. Edgeworth, 43 M. 241.

31. On the question of whether a prosecution for an assault was malicious it is proper to make allowance for the prosecutor's state of excitement: Carter v. Sutherland, 52 M. 597.

32. When one resorts to the best means in his power for information before instituting legal proceedings against another it will be such a proof of honesty as would disprove malice and operate as a defence in proportion to his diligence: Stanton v. Hart, 27 M. 539.

33. To sustain the good faith of a complaint for obtaining goods under false pretences the plaintiff need not have actual personal knowledge of the facts, but may rely on such statements, received through the usual channels, as a business man of ordinary prudence would act upon, if he honestly believed them to be true: Galloway v. Burr, 32 M. 332.

34. The advice of one who is not a qualified lawyer is not of itself an answer to a charge of malicious prosecution: Stanton v. Hart, 27 M. 539.

35. The advice of counsel is no protection if defendant's motive was malicious: Galloway v. Burr, 32 M. 332.

36. Where an attorney and client conspire to institute a malicious prosecution the latter cannot justify himself by the other's advice: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

II. PLEADING.

37. Where a declaration charging malicious prosecution averred that the plaintiff had been "acquitted and discharged," but also showed facts indicating that there had been a discontinuance instead, and not a trial and acquittal, it was not held such a variance as to invalidate the declaration, the context showing that the words did not refer to an acquittal on a trial: Stanton v. Hart, 27 M. 539.

38. A declaration for malicious prosecution is defective if it does not aver the termination of the suit in the last court to which it was carried. But the defect is formal, and would be cured by a verdict for plaintiff on the merits: Sutton v. Van Akin, 51 M. 463.

39. An action for malicious prosecution is now an action on the case; and as matter of pleading a charge of conspiracy in the declaration is mere surplusage and is only matter of aggravation; conspiracy could be proved even if not charged: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 223.

40. A count stating that defendant maliciously and falsely, without probable cause, "charged the said plaintiff with having committed a certain offence punishable by law, to wit, uttering and publishing as true a certain false, forged and counterfeit promissory note for the payment of money, knowing said note to be false, forged and counterfeited, with the intent to defraud and injure as aforesaid," and that defendant maliciously, and without reasonable or probable cause, and without investigation or inquiry, caused plaintiff to be arrested and imprisoned for thirteen days, at the expiration of which time he "was duly discharged and fully acquitted," etc., is a charge of malicious prosecution, not of illegal arrest and false imprisonment: Haskins v. Ralston, 69 M. 63 (March 2, '88).

III. EVIDENCE.

41. In an action for malicious prosecution for a specific offence, the plaintiff may, if he chooses, show that he did not commit it, although he need show no more than that there was no probable cause for the proceeding against him: Patterson v. Garlock, 39 M. 447.

42. In an action for malicious prosecution for a specific theft it is not admissible to show that plaintiff had committed a different theft: Ibid.

43. In an action for malicious prosecution it is admissible as bearing upon the question of malice and probable cause to show the anterior personal relations of the parties, and that the defendant had said he was not personally cognizant of the matters on which he had based the prosecution: Ibid.

44. In an action for malicious prosecution, conversations between defendant and the prosecuting attorney concerning plaintiff's prior acts for which she had been arrested at defendant's instance upon a charge like that involved in the present suit, and a magistrate's record of proceedings had before him three years before upon such charge, do not bear upon the questions of probable cause or malice, and are inadmissible in evidence: Wilson v. Bowen, 64 M. 133.

45. In an action against a principal for malicious prosecution, its agent was examined for the plaintiff and was asked if he had received a letter and telegram from his superior to go to a certain place and look after defendant's claim. Held error to exclude on cross-examination the question whether the telegram directed him to go and be a witness in the proceeding against the plaintiff: Turner v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 55 M. 237.

46. Defendant in an action for malicious prosecution may testify whether, when he made the complaint upon which proceedings were instituted against the plaintiff, he believed it to be true. Such belief, however, is a question for the jury, and defendant's testimony has no more weight than that of any other witness: Spalding v. Lowe, 56 M. 367.

47. Evidence of what third persons had told the witness plaintiff had said to them about his purposes is hearsay, and in an action for malicious prosecution it is inadmissible, on the part of the defence, to excuse the arrest of the plaintiff: Labar v. Crane, 56 M. 535.

48. One who sued for malicious prosecution showed that defendant had called him meddlesome and troublesome. Defendant's offer to justify the epithets by showing that plaintiff was reputed to be quarrelsome, meddlesome and vindictive was properly overruled, since the epithets were important only as showing his own feelings: Ibid.

49. Advising persons not to become sureties for one who has been arrested does not tend to show that those who give such advice have conspired with the person who caused the arrest, and are therefore liable with him to an action for malicious prosecution. Nor does their enmity toward the person arrested, nor their wish to drive him out of town: Labar v. Batt, 56 M. 539.

IV. DAMAGES.

50. The plaintiff is entitled to recover, not merely nominal damages, but such damages as he has actually suffered from the unwarranted arrest and imprisonment: Tefft v. Windsor, 17 M. 486.

51. Damages for malicious prosecution may embrace the plaintiff's expense in protecting himself, his loss of time, deprivation of liberty and the society of his family, the injury to his fame and his personal mortification: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

52. Plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution showed by way of damages that his arrest had prevented his accepting the invitation of his son, who was employed upon a certain railroad, to go to a specified place and take a situation on the road. This invitation was contained in a letter, and it did not appear that the son had any authority to promise the situation, so that the letter itself did not tend to show that he could get employment. But as he changed his course of action and suffered inconvenience because of the letter, it was not improper to admit the letter as bearing on the circumstances: Labar v. Crane, 56 M. 585.

I. NATURE OF THE WRIT; JURISDICTION.

1. The history and nature of the writ of mandamus examined and expounded: McBride v. Grand Rapids, 33 M. 860.

2. Where a mandamus issues to direct the action of a legal tribunal, proceeding in the course of justice, it is an exercise of supervisory judicial control, and is in the exercise of appellate action. In other cases it is generally, if not always, in the nature of original action: Barrett v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

3. Mandamus to a township board is not an appellate proceeding wherein the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain refusal to approve sureties in a liquor bond can be reviewed: Post v. Sparta, 64 M. 597.

4. Mandamus is a prerogative writ designed to afford a summary and specific remedy where the party applying for it would otherwise be subjected to serious injustice: Tawas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 M. 479.

5. The remedy by mandamus is not adapted to cases calling for continuous action, varying according to circumstances: Diamond Match Co v. Powers, 51 M. 145.

6. The supreme court has plenary jurisdiction in mandamus: Tawas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 M. 479; Hosier v. Higgins Township Board, 45 M. 340.

7. The writ cannot be issued by the circuit court except when necessary to execute the power of supervisory control over inferior tribunals, and when actually required to affect the ends of jurisdiction in cases brought under cognizance by other means: McBride v. Grand Rapids, 33 M. 860.

II. WHEN GRANTED OR DENIED.

(a) General principles.

8. If a statute imposes a special duty, either in terms or by fair and reasonable implication, and there is no other specific remedy, mandamus may be awarded to compel performance of the duty: People v. State Insurance Co., 19 M. 392.

9. The writ, though a prerogative one, is demandable of right in a proper case, yet it is only to be granted in the exercise of a sound legal discretion: People v. Regents, 4 M. 98.

10. Mandamus is usually a discretionary writ, and is properly denied where its exercise is asked in a matter of policy rather than of right, and where there is no danger of evils serious enough to demand interference: East Saginaw Water Commissioners v. East Saginaw, 33 M. 164.

11. Mandamus is not a writ of right, and is not usually allowed to those who have been culpably dilatory or otherwise at fault: Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 81.

12. The court in its discretion may refuse the writ altogether unless the party seeking it consents to do equity: Auditor-General v. Saginaw Supervisors, 62 M. 579.

13. Mandamus will be allowed only in furtherance of justice upon a proper case presented. It will not be allowed where it is apparent that it is applied for to gratify the spite of a private individual, or where the relator has instigated, authorized or approved the act complained of: Hale v. Risley, 69 M. 596 (April 24, '88).

14. Mandamus issues only to compel the recognition of a clear legal right or the performance of a legal duty; it does not issue so long as the right or the duty is disputed or doubtful: People v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 302; People v. Branch Circuit Judges, 1 D. 319; People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 19 M. 296; Pack v. Presque Isle Supervisors, 36 M. 377; Peck v. Kent Supervisors, 47 M. 477; Post v. Sparta, 63 M. 323.

15. Mandamus, not injunction, is the proper remedy where nothing remains but the enforcement of a legal duty on a public officer's part: Webster v. Newell, 66 M. 503 (June 23, '87).

16. Mandamus is not granted where relator has any other adequate legal remedy: People v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 302; People v. Branch Circuit Judges, 1 D. 319; People v. Wayne County Judge, 1 M. 359; People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 19 M. 296; Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 M. 487.

17. Mandamus will not be awarded in cases where another remedy is provided by law: People v. Washtenaw Circuit Judges, 1 D. 434.

18. Mandamus is the proper remedy for enforcing a specific legal right for which there is no other adequate legal remedy, and it is not excluded by other legal remedies which are not adequate to secure the specific relief needed, nor by the existence of a specific remedy in equity: La Grange v. State Treasurer, 24 M. 468.

19. Mandamus may issue where other remedies exist, if they are not sufficiently speedy to prevent material injury: Tuwas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 M. 479.

20. Though the writ is generally used to enforce the performance of public rights and duties, it may also be resorted to for the enforcement of private rights, when withheld by public officers: People v. Macomb Supervisors, 3 M. 475.

21. Mandamus lies only to enforce strict legal rights, and will not be granted to enforce the doing of an act which by law lies in the discretion of the officer refusing to do it: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 36 M. 271.

22. The writ is granted to compel the performance of a ministerial act, but not to inquire into the proper exercise of judicial discretion: People v. Auditor-General, 3 M. 427.

23. Mandamus does not lie to enforce a contract; as where the relator is a bank, seeking to compel the respondent, an officer of a public board, to deposit with it, as required by law, funds to the custody of which it is entitled under a bid made therefor to the board:

Port Huron Board of Education v. City Treasurer, 57 M. 46.

24. Mandamus is not the proper proceeding to try the title to a public office: People v. Detroit Common Council, 18 M. 338; Mead v. Ingham County Treasurer, 36 M. 416; Moiles v. Watson, 60 M. 415; Tallmadge School District v. Root, 61 M. 373; Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323 (Jan. 26, '88).

25. Or to try the question of corporate existence: Chapman v. State Land Office Commissioner, 26 M. 146.

26. Or to determine the boundaries of the franchises of two municipal boards, claiming the same power of appointment: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323 (Jan. 26, '88).

27. Remedy by mandamus is not precluded by the fact that the respondent may be liable as for a misdemeanor in wilfully neglecting his duty; a criminal prosecution will not secure its performance, and specific compliance can be enforced only by mandamus: Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 M. 422.

28. The writ being discretionary, the plea of the statute of limitations was entertained and the writ refused, where the answer showed that the claim (upon a contingent county order) was fraudulent, and relator did not ask for the trial of an issue: Merrill v. Gladwin County Treasurer, 61 M. 95.

29. Though, where the statute is interposed to prevent the payment of a just claim, the court may refuse to permit the plea to interfere with issuing the writ when the period has been less than ten years: Ibid.; Oceana v. Hart, 48 M. 819.

(b) To courts and judicial officers.

30. A mandamus is allowed only to set the inferior jurisdiction in motion; but not for the purpose of requiring it to come to any particular conclusion, or of retracing its steps where it has already acted; and this notwithstanding the party has no other remedy: People v. Wayne County Judge, 1 M. 359.

31. Mandamus will not lie to review irregularities in the judicial action of an inferior court; error is the proper remedy: Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 32 M. 190.

32. The decision of an inferior court acting judicially upon questions of fact, or of law, if the latter are properly before it for judicial determination, cannot, however erroneous, be reviewed by mandamus; but where the case does not, on facts or evidence, legitimately raise the question of law or fact decided, so that the court could act judicially upon it, its action is not properly judicial, and no assumed determination of the question, or order resting on it, will preclude the remedy by mandamus if the case is suited thereto in other respects: Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 M. 487.

33. Mandamus never lies to review irregularities in the judicial action of an inferior tribunal where the party injured has another adequate remedy: O'Brien v. Tallman, 36 M. 13.

34. Mandamus is a proper process for setting a court in motion, but not for reviewing its affirmative judicial action, if there is any other effectual remedy: Lloyd v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 56 M. 236.

35. Mandamus does not lie where the remedy sought is the revision of a final judgment on matters of record, and where everything necessary to a determination may be returned on writ of error: Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 M. 85.

36. A mandamus will not be issued to compel a circuit judge to make an order, when such order is not necessary to perfect the right of the party applying for the writ: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 14 M. 33.

37. Mandamus does not lie to vacate an order that was not erroneous when made, whatever has taken place since: Castor v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 54 M. 318.

38. Mandamus does not lie to review the exercise of judicial discretion: People v. Monroe Probate Judge, 16 M. 204; People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 20 M. 220; Evans v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 39 M. 123; Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 31.

39. Mandamus to a circuit judge is denied where the record fails to show upon what papers or showing respondent based the action which it is sought to review: Jones v. Kent Circuit Judge, 34 M. 373; McCarthy v. Monroe Circuit Judge, 36 M. 274.

40. A mandamus from the state supreme court to compel an inferior state court to remove a cause to the United States circuit court upon the application of a defendant who is a citizen of another state is not the appropriate writ for that purpose; and whether it has any jurisdiction to interfere in such cases, quere: Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 21 M. 577.

41. Where a cause has been regularly removed, and the court from which it has been transferred assumes to treat it as still within its jurisdiction, and vacates the order of removal, mandamus lies to compel it to vacate the latter order: Rankin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 29 M. 115.

42. Mandamus to set aside an order of removal to a federal court was denied without looking into the merits where the record did not show that any application had been made to the respondent to vacate the order: Le Roux v. Bay Circuit Judge, 45 M. 416.

43. A motion for an order to show cause why a case should not be transferred was denied where the circuit judge, in the exercise of his statutory power, had passed upon certain disputed facts: Passmore v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 54 M. 237.

44. Where, in a proceeding to compel a return to an alleged appeal from a justice's judgment, the circuit judge has determined that the justice has waived payment of the fee for making return, this decision is conclusive and cannot be reversed on mandamus or certiorari, if any facts stated by the justice tend to establish it; otherwise it seems that the court's order compelling a return may be vacated by mandamus; and as an appellee who has recovered judgment before the justice has a right to have a pretended appeal dismissed for non-performance of any statutory conditions precedent to the perfection of the appeal, he has interest enough in the question of the payment of the fee to entitle him to a review by mandamus of the circuit judge's decision. Mandamus is the only proper remedy: Wiley v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 29 M. 487.

45. Mandamus is the proper remedy to correct an order of the circuit that dismisses an appeal from a justice on the ground that the latter's decision was not a judgment, and therefore not appealable; a return to a writ of error would not regularly disclose all the proceedings on the motion to dismiss or the grounds of the dismissal: Comstock v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 30 M. 98.

46. Mandamus is the proper remedy where an appeal has been improperly dismissed for defects in the bond and affidavit: Detroit & B. P. R. Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 M. 303.

47. Mandamus is not the proper remedy to correct the action of the circuit court in allowing a new affidavit to be filed in an attachment case in the place of a void original: People v. Branch Circuit Judges, 1 D. 319.

48. Mandamus will not be granted to review the refusal of a circuit court to rescind an order holding a party to bail, where bail was properly demandable; a fortiori where special bail had been perfected: Cohn v. Superior Court Judge, 40 M. 169.

49. Mandamus lies to vacate the service of a civil capias wrongfully issued: Baldwin v. Branch Circuit Judge, 48 M. 525.

50. Mandamus lies to set aside the service of a summons if made upon one who at the time is outside of the jurisdiction in which he lives, and is there for the sole purpose of attending as a necessary witness in other cases: Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 M. 541.

51. Mandamus was granted to vacate a default entered upon a plea in abatement filed by unauthorized attorneys and to strike the plea from the files: Arno v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 M. 362.

52. Mandamus is the proper remedy of the party seeking the reversal of a decision of the circuit court on a motion to strike a declaration from the files in a common-law action. The motion and decision would constitute no part of the common-law record, and exceptions could not be alleged to the decision: People v. Washtenaw Circuit Judges, 1 D. 434.

53. Whether mandamus will lie to get rid of an amendment to a declaration whereby a new and distinct cause of action is introduced and the identity of the cause of action for which the suit was originally instituted is destroyed, quere: Powers v. Kent Circuit Judge, 30 M. 387.

54. Mandamus is the only adequate remedy to vacate an interlocutory order not touching the merits—as here, an order quashing an attachment because founded on an insufficient affidavit, where such affidavit was in fact sufficient: Müller v. Bay Circuit Judge, 41 M. 326.

55. Mandamus lies to vacate interlocutory orders requiring a garnishee to surrender to a receiver certain notes left with him for collection by one of the principal defendants, and to pay the receiver all sums actually collected thereon, where the garnishee's disclosure does not show that the notes actually belonged to the defendants or either of them: Townsend v. Cass Circuit Judge, 39 M. 407.

56. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a circuit judge to set aside his action appointing himself referee in a cause pending before him: Woodin v. Phoenix, 41 M. 655.

57. An order to stay waste is discretionary and will not be compelled by mandamus: Parks v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 38 M. 244.

58. Mandamus lies to vacate an order of discovery compelling the production and deposit of a party's business books if not properly granted: Cummer v. Kent Circuit Judge, 38 M. 351.

59. Mandamus does not lie to review the setting aside of a reference on cause shown: Taylor v. Osceola Circuit Judge, 30 M. 99.

60. Mandamus lies to compel the circuit court to vacate its action setting aside a referee's report as against the weight of evidence and ordering a new trial: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 M. 483.

61. Mandamus, it seems, is the most appropriate, if not the only, remedy to review a discontinuance allowed before trial: Yawkey v. Richardson, 9 M. 529, 532.

62. Mandamus is the proper remedy to review the question of the validity of a notice of trial: Worth v. Hand, 30 M. 264.

63. Mandamus lies to compel the hearing of a motion for continuance made by parties who have filed no affidavit of merits to prevent inquest: Begole v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 32 M. 61.

64. Mandamus does not lie to enforce a disputed stipulation to settle a case, even though money has been paid thereunder. The parties to the stipulation are entitled to have the fact as to the settlement tried on a regular issue before a jury: Leavitt v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 52 M. 595.

65. The discretionary power to grant a new trial in the circuit court is not reviewable on mandamus: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 20 M. 220; Stork v. Sup' Court Judge, 41 M. 5.

66. Where the affidavit on a motion for a new trial contains something upon which the circuit judge is called upon to exercise his judgment, it becomes a matter addressed to his discretion, and this court has no authority to issue a mandamus to direct him to rescind his order: People v. Branch Circuit Judge, 17 M. 67.

67. Mandamus lies to compel a circuit judge to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial because of the jury's communicating and drinking with others after being sent out to consider their verdict: Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 M. 536.

68. The granting or refusing a new trial upon the ground of the jury's misconduct rests in the discretion of the trial judge, and if that discretion is abused mandamus is the proper remedy: Gray v. Barton, 62 M. 186.

69. Mandamus to vacate an order for a new trial in ejectment for want of notice to the opposite party was denied in the court's discretion: Dennison v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 37 M. 281.

70. Where a circuit judge set aside a judgment and ordered a new trial on the ground of having discovered, as he supposed, that he had an interest in the case, mandamus to vacate his order was refused: Alderman v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 41 M. 550.

71. Mandamus to set aside a nonsuit was granted in a case involving peculiar circumstances, and where court below had refused, on reasons relating rather to the public convenience than to the mutual rights of the parties, to open the cause: Lindsay v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 68 M. 735.

72. Mandamus does not lie to review the opening, for alleged errors, of a judgment by default in the circuit court: Evans v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 39 M. 123.

73. An order for costs on opening a default is discretionary, and an order to show cause why it should not be vacated will not be granted: Miller v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 39 M. 375.

74. Mandamus does not lie to review the discretion of a court in refusing to re-open a judgment that an affidavit of non-execution may be supplied: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Genesee Circuit Judge, 40 M. 168.

75. Where it is evident that an order setting aside a judgment would not have been granted but for a stipulation between the parties, the conditions of which have not been complied with, the order cannot be sustained as an exercise of discretion, and mandamus will lie to vacate it: Roche v. Branch Circuit Judge, 26 M. 870.

76. Mandamus will not be granted to compel the circuit court to set aside defective proceedings, when the defects are such as may be obviated by amendment in that court: People v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

77. Mandamus lies to compel a circuit judge to set aside a judgment irregularly rendered — e. g., without notice of trial — if he refuses to do so: People v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

78. Mandamus lies, upon a seasonable application, to compel correction of an erroneous journal entry of judgment: Frederick v. Me costa Circuit Judge, 52 M. 529.

79. Mandamus to compel the amendment of a judgment for the defendant in replevin so as to require return of the property was denied where the application was not made until several terms of the court after execution had been satisfied, nor until a new judge was elected: Gray v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 49 M. 628.

80. An execution on the judgment in a cause appealed from before a justice was antedated, and a motion to require the sheriff to return it for correction was denied. Mandamus to compel the circuit judge to grant the motion was denied, as in any proceeding against the sureties on the appeal bond the facts could be shown: Jennings v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 44 M. 99.

81. Mandamus will not lie to compel a circuit judge to overrule his finding that the proceedings taken for the condemnation of a site for a school-house were irregular, and to compel him to enter judgment for the amount found due: Delhi School District v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 49 M. 432.

82. Mandamus to compel a circuit court to grant relator's motion for a resale upon execution will not issue unless the case made on the motion at the circuit was such as to show a plain legal right: McCarty v. Monroe Circuit Judge, 36 M. 274.

83. Mandamus to vacate an order setting aside an execution sale after the time for redemption had expired was denied in the discretion of the court: Stinton v. Kent Circuit Judge, 37 M. 286; Wilkie v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 52 M. 641.

84. Mandamus lies to compel the settlement of exceptions properly presented after a trial by the court alone: People v. Littlejohn, 11 M. 60.

85. Mandamus to compel the settlement and signing of a bill of exceptions was granted where the relator had done all in his power to comply with the orders made for its settlement, and had completed and furnished it in due time: De Moss v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 41 M. 725.

86. Mandamus will not be granted to require a circuit judge to sign a bill of exceptions in proceedings held before him on habeas corpus: Faust v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 30 M. 266.

87. Nor will it be granted to compel the adoption of a bill of exceptions tendered for settlement by the party taking the exceptions, if the bill adopted was not essentially defective: Harbaugh v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 33 M. 259.

88. Mandamus to compel amendment of bill of exceptions was denied where one term had passed and assignments of error had been filed by relator: Fowler v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 31 M. 72.

89. Mandamus to compel allowance of filing of exceptions to special findings was denied where motion for leave had been delayed a long time: Eggleston v. Kent Circuit Judge, 50 M. 147.

90. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the circuit judge to incorporate in a bill of exceptions the evidence bearing on a point which the judge has charged there was no evidence tending to prove: Crane v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 24 M. 518.

91. Mandamus lies to compel the amendment by the circuit court of records sent up on error: Scribner v. Gay, 5 M. 511.

92. Stay of proceedings will not be compelled by mandamus for a mere irregularity in procedure: Culver v. Superior Court Judge, 57 M. 25.

93. Where a court below has denied a motion founded on affidavits to stay proceedings on a judgment on the ground that it has been compromised and paid, and the compromise and payment are denied by the plaintiff, the supreme court will not grant a mandamus to stay proceedings: Parker v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 24 M. 408.

94. Mandamus to compel a circuit judge to stay proceedings for the collection of a judgment was denied where it appeared that he had refused the stay on the ground that the judgment had been assigned before the commencement of the proceedings in garnishment, was subject to a lien for attorney's fees, and was not garnishable at law: Gunzberg v. Kent Circuit Judge, 42 M. 591.

95. Mandamus does not lie to review the discretion of a circuit judge in refusing a motion to allow one judgment to be set off against another: Wells v. St. Joseph Circuit Judge, 39 M. 21.

96. Mandamus does not lie to set aside an irregular plea in chancery: Hunt v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 41 M. 5.

97. Mandamus lies to compel a circuit judge to proceed to the hearing of a chancery cause in open court where such hearing has been regularly claimed, unless an order has been made upon good cause shown directing it to be proceeded in otherwise: Stebbins v. Barry Circuit Judge, 27 M. 170.

98. On a bill in chancery to avoid deeds obtained by defendant railroad company for a right of way, the court decreed that the deeds were void, but, as defendant had entered upon the land in good faith believing it had title, ordered that defendant should be enjoined from going on the premises or continuing its work unless it should deposit with the register a sum sufficient to cover any prospective award of damages to be made in condemnation proceedings to be begun within twenty days, and that in case of failure to make such deposit or to take such proceedings within the time, the case should be heard on four days' notice. On failure to agree as to the amount to be deposited, a reference was had, defendant examined witnesses, and at its motion the court fixed the sum. Complainant then applied for a mandamus requiring the court to vacate all its orders except the finding that the deeds were void, and directing it to proceed to final decree. Held, that a motion below by complainant for final decree was an essential prerequisite to the application here, and further that this court would not, before final decree, enter upon an investigation of the merits: Chesebro v. Montgomery, 70 M. 650 (June 20, '88).

99. Mandamus will not lie to compel a court to proceed with a trial that has been enjoined: Ives v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 40 M. 63.

100. Mandamus will not lie, whether an appeal does or not, to review an order for the appointment of a receiver for an assigned estate: Scott v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 58 M. 312.

101. Mandamus lies to vacate a void order appointing a receiver to manage a corporate business, and granting an interlocutory injunction depriving directors of control: Port Huron & G. R. Co. v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 81 M. 456.

102. Mandamus lies to vacate an illegal injunction where the party affected thereby would otherwise have to submit to serious injury, or to the risk of proceedings for contempt in disregarding it: Tawas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 M. 479; Scott v. Chambers, 63 M. 532.

103. Mandamus lies to vacate an injunction where the bill upon which it was granted was devoid of substance, and could not, therefore, support the application for the writ: Van Norman v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 45 M. 204.

104. Mandamus lies to vacate an order made in one court restraining competent proceedings in another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction: Maclean v. Speed, 52 M. 258.

105. A mandamus to disturb action by a circuit judge in equity — e. g., to compel the dissolution of an injunction — can issue only upon some exigency that requires prompt action to prevent mischief: Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. Newton, 61 M. 33.

106. Mandamus lies to vacate the setting aside, on mere motion, of a decree in chancery: York v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 57 M. 421.

107. Mandamus is not the proper remedy to procure a sufficient appeal bond: Pulte v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 47 M. 646.

108. A mandamus to compel a circuit judge to imprison, for contempt for refusal to answer questions, a complainant in a suit in equity pending in another state, who had been summoned before the judge as a witness under H. S. § 7455, was denied, on the ground that the court in which the suit was pending had power to compel the party to make any proper disclosure by refusing to allow him to proceed until he should do so: Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jennison, 60 M. 232.

109. Mandamus lies to review the quashing of an indictment and to compel the trial of a criminal cause: People v. Swift, 59 M. 529.

110. Mandamus lies to compel a circuit judge to consider a coroner's account for fees and expenses incident to an inquest upon the view of the dead body of a stranger, and, if satisfied that the account is correct, to indorse his order of allowance thereon: Locke v. Speed, 62 M. 408.

111. Mandamus will not lie to compel a judge of probate to extend the time for proving claims: People v. Monroe Probate Judge, 16 M. 204.

112. Mandamus lies to enforce a creditor's right to a hearing of his claim against an intestate's estate where the estate is not closed: Hart v. Shiawassee Circuit Judge, 56 M. 592.

118. Mandamus will not lie to review the refusal of a probate court to grant letters of administration on an intestate's estate: Campan v. St. Joseph Probate Judge, 36 M. 500.

114. Mandamus will not lie to compel a circuit judge to reinstate an appeal on behalf of one claiming to be purchaser at a probate sale, who does not show that he has tendered payment and performance so as to entitle himself to the rights of a purchaser: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 19 M. 296.

115. Mandamus lies to require a circuit judge to hear an appeal by executors from an order of the probate court disallowing a will: Cheever v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 45 M. 6.

116. Mandamus to compel the probate court to set aside an award of damages in a railroad condemnation proceeding which had been paid under protest was denied where the land had been actually appropriated: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Probate Judge, 58 M. 217.

117. Mandamus lies to compel a justice of the peace to assess defendant's damages after judgment of discontinuance against plaintiff in replevin where return is waived: People v. Tripp, 15 M. 518.

118. Or to compel a justice who has dismissed a writ of replevin to receive evidence of the value of the property if return is waived: La Barr v. Osborn, 38 M. 313.

119. Where a justice refused to enter and render judgment upon a verdict on the ground that it was insufficient, whereas, although not formal, it sufficiently indicated for which party the jury found the issue, a mandamus issued to compel him to do so: Lamberton v. Foote, 1 D. 102.

120. While mandamus may issue to compel a justice, if he refuses, to proceed and enter up a judgment in a case proper for a judgment, it will not lie to compel him to vacate or change a judgment he has already rendered, and which is subject to be reviewed by certiorari or on appeal: O'Brien v. Tallman, 36 M. 13.

121. Mandamus lies to compel a circuit court commissioner to proceed on an order of reference tendered to him for execution in a foreclosure case: Warner v. Randall, 37 M. 473.

122. Or to compel him to tax costs in proceedings under the fraudulent debtor act, and to issue execution for collection thereof: Watson v. Randall, 44 M. 514.

123. Mandamus lies to compel the commissioners on an estate to return evidence into the probate court where the law requires it: Buchoz v. Fray, 37 M. 512.

(c) To state officers and boards.

124. Mandamus cannot issue to the governor; and his voluntary appearance and professed willingness to abide by the decision of the court, though questioning its jurisdiction, will not give jurisdiction to issue a mandamus to him: Sutherland v. Governor, 29 M. 320.

125. The performance of the duty imposed upon the governor by the acts of congress making a land grant for the construction of the Portage Lake & Lake Superior Ship Canal, and by the state legislation on the subject, to issue, when satisfied that the work has been done according to law, his certificate of the fact, cannot be enforced by mandamus: Ibid.

126. Mandamus does not lie to review the exercise of political and executive functions when they are not ministerial and would require the court to act outside of judicial authority: Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 M. 422.

127. The action of the head of an executive department of the state is not judicial and therefore not subject to direct proceedings for review: Ambler v. Auditor-General, 38 M. 743.

128. Executive discretion cannot be judicially reviewed; and where the action of any officer to whom the state confides the auditing of claims against it is anything but ministerial, it cannot be reviewed: Ibid.

129. It would require a very clear case of practical acquiescence to authorize the court to compel the head of a bureau of the government to follow precedents which he does not himself regard as binding, unless they are at least so harmonious with the language of the law as to create no repugnance to it: Employers' Limited Liability Co. v. State Insurance Commissioner, 64 M. 614.

130. No mandamus can issue to a state officer to compel him to perform any but some unquestionable and legally defined duty. Thus, the writ will not be granted to compel the state treasurer to pay a balance claimed to be due on bills of the Government Stock Bank, there being no adjudication that the amount claimed is due from the state: Bresler v. Butler, 60 M. 40.

131. Mandamus lies to compel the state treasurer to deliver up to the makers for cancellation municipal aid bonds deposited with him under an unconstitutional statute: Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499; La Grange v. State Treasurer, 24 M. 468.

132. Mandamus to the secretary of state will not lie to compel him to issue patents to state lands; that is the duty of the governor: Crane v. Secretary of State, 51 M. 195.

133. Whether mandamus lies to interfere with the action of the auditor-general on matters of a purely public and executive nature, where it is not purely mechanical, but involves the exercise of mixed functions, quere: Ambler v. Auditor-General, 38 M. 746.

134. Mandamus does not lie to compel the auditor-general to pay over to a county moneys which have been withheld from it in the annual settlements, under a mutual mistake of law and by authority of C. L. 1871, § 1090, by which the counties were charged with deficiencies on resales of state tax bids: Ibid.

135. Mandamus was not granted to compel the auditor-general to accept delinquent tax-lists after July 1 (the day on which he is required by statute to list and advertise the lands for sale), and to credit the counties with the amount thereon: Houghton County v. Auditor-General, 36 M. 271.

136. Mandamus will not lie, since act 142 of 1887, to compel the auditor-general to issue a warrant for the payment to a county of the money collected under act 222 of 1885, to pay the interest money due under H. S. § 5394 on sales of swamp lands: Sanilac County v. Auditor-General, 68 M. 659 (March 2, '88).

137. The court would not, on motion for mandamus, inquire into the exercise of the power—judicial in its nature—conferred upon the auditor-general by the act of 1843 (S. L. p. 81), authorizing him in certain cases to forbear to sell or to withhold a conveyance of lands sold for taxes: People v. Auditor-General, 3 M. 427.

138. Mandamus will not lie in behalf of a county to compel the auditor-general to pay over to the county treasurer the taxes assessed for township, school and highway purposes in the relator's townships; such proceeding being in effect a suit against the state: Ottawa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 69 M. 1 (March 2, '88).

139. Where money has gone into the state treasury as part of a general balance rightfully received, and not as a separate and independent item wrongfully received, mandamus will not lie to require its repayment, nor can any suit be maintained for it unless voluntarily allowed within the authority of some proper officer: Ambler v. Aud. Gen., 38 M. 746.

140. Mandamus denied to review the discretion of the attorney-general in refusing to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto against a corporation: Yates v. Attorney-General, 41 M. 728.

141. Whether the writ would, under any circumstances, be issued to compel him to file an information against his own judgment, quere: Coon v. Attorney-General, 42 M. 65.

142. Mandamus was granted to compel the commissioner of the state land office to issue certificates of purchase pursuant to application and tender: People v. Pritchard, 17 M. 888.

143. Or to compel him to issue patents to a county for selections of swamp lands appropriated to it by statute for the construction of a state road: People v. Commissioner of State Land Office, 23 M. 270.

144. Or to issue a certificate entitling a purchaser of state swamp lands to a deed, although the taxes have not been paid: Robertson v. State Land Office Commissioner, 44 M. 274.

145. But it will not issue to compel him to sell, in 1872, at an appraisal made in 1850, school lands conveyed by void deed in 1850: Chapman v. State Land Office Commissioner, 26 M. 146.

146. Mandamus to compel the quarter-master-general to receive a claim for a state bounty, provided for by act 27 of 1865, and under § 1 of act 132 of 1871 to examine and allow the claim and forward a certificate to the auditor-general, was denied in 1881 for laches: Blanchard v. Church, 47 M. 644.

147. The constitution provided that "No mechanical trade shall hereafter be taught to convicts in the state prison, in this state, except the making of those articles of which the chief supply for the consumption of the country is imported from other states or countries." What trades are within the spirit of this provision it is for the agent of the state prison to determine, and the supreme court cannot, on mandamus, control him in this regard: People v. State Prison Inspectors, 4 M. 187.

148. Mandamus denied to compel the state board of auditors to consider relator's claim for extra services in compiling the statutes: Dewey v. State Board of Auditors, 82 M. 191.

149. The board of state auditors is made by the constitution an independent tribunal over which the courts have no supervisory control, and the supreme court has no jurisdiction by mandamus to coerce or direct its action: Ibid.

150. The supreme court exercises no control over the board of state auditors in its disposition of claims against the state, not provided for by general law: Ambler v. Auditor-General, 38 M. 746.

151. Mandamus lies to compel the board of state auditors to perform mandatory duties imposed on it by the legislature outside of the exclusive powers vested in it by Const., art. 8, §§ 4, 5: Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 M. 422.

152. For example, the writ was granted to compel the board to take action to carry out the provisions of the act in regard to the publication of the state reports: Ibid.

153. The state board of auditors called for proposals for all kinds of printing as one bid, without any estimate of the different kinds of work, and without indicating any basis on which the board might determine who was lowest bidder. The relator and others sent in bids, and the board awarded the contract to another than the relator, professing to ascertain which bid was lowest by taking as a basis the printing for the two preceding years. The relator, on a showing that the public and the bidders had no means of making estimates on such a basis, and no reason to suppose it was to be adopted, and on a claim that its bid on any fair estimate was lowest, and that the letting was void, applied for a mandamus to compel the board to invite new proposals. On the showing, it appearing that the board had followed the practice of its predecessors—Held: (1) That as there was nothing to impeach the good faith of the board, and as there was no reason to believe the difference in favor of relator's bid, if any, was insignificant, the court on that ground might decline to interfere. (2) That the relator, having participated in the lettings and made no objections until after the board had announced its decision, was not then in position to dispute, in his own interest, the validity of the previous action. (3) That the court might properly refuse to interfere by mandamus, since the effect might be indirectly to annul a contract; and mandamus is not a proper proceeding for that purpose:

Detroit Free Press Co. v. State Board of Auditors, 47 M. 185.

154. Mandamus will not lie against a public board at the suit of an employee thereof for redress for a breach of contract, but he may have a claim for damages: Portman v. State Fish Commissioners, 50 M. 258.

As to mandamus to regents of university to appoint professor of homœopathy, see UNIVERSITY, §§ 7-10.

(d) To municipal boards and officers.

As to mandamus in cases where approval of liquor bonds is sought, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, §§ 91-100.

155. It is within the province of courts to restrain public bodies and officers of counties and other municipal divisions from exceeding their jurisdiction, and to require them to perform such specific duties as the law imposes on them: Attorney-General v. Iron County Canvassers, 64 M. 607.

156. The performance of a ministerial duty may as well be enforced when it rests upon an aggregate body like the common council as when incumbent upon a single officer: Park Com'rs v. Detroit Common Council, 28 M. 228.

157. Mandamus for the payment of money can issue at the instance of one municipal corporation against another only when there are statutory or legal relations between them to authorize it, and the obligation to pay has been legally liquidated: Midland School Districts, 40 M. 551.

158. Mandamus to compel one municipality to pay an indebtedness to another as agreed upon by representatives of both was denied where the proceedings to determine the debt did not clearly appear to be those prescribed by statute: Portsmouth v. Bay City, 57 M. 420.

159. Mandamus will not lie to compel a county to pay ditch orders at the instance of one not clearly showing himself to have title thereto: Brownell v. Gratiot Supervisors, 49 M. 414.

160. Mandamus being a discretionary writ, its issue to compel the payment of a county order will be refused, although less than ten years have elapsed, when the answer sets up the plea of the statute of limitations, and also shows that the claim is fraudulent, and the relator does not ask for the trial of an issue to determine the fact of fraud: Merrill v. Gladwin County Treasurer, 61 M. 95.

161. Mandamus is the proper remedy to enforce the payment by a municipal corporation of an official salary, the amount of which is fixed: McBride v. Grand Rapids, 47 M. 286.

162. Mandamus was not allowed to enforce the payment of a claim for salary as a city officer where the relator first elected to sue in assumpsit, but left the action undetermined, and, after ten years had passed from the date of his claim, sought his remedy by mandamus from the supreme court: Walcott v. Jackson, 51 M. 249.

163. Mandamus lies to compel the board of supervisors to apportion upon the taxable property of the county the sum properly certified to be due from the county to the state on account of taxes: Auditor-General v. Jackson Supervisors, 24 M. 237.

164. Mandamus is granted to compel the supervisors to spread upon the tax-rolls of their county a sum lost by the state in consequence of the failure of the county treasurer to account for moneys received at a tax sale conducted by him: Attorney-General v. St. Clair County Supervisors, 30 M. 388.

165. Under H. S. § 483 it requires a popular vote to authorize a county to borrow or raise by tax for building purposes more than $1,000 in any one year; and mandamus is refused to compel provision to be made by taxation to pay warrants amounting to $2,640, purporting to have been issued by a board of supervisors for county building purposes between June, 1874, and January, 1875, where the question of raising or borrowing this money has never been submitted to a vote of the people and where the relator had notice of the invalidity of the warrants: Pack v. Presque Isle Supervisors, 36 M. 377.

166. Mandamus lies to compel the board of supervisors to admit a member duly certified as elected: Robinson v. Cheboygan Supervisors, 49 M. 321.

167. Where the charter of Eaton Rapids provided that the mayor should represent that city in the county board of supervisors, mandamus was granted to compel the board to recognize him: Smith v. Eaton Sup'rs, 56 M. 217.

168. Mandamus may be granted to compel the board of auditors of Wayne county to deliver their warrant on the county treasurer to the person in whose favor an account has been allowed. And it is no answer to the application that such a warrant was made out, but, before delivery, was taken on execution against the payee, and the money received thereon by the officer from the county treasurer,—such a warrant not being the subject of levy on execution: People v. Wayne Auditors, 5 M. 223.

169. Upon petition for mandamus to compel a county board to pay to a township which had been set off from the county a balance shown by the county books to be due, the answer stated no facts from which error in the books could be inferred. The writ was granted: Roscommon v. Midland Supervisors, 49 M. 454.

170. The police justice of Grand Rapids has no authority to proceed against the supervisors of the county by mandamus to compel them to audit and allow to the city the fees charged by the act creating the police court, upon the county, in cases tried before him; the act being construed to require him to collect the costs imposed by him upon individuals, but not such as were payable by the county to the city under the same: McBride v. Kent Supervisors, 88 M. 421.

171. Mandamus was granted to compel a board of supervisors to provide for the payment of a balance credited upon the books of the county to a certain township which belonged, with another, to a county set off from the first, the credit having been made in pursuance of a mutual agreement between the townships and the county indebted: Higgins v. Midland Supervisors, 52 M. 16.

172. The Wayne county board of auditors may be compelled by mandamus to refund a fine, the judgment under which it was imposed having been reversed on certiorari, and the fine having been paid to avoid imprisonment: McMahon v. Wayne Auditors, 41 M. 223.

173. Mandamus lies to compel a board of supervisors to allow a claim that is by law made a charge upon the county: People v. Macomb Supervisors, 3 M. 475; People v. Wayne Auditors, 18 M. 233.

174. Mandamus lies to compel a board of supervisors, when a claim is made against the county, to give claimant a hearing and to decide the claim: Peck v. Kent Supervisors, 47 M. 477; Cicotte v. Wayne, 59 M. 509.

Further as to mandamus to boards of supervisors, and as to the finality of their action upon claims, see COUNTIES, §§ 61-91.

175. Mandamus to compel the common council of Detroit to order the issuing of bonds to purchase lands for a park contracted for by the board of park commissioners was denied: Park Commissioners v. Detroit Common Council, 28 M. 228.

176. Mandamus was granted to compel the common council of Detroit to consider and act upon the mayor's nominations made under the act establishing a board of public works: Attorney-General v. Detroit Common Council, 29 M. 103.

177. Mandamus asked by the board of water commissioners of East Saginaw to compel the common council to levy a tax to pay bonds issued by the board, and about to mature, was denied, as the board had a remedy, by issuing new bonds, to meet the old ones: East Saginaw Water Commissioners v. East Saginaw Common Council, 33 M. 164.

178. Mandamus to compel payment to a contractor from a special assessment was denied where the assessment had been adjudged invalid in a suit brought by a tax-payer to recover back what he had paid: Gebhart v. East Saginaw, 40 M. 336.

179. The charter of Port Huron makes the common council the final judges of the election of aldermen. Held, that mandamus would not lie to compel them to reinstate one whom they had excluded without a proper hearing on the merits: Cooley v. Fitz Gerald, 41 M. 2.

180. Mandamus is the proper remedy to enforce the payment of city orders drawn upon a specific fund, where the fund is supplied: Second National Bank v. Lansing, 25 M. 207.

181. Mandamus is the remedy against a municipal corporation for its improper refusal to pay orders properly drawn upon it for the payment of liquidated claims: Peterson v. Manistee, 36 M. 8.

182. Where, after the division of a township, the town boards have met and determined the amount of the township indebtedness to be paid by the new township, such amount is a fixed and liquidated demand against the new township, which it is the duty of its town board to allow and issue orders for. If the town board refuse to perform this duty, mandamus is the proper remedy, and not an action against the township: Marathon v. Oregon, 8 M. 373.

183. Mandamus against the town officers in case of their neglect to do their duty is the proper remedy to compel the payment of an established demand against a township: Dayton v. Rounds, 27 M. 82.

184. Mandamus, and not an action against the township, is the proper remedy to enforce payment of orders regularly drawn by the highway commissioners upon the township treasurers: McArthur v. Duncan, 34 M. 27; Just v. Wise, 42 M. 573.

That in the federal courts a judgment on a liquidated demand must precede a mandamus for collection, see COURTS, § 132.

185. Mandamus to pay a township order based upon a settlement which the answer claimed to be wrong was limited to the amount conceded by the answer to be due, no issue of fact being made; but the allowance of the writ was without prejudice to any action by either party for the correction of the error: Murphy v. Reeder, 57 M. 419.

186. Mandamus does not lie to compel a city to pay an unliquidated demand, such as a claim on a quantum meruit for the value to the city of services performed and materials furnished on a contract which was afterwards forfeited: Michigan Paving Co. v. Detroit, 34 M. 201.

187. Mandamus will not lie to compel highway commissioners to proceed to rebuild a destroyed bridge where the cost would greatly exceed the amount prescribed by statute: Goodsell v. Post, 30 M. 353.

188. Mandamus will not be issued to compel a township board to repair a public bridge: Perrine v. Hamlin, 48 M. 641.

189. A township issued plank-road bonds which were invalid. The bonds were negotiated and the township was afterwards divided. Held, that the judgment, in a subsequent action on the bonds, to which the new township was not a party, was not binding on it; and mandamus will not lie to compel the township board of the new township to meet with the township board of the old one to apportion the indebtedness arising on the bonds: Hale v. Baldwin Township Board, 49 M. 270.

190. Mandamus is not the proper remedy for compelling a township to refund the amount of a tax unlawfully levied if there is any issue involved which should go to the jury: Byles v. Golden, 52 M. 612.

191. Mandamus does not lie to compel a township to raise money to pay bonds so long as it is an open question whether the bonds are a legal obligation on the township and whether the relator is a bona fide holder of them: Loomis v. Rogers, 53 M. 136.

192. Mandamus will be granted to compel a ward board of registration to meet and hear the claim of a party to be registered as a voter; and it will be no answer to the application therefor that the case has been reserved for the consideration of the city board when it was the duty of the ward board to pass upon it: People v. Detroit Board of Registration, 17 M. 427.

193. Mandamus lies to compel the sheriff to imprison a person convicted under the bastardy act when necessary to compel him to contribute to the child's support: Waite v. Washington, 44 M. 388.

194. Mandamus lies to compel the county treasurer to keep his office at the county seat: Rice v. Shay, 43 M. 380.

195. Or to permit the inspection of liquor bonds filed in his office: Brown v. County Treasurer, 54 M. 132.

196. Or to pay over to the proper local officers the amount of liquor taxes to which they are entitled by the law: East Saginaw v. County Treasurer, 44 M. 273.

As to mandamus to compel township treasurer to pay over library moneys, see SCHOOLS, § 99.

197. Mandamus to compel a county clerk to issue a certificate of election to a person shown by the returns to have been legally elected was denied when it would not have given substantial relief, and the question might be raised again in an issue as to the accuracy of the returns or by proceedings in the nature of quo warranto: Sherburne v. Horn, 45 M. 160.

198. Mandamus is not the proper remedy to compel a county clerk to return to the supreme court files that have been remitted to him by mistake: Wright v. Huron County Clerk, 48 M. 642.

199. Mandamus does not lie at the suit of a grantee to compel a register of deeds to record a deed delivered to him in escrow and withheld by the grantor's order: Austin v. Curtis, 41 M. 723.

200. Mandamus requiring a register of deeds to allow relators and their clerks to inspect and copy the records for the purpose of making a set of books of abstracts of title was refused: Webber v. Townley, 43 M. 534.

201. And if the writ could be awarded at all for such a purpose as the above, it would be denied to a private foreign corporation where such corporation showed no authority from the state of its origin to deal in lands or land-titles: Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 M. 145.

202. Mandamus lies to compel a town clerk to issue the proper certificate for the levy of a tax to satisfy a judgment against the township, even though the cause of action arose in territory that was set off as a new township after it arose and before judgment: Courtright v. Brooks Township Clerk, 54 M. 182.

203. On an application for mandamus to require the county treasurer to pay an order drawn by persons claiming to be superintendents of the poor, the legal title of the officers will not be tried; but it appearing on the record that their appointment was unauthorized, mandamus will not be granted unless it appears that, notwithstanding the want of title, they have got actual possession and are generally reputed to be such officers, and are hence officers de facto: Mead v. Ingham County Treasurer, 36 M. 416.

204. Mandamus was granted to compel payment of a proper order made upon the township treasurer by a commissioner of highways who was performing the duties of his office though he had not filed an official bond: Mackenzie v. Baraga Township Treasurer, 39 M. 554.

205. Mandamus lies to compel a township treasurer to pay to relator so much of the money in his hands as is covered by the warrant of a school director drawn in relator's favor and in proper form, even though it does not specify a precise sum, but is for all such money in his hands as was raised for the purposes of the school district and belonged thereto: Bryant v. Moore, 50 M. 225.

206. Where a liquor tax belonging to a village was assessed and collected by township officers and used for township purposes, a mandamus was granted to compel its payment over to the village authorities: Decatur v. Decatur, 38 M. 885.

207. Mandamus to compel a township treasurer to pay a certain sum upon the order of the township board was withheld where the treasurer set forth in his return to the order to show cause that the township had by resolution directed him not to pay, and that there were no moneys in his hands with which to pay: Murphy v. Reeder Township Treasurer, 56 M. 505.

208. Mandamus does not lie to compel aldermen to attend meetings of the common council, and to perform their general official duties regularly: Fitzgerald v. Whipple, 41 M. 548.

209. Mandamus will lie to compel the recorder of a village to fulfil the duty, imposed upon him by the charter, of advertising and selling lands returned for delinquent paving taxes; and he cannot refuse to do so on the ground that he believes the action of the council in laying the particular tax to be illegal, especially if the proceedings are sufficiently fair on their face to protect ministerial action, and the work has been done and the tax in a great measure paid in: Hudson v. Whitney, 53 M. 158.

210. A board of education is entitled to mandamus to compel its treasurer to pay its funds to the proper depository under the law: Port Huron Board of Education v. City Treasurer, 57 M. 46.

211. Mandamus lies to compel a school-district moderator to countersign order on township treasurer: Burns v. Bender, 36 M. 195.

212. Mandamus to compel a school-district assessor to pay a school order was allowed where the court was satisfied there was no valid defence: Martin v. Tripp, 51 M. 184.

213. Mandamus lies on relation of a school-district assessor to compel the clerk of a township to which the district formerly belonged to certify to the supervisor of the township to which it now belongs the amount ascertained by the school inspectors as due to the relator's district from what remained of the old district out of which it was erected: Ramsey v. Everett Town Clerk, 52 M. 344.

As to mandamus to compel payment of school orders, see SCHOOLS, §§ 87, 88.

(e) To private corporations and individuals.

214. A mandamus will be granted on behalf of the insurance department to compel an insurance company to submit to an inspection of its affairs: People v. State Insurance Co., 19 M. 392.

215. Mandamus is a discretionary writ and will not usually lie to settle the controversies of private corporations where the facts are not important on public grounds, or would not justify the interference of the court if corporate authority did not exist: Lamphere v. Grand Lodge United Workmen, 47 M. 429.

216. The supreme court will not interfere with the internal regulation of private corporations in the enforcement of their rules unless under very peculiar circumstances of substantial wrong: Hargnell v. Lafayette Benevolent Society, 47 M. 648.

217. Mandamus to compel a religious corporation to restore to membership a person whom it had expelled was refused in the discretion of the court, where the society had no property and it would be destroyed if the relator were restored to membership, and where he had acted in hostility to its interests and given grounds for regular removal: Meister v. Anshei Chesed Congregation, 87 M. 542.

218. The only ground on which the supreme court can interfere with organized bodies by mandamus in aid of a member is that, as corporations, they are subject to judicial oversight to prevent their depriving members of corporate privileges illegally. The writ will not lie where such bodies are not corporations, or where the question presented does not involve tangible and valuable corporate privileges: Burt v. Michigan Grand Lodge, 66 M. 85 (May 5, '87).

219. The purely social relations which members of a corporation hold, not by virtue of their corporate condition, but because of their connection with a general fraternal body, cannot be regulated by mandamus. So held where an incorporated Masonic lodge undertook to discipline by expulsion therefrom a Mason who had never belonged to that lodge: Ibid.

220. An incorporated voluntary society may be compelled by mandamus to restore to one of its members a substantial right of which he has been deprived by the action of the society in violation of its constitution: Roehler v. Mechanics' Aid Society, 22 M. 86.

221. Mandamus granted to compel the recognition of a member of a subordinate lodge of the grand lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, incorporated under H. S. § 8949, who had been suspended for refusing to pay a relief assessment made under the orders of the supreme lodge, a Kentucky corporation: Lamphere v. Grand Lodge United Workmen, 47 M. 429.

222. A motion for an order to show cause why mandamus should not issue to compel the reinstatement of relator in a Masonic lodge from which he had been expelled was refused where he had previously appealed for redress to the tribunal established by the order for hearing such complaints and the expulsion had been confirmed: Burt v. Grand Lodge, 44 M. 208.

223. If a member of a corporation voluntarily subjects himself to arbitration, the supreme court will not undertake to review the action of extrajudicial bodies and intermeddle with their action in the course of delegated power: Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court, 62 M. 110.

224. Mandamus is not a proper remedy to compel a private corporation to pay dividends which it has declared; still less when any other question exists as to the rights of the person claiming to be entitled to them: Van Norman v. Central Car & Manuf. Co., 41 M. 166.

225. Mandamus does not lie to compel a mutual benefit company to levy an assessment to pay the amount falling due upon the death of a member; the proper course is to bring suit upon the undertaking of the company; nor does it make any difference that the company has no funds to pay the judgment: Burland v. Northwestern Mut. Benefit Assoc., 47 M. 424; Bates v. Detroit Mut. Ben. Assoc., 47 M. 646.

226. Mandamus will not lie to compel the officers of a mutual benefit association to levy an assessment on its members for the payment of a judgment rendered upon a certificate of membership. The remedy is in equity: Miner a Michigan Mut. Benefit Assoc., 65 M. 84 (Feb. 10, '87).

227. A corporator may apply for a mandamus to compel the custodian of the corporate records and documents to allow him an inspection of them. But he must show that he has made a proper demand for such inspection, at a proper time and place, and for a proper reason. The writ will not be granted to enable a corporator to gratify idle curiosity: People v. Walker, 9 M. 328.

228. Where, therefore, a corporator demanded of the secretary of the corporation an inspection of its books, records and papers, and the demand was not shown to have been made at the office of the corporation, and no excuse was given for not making it there, and the only ground stated for the application was that the corporator had a desire "to ascertain the rights, duties, privileges and liabilities, and for the protection" of the corporator, the writ was refused: Ibid.

229. Mandamus does not lie to compel a guardian to pay a claim against his ward which the probate court has adjudged valid; the proceeding must be by action: Smith v. Burton, 48 M. 643.

III. PROCEEDINGS AND PRACTICE.

230. Respondents in mandamus proceedings are entitled to insist that they shall not be drawn into litigation by any one who cannot properly be relator, nor deprived of the responsibility of an actual proper party to the record: McBride v. Kent County Supervisors, 38 M. 421.

231. The attorney-general is not a proper relator in proceedings by mandamus to compel a justice of the peace to entertain a complaint where the offence charged is against individual interests and does not affect the public welfare: Attorney-General v. Detroit Police Justice, 41 M. 224.

232. A private individual can apply for a writ of mandamus only in a case where he has some private or particular interest to be subserved, or some particular right to be protected by the aid of this process, independent of that which he holds in common with the public at large: People v. State Prison Inspectors, 4 M. 187.

233. Whether a private individual can apply for the writ to restrain the agent of the state prison from teaching the trade of or the manufacture of the articles made by the relator, quere: Ibid.

234. A private citizen cannot, in a matter where he is not directly injured, apply for a mandamus to compel the performance of an omitted duty by a public board; though cases might arise where the court would permit it, in the absence of the attorney-general or prosecuting attorney, or his refusal without good cause to act: People v. Regents, 4 M. 98.

235. A county officer removed his office to a place to which he claimed the county seat had been removed by action of the supervisors and electors; application being made by a private individual for a mandamus to compel him to return to the former county seat, and there being no showing that the proper public officer, on being requested, had refused to make any application himself, or that the relator had any special interest in the matter not common to citizens generally, it was refused. If mandamus can be resorted to for such a purpose (see supra, § 194), the proper public officer to apply for it in the supreme court is the attorney-general: Delbridge v. Green, 29 M. 121.

236. But the rule rejecting the intervention of private complainants against public grievances is one of discretion, and a private person who would be a competent bidder under a state law for letting a contract may appear as relator by his own counsel in a proceeding by mandamus to compel state officers to carry out the law, if the public interest requires prompt action and the attorney-general declines to appear for him: Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 M. 422.

237. The board of water commissioners of East Saginaw is a proper relator to an application to compel the common council to levy a tax to pay bonds issued by the board and about to mature: East Saginaw Water Commissioners v. East Saginaw Common Council, 33 M. 164.

238. The father may be relator in an application for the writ to compel the admission of his child to the public schools: People v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 M. 400.

239. The child's mother is a proper relator in a writ to compel the sheriff to imprison a person convicted under the bastardy act when necessary to compel him to contribute to the child's support: Waite v. Washington, 44 M. 388.

240. A mandamus directing the action of a judicial tribunal is to be regarded as directed to the judge officially, and as binding the incumbent, whoever he may be, and not merely the judge who denied the application and has since ceased to hold the office: People v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

241. Mandamus proceedings against an officer, merely as an official, are not affected by a change of incumbency: Reeder v. Wexford County Treasurer, 37 M. 351.

242. Proceedings in mandamus do not abate by expiration of defendant's office, where there is a continuing duty irrespective of the incumbent, and the proceeding is undertaken to enforce an obligation of the corporation or municipality to which the corporation is attached: Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 480.

243. It seems that evidence is admissible to show that an attempted resignation of an officer who is a defendant in mandamus proceedings was simulated and fraudulent: Ibid.

244. Mandamus to settle a case for review will not issue to a judge who has resigned since filing his answer to the order to show cause. Relief should be asked from his successor: De Haas v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 46 M. 12.

(b) The application.

245. Where one seeks by mandamus to compel a public officer to perform a duty prescribed by statute, he must show by his application that all the conditions necessary to create the duty exist. It is not sufficient to show facts from which their existence may be inferred: People v. Woodhull, 14 M. 28; People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 19 M. 296.

246. A petition for mandamus must show a clear legal duty resting upon the persons or tribunal against whom the remedy is sought, which they refuse, on request, to perform; and it does not show this if the request embraces anything which it would be illegal for them to do: Butler v. Saginaw Supervisors, 26 M. 22.

247. Where a child was refused admission to the public schools on account of his color, it will be no answer to his application for this writ that he does not show himself otherwise entitled: People v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 M. 400.

248. A relator or respondent who relies on official records to establish his right must produce such records or certified copies thereof with his petition or answer; it is not enough to refer to the originals: Cronin v. Kalkaska Supervisors, 58 M. 448.

(c) Order to show cause.

249. An order to show cause why a peremptory mandamus should not issue has, in the supreme court, been uniformly substituted for an alternative mandamus: People v. La Grange Township Board, 2 M. 187; Roscommon v. Midland Supervisors, 49 M. 454.

250. The writ of mandamus is meant to be a speedy and summary remedy, whose chief value would be destroyed by the delays and complications of special pleadings, authorized under the practice of alternative or double writs: Roscommon v. Midland Supervisors, 49 M. 454.

251. On a motion for a peremptory mandamus the court will not allow the relator to amend his order on the respondent to show cause, where it is too broad and asks more than he is entitled to, so as to include that only to which he is entitled: People v. La Grange Township Board, 2 M. 187.

252. Evasion of an order to show cause, where no alternative order is granted, is not, upon the return thereto, open to any further redress than the issue of a peremptory writ, with costs: Potter v. Homer Common Council, 59 M. 8.

253. The fine provided by H. S. § 8669 for not obeying a mandamus cannot be imposed for failure merely to make return to an order to show cause: Fletcher v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 39 M. 301.

(d) Answer or return; plea; demurrer.

254. An alternative mandamus is answered by a return, which is in the nature and performs the office of a plea; while the order to show cause is answered by affidavit: People v. La Grange Township Board, 2 M. 187.

255. An answer to an order to show cause is disregarded if only drafted by the attorneys in the case without being submitted to the respondent and approved by him. But the case may be treated as on demurrer to the relator's showing: Douglass v. Manistee Circuit Judge, 42 M. 495.

256. If the return states that the respondent has no knowledge concerning a fact necessary to the relator's case, it will be sufficient to put such fact in issue: People v. Ryan, 17 M. 159.

257. An order to show cause why a township should not pay a town order is fully met by a return showing that it was fraudulently issued without consideration and without any allowance by the proper authorities: Noble v. Paris, 56 M. 219.

258. A person who claimed to be the holder and owner of certain ditch orders asked for a mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to provide for their payment. The board answered that they had no knowledge as to whether the relator was holder and owner of the orders as claimed. Held, that the answer was proper: Brownell v. Gratiot Supervisors, 49 M. 414.

259. Record issues should be set forth as they stand, in showing cause in cases involving a settlement of public accounts between townships and counties: Higgins v. Midland Supervisors, 52 M. 16.

260. Where a circuit judge is called upon to show cause against a mandamus, his return, stating the facts as to his own action, and what occurred in connection therewith within his own knowledge, must be conclusively taken to be true, and an issue of fact cannot be made upon it: Orr v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 23 M. 536.

261. The return to an order to show cause is taken as true if no issue is made upon it: Murphy v. Reeder Township Treasurer, 56 M. 505; Farnsworth v. Kalkaska Supervisors, 56 M. 640; Hickey v. Oakland Supervisors, 62 M. 94; Post v. Sparta, 63 M. 323.

262. In mandamus cases where the matter is heard on petition and answer, the answer is to be taken as true; and where the answer states that certain officers who, it was claimed, had been illegally removed, have retained the files and records of their offices, have constantly denied the right to make the removal, and have continued to act as officers, is conclusive against the claim of the new appointees that they have acted as such officers with general acquiescence in their right: Mead v. Ingham County Treasurer, 36 M. 417.

263. Where the answer is responsive or does not admit relator's case, and he sees fit to go to a hearing on the pleadings, the answer is taken as true, and determines the propriety of issuing the writ: Merrill v. Gladwin County Treasurer, 61 M. 95.

264. The return, if demurred to, must be taken as true: Edwards v. United States, 108 U. S. 471.

265. Facts set up by respondent in his return to an order to show cause are admitted by the relator if, when an issue is framed, they are not submitted to the jury: Lcomis v. Rogers Township Board, 58 M. 135.

266. It seems that affidavits in answer to an order to show cause cannot be assumed to be evasive, and if so in fact the respondent will be bound by them according to the interpretation evidently intended: Attorney-General v. Sanilac Supervisors, 42 M. 72.

267. Ex parte affidavits returned by a circuit judge in response to an order to show cause why he should not grant a motion will not be received if they were not used on the motion: Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 M. 536.

268. The respondents having failed to make answer to the order to show cause why mandamus should not issue against them as prayed, the facts alleged in the petition for the mandamus are taken as admitted: Davis v. Lansing Common Council, 31 M. 490.

269. The plea of non-service of the writ is inadmissible where the defendant appears and makes return: Edwards v. United States, 108 U. S. 471.

270. Where a petition for a mandamus to compel a sale of certain public land simply alleged that the land in question was subject to entry at a specified sum on July 1, 1850, a demurrer thereto did not admit that it was subject to such entry at any subsequent time: Chapman v. State Land Office Commissioner, 26 M. 146.

(e) Framing and trying issues.

271. On petition for mandamus to compel the payment of highway orders the parties should frame their issues on the answer, if it denies the validity of the orders; it is immaterial to reply that in a certain suit the judge had made a finding sustaining the orders, and to rejoin that a full finding was not requested, and make surrejoinder that it was, and similar: Just v. Wise, 47 M. 511.

272. Where a mandamus was petitioned for to compel payment upon certain orders issued upon estimates made under a grading contract, and the supreme court did not regard the estimates as final, it directed the framing of an issue to be tried by jury below to determine the exact amount of work done under the contract, the whole amount of orders issued under it, and the difference, if any, between the sum earned and that included in the orders: Whitely v. Lansing, 27 M. 131.

273. If by its return a board of registration denies relator's right to be registered as a voter, an issue will be directed to determine the fact: People v. Nankin Board of Registration, 15 M. 156.

274. H. S. ch. 299 provides that in mandamus proceedings there may be a trial of certain issues of fact in the county where the facts arose, in the same way as in an action on the case for false return. Held, that this relates to cases where a writ of mandamus has been first issued and a return made under which issues of fact or law are framed—a practice which is not customary here: Roscommon v. Midland Supervisors, 49 M. 454.

275. Such issues of fact as are introduced by or under the return are disposed of specifically, not by sending down the entire case on the record, but in the same way as are particular issues sent down in chancery cases to be passed on: Ibid.

276. Whether the statute concerning the submission of special questions to the jury applies to cases where the issue of fact is made up in the supreme court, and specific questions are sent down to the circuit to be determined by the jury, quere. The circuit judge cannot restrict the scope of the inquiry ordered, and it is not certain that he can enlarge it: Miner v. Vedder, 66 M. 101 (May 5, '87).

277. H. S. § 8666, in providing that a peremptory mandamus shall be granted at once where a verdict is found for relator, does not apply if material issues have not been submitted to the jury and found in his favor: Loomis v. Rogers Township Board, 53 M. 136.

(f) Hearing; what matters considered or reviewed.

278. Where cause has been shown in opposition to an application for a mandamus, and an argument is not had until a subsequent term, the case must be noticed and placed upon the docket for argument as a calendar case, and printed briefs furnished: People v. Fillmore Township Board, 11 M. 197; People v. Salem Township Board, 19 M. 11.

279. Where a party had been ordered to show cause in a proceeding to compel the issue of patents to certain lands, but there was no proof of the service of the order and no reason given why it was not served, the court, in order not to prejudice any of his rights before he had an opportunity to be heard, permitted the case to be retained for further proceedings as to parties not yet notified so that they might be brought in, if the relator desired: People v. State Land Commissioner, 23 M. 270.

280. In mandamus cases the party interested is permitted to be heard in resisting the application: Beecher v. Anderson, 45 M. 548.

281. On the hearing of an application for a mandamus, the party showing cause is entitled to open and close the argument: People v. Wayne County Treasurer, 8 M. 392.

282. Where, in mandamus causes, the relator formally demurs to the respondent's answer, the former has the affirmative and is entitled to open and close the argument on the hearing: People v. Wands, 23 M. 385.

283. Whether a mandamus is the proper remedy in a case is not determined by an order to show cause why the writ should not issue. That point may be finally examined and determined at the hearing on the return of the writ, when both parties can be heard: Olson v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 49 M. 85.

284. Upon an application for mandamus to require a circuit judge to grant a motion made upon a showing of facts before him and which upon the showing he denied, the case must be heard on the facts disclosed on the hearing of the motion in the circuit, and not on new facts brought into the case on this application: McCarthy v. Monroe Circuit Judge, 36 M. 274.

285. In mandamus proceedings to enforce the payment of money, as in any other, the claimant must make out his own case unless it is admitted expressly or by implication; the burden is not on the respondent to show that the demand is illegal: Hosier v. Higgins Township Board, 45 M. 340.

286. A fact which has arisen since the return was made — e. g., the appointment of a successor to the respondent officer, whose return stated that he had resigned — cannot avail as matter of defence unless set up by a plea puis darrein continuance or its equivalent: Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 480.

287. On an application for mandamus to compel the raising of a tax to pay warrants purporting to be issued by a board of supervisors, the question of the validity of the proceedings to organize the county was not determined where it was not essential to the decision of the case: Pack v. Presque Isle Supervisors, 36 M. 378.

288. Defects in an affidavit for an attachment will not be reviewed by the supreme court in a mandamus proceeding to require the allowance of a motion to set aside a service thereof on person and property: Nederland v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 55 M. 411.

289. Upon an application for a mandamus to compel a township board to approve the sureties in a liquor bond, it is not the province of this court to decide as matter of fact whether the sureties offered were pecuniarily responsible, but merely whether the board acted in good faith and not arbitrarily or unjustly: Post v. Sparta, 64 M. 597.

And see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, V.

290. Matters stated in the application for a mandamus which are neither admitted nor denied by the answer cannot be insisted on by the relator on the argument if he goes to a hearing without proofs: People v. State Land Office Commissioner, 19 M. 470.

(g) Nature and extent of relief.

291. The supreme court may grant relief where a case is made out in part, even if it fails in other respects: Hosier v. Higgins Township Board, 45 M. 840.

292. Mandamus to compel the payment of money may be granted so far as concerns a portion of the demand, while as to the rest the application is dismissed: Bryant v. Moore, 50 M. 225.

293. Judicial discretion is always involved in mandamus cases, concerning the relief as well as other questions: Ayres v. State Board of Auditors, 42 M. 422.

294. The writ will not be granted where the application is for something different from that for which the party has laid the foundation. The refusal of the circuit court to grant a motion for an assessment of damages in replevin is not a proper foundation for an application to the supreme court for a mandamus commanding the circuit court to impanel a jury to assess the value of the property replevied: People v. Jackson Circuit Judges, 1 D. 302.

295. The relator in mandamus is not usually granted greater relief than is claimed in his application for the writ: Reeder v. Wexford County Treasurer, 37 M. 351.

296. Relief cannot be given as against the interests of any person not made a party to the proceeding and duly notified: Austin v. Register of Deeds, 41 M. 723.

297. Terms cannot be imposed on the relator when the writ is awarded, if he asks no more than his legal right: People v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

298. Upon an application for a mandamus to compel the circuit court to set aside defective attachment proceedings, the supreme court cannot grant leave to amend the sheriff's return of sale: People v. Calhoun Circuit Judges, 1 D. 417.

299. As obedience to a mandamus is to be enforced by process for contempt the writ should point out the precise thing to be done: Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 M. 145.

(h) Effect of award or denial.

300. The award of mandamus proves nothing and cannot be pleaded in bar; and its denial will not sustain error: Burland v. Mutual Benefit Assoc., 47 M. 424.

301. Mandamus proceedings to compel the restoration of an alderman to a seat from which he has been wrongfully removed by the council do not concern the legality of his title: Doran v. De Long, 48 M. 552.

302. It seems that the discretionary act of denying a writ of mandamus to compel a sheriff to execute a criminal warrant does not necessarily determine the invalidity of the warrant: Wheaton v. Beecher, 49 M. 848.

303. A discretionary refusal on conflicting affidavits to grant a motion for a mandamus to review the action of a circuit judge is not such a determination of the facts as precludes a trial on testimony in the circuit: Keppel v. Moore, 66 M. 292 (June 16, '87).

304. Where the validity and good faith of a chattel mortgage have been decided in mandamus proceedings, such decision is res judicata: Weed v. Mirick, 62 M. 414.

MARRIAGE.

As to bigamy, see CRIMES, III, (g), 2.

1. While marriage is a contract it is also a relation governed by rules of public policy which apply to no mere private agreements: Leavitt v. Leavitt, 18 M. 452.

2. Marriage, between parties capable of contracting it, is of common right and valid by the common law of Christendom. As a general rule, if valid where celebrated it is valid everywhere, and if void where celebrated it is void everywhere. Regulations restricting it or imposing conditions upon it are exceptional, depend upon statutes, and must be proved by one who claims a case falls within them: Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 M. 126.

3. Prima facie, a good marriage is shown by proof of a present agreement followed by cohabitation; it will not be presumed, in the absence of proof, that there are regulations anywhere restrictive of this common right: Ibid.

4. Where parties agree presently to take each other for husband and wife, with or without a ceremony, whatever its form, and from that time live together, professedly in that relation, this constitutes a valid marriage under our law: Ibid.; Peet v. Peet, 52 M. 464; Meister v. Moore, 96 U. S. 76.

5. A man and woman lived together as if they were husband and wife for twenty years and had thirteen children. Then they separated, and, during the man's life, the woman was formally married to another man, who lived with her nearly three years and then married another woman while the first was still living. Held, that the first couple were husband and wife, and the following marriage therefore void, so that the last marriage was valid and the woman entitled to claim a widow's share of her husband's estate upon his death: Peet v. Peet, 52 M. 464.

6. A formal ceremony of marriage, whether in due form or not, must be presumed to be by consent, and therefore, prima facie, a contract of marriage per verba de presenti: Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 M. 126.

7. But positive evidence of non-assent to a marriage ceremony that had been irregularly performed weighs against the presumption of its validity: Kopke v. People, 43 M. 41.

8. Evidence that persons appeared at a church, where the officiating minister publicly and in the presence of others performed a ceremony of marriage between them, and that they seemed to regard themselves as married, raises a presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the ceremony was regular and legal, though there be no proof of the particulars of the ceremony or of the specific requisites of a lawful marriage ceremony under the forms and usages or customs of such church: People v. Calder, 80 M. 85.

9. A marriage ceremony performed in one county by a justice of the peace of another, being followed by cohabitation, is sufficient to constitute the parties husband and wife: People v. Girdler, 65 M. 68 (Feb. 10, '87).

10. The following was held not to be a marriage contract or a valid contract of any kind: "An article of agreement made and entered into by and between Mrs. Mary McCarthy of Chicago, Illinois, and Dennis Clancy, of Detroit, Michigan. We mutually and jointly, from now henceforth and forever, agree to live as man and wife, but each party retains the right to levy, sell and transfer their respective properties without question of the other party. Mrs. Mary McCarthy, Dennis Clancy. Witness: Hugh Murray, Emma Murray." And though followed by cohabitation, it was held there was no evidence of marriage: Clancy v. Clancy, 66 M. 202 (June 9, '87).

11. On a criminal trial a woman, upon her voir dire, testified that she was married to one P. in 1859; that the last time she saw him was in April, 1860; that she had not heard from him since; that in 1862 she read an account in a newspaper of the death of a man by the name of P., whom she supposed to be her husband; that when she married defendant she told him her husband was dead, and had been dead several years, and that she had lived with defendant as his wife about three years up to the time of his arrest. Held, that the evidence made a strong prima facie case of a marriage in good faith: Dixon v. People, 18 M. 84.

12. In the absence of opposing testimony or of suspicious circumstances, marriage was regarded as proved by the depositions of his widow and neighbors, there being no question of identity or of his death: Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 M. 410.

13. A woman's deposition that she is the widow of a man who is deceased, and wherein she says he was her husband, is testimony that they were married: Ibid.

That date of marriage may be testified to on basis of family tradition, see EVIDENCE, § 202.

14. Reputation is important as evidence to establish the fact of a marriage, but it cannot disprove an actual marriage. And where there is doubt, the presumption should favor a lawful marriage rather than notorious immorality: Peet v. Peet, 52 M. 464.

15. In proving marriage reputation is important only as circumstantial evidence as to whether the parties themselves regarded each other as man and wife. An intimacy between a man and his housekeeper is not of itself evidence that they are married. And so long as their relations are such that the fact of marriage continues to be seriously questioned, it cannot be considered as established by reputation: Cross v. Cross, 55 M. 280.

16. Marriage is provable by conduct and reputation in all civil cases involving property rights, but not in criminal cases or in actions for criminal conversation: Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 M. 282; Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 M. 529.

17. But in an action by a husband for enticing away his wife, evidence of cohabitation and repute and of defendant's admissions of the fact are enough to establish the marriage relation: Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 M. 529.

18. In an action by a married woman for slander her marriage may be proved by repute. The highest evidence of marriage is not required where that fact is not a part of the main issue: Leonard v. Pope, 27 M. 145.

19. Certificates that are sufficient to prove the performance of a ceremony of marriage in a foreign country prima facie establish the marriage, and it is not error to admit such certificates in evidence without proof of the foreign law: Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 M. 126.

20. A certificate of marriage performed in another state, merely signed by the minister, is not evidence in a criminal case where the defendant is entitled to confront the witnesses: People v. Lambert, 5 M. 349.

21. In a prosecution for adultery with a married woman the recorded marriage certificate is admissible to aid in proving the marriage though it may be insufficient without some identification of the parties. But where the husband's testimony and the certificate together identify them, and the defendant admits the fact, an objection to the admission of the certificate becomes unimportant: People v. Broughton, 49 M. 339.

22. Where one has been appointed administratrix as decedent's widow, the legality of her marriage cannot be questioned in an action by her as such administratrix: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 336.

23. A woman who by mutual agreement with the man with whom she was living had parted from and released all claims upon him and left the state and married another man cannot maintain a claim for widow's allowances against the estate of her original companion, as against a woman who in good faith lawfully married him, without, at least, showing very clearly that she, the claimant, had been his lawful wife: Young's Appeal, 52 M. 592.

24. Chastity is not a requisite to the validity of a marriage, nor does mere incontinence avoid a subsequent marriage: Leavitt v. Leavitt, 13 M. 452.

25. Whether pregnancy by another than the prospective husband and unknown to him would do so, quere: Sissung v. Sissung, 65 M. 168 (Feb. 15, '87).

26. Fraud to invalidate a marriage must be such as negatives consent, without reference to previous inducement, and must be nearly, if not quite, coincident in time with the marriage: Leavitt v. Leavitt, 13 M. 452.

As to annulling marriage for fraud, etc., see DIVORCE, §§ 102-105, 137, 188; EQUITY, § 1148.

27. H. S. § 6209, declaring males of eighteen and females of sixteen legally capable of "contracting marriage," refers to the actual forming of the marriage relation; and while it makes such marriages valid, it does not empower infants to make executory contracts of marriage that will sustain action for breach of promise: Frost v. Vought, 37 M. 65.

Further as to BREACH OF PROMISE, see that title.

28. Though a marriage where one of the parties is under the age of consent, as fixed by statute, is voidable only, yet such a marriage is not one authorized by law; and one who knowingly solemnizes such a marriage is guilty under H. S. § 6219: Bonker v. People, 37 M. 4.

And see CRIMES, §§ 585, 586.

29. Where parties are married one of whom is under and the other over the age of consent, the latter, by the statutes of this state, is bound by the marriage, unless they separate by consent before the other reaches lawful age, and do not cohabit afterwards, or unless the other refuses to consent on arriving at that age: People v. Slack, 15 M. 193.

30. As a girl thirteen years old cannot lawfully be married, the omission, in a prosecution for seduction, to ask whether the victim was unmarried was unimportant: Lewis v. People, 37 M. 518.

31. The validity of polygamous marriages among Indians, and the right of the offspring of such marriages to inherit, considered: Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 50 M. 578.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

I. THE RELATION.

(a) When exists.

(b) Hiring; compensation; duties.

(c) Discharge of servant.

II. LIABILITY OF MASTER FOR SERVANT'S ACTS.

See, also, AGENCY.

As to employer's liability for negligence injuring employee, see NEGLIGENCE; RAILROADS, VI.

I. THE RELATION.

(a) When exists.

1. Although in all ordinary transactions the relation of contractor excludes that of master and servant, yet there is no such repugnance between them that they cannot co-exist: Detroit v. Corey, 9 M. 165.

2. The relation of master and servant may exist between a corporation and an individual: McWilliams v. Detroit Central Mills Co., 31 M. 274.

3. Where men are employed in the ordinary way as laborers in cutting trees for another person under an intermediate agent who is an overseer and not a contractor, they as well as such agent are the servants of such other person: Smith v. Webster, 23 M. 298.

4. A. made a bargain with B. to cut all the logs A. had on certain land, and to deliver them to A. at a place named; A. having no interest in the running of the logs until they reached the point of delivery, nor obliged to render any assistance, pecuniary or otherwise, in the cutting or running of the logs. It was held that the relation of master and servant did not exist, and that B. alone was liable for any injury occasioned to others by his conduct in performing his contract: Moore v. Sandborn, 2 M. 519.

(b) Hiring; compensation; duties.

As to liquidated damages to master for breach of contract of service, see DAMAGES, §§ 467-470.

5. Where the plaintiff's testimony showed that he supposed that he was hired for a definite period, and the negotiations showed that the plaintiff was seeking a permanent situation, that both parties understood that it might continue for a year, and that the compensation was fixed at a definite sum per annum, it was not error for the court to refuse to charge that there was no evidence of a hiring for a definite period, and that the verdict must be for the defendant: Franklin Mining Co. v. Harris, 24 M. 115.

6. An agreement to pay a servant what the employer thinks he is worth binds the latter to pay what the services are reasonably worth, and does not leave him to fix his wages at such sum as he sees fit after the services are performed, although such an agreement would be valid if understood: Millar v. Cuddy, 48 M. 278.

7. Where a master notifies his servant that he will hereafter pay him less, and the servant continues work without notifying his master that he will claim more, it constitutes a new arrangement: Spicer v. Earl, 41 M. 191.

8. Retention in service is proof of the servant's right to wages until something is shown to the contrary, and the burden is not on him to prove that he has done everything incumbent on him, but is on the master to prove otherwise: Bolt v. Friederick, 56 M. 20.

9. In an action on a contract of hire the question was whether the period of employment was by the year or by the month. The contract itself stated that the one party agreed to pay the other a specified sum "per year, payable in monthly payments." Payments were in fact made monthly, but in the course of the third year of employment the employee was discharged. Toward the close of the second year he had asked his employer if he was satisfied and the latter had said that he was. Held, that these facts were for the jury, who were to determine what the understanding of the parties was as to the period of hire: Tallon v. Grand Portage Copper Mining Co., 55 M. 147.

10. Where, under a contract for a year's service, the employee has gone on from year to year, and at the end of a year is allowed to go on without objection, a presumption arises which will warrant a jury in finding that the parties to the contract have assented to its continuing in force for another year: Sines

v. Wayne Poor Superintendents, 58 M. 508, 55 M. 888.

11. A travelling salesman whose contract of employment secures him his travelling expenses is entitled to reimbursement for the expenses of necessary trips to headquarters and of hotel bills while there: Lamb v. Henderson, 68 M. 302.

12. Under an ordinary hiring by the day, the party cannot be required to prolong his service in order to complete any particular piece of work upon which he may happen to be employed: Wyngert v. Norton, 4 M. 286.

13. One employed by the year on a salary is bound to devote his time diligently and faithfully to the business interests of his employers, and to do nothing which will hinder or compete with those interests; but this will not prevent his rendering civilities or services to others which do not conflict with his duties to his employers, or prejudice their interests: Geiger v. Hurris, 19 M. 209.

14. Therefore a travelling agent commits no violation of duty by taking, gratuitously, orders for goods upon a house in whose service he has formerly been engaged; he not having solicited them, and it not appearing that such orders were in any way prejudicial to the interests of his employers: Ibid.

15. Deductions for an employee's use of time that does not belong to his employer cannot be made from his compensation: Ibid; People v. Miller, 24 M. 458, 464.

16. The actual value of services may be shown in an action on a contract of employment where there is a direct conflict of evidence as to the agreed rate of payment: Richardson v. McGoldrick, 48 M. 476.

17. Where a company contracts to pay an employee "the same wages as shall be paid to other men in the employ of the company filling similar positions," and the laborer sues for compensation, and there is no showing that the company had other employees in similar positions, the plaintiff is entitled to prove what his services were worth: Kent Furniture Manuf. Co. v. Ransom, 46 M. 416.

18. Where a salesman receives a fixed sum for travelling expenses, and a salary dependent upon the amount of his sales, it is admissible, when he sues upon his contract of employment, to show his lack of diligence in reduction or bar of damages: Alberts v. Stearns, 50 M. 349.

19. When one engages in another's employment he undertakes to obey all lawful orders, and subjects himself for failure to do so to liability to discharge and damages: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 87 M. 205.

20. The orders of a master are so far presumptively lawful that the servant has the burden of showing a lawful reason for disobeying them: Ibid.

21. In general, one who engages to render skilled services undertakes for reasonable skill and for good faith, and is liable for negligence or dishonest service, but not for errors of judgment; the risk of those is on the employer: Page v. Wells, 37 M. 415.

22. An arrangement by which one is to receive compensation for minutes to be obtained by him of valuable lands of a certain quality is an employment, and not a sale of information, and implies no warranty of the absolute truth of the descriptions, and the employee is not liable for mistakes: Ibid.

23. Though if, in furnishing descriptions of land, he misleads or injures his employer by a positive affirmation of their quality, when he knows nothing about it, he would be liable for bad faith or negligence: Ibid.

(c) Discharge of servant.

24. An employer has no arbitrary power to dismiss his employee for a disobedience to orders that involve no serious consequences and is not "wilful" in the sense of being perverse, insubordinate or unreasonable; and its reasonableness is for the jury. Nor can disobedience be made a pretext for dismissal apart from the injury it causes. Whether even a menial or domestic servant can be dismissed for mere harmless disobedience, quere: Shaver v. Ingham, 58 M. 649.

25. Employers cannot assume to be final judges in their own behalf of the propriety of dismissing their employees during their term of employment, unless they also take the responsibility which attaches to dismissals without actual cause: Jones v. Graham, etc. Transp. Co., 51 M. 539.

26. The words "I am very sorry to have to ask you to resign your position," in a letter from an employer to his employee, are properly construed as a peremptory discharge: Ibid.

27. A vessel captain who has been peremptorily discharged by the owner of the vessel for unfitness is not bound to offer to resume command before leaving and beginning suit against the owner on the contract of employment between them. He owes defendant no further duty than to use reasonable diligence to obtain other employment: Ibid.

28. Proof of the actual fitness of an employee who has been discharged is proper in an action by him on the contract of employment: Ibid.

29. Plaintiff, claiming to have been wrongfully dismissed from service before an alleged yearly term was up, sued for wages due for the period after the dismissal. It appearing that pay had always been balanced monthly, it was error to exclude a question to plaintiff whether he had ever asked for any pay for such period after dismissal: Collins v. Hazelton, 65 M. 220 (Feb. 15, '87).

30. A plaintiff who was personally employed by defendant is bound, in an action for wages claimed to be due for the period after an alleged wrongful dismissal, to show actual authority from defendant to the person assuming to discharge him, or actual knowledge and approval of his discharge; and he was bound to see that defendant had knowledge that he refused to acquiesce in his discharge, and that he proposed to hold himself ready at all times to resume his labor: Ibid.

II. LIABILITY OF MASTER FOR SERVANT'S ACTS.

31. To render an employer liable for his employee's fault or negligence, the injury complained of must arise in the course of the execution of some service lawful in itself but negligently or unskillfully performed: Moore v. Sanborn, 2 M. 519.

32. For the wanton violation of law by a servant, although when occupied about the business of his employer, the servant alone is liable: Ibid.

33. A master is responsible for the trespasses of his servants, done under the directions of an overseer, or in the regular course of their employment, and not by wilful wrong. He must keep them within their proper bounds. For wilful misconduct he is sometimes liable and sometimes not: Smith v. Webster, 23 M. 298.

34. A master is not responsible for a positive wrong intentionally or recklessly done by his servant, beyond the scope of his business: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 M. 205.

35. But when the wrong merely arises from an excess of authority committed in furthering the master's interests, and the master receives the benefit of the act, the master's liability does not depend upon any question of the exact limits of the servant's authority: Ibid.

36. One who innocently and for a lawful purpose employs another is responsible only for what is fairly within the authority that he gives him, and not for his trespasses; nor is he liable for the latter's aggravated and wanton wrong-doing in such damages as would be proper if he did it himself or sanctioned it: Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 M. 620.

37. In trespass against an employer for an injury caused by the act of his servant, it is for the jury to decide whether the act was wilful or careless; if wilful, the employer would not be answerable: Wood v. Detroit City Street R. Co., 52 M. 402.

38. The proprietor of a newspaper is liable for reckless libels by his employees: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

39. For those aggravations that arise out of his servant's wantonness and malice the employer is not on the same footing with his servant: Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 M. 805.

As to liability of liquor-dealer for act of employee, see CRIMES, §§ 27, 29; INTOXICATING LIQUORS, §§ 36, 37, 62.

As to master's liability for servant's negligence, see NEGLIGENCE, II.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

See LIENS, II.

MILLERS AND MILL-OWNERS.

As to building mill-races, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 86-89.

As to dams and water-power, see WATERS, V.

1. The statute relating the duties of millers and mill-owners (H. S. §§ 1618-1621) is meant to apply to such mills only as are in the habit of grinding for toll: Merrill v. Cahill, 8 M. 55.

2. Under this statute, millers who hold themselves out to the community as millers grinding for the public generally are bound to a similar impartiality to that required of common carriers, innkeepers, and those following such public avocations. And it is as clearly their duty to receive grain when the mill is running as to grind it when received: Ibid.

3. Where two or more persons own and run such a mill, they are all liable for a refusal to receive grain brought to be ground, whether the refusal comes from one or all such owners, or from the agent in charge: Ibid.

Evidence in suit for refusal to receive grain, see EVIDENCE, § 392.

MINING.

I. IN GENERAL.

II. MINING LEASES; ROYALTIES.

III. MINING COMPANIES.

IV. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. A mere reservation, in a conveyance of minerals, or such a reservation with the right of mining, must always respect surface rights of support, and will not, standing alone, permit the surface to be destroyed without some additional statutory or contract authority; and such authority will be carefully construed to prevent the destruction of surface rights: Erickson v. Michigan Land & Iron Co., 50 M. 604.

2. Easements to do such acts as are reasonably necessary to get out the mineral and remove it from the mine may be granted or reserved so as to attach to the mining estate: Ibid.

3. And the right to use shafts or other mining erections, made and used solely for mining purposes, is in the nature of an easement appurtenant to the mine, so that ejectment for parts of the surface necessarily occupied by them cannot be brought by the grantees in a deed reserving mining rights: Ibid.

4. A tenant in common of a mine in charge thereof for the common benefit, and who holds a lease of adjoining mining lands, is under no obligation to give his whole time to the mine owned in common: Pierce v. Pierce, 55 M. 629.

5. The mere fact of contiguity to mining lands owned by the parties in common does not make out against one party an obligation to participate in the risks, or against the other an impediment to taking the venture into his own hands: Ibid.

6. An agreement to sell the location of a mining company construed, and the rights of the parties thereunder determined: Titus v. Minnesota Mining Co., 8 M. 183.

7. Breaking through the partition wall of an adjoining mine is not necessarily a trespass if not incident to an encroachment upon the latter's premises; and even if there were such encroachment the flow of water through the opening, after the right of action for the original trespass has been barred by lapse of time, cannot be connected with such trespass so as to defeat the operation of the statute of limitations. The mere continuance of the breach is no injury in itself, and as the right of action for the original trespass would have covered the cost of repairing the breach, the bar of the statute destroys that remedy. And a subsequent flooding will sustain no right of action if it only resulted from the exercise, by either mining company, of its right to discontinue operations, or to go on after the other has discontinued: National Copper Co. v. Minnesota Mining Co., 57 M. 83.

8. Whether personal property in use about a mine is a fixture is a question of the intent with which it was annexed to the freehold: Scudder v. Anderson, 54 M. 122.

9. Expenses incurred by one partner of a mining firm in exploring premises leased to the firm for mining should be allowed upon a partnership accounting: Sweeney v. Neeley, 53 M. 421.

II. MINING LEASES; ROYALTIES.

10. A lease of mining land from the war department of the United States government purported to give permanent rights, including a right of pre-emption. An act of congress recognized the control of the war department by providing for its transfer to the treasury department, and it also gave to occupants holding under war department leases a right of pre-emption on certain conditions. Held, that this ratified such lease whether it was originally valid or not, and that one who held an agreement from the lessee entitling him to a specified share of the land when the lessee should obtain title had a claim which followed the lessee's purchase, and obtained thereby an equitable title which the legal owner held in trust for him, and which passed by descent and could be transferred by assignment: Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 M. 39. See same case, 50 M. 578.

11. Leases of coal mining lands for terms of twenty-five years, with the privilege of renewal, were given in 1857 and 1858, but the lessees did not go upon the lands and ceased to pay rent in 1871, apparently thinking that the mines were not worth working. The owners regarding the leases as abandoned, no payment having been tendered for several years, did not bring suit for the rent, but let the lands again to other persons at a higher rental. Held, on an injunction bill brought by the assignees of the original lease to establish their own title and restrain the later lessees from mining the lands, (1) that the owners had a right to regard the abandonment as final and to relet the premises; and (2) that the owners were necessary parties to a bill intended to destroy securities under which they were entitled to increased revenues, and should have been impleaded as defendants: Porter v. Noyes, 47 M. 55.

12. A lease of an equal undivided half of specified premises for all the purposes of mining, including the erection of necessary buildings, also provided that the lessor should not dispose of the interest leased without giving the lessee the refusal of it, and that until sold the lessor should retain, for agricultural purposes, the use of so much of the land as was not needed for mining. Held, that this did not give an ordinary leasehold interest, but a specific mining privilege; the lessee's right, until he took actual possession, was a mere incorporeal right, floating and indefinite, and not enforceable by an action of ejectment: Harlow v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 36 M. 105.

13. And while under it the lessee could open as many mines as he pleased, wherever he liked, and could assign his interest, he could not subdivide it and assign to more than one person, partnership or corporation; and a similar undivided right remained in the lessor: Ibid.

14. A lessee of lands for years can work an open mine upon the premises unless restrained by the terms of his lease; but he cannot open a new mine unless the privilege of doing so is expressly granted: Ibid.

15. After sale of mining lands on execution, the debtor, during the fifteen months he is allowed to remain in possession, has no less rights than a tenant for years; he may not open new mines, but the old ones he may work in the customary and reasonable way, and may sell the ore produced: Ward v. Carp River Iron Co., 47 M. 65, 50 M. 522.

16. Where a lease of land for mining iron ore upon a royalty expressly reserves to the lessors the use and possession of the land for every other purpose, and restricts the lessees' right to cut timber to such as may be wanted for mining purposes, the lessees are not liable for the stipulated royalty upon the ore, if, upon diligent search and exploration, no iron ore is found and none exists in or under the soil; but they are liable to pay the taxes upon the property as agreed in the lease: Gribben v. Atkinson, 64 M. 651.

17. Royalties under a mining lease cannot be recovered by the landlord from the lessee's assignees whom he has excluded from possession and from working the mine: Pendill v. Eells, 67 M. 657 (Jan. 5, '88).

18. A demand for payment of rent or royalty due, though necessary before re-entry, may be waived by the parties. Notice of re-entry or of the intention to re-enter is not necessary: Pendill v. Union Mining Co., 64 M. 172.

III. MINING COMPANIES.

19. Under H. S. § 4004, the company's business office may be in one county and the mining business be carried on in another: Van Etten v. Eaton, 19 M. 187.

20. A mining company has power to buy timber: Adams Mining Co. v. Senter, 26 M. 73.

21. But such a company cannot issue accommodation paper and deliver it to third persons: Beecher v. Dacey, 45 M. 92.

22. The fact that the president and treasurer of a mining company who are also its sole incorporators having substantial interests conducted their business as if they were partners does not enable one who did not deal with them as partners to recover for notes given and taken as corporate notes unless he shows a corporate liability: New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee Bank, 39 M. 644.

As to the powers of superintendents and general agents of mining companies, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 80-86, 140.

23. H. S. § 4052, providing that alienations or mortgages of lands, etc., of mining companies should have no force or effect unless authorized by a three-fifths vote of stock at a meeting called by notice as provided in H. S. § 4051, was enacted to protect the interests of stockholders, and would not enable others to raise questions of irregularity as to the notice: Beecher v. Marquette & P. R. M. Co., 45 M. 103.

See CORPORATIONS, § 137.

24. H. S. § 4015, which was passed to confirm sales or leases by mining companies that had been made in good faith and for value though not according to the requirements of H. S. § 4052 (see supra, § 23), did not make such sales, etc., presumptive evidence of their rightful character; but it must still be shown that they were in good faith, etc.: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 M. 166.

As to stock in such companies, and as to transfers and forfeitures thereof and assessments thereon, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 34, 37, 88, 43, 44, 203, 205, 206.

As to liability of stockholders for labor debts, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 211, 212, 221, 223, 251, 255.

Penalty for failure to file report, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 109, 110.

As to custom excusing mining superintendent from paying rent, see CUSTOM AND USAGE, § 29.

IV. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES.

25. An injury from a mining blast to a person passing along a thoroughfare on the premises of the mining company is not excused by the fact that the road is not a public highway, if the company had opened it for the convenience of all persons who had occasation to use it: Beauchamp v. Saginaw Mining Co., 50 M. 163.

26. A mutual understanding between adjoining mining companies that each, in blasting, may throw rock upon the other's premises will be no defence to an action for injury to a person rightfully on such premises: Ibid.

27. It is negligence not to keep mining works reasonably well protected from a common danger, such as that of falling rocks: Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 89 M. 492; James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 335.

28. Timbering put up in a mine to stay the walls must be adapted to the incidents of mining, such as the falling of ore and rock, and the shock of explosions; and where experienced mining men differ in their testimony as to the adequacy or inadequacy of such timbering, it is for the jury to form their own conclusions: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 335.

29. A declaration for an injury caused by the caving-in of the surface over a mine will cover a case in which the caving-in was due in part to the insufficiency of lateral supports, and need not be confined to one in which the surface fell in because of the removal of that on which it rested: Ibid.

30. If the owner of a mine turns it over to contractors when he knows or should know that it is in an unsafe condition; he is liable for an injury to a miner who goes to work in ignorance of the danger: Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Mining Co., 49 M. 164.

31. But mere ownership of a mine does not impose the duty of keeping it in safe condition; the owner may transfer the responsibility to lessees or contractors, unless he retains control and gives others to understand that they may rely upon him to protect them from the negligence of the occupants: Ibid.

32. And where the owner of a mine in proper condition contracted with certain persons to work it, but the contract provided that the latter, not the owner, should be liable for injuries to workmen, a stipulation in the contract providing that when the contractors repaired the mine the work should be done under the supervision of a person designated by the owner, it was held that such stipulation did not require the owner to supervise, but merely gave him the right to do so, and that neglect of his own interests in this regard would not render him liable for injuries to miners: Ibid.

33. Where a mining company contracting for the removal of ore reserves to itself the power of guarding the mine from dangers, it is liable for such injuries as employees of the contractors suffer, without their own fault, from want of protection; and its responsibility is not changed by the fact that the work is done by the ton instead of by the day: Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 89 M. 492.

34. A common workman employed about a mine, but not himself a miner, is not a fellow-employee of the miners in any such sense that he cannot recover for an injury caused him by the mining operations: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 335.

35. It is for the jury to decide whether an employee is guilty of contributory negligence in passing from a pit mine by way of an inclined track upon which a "skip-car" is run and which track is generally used by the men, it being the most convenient though not the only way of reaching the mine: Luke v. Wheat Mining Co., 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

As to evidence in action against mining company for injury to contractor's employee, see EVIDENCE, § 571.

Taxation valid, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 331.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

(a) Nature of mortgage.

1. A mortgage is no longer in this state what it was originally at the common law — a grant of the land to the mortgagee, defeasible upon condition subsequent, and to become absolute on failure to pay at the specified time. It is a mere chattel interest, a security or lien upon the land for the debt, which can be enforced only by sale on foreclosure. The estate in the land is still in the mortgager; his title is a legal one, and the mortgagee gets no title or right of possession until after foreclosure: Dougherty v. Randall, 8 M. 581; Batty v. Snook, 5 M. 281; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 M. 270; Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 M.

380; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351; Ormsby v. Barr, 22 M. 80; Gorham v. Arnold, 22 M. 247; Wagar v. Stone, 36 M. 364; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 M. 503.

Further as to the rights, etc., of mortgager and mortgagee, see infra, IV, V.

2. Though mortgages are not, in this state, conveyances of lands, yet they are included in the term "deed" in the statute punishing the uttering of forged deeds: People v. Caton, 25 M. 388.

(b) What constitutes; equitable mortgages.

3. An instrument in trust executed by a railroad company to secure the payment of bonds was held to be a mortgage in the ordinary sense of the term, not a sale: Chippewa Supervisors v. Auditor-General, 65 M. 408 (April 14, '87).

4. A written agreement between the parties to a deed made at the same time, and allowing the grantor to keep possession of part of the property deeded, for a specified term, in consideration of his assistance in selling it again, in which event he was to receive certain specified benefits, held not to operate to give the grantor a lien in the nature of a mortgage, and to be no defence to a summary proceeding by the grantee under the statute to obtain possession of the land at the expiration of the term therein granted: Ellis v. Broun, 29 M. 259.

5. An assignment of a mortgage of lands for the purpose of securing the assignor's debt constitutes a mortgage of a mortgage: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 86; Wallace v. Finnegan, 14 M. 170.

6. Where an assignment of a land certificate is meant by the parties as security for debts existing and to be incurred, the relation established between them is that of mortgager and mortgagee: Gunderman v. Gunnison, 39 M. 813.

7. Defendant having assigned certain land certificates, in form absolutely, but in fact as security for debts he was owing to complainants and for advances to be made, and having afterwards paid up the indebtedness and advances, but desiring further advances, it was arranged he should redeliver the assignments as security for such further advances as complainants should make him; and redelivery thereof being made, further advances were made by complainants on the faith of such security, and settlements were had from time to time and defendant's due-bill taken, with interest at ten per cent., for the amount found due. Held, that a bill in equity will lie on complainants' behalf for an accounting as to the amount of such advances and for the foreclosure and sale of such securities unless payment should be made in a reasonable time, in which event the certificates are to be assigned back: Case v. McCabe, 35 M. 100.

8. A. conveyed a farm to B., his son-in-law, in consideration of $2,500. By the same instrument, B. bound himself to pay the debts of A., especially a mortgage on the farm, and to account to A. for the balance of the $3,500, after paying the debts; and B. promised and obligated himself, besides the payment of the $2,500, to board, lodge and clothe A., in health and in sickness, during his natural life, etc., and A. reserved to himself the right to live with B.; and for the security of the payment of the $2,500, and the fulfilling the "clauses and conditions" above stated, B. was not to give, alien, exchange or sell the farm without permission of A., and the farm was to stand hypothecated until the payment in full of the $3,500, when A. was to "release the present mortgage in a legal manner." Held not to be a deed of trust, or a deed upon condition, but an absolute deed, incorporating within it a lien in the nature of a mortgage: Campau v. Chene, 1 M. 400.

9. An agreement in writing, intended by the parties to give a lien on real estate for the payment of a debt, though not witnessed as required by statute to convey real estate, is good as an equitable mortgage: Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 M. 178.

10. P. contracted to sell to A. the undivided half of a tract of land at a price specified in the contract, and by the same contract A. agreed to render his personal services in the care, management and sale of the land. P. conveyed to A. the land in pursuance of the contract, taking back a mortgage to secure its performance. A. having failed to perform on his part, P. files a bill to foreclose the mortgage and claims an equitable lien upon his interest in the land, not only for the value of services which were not rendered, as required by the contract, but for the amount of a deduction from the real value of the interest sold to A., made as a special inducement to A. to enter into the contract. Held, that the considerations moving P. to contract with A. were of such a nature as to present an inherent difficulty in the attempt to estimate the pecuniary damage to P.; and whether or not P. would have a remedy at law for damages occasioned by the breach of contract, they are of a character too uncertain to constitute the subject of an equitable mortgage, or a vendor's lien: Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524.

11. A wife gave a deed of her separate estate, in which her husband joined, to secure a loan made to them, and all parties executed a written instrument explaining the transaction. This arrangement was abandoned, however, and the lender made a new one with the husband to which the wife did not, so far as appears, assent, and which was confined to securing debts of the husband. Held, that proceedings would not lie to enforce the deed as an equitable mortgage: Harvey v. Galloway, 48 M. 581.

12. A stipulation for insurance for a mortgagee's benefit was held in equity to be an adjunct to the mortgage, and as binding the mortgager and all others in his place without notice: Miller v. Aldrich, 81 M. 408.

(c) Deeds absolute on their face; defeasance.

1. Generally.

As to rights under deeds in form absolute, see infra, §§ 228, 229, 234, 237, 238.

13. To render a conveyance absolute in its terms a mortgage, it must be so in its inception. It can never become a mortgage by any subsequent act; and if it once become an absolute deed for a moment it must always remain so: Swetland v. Swetland, 8 M. 483.

14. Where it appears that, by express agreement of the parties, a debt due from the grantor to the grantee was extinguished by the deed, or that the money paid was not advanced by way of loan, or that it is at the option of the grantor to refund or to keep the money, the transaction is a conditional sale and not a mortgage. But if the remedies of grantor and grantee are reciprocal—the former bound to repay the money, the latter to reconvey the premises—then the deed will be construed a mortgage: Ibid.

15. An instrument of conveyance that on its face purports to be given to secure a payment is merely a mortgage: Cowles v. Marble, 37 M. 158.

16. Where a deed is given by a debtor to his creditor to secure a debt, the effect only of a mortgage can be given to the transaction, whatever the intent of the parties: Hosley v. Holmes, 27 M. 416.

17. A deed may be properly taken as security when the amount to be secured is uncertain and depends on future advances: Abbott v. Gregory, 39 M. 68.

18. A debtor conveyed certain lands to a trustee to be sold for the payment of debts, and the deed provided that the surplus and all unsold lands be returned to him after deducting costs and expenses. Held, that it was properly treated as a mortgage: State Bank v. Chappelle, 40 M. 448.

19. A conveyance of land to trustees to secure an indebtedness is only a mortgage, and does not preclude the owner from claiming the title in fee and seeking relief against an illegal tax: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 41 M. 685.

20. A quitclaim deed cannot be considered as a final surrender of all the grantor's interest, where the intention was in fact to secure the grantee for a debt due him from the grantor, and enable him to dispose of the property the more readily for the satisfaction of the debt: Curtiss v. Sheldon, 47 M. 263.

21. A deed to secure money lent, but with an understanding that the land is redeemable by its payment, is a mortgage as between the parties and those who purchase from them with notice: Hurst v. Beaver, 50 M. 612.

22. On exchanging real estate one of the parties gave notes secured by a mortgage upon that which he received, but afterwards, being unable to pay them, reconveyed the property on an oral agreement that the other party should sell it, satisfy the mortgage from the proceeds, and pay him the surplus. The latter sold the property, but did not pay over the surplus, and the former recovered judgment for it in another state, on which judgment he afterwards brought suit in this state. Held, (1) that the plaintiff's right to recover in the former suit was based on the fact that the reconveyance was meant only as a mortgage; (2) that defendant's offer in the latter suit to show how the property was paid for when first conveyed was rendered immaterial by the judgment; (3) that in the later suit the defendant's offer of the reconveyance to show that he was entitled to wheat growing on the land, and to the rent of the premises to the date of their sale, the plaintiff having kept possession, was properly rejected, it having been adjudged that the conveyance was only a mortgage, and that the mortgagee had received the full amount of his debt: Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 M. 448.

23. Where a judgment debtor gave to the attorney of the creditor a deed of lands authorizing him to sell and dispose of them, and apply the money in payment of the judgment, and to execute and deliver to the purchaser a deed, provided the judgment was not paid in six months from that time; and the judgment not being paid the attorney caused the lands to be sold at public auction, and they were struck off to the creditor who was the highest bidder, it was held that the deed was a mortgage, and the right of redemption could not be barred except by foreclosure either at law or in equity: Comstock v. Howard, W. 110.

24. Where the grantee in a deed absolute given as a security sells and conveys to one who has full notice of all the facts, such second grantee will take no greater interest than his grantor had in the premises, and he will hold them subject to be redeemed on payment of the amount due on the mortgage: Wadsworth v. Loranger, H. 118; Emerson v. Atwater, 7 M. 12.

2. Construction; evidence.

25. In doubtful cases courts of equity incline to construe a deed with a condition to be a mortgage; and may do so where a deed and bond to convey are concurrent instruments, in the absence of facts showing the intention of the parties to be otherwise: Sweetland v. Sweetland, 8 M. 482.

26. In doubtful cases the court will lean to the conclusion that a security rather than a conditional sale was intended; and where the idea that a security was intended is conveyed with reasonable distinctness by the writings, and no evil practice or mistake appears, the court will incline to regard the transaction as a security, because of the general reasons which in all cases of uncertainty favor written evidence. But if it satisfactorily appears that a conditional sale was intended, the transaction must retain the stamp which the parties themselves have given to it: Cornell v. Hall, 23 M. 377.

27. A deed absolute in form may be proved by parol to have been intended by the parties to operate only as a mortgage for money loaned; and such proof will entitle the grantor to redeem: Wadsworth v. Loranger, H. 118; Emerson v. Atwater, 7 M. 12; Van Wert v. Chidester, 31 M. 207; Barber v. Milner, 48 M. 248.

28. A deed in form absolute given by one who held a power of attorney to sell and convey may be shown by admissions of the grantee to be a mere security for money loaned: Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 M. 31.

29. Whether a deed in form absolute was in fact a mortgage is a question of intent, and such intent is to be gathered from the instruments executed and from the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, as well as from other testimony: Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 M. 246.

30. The form of a contract cannot prevent an examination of the whole transaction on a bill in equity, if it was entered into in continuation of an earlier agreement: Curtiss v. Sheldon, 47 M. 262.

31. Parol evidence that a deed prima facie absolute was only meant as a mortgage must be explicit; mere general declarations to that effect by a party claiming the benefit of such a construction are not enough: Johnson v. Van Velsor, 48 M. 206.

32. The parol evidence to show that a warranty deed absolute in form was intended to secure a debt and to operate as a mortgage must be clear, unequivocal and convincing, or the presumption that the instrument is what it purports to be must prevail: Cadman v. Peter, 118 U. S. 73.

33. To establish an equitable right in lands in opposition to the muniments of title the parol evidence of the understanding of the parties must be very clear and distinct: Van Wert v. Chidester, 31 M. 207.

34. One who files a bill to have a deed given by him construed as a mortgage has the burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt that this was actually meant to be its effect: Tilden v. Streeter, 45 M. 533.

35. A bill to have a deed construed as a mortgage cannot be sustained unless there is convincing proof in complainant's favor, even though defendant's showing is such as to establish no claim on the confidence of the court: Ibid.

36. The fact of relationship between the parties to a bill filed to have a deed construed as a mortgage has no force except as it is pertinent to the ease and will aid in proving or disproving it: Ibid.

37. In a suit brought by the executors of the grantee in a deed absolute to have it declared a mortgage and foreclosed, and the proceeds applied upon the payment of the debt, the court was equally divided as to whether the evidence showed the deed was intended as a mortgage or not: McMillan v. Bissell, 63 M. 66.

38. The question whether a deed absolute was meant as a mortgage or not may properly be submitted to a jury where the fact depends on extraneous matters: Stevens v. Hulin, 53 M. 93.

3. Defeasance.

39. Where land is conveyed by a debtor to his creditor, and an instrument given back which shows that the land is to be reconveyed on payment of the debt, such instrument cannot be regarded as an agreement for the sale of the land, but the transaction is plainly a conveyance of the land as security for the debt — in other words, a mortgage: Enos v. Sutherland, 11 M. 588.

40. Where a contract is thus given which is really an instrument of defeasance, it is not essential that it be sealed: Ibid.

41. Where A., being indebted to B. in the sum of $2,000, secured on real estate, conveyed to him the same real estate, and took back a contract for the purchase of it from B. for $2,000, payable as therein specified, which contract provided that "time is now, and shall be at all times, considered and deemed a material part of this contract;" and that on default being made by A. in any of its conditions to be performed by him, he should thereupon forfeit all rights under the same, and be thereafter a tenant at will to B. at a specified yearly rent; and it appeared that the transaction was intended merely to secure B. the $2,000 due him, held to be a mortgage; and that A. did not forfeit his right to redeem by a failure to pay at the time specified: Batty v. Snook, 5 M. 281.

42. The mortgager of land that was worth considerably more than the mortgage debt deeded it to the mortgagee and took back a contract of sale which provided that, in case of default in payment, the party of the first part should be entitled to immediate possession, and should also have a lien on the crops. Held, that the deed and contract together, should be construed as a mortgage, amounting, only, to a change in the form of a security for a continuing liability, and that it was unimportant that the conveyance and defeasance were, as indeed was formerly customary, separate instruments: Ferris v. Wilcox, 51 M. 105.

43. The character of a deed as security is not destroyed by the fact that no defeasance was given until after the delivery of the deed, provided the transactions were substantially contemporaneous and were manifestly meant to amount to a mortgage: Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 M. 246.

44. The recital in a bond of defeasance that the obligor will reconvey such interest as he has now acquired establishes the contemporaneous character of the deed and defeasance and cannot be contradicted by parol: Ibid.

45. A bond of defeasance, being under seal, is an instrument of as high order as the deed which it accompanies: Ibid.

46. A bond to reconvey is valid as a defeasance even though it covers lands belonging to a third person and included with the grantor's land by virtue of a power of attorney to him to sell them. It would be good at law as to the grantor's land, and in equity as to the third person's, the last not being mortgageable under a power of sale: Ibid.

47. A deed absolute taken in connection with a bond or separate defeasance or agreement, executed at the same time, to reconvey on payment of a stated sum, constitutes a mortgage if the instruments are of the same date or are executed and delivered at the same time and as one transaction. When this is the case it is a conclusion of law that they constitute a legal mortgage: Ibid.

48. A prior unrecorded defeasance holds as against an attachment lien: Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 349.

49. A defeasance is not required to be recorded except where it relates to a conveyance in form absolute: Russell v. Waite, W. 31.

50. A mortgage debt having been extinguished by a deed of the premises to the mortgagee, who contracted to reconvey the remainder after satisfying the indebtedness out of the property, it could be revived as a lien upon the property only by a mutual rescission of the deed and contract, which would imply a reconveyance so far as to put all parties in statu quo, or by a new subsequent agreement founded upon a new and sufficient consideration; it would be idle to talk of the abandonment of the contract under the circumstances: McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 M. 52.

51. If a mortgage debt were revived by a new and subsequent agreement, the obligation to pay, and the lien, would rest, not upon the old mortgage and note, but upon the new agreement, which alone would constitute the basis of the right to enforce payment or to foreclose, and must be pleaded in an action therefor. Evidence of such an agreement, or of subsequent dealings had in reference to reviving the lien, could not be admitted under a foreclosure bill relying upon the original note and mortgage: Ibid.

As to restoration of mortgage discharged by mistake, see EQUITY, §§ 244, 245, 331-333.

II. VALIDITY; CONSTRUCTION.

As to mortgages by corporations, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 134-139; PLANK ROADS, VI; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, §§ 17-25.

(a) Capacity of parties.

52. At the common law and prior to H. S. § 5657 one could not give a valid mortgage on lands held adversely to him: Hubbard v. Smith, 2 M. 207.

53. Where land is conveyed and a mortgage taken back for the purchase money, the deed and mortgage together constitute but one transaction, and the title only passes by the deed subject to the mortgage. And where the grantee in such case is an infant, he may disaffirm the deed on coming of age, but by retaining the land he affirms the mortgage: Young v. McKee, 18 M. 552.

54. A mortgage given by an infant feme covert to secure her husband's debt is absolutely void: Chandler v. McKinney, 6 M. 217.

55. A wife's deed absolute in form cannot be enforced as an equitable mortgage where the arrangement was simply to secure the husband's debt and was not assented to by her: Harvey v. Galloway, 48 M. 531.

56. A married woman may mortgage her property to secure her husband's or another person's debt: Watson v. Thurber, 11 M. 457; Damon v. Deeves, 57 M. 247.

57. A mortgage made by an insane person was set aside even though the mortgager was not so manifestly insane at the time as to make fraudulent the conduct of the mortgagee in making the bargain it was meant to secure: Curtis v. Brownell, 42 M. 165.

58. The mortgagees of an insane person's grantee cannot be considered bona fide purchasers in order to uphold the deed: Rogers v. Blackwell, 49 M. 192.

59. A mortgage given by a woman of feeble intellect to a person in a confidential relation as a security for a debt of her son was set aside on the ground that the mortgager did not fully understand what she was doing: Wartemberg v. Spiegel, 31 M. 400.

60. The mere addition of the title "guardian" to the name of a mortgager will not of itself invalidate the mortgage where it is manifestly not the purpose in giving it to act as guardian: Brayton v. Merithew, 56 M. 166.

61. A mortgage by a tenant in common upon his interest for his individual debt is valid unless it appears that the real estate was purchased out of partnership funds and held for partnership purposes: Ruppe v. Steinbach, 48 M. 465.

62. One who holds a power of attorney to sell and convey lands has no power to mortgage them, and a deed from him in form absolute, but given as a mere security for money loaned, will not sustain an ejectment: Jeffrey v. Hursh, 49 M. 81, 58 M. 246.

63. There can be no mortgage without a mortgagee: Sinclair v. Slawson, 44 M. 123.

64. A mortgage may be given to one person in trust for another: Comstock v. Stewart, W. 110.

65. A county may take security from an ex-treasurer for moneys received by him and not accounted for; and may take it in the name of a trustee: Bay City State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 M. 447.

66. Where A. was pardoned on condition he secured the payment of $1,000 to the county, a mortgage securing such sum was held good though made, not to the county as such, but to the county commissioners charged by law with "the care of the county property, and the management of the business and concerns of the county;" by implication of law a trust arose, and the mortgagees held as trustees for the county: Rood v. Winslow, W. 340, 2 D. 68.

67. A mortgage executed to a bank organized under the unconstitutional law of 1837 cannot be foreclosed: Hurlbut v. Britain, 2 D. 191.

68. A mortgage made to a corporation organized under a void law cannot be enforced, but a receiver for the corporation can demand an accounting in equity for the debt sought to be secured thereby, such accounting to be with interest after allowing all payments made: Burton v. Schildbach, 45 M. 504.

69. A wife's claim that when she joined in a mortgage with her husband she did not know that it included certain lands belonging to herself, that she had not read the mortgage or heard it read, and that, if she had, she would not have recognized her lands by the description, was not sustained where it appeared that the mortgagee had acted in good faith and had done nothing to mislead her, and where the security, excluding her land, would fall far short of satisfying the debt: Peake v. Thomas, 39 M. 584.

70. Where a husband, having got his wife's consent to mortgaging her land for the purchase price of goods bought by him, obtained — making, however, no false representations — the execution of a mortgage covering, in addition to such purchase price, an old debt of his whereof she was not informed, the mortgage was held valid as to the purchase price only: Smith v. Osborn, 33 M. 410.

71. The defences of undue influence and coercion, set up by a married woman against a mortgage given on her own property to secure her husband's debt, were held not sustained where it appeared that she gave it with reluctance and after much persuasion by her husband, and at first declined to acknowledge it, but finally made an acknowledgment in the usual form and afterwards admitted the validity of the security: Watson v. Thurber, 11 M. 457.

72. A married woman sought to have cancelled, on the ground of mistake and fraud in the execution, a mortgage given by her on her lands to secure her husband's debt, but the proofs failed to make out her case: Frickee v. Donner, 35 M. 151.

73. A man who had promised to loan money to a widow on her giving him a mortgage upon lands wherein she had the apparent legal title of record, fraudulently procured from her a mortgage naming, without her knowledge, a third party as mortgagee. No money was ever paid to her by either person, and the circumstances were such that the mortgagee was chargeable with knowledge of all facts known to the one who procured the mortgage for him. Held, that the security was not enforceable either against the mortgager or against the interests of an infant heir for whom she was in equity holding title: Terry v. Tuttle, 24 M. 206.

74. Where a mortgage was given by the vendee in a land contract in the full belief, induced by the mortgagee's acts and statements, that the rights of the latter were paramount to any that could be claimed under the original contract, and that he had done nothing to recognize or make himself responsible for sales by the mortgager's vendors, which statements were untrue, the mortgager is entitled to have the mortgage set aside as procured by fraud, unless he was, at the time, chargeable with such notice of the facts as should preclude him from complaining: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

75. The rightful owner of lands who has given a mortgage in purchase of a pretended title fraudulently obtained and set up against him is entitled to have it set aside: Hanold v. Bacon, 36 M. 1.

76. A purchase-money mortgagee who had been in possession of the land for five years before mortgaging cannot reduce the amount of his mortgage by showing that he was defrauded in the purchase by false representations concerning the land and the crops thereon: Wright v. Peet, 36 M. 213.

77. Where a son had extorted a mortgage from his parents by oppressive means and for an inadequate consideration, while he was practically in a position of guardianship over them and their property, the security was reduced to what was justly due: Bowe v. Bowe, 42 M. 195.

78. A mortgage given for a large sum by a dissolute spendthrift upon real estate to which he was entitled as heir, to secure payment of small sums of money and the purchase price of lands of little value for which the mortgager had no use, but which the mortgagee required him to buy as a condition of lending him any money, was held not sustainable in equity: Butler v. Duncan, 47 M. 94.

79. A son agreed to support his father and family, and the father conveyed his farm to him. About five years afterwards the son conveyed the farm to his brother, who gave him a mortgage on it for some stock and for expenditures on the land. The grantee immediately conveyed the land to the father, who knew of the mortgage and did not complain of it. But three years later he filed a bill asking that it be cancelled as fraudulent against himself. Held, that the bill could not be sustained on this showing: Tuttle v. Tuttle, 41 M. 211.

80. A mortgage fraudulent as to creditors may be, and usually is, good as between the parties, if there is a consideration to support it: Hess v. Final, 32 M. 515.

81. One who has given a mortgage to be sold for a fraudulent purpose cannot set up the fraud as a defence to the mortgage in the hands of a bona fide purchaser: Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 M. 395.

82. A voluntary mortgage is fraudulent only as to those who are or may be defrauded by it: Brigham v. Brown, 44 M. 59.

83. Nor would it defraud a mere subsequent mortgagee actually or constructively notified: Ibid.

84. The burden of proving fraud alleged as a defence to a mortgage is on the mortgager: Perrett v. Yarsdorfer, 37 M. 596.

85. A mortgage was held to have been forged, and foreclosure was denied, where it was shown that the mortgagee was a grasping money lender, unlikely to run risks, that the mortgage was for a large sum on property of little value, contained no release of dower, and had been assigned without any apparent consideration to a non-resident brother of the mortgagee, in whose name the foreclosure was brought: Matteson v. Morris, 40 M. 52.

86. A forged mortgage is not valid in the hands even of a bona fide holder unless he came into possession of it under circumstances creating an equity in his favor against the nominal mortgager: Camp v. Carpenter, 52 M. 375.

87. If a married woman freely and fully acknowledges as her free act and deed a mortgage, to which her name was penned by her husband with her assent, she accepts the signature as her own and is bound by the mortgage: Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 M. 208.

88. The mortgagers of property deeded it, and afterwards gave a new mortgage in place of the former one for the purpose of correcting an error of description. The consent of the grantees to the execution of the later mortgage was attached thereto in writing, but was signed by only one, the name of the other being added "by his attorney in fact." Held, that the giving of consent by the one who signed was equivalent to uniting in the mortgage, and bound his interest and that of any one claiming under him to the extent to which his interest was encumbered by this consent; but that the other's interest was not bound: Pool v. Horton, 45 M. 404.

As to requirement of wife's signature to mortgage of HOMESTEAD, see that title, §§ 74, 75, 79-86, 88, 90, 92, 93, 98, 99, 102.

89. H. S. § 7778 operates to give a mortgage not under seal all the force that a sealed one would have: McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142.

90. A mortgage without witnesses is good as between the parties: Baker v. Clark, 52 M. 22.

91. Prior to act 62 of 1877 (H. S. § 5662) the husband's presence during the wife's acknowledgment of a mortgage, in which she joined to bar dower or homestead rights, raised a presumption of coercion, and defeated such acknowledgment: Fisher v. Meister, 24 M. 447.

92. A homestead mortgage executed at the joint solicitation and in the presence of the husband and one of the mortgagors, and acknowledged in their presence — if at all — when the wife could not understand English, and when the officer made merely a formal inquiry of her in that language, he speaking no other, was held invalid: Ibid.

93. But even where a mortgage upon the husband's homestead was given in 1871, chancery refused to set it aside for the mere reason that it was acknowledged by the wife in her husband's presence; there being no showing of compulsion or influence, the consideration being sufficient, and the wife having taken no steps to repudiate the security: Norton v. Nichols, 35 M. 148.

94. A wife sought to avoid a homestead mortgage on the ground that she never knowingly signed or acknowledged it. But the justice who took the acknowledgment testified distinctly to the facts, and there was no doubt of the mortgagee's good faith or of the money's having been borrowed and used to build a house on the premises; and the mortgage was sustained: Hourtienne v. Schnoor, 38 M. 274.

95. While a certificate of the acknowledgment of a mortgage may be overthrown by proof of fraud or duress, yet the bare oath of the mortgager, opposed by the officer's testimony, cannot overthrow the presumption of validity: Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 M. 208.

96. An officer taking an acknowledgment is bound to inform himself of the identity of the parties, and a proper certificate of acknowledgment is presumptive evidence of the genuineness of the mortgage to which it is attached: Cameron v. Culkins, 44 M. 531.

97. As a wife's mortgage upon her own land is not invalidated by her husband's joining in it, irregularities in the execution or acknowledgment on the husband's part of such a mortgage do not impair its validity: Frickee v. Donner, 35 M. 151. See infra, § 131.

98. Where a mortgage has been left with a firm of attorneys, acting for both parties, to be delivered only upon the consent of both, and there is a conflict of testimony as to whether or not such consent was ever given, the fact that the mortgagee is found in possession of the mortgage, and the mortgager in possession of an instrument contemporaneously executed by the mortgagees to show what the mortgage was given to secure, the actual delivery of such instrument not being doubtful, raises a presumption that the mortgage also was actually delivered: Hess v. Final, 32 M. 515.

99. A mortgage left with a third party to be delivered, when a prior mortgage had been discharged and other conditions performed, was assigned by the mortgagee to the depositary before the conditions had been fulfilled, and was afterwards assigned to another party before it fell due. Held, that there had been no delivery: Cressinger v. Dessenburg, 42 M. 580.

100. A purchase-price mortgage executed and deposited in escrow to await completion of title in the mortgager, in fulfilment of an oral bargain by the mortgagee to sell the land to him, is, at the time of execution, without foundation or consideration, and is subject to recall at all times before the condition is performed; and a delivery thereof in violation of the arrangement does not operate to make it a valid mortgage, binding on the mortgager: Powell v. Conant, 33 M. 396.

101. As between the parties to it and their representatives, in a controversy respecting the property, the mortgage is sufficient evidence of consideration: Webb v. Mann, 3 M. 139.

102. It is the presumption of fact that the sum mentioned in a mortgage as the consideration therefor is correctly stated: Wiswall v. Ayres, 51 M. 324.

103. A mortgage given by the vendee in a land contract to secure the purchase price of a resale at a larger sum made to him by his vendor's grantee who had no greater rights than the vendor, held without consideration: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

104. A note and mortgage given for a fixed sum and payable absolutely, but with no consideration except an undertaking to furnish goods which the mortgagees afterwards failed to furnish, cannot be enforced where the holder is not a bona fide holder for value: Fisher v. Meister, 24 M. 447.

105. Where a mortgage was given on the understanding that the mortgager should have a future credit, and the mortgagee's agent, who took it, knew that it would not have been given otherwise, it cannot be enforced for a different purpose, and if no credit is thereafter given and no advances made, it is held to be without consideration: Mizner v. Kussell, 29 M. 229.

106. The non-payment of any consideration for a mortgage deprives the mortgagees of all equities: Terry v. Tuttle, 24 M. 206.

107. A mortgage cannot be sustained without an obligation capable of proof: Sackner v. Sackner, 39 M. 89.

108. A man caused land which he had paid for to be deeded to his son. The son conveyed it to his wife by a voluntary conveyance, but without his father's knowledge, and a homestead was created which absorbed about half the purchase money. The father afterwards induced her to mortgage it to him in order that one of the son's creditors might be forced to make better terms. The mortgage was not intended as a genuine security for a real or supposed debt. A bill filed by the daughter-in-law to set aside the mortgage was allowed: Ibid.

109. Where a mortgage does not represent a real debt chancery may order it to be surrendered and cancelled; for a case where this was done, see Teed v. Marvin, 41 M. 216.

See EQUITY, § 251.

110. A person made a bond and mortgage to a partnership, with which he had dealings in the way of mutual accommodation discounts, acceptances and indorsements, and took the receipt of the partnership therefor, which, after describing the papers, concluded as follows: "From which we are to deduct our account with him, and to pay him the balance, or to be returned to him at our option." The party subsequently pursued a similar course of business accommodations, the balance being always against the mortgager, but never equaling the amount of the bond and mortgage. Held, that they must be considered as security for all these dealings: Brackett v. Sears, 15 M. 244.

111. The fact that the balance of accommodations and advances was always in favor of the mortgagees would not entitle them to charge commissions on such balance unless it had been so agreed: Ibid.

112. A mortgage which is so drawn as to cover any demands which the mortgagees may hold against the mortgager cannot authorize the mortgagees to buy up claims against the mortgager and enforce them unless the provision that he may do so is very clearly expressed. The provision can ordinarily cover only such demands as arise directly out of the dealings between the mortgager and mortgagee: Lashbrookes v. Hatheway, 52 M. 124.

113. A printed clause in a mortgage extending it to all debts not covered by the amount specifically stated seems to be to some extent counterbalanced by the presumption arising from the fact that the stamp on the mortgage corresponds to the specified sum: Ibid.

114. A mortgage given to secure all existing debts of the mortgager to the mortgagee is valid without specifying the debts or their amounts. And a subsequent purchaser of the land, with actual or constructive notice of the mortgage, takes subject to it: Michigan Ins. Co. v. Brown, 11 M. 265.

115. Where a mortgage is given to secure the mortgagee for liabilities which it is optional with him to incur or not, such mortgage is at any time a lien upon the land only to the extent of the liabilities then actually incurred; and a deed given by the mortgager and placed upon record will take precedence of the mortgage as to liabilities subsequently incurred: Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 M. 880.

116. The mortgage being duly recorded is notice to a subsequent purchaser; but he is chargeable with notice only to the extent of the liabilities which had been actually incurred prior to his purchase: Ibid.

117. A mortgage to secure a balance of a running account can only be enforced to the extent of money actually advanced or indebtedness actually accruing: Brckett v. Sears, 15 M. 244.

118. A mortgage given for money advanced and lands to be conveyed can only be enforced by the mortgagee to the amount of money advanced, when he has wrongfully refused to convey the land: Robinson v. Cromelien, 15 M. 316.

119. Where, after a mortgage has been given securing a bond, the mortgager's due-bill is substituted by parol agreement for part of the bond, and is made payable at a different date from any provided for in the mortgage, the mortgage-lien is not held to secure the due-bill, unless, at least, it is clearly shown that it was so agreed when the exchange was made: Tucker v. Alger, 30 M. 67.

120. Where a person indebted on certain notes gives a mortgage deed for a sum less than the amount of the notes, and which does not refer to them or expressly identify the debt, or specify a time for payment, or make any provision for interest, it is due as soon as given, and is by implication a security bearing interest from its date, or at least from the maturity of the notes: Eaton v. Truesdail, 40 M. 1.

121. Describing the same parcel twice in a deed thereof from a mortgagee to a mortgager does not show that it was twice taken into account in fixing the amount of the mortgage: Hart v. Carpenter, 36 M. 402.

122. Where, in a conditional pardon, the person pardoned was required to secure the payment of $1,000 to the county, and the county commissioners obtained a mortgage for $1,150 (the $150 being added as the costs of prosecution of the mortgager), the mortgage was held good for $1,000 and void as to the residue: Rood v. Winslow, W. 340, 2 D. 68.

123. A mortgage given in Michigan on settlement of a debt that is payable in Canada is not invalidated by the fact that in fixing the amount of it the current premiums on gold were allowed upon the amount of the Canadian debt, Canadian currency being then on a gold basis: Oliver v. Shoemaker, 35 M. 464.

124. A mortgagee cannot take claims held by third persons against his mortgager and include them in his mortgage unless the mortgager consents and third parties are not prejudiced: Perrin v. Kellogg, 38 M. 720.

(g) Property or interests covered.

1. Generally.

125. Where a mortgage purports on its face to convey an indefinite interest in the premises, not exceeding that possessed by the mortgager, and does not profess to transfer the whole or any particular portion of the premises, or any specific undivided interest, it must be taken as meaning to convey the right which the mortgager had, and subject to all existing equities, and that right or its extent is to be ascertained by inquiry; and the mortgagee is bound to make inquiries and is chargeable with notice of all the facts to which such inquiries must lead: Case v. Erwin, 18 M. 434.

126. A purchase-money mortgage cannot attach to anything which the purchaser did not own at the time of giving it: Brown v. Phillips, 40 M. 264.

127. The fact that one who has purchased undivided shares of certain property has mortgaged his interest as undivided shares does not hinder him from afterwards mortgaging the whole property when he has acquired the remaining shares: Ibid.

128. Where lands are conveyed to three persons, the deed making no reference to a partnership which the three form, one who takes, without notice that such lands are partnership property, a mortgage from one of the three on an undivided third, is not affected by the partnership equities: Adams v. Bradley, 13 M. 346.

129. A mortgage by one partner of his undivided share in lands which had been conveyed to the partners by deed on record, specifying their respective interests, covers such share without being subject to latent equities of the other partners whereof the deed supplies no notice: Van Slyck v. Skinner, 41 M. 186.

130. A mortgage taken in good faith from husband and wife, and covering property the record title to which was in the husband, is not invalidated as to parcels which the wife afterwards claims under an unrecorded deed from her husband on the ground that he had included them in the mortgage by a mistake for which the mortgagee was not to blame: Shepard v. Shepard, 36 M. 173.

131. The fact that the instrument describes the mortgager as the wife of one who joins with her in executing a mortgage of her land does not invalidate it, and it operates to convey her interest as absolutely as though her husband had not joined. Her interest being a fee, and having no dower interest therein, it must be presumed she knew what she was conveying: Yale v. Stevenson, 58 M. 537. See supra, § 97.

132. A wife who has a mortgage on her husband's property does not, by joining in a subsequent mortgage thereon, subject her own mortgage interest to the lien of the later mortgage: Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 M. 81.

133. A mortgagee of one who has previously voluntarily conveyed the premises to another takes nothing: Gale v. Gould, 40 M. 515.

134. A widow who had a life estate in land of which her children were residuary devisees gave a mortgage on the land. One of the children afterward died, so that as the child's heir she became entitled to a share in fee. Held, that as long as there were no outside equities, such as may rise with subsequent purchasers, the interest she acquired by inheritance inured in aid of the mortgage: Brayton v. Merithew, 56 M. 166.

135. A patent obtained by a mortgager and vendee in possession inures to the benefit of his mortgagee and vendor: Haney v. Roy, 54 M. 635.

136. Where a railroad company has mortgaged, before acquiring the title thereto, lands granted in aid thereof, it is afterwards estopped from setting up an after-acquired title against those who claim under the mortgagees: Tucker v. Ferguson, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 527.

2. Description.

137. A mortgage is not to be held void for uncertainty in the description of the premises, unless all means to sustain it have failed: Dwight v. Tyler, 49 M. 614.

138. The omission, from a mortgage, of the names of the township, county and state in which the lands lie, does not invalidate it, if there are other adequate means, such as known descriptive signs, of identifying the lands: Slater v. Breese, 36 M. 77.

139. A mortgage is not necessarily defeated by adding to the description elements that are untrue; such details will be rejected and the mortgage will stand if there is enough to identify the subject-matter: Ibid.

140. Where a mortgage described the land conveyed as "lot four of block one of the La Fountaine farm, lying south of the river road and fronting the Detroit river, being now used and occupied with the steam saw-mill thereon by the parties of the first part," and it appeared that that portion of said farm had been platted into four lots or blocks, which had not been subdivided, that the mill was situated on the one numbered four on the plat, and the others were fenced in, used and occupied with the mill, held, that the words "of block one" of this description should be rejected, and the mortgage held a valid lien upon lot four, according to the evident intent of the parties: Anderson v. Baughman, 7 M. 69.

141. A mortgage described the premises as "the southeast quarter of the quarter of section 32," etc., containing "forty acres." The mortgager owned the entire half of a quarter section, being eighty acres, and the mortgagee, supported by the parol testimony of the scrivener who drew the mortgage, claimed that it was meant to cover this whole parcel. Held, that this construction would contradict the terms of the mortgage, and that the lien must be confined to a quarter section: Hurst v. Beaver, 50 M. 612.

142. Where property was described in a mortgage as "lot number one, in section twenty-eight, on the Forsyth or Porter farm in the city of Detroit—being on the southwest corner of Fort and Sixth streets," which description was correct except as to the section, which should have been eighteen, and it did not appear that there was a section twenty-eight on the farm named, it was held that the record of such mortgage was notice to subsequent purchasers of the property: Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463.

143. A mortgage describing the property as "lot number nine of B.'s subdivision of," etc., when such subdivision contains several blocks each including a lot of that number, the land being vacant and unoccupied, is void for uncertainty as against a later mortgage giving a correct description, and its record is no notice to such subsequent mortgagee: Stead v. Groesfeld, 67 M. 289 (Oct. 20, '87).

144. A mortgage described the lands as follows: "Commencing at the northwest corner of land owned by Joseph Watson, on the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section twenty-three, in township number seven," etc., the italicised words, which would have made out a true description, being omitted. The mortgager, as grantee under a like defective description, had taken possession of the land actually meant to be conveyed, and had improved it. A latter mortgagee by the same defective description had the omission corrected by decree, and foreclosed, and a stranger bid in the land. Held, that the latter was bound by what the records disclosed as to the title under which he purchased, and could not resist a correction sought by the prior mortgagee: Dwight v. Tyler, 49 M. 614.

145. Misdescription does not invalidate a mortgage of a homestead where it would not invalidate a mortgage of any other property, and where the premises can be identified by possession: Beyschlag v. Van Wagoner, 46 M. 91.

146. As to the power of chancery to reform, as against the wife, a mortgage intended to include homestead premises, but which omitted them by mistake, quere. A subsequent grantee who bought with knowledge of the omission and with intent to defraud was not allowed to raise the defence that the wife had not signed the mortgage as to the homestead: Ford v. Daniells, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

147. An alleged mistake in inserting premises that were not intended to be mortgaged calls for very strong proof, and the mortgager's testimony that he really intended to leave certain parcels out of the description is not enough: Shepard v. Shepard, 36 M. 173.

148. An ambiguous description in a mortgage is not to be extended by parol unless upon positive proofs: Hurst v. Beaver, 50 M. 612.

(h) Conditions and stipulations.

1. Generally.

149. A mortgage is to be construed in connection with other writings given at the same time, and in the light of surrounding facts; and where the condition secured is not clear the mortgage is to be construed most favorably for the mortgagee: Stuart v. Worden, 42 M. 154.

150. Where there was some doubt whether a mortgage was, by its condition, payable in work or in money, it was held to be the duty of the court to construe it most strongly against the mortgager, and in such manner as to make it a valid and binding security which might be enforced against him: Jerome v. Hopkins, 2 M. 96.

151. J. gave a mortgage for $10,000, payable in several instalments. As further security for the first four instalments he gave a second mortgage on other premises, conditioned to pay said four instalments as they fell due. The second mortgage also contained a stipulation that whenever J. should build on the premises covered by the first mortgage, and cause the buildings to be insured for $2,000, and assign the policy to the mortgagee, and agree to keep the same so insured during the continuance of the first mortgage, then the mortgagee should discharge the second mortgage. J. built on the premises covered by the first mortgage, and caused the building to be insured, but did not assign the policy. The said four instalments of the first mortgage having become due, and three of them remaining unpaid, a bill was filed to foreclose the two mortgages. J. (who had become insolvent) now tendered an assignment of the policy of insurance, together with a written agreement to keep the building insured, which the holder of the mortgage declined to receive. It was held that under the second mortgage J. had his election to pay the said four instalments as they fell due, or to perform the stipulation therein with respect to building and insuring; that his right to elect terminated when the moneys fell due, and he had no right thereafter to a discharge of the second mortgage on tendering the policy of insurance and agreement to keep insured: Chapin v. Jacobs, 10 M. 405.

152. Where a mortgage contained a condition for the perfection of the title which the complainant mortgagee had undertaken to convey, but which then stood in a third person, an instrument from the latter disclaiming any present title, and quitclaiming all interest "unto whom it may concern," would be of no service in perfecting the title which complainant had undertaken to convey, unless it was shown that the title held by the third person had been previously conveyed either to complainant or to some one under whom complainant claimed: Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 M. 18.

153. Where a mortgage for $2,000 upon premises described in it, and payable in two years, with annual interest, was in the usual form, but contained this clause, viz.: "The said $2,000 being for purchase money of the same, detained by the party of the first part as security for the perfection of the title to be made good by the party of the second part, to wit, a deed from Rice and wife (if any), or in chancery, or his legal representatives, to the party of the first part; also a mortgage to be discharged from record, made by one Joseph French, July 8, 1841, unless the same shall outlaw before the time of payment of this indenture; all to be arranged and completed on or before two years from this date, at which time this mortgage shall become due and be paid; but in case the title shall be made good as aforesaid, prior to the 9th day of September, 1867, the party of the second part shall give ninety days' notice to the parties of the first part of the arrangement of said title as aforesaid, the full term not to exceed two years from the date of this instrument," it was held that the proper construction of this clause is that the $2,000 was kept back as security for the perfecting of the title in the two particulars mentioned within two years, and that the stipulation for annual interest was to be operative only after the title had been perfected, and that the term "outlaw," as here used, referred to the time when by law the mortgage would be presumed paid. Held, also, that there being no stipulation in the nature of a forfeiture, the mortgagee's rights could not be forfeited on failure to comply by the day, if he does so within a reasonable time afterwards: Ibid.

154. Where a mortgage was given to an old person to secure the payment of a debt by boarding and supporting her for five years, the mortgagee was absolutely entitled to the support for the entire period, and the mortgagor was not at liberty to furnish the support or pay the money at his option: Hawkins v. Clermont, 15 M. 511.

155. The condition in a mortgage that the mortgagees shall have the use of a horse and buggy "whenever they or either of them may desire," etc., is joint and several, and either may have a separate cause of grievance for a failure to accommodate him individually: Tucker v. Tucker, 24 M. 426.

156. A court cannot make a decree in advance which shall limit below the actual damage sustained the amount of recovery for future violations of such a condition as one securing to mortgagees the use of a horse and buggy; damages from a failure to perform such a condition cannot be determined in advance, and whenever a complaint is made it must be determined on its own merits: Tucker v. Tucker, 24 M. 426, 27 M. 204. See BONDS, § 20.

157. Where a son had stipulated to furnish his parents the use of a horse and buggy, all parties being farmers and living in the country, it was held that $1.50 per week was in this case a reasonable compensation for the failure to do so: Tucker v. Tucker, 27 M. 204.

158. Breach of the condition of a bond given by a son to support his parents during their natural lives entitles them to foreclose the mortgage securing the bond: Wright v. Wright, 49 M. 624.

159. Where a mortgage is conditioned to indemnify a surety, the mortgagee cannot foreclose until he has been damnified: Thurston v. Prentiss, W. 529.

160. But where a mortgage is conditioned to pay the demand, as well as to save the surety harmless, the mortgagee may foreclose on failure of the mortgagor to pay, in order to raise the money to pay the demand and rid himself of responsibility: Thurston v. Prentiss, 1 M. 198; Dye v. Mann, 10 M. 291.

161. A purchase-money mortgage conditioned to become due on removal of certain specified defects of title is enforceable on performance of the condition, and is not defeasible because of other defects not specified in the condition: Goodenow v. Curtis, 38 M. 505.

162. Any provision in a mortgage of lands which permits ejectment on a mere default in payment, or allows an ex parte order for a receiver of rents and profits, or destroys in advance the equity of redemption, is contrary to equity, and a court of chancery will not enforce it: Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 M. 503.

163. The clause in a mortgage which provides that, upon default in payment of interest, the whole principal sum shall immediately fall due at the mortgagee's option, is in the nature of a forfeiture, and no advantage can be taken of it in cases where the mortgagor, in good faith and on reasonable grounds, denies, though erroneously, his liability to pay interest, or claims that it has been already paid: Wilcox v. Allen, 36 M. 160.

164. Where a purchase-money mortgage contains a stipulation that it shall be "null and void" unless a certain other mortgage, already given by the vendor upon the same property, shall be discharged, the provision is for the benefit of the vendees who give the purchase-money mortgage, and if they do not insist upon it the mortgagee in the prior mortgage cannot: Pool v. Horton, 45 M. 404.

165. Covenants cannot be implied in a mortgage to pay the sum secured thereby: Hove v. Lemon, 37 M. 164; Brown v. Phillips, 40 M. 264.

166. A purchaser under a mortgage is entitled to the benefit of such covenants as run with the land: Ely v. Hergesell, 46 M. 325.

167. A personal covenant in a mortgage will bind the mortgagor's estate after his death: Dennis v. Sharer, 56 M. 224.

168. A wife who joins in executing a mortgage of her husband's property does not become bound by the covenant therein to pay the debt secured: Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 M. 81.

169. A wife does not become indebted to her husband's creditor merely by joining in her husband's mortgage to him: Gantz v. Toles, 40 M. 725.

2. Stipulations for attorneys' fees.

170. A mortgage empowered the mortgagee in the usual manner to sell, "rendering the surplus moneys, if any there be, to the said mortgager, after deducting the costs and charges of such vendue and sale aforesaid, and also [a sum specified] "as an attorney's fee, should any proceedings be taken to foreclose this indenture." It was held that the fee was limited to the case of a foreclosure under the power of sale; and could not be recovered on foreclosure in equity: Sage v. Riggs, 12 M. 313; Van Marter v. McMillan, 39 M. 304; Botsford v. Botsford, 49 M. 29.

171. The allowance in a foreclosure decree in chancery of $75 as an attorney's fee on account of a clause in the power of sale providing for "a reasonable number of dollars" as an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, was held erroneous; the clause refers to a foreclosure under the power of sale, and not in chancery: Hardwick v. Bassett, 29 M. 17.

172. Upon a bill to enforce the discharge of a mortgage complainant was allowed to redeem on paying the amount of the debt with interest and costs, but without the attorney fee provided for in the mortgage: Parks v. Allen, 43 M. 482.

173. Prior to act 133 of 1885, establishing a scale of attorneys' fees in foreclosures by advertisement, the provision for an attorney's fee in a mortgage could not be enforced upon a statutory foreclosure unless an actual sale was made, if at all: Myer v. Hart, 40 M. 517.

174. Where a mortgagee has taken no steps to entitle him to an attorney fee, if such a fee is recoverable at all he is bound to accept such a tender as would be sufficient without it: Canfield v. Conkling, 41 M. 371.

175. A mortgagee made an irregular attempt to foreclose by advertisement, and his notice, which was imperfect, was withdrawn after a single publication; held, that he could not demand the attorney fee provided for in case of foreclosure, and having declined the tender of the full amount due because such fee was not paid, and having refused to discharge the mortgage, he was liable to the statutory penalty: Collar v. Harrison, 30 M. 66.

176. Where there is no statute allowing it a stipulation in a mortgage fixing in advance a gross allowance for the attorney's fee in the event of foreclosure at law is against public policy, and cannot be enforced: Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 M. 455; Louder v. Burch, 47 M. 109; Millard v. Truax, 47 M. 251, 50 M. 343; Kennedy v. Brown, 50 M. 336; Damon v. Deeves, 52 M. 465.

177. A stipulation in a mortgage to pay an attorney's or solicitor's fee of a fixed sum is unlawful and void [unless authorized by statute], and cannot be enforced in a foreclosure by advertisement or in equity: Bendey v. Townsend, 109 U. S. 665.

178. A provision for an attorney fee does not invalidate a mortgage given by an administrator: Griffin v. Johnson, 87 M. 87.

179. The amount of an attorney fee stipulated in the mortgage was paid under protest in order to effect redemption from a statutory foreclosure. Held, that it could be recovered back from the mortgagee to whom the register had paid it over: Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 M. 455.

180. A mortgagee on statutory foreclosure sale bid in the premises for a sum which included the amount he was entitled to claim and also the greater part of an illegal attorney's fee. Held, that the surplus could be recovered from him by the mortgager who failed to redeem; it not having been paid over to the sheriff: Kennedy v. Brown, 50 M. 336.

181. Including an illegal fee in the sum for which a statutory foreclosure sale is made does not necessarily invalidate the sale: Millard v. Truax, 47 M. 251, 50 M. 343.

3. Agreements to pay higher interest.

182. Where, at a mortgager's request, a mortgage creditor has already shown forbearance, on the faith of an oral promise to pay a higher rate of interest than that borne by the mortgage, and the mortgager desires further extension without reference to any particular period, and executes a written agreement to pay such higher rate of interest from the date of the maturity of the mortgage until the principal shall be fully paid, without specifying any time of payment, it was held that such prior forbearance was a sufficient consideration for the promise to pay the additional interest up to the date of the agreement, and that any forbearance which took place after that on the faith of the agreement was a sufficient consideration for the promise to pay the additional interest till fully paid; also that, as between the mortgager and the mortgagee or holder of the mortgage, such agreement would be valid and have the same effect as if the original bond and mortgage had provided for such rate of interest after maturity till fully paid: Burchard v. Frazer, 23 M. 224.

183. But where, at the time such agreement was made, and even before the maturity of the mortgage, the mortgager had sold out all the land covered by the mortgage in separate parcels to various persons, it was held that as to these purchasers it was no more competent for the mortgager to increase the mortgage debt by any such agreement than to affect them by an additional, subsequently executed mortgage for the increased sum. and that such agreement only bound the mortgager personally, and that the lien of the mortgage upon the lands so sold was only for the amount of the principal, with interest, as provided in the original bond and mortgage: Ibid.

184. Where those who have bought mortgaged premises from the mortgagers indorse upon the note secured by the mortgage, after its maturity, an agreement to pay ten per cent. interest on it thereafter, it having borne only seven before, the agreement is only a personal undertaking, not secured by the mortgage even as against the promisors, and much less as against a subsequent purchaser of the lands, who had not assented to the agreement: Spear v. Hadden, 31 M. 265.

185. A note secured by mortgage was indorsed with an agreement to pay a higher rate of interest. Held, that the indorsement was a mere personal agreement and did not enlarge the mortgage: Havens v. Jones, 45 M. 253.

186. A written agreement between a subsequent purchaser and the mortgagee for the payment of an increased rate of interest after due, in consideration of an extension of time, was held to charge the land where there were no third parties having intervening rights: Smith v. Graham, 34 M. 503.

187. A mortgagee has a right to stipulate for ten per cent. interest as a condition to extending time of payment, and if paid and applied as interest, the application will not be disturbed: Havens v. Jones, 45 M. 253.

(i) Power of sale.

As to foreclosures under, see infra, XI.

188. The authority to sell is a special power and must be strictly pursued: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 338.

189. A power of sale is no necessary part of a mortgage, and a defect in it does not affect the validity of the mortgage: State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 M. 447.

190. The omission of the power of sale from a mortgage merely limits the mode of foreclosure to that by bill in equity, and does not show the instrument to be a conveyance: Cowles v. Marble, 37 M. 158.

191. Where the power of sale in a mortgage contains a palpable clerical error in the recital of the sum due, the mortgagee may, after default, disregard it, and foreclose for the sum actually due: Damon v. Deeves, 62 M. 465.

192. A statutory authority to mortgage is to be understood as authorizing the ordinary power of sale to be inserted in the mortgage: Joy v. Jackson, etc. Co., 11 M. 155.

193. Under the statute of April 19, 1883, the power of sale continued in force as a personal power, until completed by deed, in the person who acted when the property was struck off, passing, in case of his death, to his personal representatives, and not to any official successor: Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

III. PRIORITY OF LIEN.

See NOTICE; RECORDING ACTS.

194. Where two mortgages on the same property have the same date, the fact that the one recorded last was acknowledged first does not show that it was meant to be the first security: Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 M. 477.

195. Where a mortgager testifies in general terms that he gave the mortgage at a specified time, and is not questioned as to the particulars of delivery, this testimony must be regarded as showing delivery at that time: Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 M. 393.

196. The fact that the value of land is not enough to secure two loans is significant, but not conclusive, evidence that the second mortgagee had no notice of the prior lien: Ibid.

197. A complainant in foreclosure desired to show that the mortgage held by him was delivered and recorded before another one of previous date held by a person who had died before the suit was begun; and he sought to show it by the testimony of a witness who claimed the decedent had told him his mortgage was neither acknowledged nor delivered until the other was put on record. The witness had lived five or six miles from decedent, and was not shown to have been his confidant. Complainant had a mortgage on the lands of the witness. Held, a suspicious circumstance that he had never mentioned his conversation with decedent in the latter's lifetime, nor until after complainant's suit had been pending seven years, and until complainant had called upon him, just before he was sworn, to know if he was possessed of valuable information: Ibid.

198. A mortgage was taken which, by mistake, omitted certain property it was intended to cover. A third person authorized to procure its correction secured for himself a mortgage upon the whole, and offered the original mortgagees an interest in this mortgage to the amount of the former one. The offer was declined. Held, that the original mortgage remained in force and was prior to the other, and a decree was made rectifying and foreclosing it: Hunt v. Hunt, 88 M. 161.

199. One who takes a second mortgage, having had sufficient notice of a misdescription in the first to put him on inquiry, cannot claim priority as to a tract that was designed to be embraced in the first: Michigan Mut. Ins. Co. v. Conant, 40 M. 530.

200. A vendee of land gave to the vendor a purchase-money mortgage before delivery of the deed to him, and afterwards, at the time the deed was actually delivered, he mortgaged the premises to a third person in whose presence the delivery was made and who had no notice of the prior mortgage. Held, that the second mortgagee was entitled to priority: Heffron v. Flanigan, 37 M. 274.

201. The parties to a mortgage agreed that a new one should be substituted with a clear title. Upon the same day on which this was done, and without the knowledge of the mortgagees, another mortgage was given to the mortgager's father-in-law, who had advanced considerable money to the mortgager's wife without asking repayment. The testimony indicated that the mortgage was made to him without his participation, and with the fraudulent purpose of giving it priority. Held, that it must be postponed to the other mortgage, since even if he were an honest mortgagee, his mortgage, if made first, was on premises already encumbered, and he had no equities which would make it anything but a second mortgage; and if the original mortgage was exchanged under a false pretence that the title was to be cleared, he was in no position to object to the restoration of the old security in behalf of the original mortgagees: Eggeman v. Harrow, 37 M. 436.

202. A claim of priority set up by a foreclosure defendant in behalf of a mortgage on the same premises and of the same date with the one in suit, but not recorded until two days later, was held not to be sustained by the proofs: Clark v. Johnson, 32 M. 263.

203. Where one mortgage was substituted for another, and by a corrupt arrangement with the mortgager, a third person, knowing the facts, procured and took advantage of an interval between the discharge of the original mortgage and the recording of the substitute to record a mortgage which he obtained meanwhile for himself, and did this with the fraudulent purpose of securing priority, his mortgage was postponed to the other: Waldo v. Richmond, 40 M. 380.

204. The grantee of a mortgager quitclaimed to him in satisfaction of his foreclosure decree, and the mortgager then recorded a later mortgage from the grantee to himself before the quitclaim deed could be recorded. Held, that the later mortgage should be set aside and the quitclaim deed permitted to stand by reason of the fraud: Corey v. Alderman, 46 M. 540.

205. Where there were two mortgages of an equitable title to lands, that which was prior in time was allowed to prevail; nor would a subsequent obtaining of the legal title in right of another and not in one's own right, or with knowledge of the prior mortgage, aid the holder of the other: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

206. Whether the prior mortgagee of an executory land contract, whose mortgage was given to secure an antecedent debt, has rights paramount to those of a subsequent mortgagee under a mortgage after the acquisition of the legal title by the mortgager, quere; the court being equally divided: Edwards v. McKernan, 55 M. 520.

207. A corporation executed a trust mortgage to secure bonds for $12,000 or such part thereof as it should borrow, and bonds were issued for about $6,500 borrowed. To a foreclosure of said mortgage parties to whom a second mortgage on the same property had been given to secure them from liability as indorsers of the corporation's note for $10,000 were made parties as subsequent encumbrancers, and pending foreclosure a bond for $5,500 was delivered to them. Held, upon a cross-bill filed by such indorsers, that the corporation officers had no power to issue this bond of which the effect was to lessen the security of the original bondholders, to secure indorsers upon a note not intended to be secured by bonds when given; and that the lien of such indorsers was subordinate to that of the original bondholders: Woodin v. Sparta Furniture Co., 59 M. 58.

208. A mortgage given to secure corporate bonds which as the mortgagee knew had never been sold, but were turned over to him without authority as security for the private debts of the company's treasurer, was postponed to a subsequent levy: McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. Street R. Co., 41 M. 274.

209. Anything done by a first mortgagee to the prejudice of a second, with a knowledge of the second mortgage, should, to the extent of such injury, postpone the first to the second mortgage: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478; James v. Brown, 11 M. 25.

IV. RIGHTS, INTERESTS AND LIABILITIES OF MORTGAGERS.

As to right of subrogation, see infra, VIII.

210. The constructive possession of vacant land as between the mortgager and mortgagee must be deemed to be in the mortgager: Albright v. Cobb, 84 M. 316.

211. Where one when he gave a mortgage was in possession under color of title, he is presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to be owner of the inheritance: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

212. The mortgager now having a legal right to possession until the mortgage is foreclosed may make any arrangement for the use and enjoyment that any person might during his term: Crippen v. Morrison, 13 M. 23.

213. A mortgager of land is entitled to possession until foreclosure, and does not forfeit this right by failure to make payments as stipulated: Ferris v. Wilcox, 51 M. 105.

214. The mortgager, not the mortgagee, is entitled to the rents, issues and profits of the mortgaged premises until foreclosure becomes absolute: Wagar v. Stone, 36 M. 364.

215. The mortgager is entitled to recover the possession from his mortgagee at any time before his rights have been foreclosed: Humphrey v. Hurd, 29 M. 44.

216. A mortgager whose personal liability for the mortgage debt has become extinguished is not disabled legally from obtaining title in good faith under the foreclosure of another mortgage which has legal priority. And where no fraud or collusion appeared, although charged, a bill to subject such foreclosure purchase to the subsequent mortgage was properly dismissed: Burdick v. Wheelock, 48 M. 289.

217. One who gives a purchase-money mortgage that includes lands not granted to him is not estopped as against the grantors and mortgagees from denying that it covers those lands if he acquire them afterwards: Brown v. Phillips, 40 M. 264.

218. How far the rule that a mortgager holding by warranty deed and not ousted or disturbed cannot set up an outstanding title by way of defence to a foreclosure should be applied, querre: Powell v. Conant, 33 M. 396.

219. One who has given a mortgage to be sold for a fraudulent purpose cannot set up the fraud as a defence to the mortgage in the hands of a bona fide purchaser: Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 M. 395.

220. As between the mortgager and first and second mortgagees, the duty of paying taxes is primarily upon the mortgager, and he cannot cut off their rights by acquiring tax-titles: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulle, 45 M. 113.

221. Where a mortgage is expressly made subject to prior mortgages their validity cannot be denied by the mortgager or his assignee in bankruptcy: Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734.

222. If two men give a mortgage for money borrowed by both, and one pays it, he is entitled to recover one-half the amount of the other, and the defendant is not entitled to reduce the recovery by showing that the money was in fact borrowed for the benefit of a partnership composed of themselves and a third person: Goodrich v. Leland, 18 M. 110.

When mortgagee may claim benefit of insurance paid to mortgagee, see INSURANCE, §§ 101, 102.

V. RIGHTS, ETC., OF MORTGAGEES.

223. The mortgagee's interest in the lands is not subject to attachment: Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 349.

224. The legal title to mortgaged land was, at the common law, in the mortgagee, who was entitled to possession, and who might, at any time after default, if not before, unless the mortgage should otherwise provide, put the mortgager out by ejectment: Stevens v. Brown, W. 41; Mundy v. Monroe, 1 M. 68; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392; Albright v. Cobb, 84 M. 316.

As to nature of the interest now taken by the mortgagee, see supra, § 1.

225. If a mortgagee has entered into possession as purchaser under defective foreclosure proceedings, the validity of his mortgage is not affected, and he can claim all the rights of a mortgagee in possession under his mortgage: Todd v. Davis, 33 M. 160; Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

226. The mortgagee at the common law was entitled to the possession of the land mortgaged, and the court of chancery would not prevent him from taking possession, or, if he was in possession, deprive him of it, so long as there was anything due on the mortgage: Schwartz v. Sears, W. 170.

227. By the operation of the statute of March 8, 1843, forbidding ejectment by mortgagees (H. S. § 7847), they are not entitled to possession until after foreclosure (but said statute was inoperative as to prior mortgages: see EJECTMENT, §§ 42, 43): Baker v. Pierson, 5 M. 456; Caruthers v. Humphrey, 13 M. 270; Newton v. Sly, 15 M. 391; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351; Newton v. McKay, 30 M. 380;

Wagar v. Stone, 36 M. 364; Lee v. Clary, 88 M. 228; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 M. 508; Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

228. But this is a provision for the benefit of mortgagers, and they are not obliged to insist upon it. If in mortgaging their lands they give a deed that is in form absolute, they thereby convey the right to possession: Bennett v. Robinson, 27 M. 26, 30; Jeffery v. Hursh, 42 M. 563; Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

229. Though a deed, absolute in form, but intended as a security, will leave in the grantor the right of a mortgager to redeem, it does not follow that he would be entitled to maintain possession until foreclosure under H. S. § 7847: Wetherbee v. Green, 22 M. 311.

That the grantee in a deed absolute in form may bring ejectment, see EJECTMENT, § 49.

230. Where a mortgagee is deliberately and intentionally put in possession by the mortgager, his possession is rightful, and ejectment cannot be brought against him without some action previously taken which will terminate his right and render his continuance in occupancy wrongful: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

231. A mortgagee put into possession before foreclosure by the mortgager's consent has at least a tenancy at will which cannot be destroyed without notice: Byers v. Byers, 65 M. 598 (April 28, '87).

232. And consent to the mortgagee's taking possession, which would be good until revoked, might be given without any writing, and as informally as possible: Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

233. The mortgager's assent to the possession of the foreclosure purchaser should be presumed if much time has passed without any question as to the validity of the foreclosure; and such assent would entitle the purchaser to hold as mortgagee, if not as owner, except as against proceedings to redeem: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

234. A deed absolute given by way of security conveys no right of possession, if the papers show that the relation between the parties thereto is that of mortgager and mortgagee, and that the mortgager is left in possession under an arrangement which amounts to a defeasance of the deed: Ferris v. Wilcox, 51 M. 105.

235. When a mortgager's administrator has parted with the title to the premises, his permission to the mortgagee to take possession of them is of no more force than if given by a stranger: Newton v. McKay, 80 M. 380.

236. Where the mortgagee has been in possession of the mortgaged premises, and the mortgager comes with his money to redeem, the mortgagee must account for the profits of the mortgaged premises, of which the crops he may have appropriated or destroyed will be considered a part: Stevens v. Brown, W. 41.

237. If a creditor, who has taken a deed absolute as security, conveys the land to a bona fide purchaser, he must account to the debtor for its value at the time of the sale, whether he received that amount or not: Enos v. Sutherland, 11 M. 538.

238. The grantees in possession under a deed absolute in form, but given by way of security merely, do not stand exactly in the same position in reference to an accounting for the rents and profits as ordinary mortgagees who have taken possession by way of enforcing their security; they are agents of the grantors as well as mortgagees, and are chargeable for any failure to obtain full rental value for the premises only on the same grounds as an agent thus put in possession: Barnard v. Jennison, 27 M. 230.

239. A mortgagee without notice is not affected by the fact that the land was conveyed to his mortgager upon the latter's agreement to pay the grantor's debts: Farland v. Caton, 69 M. 235 (April 6, '88).

240. Where a mortgage had been destroyed without recording, and the mortgager's son, to whom he had conveyed the land, gave a new mortgage in exchange for the note to which the old one was collateral, held, that in a suit to foreclose the latter mortgage the complainant could not question the validity of the conveyance to defendant from his father, since, having parted with his prior unrecorded lien, said complainant must stand upon the new mortgage received in its stead; whatever defeats the mortgager's title defeats the mortgage lien: Sloan v. Holcomb, 29 M. 153.

241. The English doctrine of tacking is not recognized in Michigan: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175; Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 18 M. 380.

242. An insurance policy taken out by the mortgager, in which the insurance is stated to be for the benefit of the mortgagee, creates no contract relation between the latter and the insurer, and whatever defeats the mortgager's right of recovery defeats any right of the mortgagee: Van Buren v. St. Joseph C. V. F. Ins. Co., 28 M. 398.

When may sue on policy, see INSURANCE, §§ 54, 288-292.

243. A mortgagee of land cannot avail himself of an agreement made with a third party by a mere owner of the equity of redemption to pay the mortgage, where such owner was not a party to the mortgage nor in any way liable for the debt secured by it: Stuart v. Worden, 42 M. 154.

244. A mortgagee owes no duty to the mortgager or to a subsequent mortgagee to protect the land from tax-sales: Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 118.

245. A mortgagee can protect his mortgage interest against taxes that the mortgager should have paid, and the amount he pays in doing so may be added to the charge upon the land: Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524; Vaughn v. Nims, 36 M. 297; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 118.

246. On foreclosure for non-payment of taxes as they fell due the mortgagee claimed to recover, as taxes paid by himself, certain sums paid by his agent in bidding in the property at tax-sales. Held, that such payments were not, in contemplation of law, payments of the taxes, and could not be included in the decree: Maxfield v. Willey, 46 M. 252.

247. If, before foreclosure, a mortgagee pays taxes and insurance which the mortgager ought to have paid, the sum paid may be included in the amount for which he forecloses, even though the insurance was taken for the full period allowed for redemption; but for such payments made after foreclosure sale the power of sale cannot again be asserted: Walton v. Hollywood, 47 M. 885.

248. If a mortgagee accepts a mortgage on lands already subject to returned taxes, the mortgage being silent as to taxes, and redeems soon after the tax-sale without giving the mortgager an opportunity to do so instead, he cannot claim that his redemption certificate is a lien on the land as against a subsequent purchaser who has paid the mortgage in full without notice of the claim of lien: Pond v. Drake, 50 M. 302.

249. Money paid by the holder of a mortgage to redeem the premises from a tax-sale does not constitute a lien apart from the mortgage, but is discharged when the mortgage is satisfied; and whether the amount paid is or is not included in the sum for which the mortgage is foreclosed, there can be no subsequent or separate proceeding against the mortgager to enforce its payment: Vincent v. Moore, 51 M. 618.

250. Where a mortgagee has acquired a tax-title to protect the mortgage, a foreclosure decree may provide for the payment to him of the cost thereof on condition that he assign the certificate of purchase to the mortgager: Baker v. Clark, 52 M. 22.

251. Where a covenant to insure is not kept by the mortgager, the mortgagee may insure, and can add the premium, if fair and reasonable, to his debt: Leland v. Colver, 84 M. 418.

252. One who indemnifies a mortgagee against a tax-title cannot afterwards set up the tax-title against his title as purchaser on foreclosure: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

253. Where a mortgagee brings trespass for the removal of a building from the mortgaged land, counting upon the foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, and the existence of a deficit thereunder, to satisfy the debt, he cannot recover unless he shows a deficiency upon a regular and legal foreclosure and sale: Taylor v. McConnell, 53 M. 587.

254. Where, after foreclosure, the mortgager's title turns out to have been invalid, and he, taking advantage of a curative act, obtains a confirmatory patent from the state, the mortgagee may have his lien reinstated in equity: Toms v. Boyes, 50 M. 852.

255. Where a paid-up lease for a certain period was given to mortgagees as additional security, who had the option to hold over on paying a fair rental, held, that whether or not they gave up possession at the date fixed, their mortgage security remained and they could enforce it if the debt was not duly paid; and that the mortgager could pay the debt at any time after it became due and so extinguish the security: Dutton v. Merritt, 41 M. 587.

256. And the foreclosure of the mortgage would not prevent the mortgagees from resorting to any additional security they might have, and they would have a right to apply the amount of rent due from them and unpaid in satisfaction of their debt: Storey v. Dutton, 46 M. 539.

257. A mortgagee compelled after foreclosure to redeem from taxes that had become a lien on the lands through the tax collector's false return nulla bona has an action against the latter: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 842.

258. But not if the tax itself was void: Raynsford v. Phelps, 49 M. 815.

259. Payment of taxes by the mortgagee of land does not necessarily give him a right of action against the mortgager as for money paid to his use: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 842.

VI. RIGHTS, ETC., OF SUBSEQUENT PURCHASERS OR ENCUMBRANCERS; ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE; MARSHALLING SECURITIES.

(a) In general.

Measure of damages to purchaser for breach of covenant to pay mortgage, see CONVEYANCES, § 367.

260. Subsequent grantees or encumbrancers of mortgaged premises have a right to rely upon the record as determining the amount of the mortgagee's claim, and they are not charged with notice of the conditions of the bond to which the mortgage is collateral, but which are not expressed in the mortgage: Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524.

261. Title obtained by foreclosure will ensure to the benefit of the purchaser's grantee by estoppel under his warranty: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 223.

262. One who has sold mortgaged land with warranty and has covenanted to pay off the mortgage cannot make title in himself as against his grantee by allowing foreclosure and redeeming the land: Huxley v. Rice, 40 M. 78.

263. Where both parties to a conveyance of land that is mortgaged suppose that a title in fee is being transferred, though in fact it is not, and the grantor afterwards purchases the land at the foreclosure sale, he is bound in equity to recognize the grantee's right to a perfected title. And if he further becomes a party to an arrangement whereby a third person takes a deed from the grantee and gives back a mortgage that he, the grantor, disposes of for his own purposes, he is then estopped from disputing that his original deed conveyed title and that his foreclosure purchase related back to it: La Cosa v. Wadsworth, 56 M. 421.

264. A subsequent purchaser cannot maintain a bill to cancel a mortgage on the premises on the ground that the mortgager and mortgagee agreed to an extension, and that by delay in foreclosing the value of the mortgaged property has been diminished and the mortgager has become insolvent. Such a purchaser is not a mere surety: Case v. O'Brien, 66 M. 289 (June 9, '87).

265. One who purchases a parcel of land subject to a mortgage upon that and other property, and with full record notice of a conveyance of the other property, gets no greater rights by virtue of such purchase than his grantor had; and in a suit for the foreclosure of the prior mortgage, and to marshal the securities, he is not in a position to attack such deed for want of consideration: Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463.

266. The vendee of an equity of redemption stands in the place of the mortgager, and holds the property subject to all encumbrances; and where there were two mortgages, and the mortgaged premises had been sold on foreclosure at law of the first mortgage, it was held that the vendee of the equity of redemption could not, by paying the redemption money, and taking an assignment from the purchaser of all his interest in the land, claim the rights of such purchaser for the purpose of defeating the second mortgage: Johnson v. Johnson, W. 381.

267. The purchaser of an equity of redemption who has gone into possession under his purchase is estopped, when proceedings are taken to foreclose the mortgage, from denying the title of the mortgager: Wanzer v. Blanchard, 8 M. 11.

268. One who buys land and receives a conveyance subject to a mortgage thereon cannot afterwards contest the validity of the mortgage on the ground of defect in the formalities of execution: Disbrow v. Jones, H. 48.

269. One who has bought lands subject to a mortgage, and has subsequently expressly recognized it by an agreement with the mortgagee for forbearance, cannot thereafter dispute its existence or validity: Smith v. Graham, 84 M. 302.

270. A second mortgagee takes subject to a prior unrecorded mortgage expressly referred to in, and excepted from, the deed to his mortgager: Baker v. Mather, 25 M. 51.

271. A second mortgagee can take up the first mortgage, tack it to his own and foreclose for both: Manwaring v. Powell, 40 M. 371.

272. The maker and indorser of a note secured by a mortgage are not released from their obligation to pay it by the fact that it has been taken up by the holder of a second mortgage with whom they had no relations. Payment of a first mortgage by a second mortgagee makes him in equity an assignee of such first mortgage, and he may resort to all suitable remedies to enforce payment: Mattison v. Marks, 31 M. 421.

273. A second mortgagee who has foreclosed and bid in the property succeeds to the mortgager's rights and can make any defence against the other mortgagee that the mortgager could have made: Thompson v. Jarvia, 39 M. 689.

274. Where a subsequent mortgagee pays the redemption money of the mortgaged premises to the purchaser under the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, he does not succeed to the rights of such purchaser, but stands in the place of the prior mortgagee; the only additional right which he acquires being the right to be reimbursed what he has paid, with interest, on foreclosing his own mortgage: Johnson v. Johnson, W. 331.

275. Where the holder of a mortgage released a note that was given with it, reserving at the same time his right to foreclose the mortgage on the land, and a second mortgagee, with notice of the first mortgage, had, prior to the release, foreclosed his own mortgage at law, and purchased the premises, the latter was held to stand in the place of a purchaser of the equity of redemption, subject to the first mortgage, and the premises in his hands, as such purchaser with notice, to be the primary fund for the payment of the first mortgage: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478.

276. Where a decree in a foreclosure suit is opened to let in a defence, on petition of a defendant, after a sale has been made to complainant under the decree, no one will be bound by the proceedings on such petition except parties to it, and those who have subsequently acquired interests under them. A purchaser under the defendant before the decree was opened would not be affected by such proceedings unless made a party to them and allowed an opportunity to be heard: Stone v. Welling, 14 M. 514.

277. The owner of premises twice mortgaged conveyed them subject to the mortgages after the first had been foreclosed. Before the time of redemption had expired the grantee redeemed, and, having obtained a quitclaim to his wife from the first mortgagee, claimed that she held in her own right under a foreclosure from which the property had not been redeemed, and that the second mortgage was cut off. Held, that as her name was only used as a cover where her husband was the real party in interest, and as the transaction was probably understood by the mortgagee as substantially a redemption, no equity was made out in the wife's favor: Wright v. Patterson, 45 M. 261.

278. Where one having a second mortgage allows the land to be sold for taxes and obtains a tax-deed, he cannot use it adversely to the first mortgage: Horton v. Ingersoll, 18 M. 409.

279. A second mortgagee who has foreclosed and bidden in the premises can obtain a tax-title to them, and if it is allowed to become absolute he has a right to use it as a defence to an action of ejectment brought by the first mortgagee, unless the latter tenders repayment: Conn. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 M. 118.

280. A second mortgagee is under no obligation to protect the lien of the first mortgagee by the payment of taxes or by purchasing the premises for his benefit at a tax-sale; but if he does pay or purchase, the act ipso facto constitutes a protection: Ibid.

(b) Assumption of mortgage.

281. The purchaser of lands who has covenanted as part of the purchase price to pay a mortgage given by his grantor cannot avoid his liability by showing that the mortgage was not enforceable against such grantor by reason of a personal disability to execute a valid and binding mortgage: Comstock v. Smith, 26 M. 306.

282. Nor can he resist the mortgage by showing that it was without consideration, or that by reason of a mistake in the description he acquired no legal title, where he obtained possession under his deed of the proper premises, and the right to have the mistake corrected: Crawford v. Edwards, 83 M. 854.

283. Where a grantee has assumed a mortgage made by the grantor, and the amount thereof has been deducted from the purchase price, he cannot dispute the legal execution of the mortgage or its amount as specified in the deed; and after he has paid interest on the mortgage for eighteen months without complaint he cannot be heard to complain that the clause subjecting his deed to the mortgage was fraudulently inserted: Miller v. Thompson, 84 M. 10.

284. The acceptance by a grantee of a deed conveying lands subject to a specified mortgage, and providing that he shall assume and pay the mortgage, binds him, and the provision inures to the benefit of the mortgagee, who may enforce it in equity: Crawford v. Edwards, 83 M. 854; Miller v. Thompson, 84 M. 10; Taylor v. Whitmore, 85 M. 97; Carley v. Fox, 88 M. 887; Unger v. Smith, 44 M. 22.

285. Where a purchaser buys mortgaged premises from the mortgagor subject to the mortgage and agreeing to pay it as part of the purchase price, and his deed is expressly made subject to it, though it does not in terms bind him to pay it, he is to be treated, as between himself and the mortgagor, as having assumed the mortgage, and is personally liable for whatever deficiency there may be after foreclosure sale: Canfield v. Shear, 49 M. 818.

286. Whether on mortgage foreclosure a personal liability can be enforced against one who is not a party to the mortgage but has bought the land subject thereto, and without making anything more than a parol agreement with the grantor to pay it, quere: Gage v. Jenkinson, 58 M. 169.

287. A grantee purchasing mortgaged premises subject to the encumbrance does not become personally responsible for the debt, and only loses the premises in case of foreclosure; but a grantee who assumes the encumbrance is presumably responsible for the debt: Winans v. Wilkie, 41 M. 284.

288. One who has only purchased mortgaged land subject to the encumbrance is not personally liable, though, if he has promised to pay the mortgage, he may be made a defendant in foreclosure if he can be found in the jurisdiction, and a decree may be rendered against him for any deficiency after sale: Booth v. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 48 M. 299.

289. A deed containing a covenant of warranty "against all lawful claims whatsoever subject to a certain mortgage given by the parties of the first part for one thousand dollars" merely leaves the title subject to be defeated by a failure to pay the mortgage debt, but does not bind the grantee to pay it. And the exception is not such a written contract as will exclude evidence to show that, in addition to the consideration expressed, the grantee had also agreed to pay off the mortgage. The exception and the agreement are distinct: Strohauer v. Voltz, 42 M. 444.

290. Where it is doubtful whether a deed of mortgaged premises binds the grantee to pay existing encumbrances, evidence of the value of the premises or of the agreed consideration for them, and as to whether the grantee retained any of the consideration to pay the debt, is admissible to aid in construing the deed: Winans v. Wilkie, 41 M. 264.

291. One who takes a deed of mortgaged land will be personally liable on the foreclosure of the mortgage if his deed expressly binds him to pay it; but a covenant to do so cannot be implied by either deed or mortgage: Gage v. Jenkinson, 58 M. 169.

292. Where a grantee of land agreed to pay a mortgage on it, but did not do so, and the land was sold for less than the mortgage debt, the fact that the foreclosure decree does not show how much was due as principal and how much as interest is immaterial in an action against the grantee for damages resulting from his failure to pay the debt. He is liable for what he agreed to pay and no more, and evidence of the foreclosure is only important as showing that the land, which was a fund in his hands from which the mortgage might have been paid, had been exhausted without satisfying the debt: Strohauer v. Voltz, 42 M. 444.

As to personal decrees for deficiency, see infra, X, (i), 2.

That sureties on chancery appeal bond are not liable thereon for deficiency, see APPEAL, § 182.

(c) Marshalling securities.

293. The rule of marshalling assets must be applied so as to protect and not destroy equities: Southworth v. Parker, 41 M. 198.

294. The doctrine of marshalling assets must not be applied to the mortgagee's injury; its purpose is to protect as far as possible later interests: Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 88 M. 430.

295. Where two persons have a lien on the same piece of property, which is not sufficient to satisfy both, and one of them has a lien for his debt on another piece of property, he must exhaust the latter before resorting to the common fund: Troubridge v. Harleston, W. 185; Cooper v. Bigly, 18 M. 463; Southworth v. Parker, 41 M. 198.

296. But the foregoing maxim is not universally applicable, and it can seldom be just where, instead of a common debtor, there are two or more whose interests in the funds are different: Southworth v. Parker, 41 M. 198.

297. It will not enable a third mortgagee of part of premises covered by the first mortgage to compel the first mortgagee to sell first a parcel on which he also holds a second encumbrance, which is not included in the third: Slater v. Breeze, 86 M. 77.

298. As a general rule, where mortgaged lands are alienated or encumbered in parcels, the parcels are to be charged for the satisfaction of the mortgage in the inverse order of alienation or encumbrance: Cooper v. Bigly, 18 M. 463; Ireland v. Woolman, 15 M. 258; McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142; Sibley v. Baker, 28 M. 812; Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 184; McVeigh v. Sherwood, 47 M. 545.

299. Subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers take subject to any explicit provisions of a mortgage as to the order in which the property shall be sold, and that without reference to the considerations on which such preferences were agreed on: Mickle v. Maxwell, 42 M. 305.

300. On the foreclosure of a first mortgage conveying three parcels of land, on the first and second of which a second mortgage, and on the second and third of which a third mortgage, has been given—the second mortgage having been before foreclosed, and both the first and second parcels sold subject to the first mortgage, the second parcel being, at the instance of the third mortgagee, sold last—the third mortgagee has no right to demand that the parcel not covered by his mortgage (the first parcel) shall be sold first. The purchaser under, the prior foreclosure, of the first and second parcels, has a right to insist that the third parcel shall be first sold. Where the purchaser under said prior foreclosure sale purchased subject to the first mortgage, but with an agreement with the complainant, who then owned both the first and second mortgages, that when the first mortgage was foreclosed said third parcel should be first sold, his right to have the sale on such foreclosure made according to this agreement, which is the order of sale established by law in the absence of any agreement, would not be affected thereby: Sibley v. Baker, 23 M. 312.

301. The grantee of a parcel of mortgaged land is entitled to have the rest of the land sold to satisfy the mortgage before resort is had to his: Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Gantz v. Toles, 40 M. 725.

302. But where a part of mortgaged premises is conveyed by the mortgager subject to the payment of the whole of the mortgage, that part becomes the preliminary fund for its satisfaction, and the land retained by the mortgager becomes the secondary fund: Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Berry v. Whitney, 40 M. 65, 72; Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 M. 312.

303. Where A. had a mortgage upon lots one, two and three, and B. had a subsequent mortgage upon lot three, and they, having no knowledge of conveyances which had been made of lots one and two subsequently to their mortgages, conjointly released a part of lot three, it was held that B.'s equitable right to have lots one and two first sold was not thereby affected: Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463.

304. A second mortgagee cannot insist that on the foreclosure of a prior mortgage resort shall first be had to a parcel of land not covered by his mortgage, and which the mortgager had aliened after the first but before the second mortgage; such land is not to be sold until after that covered by the second mortgage: Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 134.

305. A junior mortgagee cannot claim that a homestead covered by the first mortgage but not by his own shall be first sold by the prior mortgagee: Armitage v. Toll, 64 M. 412.

306. The statement in a deed from an intermediate holder of mortgaged premises that the grant is subject to the mortgage does not, in the absence of language expressing or implying an assumption by the grantee of such mortgage, or an intention that the interest granted should be charged with the whole amount of the mortgage, make the mortgage a specific charge upon such interest so as to influence the equities between second and third mortgagees as to other portions of the premises: Slater v. Breese, 36 M. 77.

307. C. gave F. a warranty deed of a farm subject to payment by F. of a certain mortgage. Another mortgage given to secure a debt of C.'s covered the farm and some of Mrs. C.'s property, and this mortgage was not excepted from the warranty. Upon the foreclosure of the last mentioned mortgage, Mrs. C.'s property was bid off first and bought in by F. Held, that as to her own lands she was entitled to the rights of a surety, and could insist that the farm be sold first; that her release of dower rights in the farm gave her the right to insist that F. protect her by paying off the mortgage first named; and that as between herself and him the foreclosure sale was wrongful, and F. acquired no rights by it except the right to the mortgage: Carley v. Fox, 38 M. 337.

308. A third encumbrancer who concedes the existence of a second encumbrance is not of right entitled to introduce proofs to show that the amount of the second encumbrance is less than it is represented to be, where the question is as to the order of sale on foreclosure of the first mortgage, as between the parcel covered by the third and that covered by the second encumbrance: Slater v. Breese, 36 M. 77.

Further, as to marshalling assets, see infra, X, (j), 2.

VII. ASSIGNMENT.

(a) What constitutes; validity.

309. Mortgages are chattel interests, and may be transferred without writing: Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45.

310. The acknowledgment of an assignment of a mortgage is no part of the assignment: Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

311. An assignment of a mortgage is not a conveyance of real estate and may be made without executing a deed or other instrument in writing where the statute does not require the transfer to be so made: Dougherty v. Randall, 8 M. 581; Young v. McKee, 13 M. 552.

312. An assignment of a mortgage, though not witnessed, or with but one witness, is competent proof as well in law as equity to show a transfer of the entire interest of the mortgagee in the mortgage: Dougherty v. Randall, 8 M. 581.

313. A mortgagee's rights may be transferred either by a legal or by an equitable assignment or conveyance: Hoffmann v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

314. Anything which transfers the debt (though by parol or mere delivery) transfers the mortgage with it: Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 M. 330.

315. The assignment of a debt secured by a mortgage carries with it the mortgage, as an incident to the debt, although there is no mention made of the mortgage in the assignment: Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 M. 581; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

316. So the assignment of a part of a debt, or of one of several notes secured by a mortgage, carries with it a proportional interest in the mortgage unless it is otherwise agreed between the parties at the time: Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251.

317. An equitable assignee of a debt secured by mortgage is entitled to have the mortgage follow the debt: Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 M. 474.

318. Where it is doubtful whether an assignment of a mortgage is a sale of the security or only a mortgage of it, if the consideration was much less than the amount due upon it, the court will incline to consider it a mortgage: McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142.

319. A man executed an assignment of a mortgage security held by him in order that he might use it, if necessary, to secure himself and personal creditors in case of the failure of a manufacturing concern in which he was interested; but he never did use it, and he continued to collect money on it as his own, and used the money for his own purposes. Held, that this did not show that any effective assignment was intended or made out: Hutton v. Cuthbert, 51 M. 229.

320. Where complainant averred that a mortgage had been assigned to him, and the answer was silent on the point, and based the defence solely on the ground of infancy, and there was no evidence of assignment except what was contained in the record of a prior cause, which was put in evidence by consent, wherein the former owner of the mortgage had testified that the mortgage was assigned to complainant; and the objection that the assignment was not proved was taken on appeal from a decree in favor of complainant, it was held that complainant was entitled to the most liberal construction of the evidence as to the assignment, and its competency not having been objected to, it was sufficient: Young v. McKee, 13 M. 552.

321. The recitation of a previous assignment in the assignment of a mortgage was held a virtual admission that the assignor had no right to assign; a recital that the former assignment was to a person named is not evidence of the fact; though the assignor can admit title out of himself, he cannot admit it in any other person: Van Vleet v. Blackwood, 88 M. 334.

322. The validity of an assignment of a mortgage is not impaired by a showing, merely, that the assignor's interest was but a life estate, if it does not also appear that the transfer operated to diminish the bulk of the estate at the death of the life tenant: Sutphen v. Ellis, 85 M. 446.

323. A power of attorney to sell and convey lands and to borrow money by mortgage upon lands gives the attorney no authority to assign a mortgage, certainly not to assign to himself: Post v. Springsted, 49 M. 90.

324. Where an assignment of a mortgage was procured by threatening the mortgagee, a timid and ignorant man, with a prosecution for slander, it was held to be without consideration, and a re-assignment was decreed: Tate v. Whitney, H. 145.

(b) Effect; rights, etc., of assignees.

Covenant in assignment of mortgage construed: See CONVEYANCES, § 840.

325. An assignment of a mortgage or of the right to a particular payment described therein, may be shown not to be absolute, but to have been designed as a security: Hill v. Goodrich, 89 M. 439; Hylar v. Nolan, 45 M. 357.

326. Where complainant, a married woman, made an unconditional assignment of a mortgage to defendant, and delivered it to her husband, who delivered it over to defendant, and the latter gave the husband a receipt stating that the mortgage was received of the husband as collateral security for a debt owing by him to defendant, and there was no evidence of any negotiations between complainant and defendant, or of any understanding on her part that the transfer of the mortgage was to be upon any condition, or of any instructions by her in reference to it, it was held that the court could not say, from these facts, that the assignment was intended by complainant as security only, and not to be absolutely passed to defendant: Durfee v. McClury, 6 M. 223.

327. An assignment of a mortgage passes the power of sale: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 388.

328. The assignment of a mortgage that appoints the assignee attorney, with full authority to have, use and take all lawful ways and means, in his assignor's name or otherwise, for the recovery of the money due thereon, transfers to such assignee all of the assignor's collateral rights, including a claim against a previous assignor to himself, for a breach of the covenant that such previous assignor had lawful authority to transfer: Briggs v. Hannowald, 35 M. 474.

329. The assignee of a mortgage takes it subject to all equities existing between the parties to it at the time of the assignment: Russell v. Waite, W. 31; Dutton v. Ives, 5 M. 515; Nichols v. Lee, 10 M. 526; Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 M. 395.

330. The assignee of a past-due note and mortgage takes it subject to any perfected equitable rights existing in the mortgager to set off claims against it, even though he has no actual notice of such claims. His position is precisely that of his assignor: McKenna v. Kirkwood, 50 M. 544.

331. Where a mortgage has been assigned any equities between the assignee and the mortgager affect the mortgage in the hands of any subsequent assignee: Nichols v. Lee, 10 M. 526.

332. Where one pays a mortgage as the agent and with the funds of the mortgager, and instead of having it discharged causes it to be assigned as security for a debt owing by himself, the assignee cannot hold the mortgage as against the mortgager or his heirs: Ibid.

333. An assignment of a mortgage to a third person, without notice of a prior mortgage, cannot give the assignee a priority which his assignor did not have: Wing v. McDowell, W. 175.

334. Where it is understood between a mortgager and mortgagees that the mortgager shall convey to such person as one of the mortgagees shall designate, an assignment by the other mortgagees will not affect a purchaser who, in good faith, takes conveyance from the mortgager, without notice or knowledge of such assignment; the assignee is subject to the same equities as the assignor, and if the assignor afterwards gives a discharge of the mortgage to the purchaser the latter is entitled to regard it as a regular and valid release thereof: Goodale v. Patterson, 51 M. 532.

335. Where a mortgage was given accompanying a negotiable promissory note, and they were assigned before due to a bona fide indorsee, held, that he was not affected by any equities existing between the original parties: Reeves v. Scully, W. 243; Dutton v. Ives, 5 M. 515.

336. It would have been otherwise if a non-negotiable bond had been given instead of the note: Reeves v. Scully, W. 243.

337. The assignee of a mortgage is entitled, if he is the real owner, to demand and receive payment on the notes secured by it whether indorsed or not, and the formal assignment, duly recorded and acknowledged, is the best possible evidence of ownership: Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

338. Where a mortgage was given to secure a non-negotiable bond, any subsequent assignee of the mortgage is bound to take notice — and is therefore conclusively presumed to have notice — of every defect in the right of the mortgagee as between the mortgagee and mortgager, and such assignee succeeds only to the mortgagee's rights: Terry v. Tuttle, 24 M. 206.

339. The bona fide assignee of a mortgage, not charged in the bill with knowledge of the complainant's equities against the assignor in respect to the mortgage, will not be held affected with those equities: Cicotte v. Gagnier, 2 M. 381.

340. One to whom a note and mortgage are assigned as collateral security for a prior debt of the mortgagee's is not a bona fide holder, and stands in no better situation than the assignor: Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 M. 281 (Oct. 20, '87).

341. The assignee does not take the mortgage subject to any equities which any third person may have against the mortgager. Where he has purchased the mortgage in good faith, it is not subject in his hands to any equities between the mortgager and his grantor, growing out of the fraud of the mortgager in procuring the title to the land: Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 M. 395.

342. The assignment of a mortgage, without the debt which it is given to secure, carries no beneficial interest in the mortgage to the assignee, who would hold it subject to the will and disposal of the creditor: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478.

343. An assignment of the mortgage without the debt is a mere nullity: Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 M. 380.

344. An assignee of a mortgage given to secure the payment of a negotiable note is entitled to the same protection that he would have as assignee of the note without the mortgage: Helmer v. Krolick, 36 M. 371.

345. An assignment of a mortgage does not transfer undelivered collateral securities unless the parties so intend and a consideration is paid: Fletcher v. Carpenter, 37 M. 413.

346. Non-delivery of the securities with the assignment of a mortgage should put a purchaser upon inquiry as to whether the nominal assignee holds the evidences of title before he deals with him as owner: Ibid.

347. Where a mortgagee assigns part of a mortgage debt, or one of several notes secured by a mortgage, the law gives the assignee no priority of payment where there is no understanding or agreement to that effect; but the assignor may, if he sees fit, give the assignee such priority: Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251.

348. Where the owner of a mortgage on which nothing was to become due for several years assigned the mortgage to secure a debt of his own to an amount less than the mortgage, and the assignment was upon condition that if the assignor could pay his indebtedness to the assignee on or before the first day of May following, then the assignment was to be void, but if not, and the assignee should collect the moneys, he should, after retaining the amount of his debt, interest and charges, pay over the surplus to the assignor, held, that the assignor, or those claiming under him, would be entitled to this surplus from the assignee or any person claiming through him, at whatever period in the future it might be collected: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 36.

349. And where a subsequent assignee of the mortgage took a deed of the mortgaged premises from the original mortgager to himself, this deed had the effect to foreclose the mortgage as to the mortgager so deeding; the land now represented the mortgage, and the mortgager of the mortgage, or one claiming under him, might file his bill in chancery and have decree that the amount of the mortgage, less the sum it was assigned to secure, be paid to him, and in default thereof the premises be sold to satisfy, first the sum the mortgage was assigned to secure, and next to pay him the amount of the mortgage less such sum: Ibid.

350. Such bill being filed, and it appearing that possession had been taken under such deed, and complainant having been remiss in asserting his rights, whereby he might have induced defendants to treat the property as their own, discharged of the lien of the mortgage, he was held not entitled to an account of the rents and profits of the premises as against defendants: Ibid.

351. Where the assignee of certain notes secured by mortgage is induced to postpone foreclosure by representations made by an assignee of other notes maturing earlier and also secured by the mortgage, he does not become entitled to any advantages over the latter, if at all, if he has not been damaged by relying on his statements: Burhans v. Mitchell, 42 M. 417.

352. The cost to which the assignee of a second mortgage is put to redeem from the foreclosure of the first is a necessary outlay in aid of the assigned security, and the assignee is entitled to hold the assignment as security for it, but not to make it a personal charge against the assignor: Wendell v. Highstone, 52 M. 552.

353. Until actual or constructive notice of assignment, the mortgager is entitled to deal with the mortgagee or his personal representative on the supposition that no transfer has been made (unless the mortgage was given to secure negotiable paper and was transferred before due), and the assignee will be bound by such dealings: Jones v. Smith, 23 M. 360.

354. H. S. § 5687, providing that recording the assignment of a mortgage shall not be such notice of the assignment as to invalidate payments made by the mortgager to the mortgagee, applies where the payment, though not actually made by the mortgager, is so made as to release him from liability, as by an arrangement between all parties that he should deed the land to the person making the payment: Goodale v. Patterson, 51 M. 532.

355. A. gave to B. a note, not negotiable, secured by a mortgage, as security for the performance of an agreement. C. took an assignment of the mortgage and attempted to foreclose. Held, that C. was chargeable with notice of the equities between A. and B., and that A., on performing the agreement, could maintain against C. a cross-suit for the cancellation of the note and mortgage: Humphrey v. Beckwith, 48 M. 151.

356. Where a mortgagee, under a pretended claim of right, wrongfully got possession of the securities from the bailee of his assignee, and then received payment on the mortgage from the grantee of the equity of redemption, it was held that the mortgager, who had paid nothing, had no equities as against the assignee: Chase v. Brown, 32 M. 225.

VIII. SUBROGATION.

357. The doctrine of subrogation is to prevent fraud and do justice, and should not be applied where it would work injustice: Kelly v. Kelly, 54 M. 30.

358. Persons equitably entitled to land on paying a mortgage taken in good faith by another should be subrogated to the mortgagee's rights against the mortgager: Warner v. Hall, 53 M. 872.

359. Where a deed conveys premises subject to a mortgage which is included in the purchase money and which it identifies, the mortgagee on foreclosure may be so far subrogated to the mortgager as to have the benefit of the obligation to pay it, which the grantee has assumed: Hicks v. McGarry, 33 M. 667.

360. Where A. is fraudulently persuaded by B. to advance money to him to discharge a mortgage by the promise to give security upon the land for the loan, which promise is not fulfilled, A. is subrogated to the mortgagee's rights: White v. Newhall, 68 M. 641 (March 2, '88).

361. Land was mortgaged to secure three notes payable at different times. The mortgagee foreclosed to obtain payment of the first two notes and sold the land subject to the third note not yet due. Held, that it is a conclusive presumption in such a case that the price obtained is less by the amount of the remaining encumbrance than it would otherwise have been; also, that if the mortgagee should afterward sue the mortgager for the amount of the third note, and the latter should pay it, the mortgager would be entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee against the land, in order to subject it to the burden of paying the debt back to himself: Shermer v. Merrill, 33 M. 284.

362. K. paid off and discharged the first two out of three mortgages on certain property, and then took a new mortgage for the amount paid. Held, that this was subsequent to the one left unpaid, and that K. was not entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the first two mortgagees: Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 M. 81.

363. A president of a corporation, who, to save the property of the company and his own interest as a bondholder and stockholder, pays out of his own moneys the interest due on a mortgage of such property, is entitled to be subrogated to the company's rights, and the fact that he charged the items of payment against the company in the hope that the business might pay enough to reimburse him does not change his equities: Bush v. Wadsworth, 60 M. 255.

364. Payment of encumbrances under an explicit oral agreement that the encumbered property shall be conveyed to the person paying them may be ground for subrogating him to the rights of the encumbrancer to the extent of the payment, but subject to such rights as may have arisen meanwhile: Kelly v. Kelly, 54 M. 30.

365. The mere expectation of an inheritance cannot constitute any such consideration for the payment of incumbrances thereon that the fear of having this expectation disappointed by the possible advent of other heirs can be made a ground for subrogation to the liens discharged: Ibid.

366. One whose sole interest in lands is under a trust deed, by virtue of which he is to become entitled to them on paying certain mortgages upon them, and also certain other specified demands, is not entitled, if he repudiates the trust, to make any arrangements with the mortgagees by which he can be subrogated in equity to their rights without paying the other demands: Smith v. Austin, 11 M. 84.

367. A mortgage upon land belonging to a decedent's estate was paid off with money raised by means of an administrator's mortgage on the same land which was subsequently held invalid, though executed under color of authority from the probate court. Held, that the lender of such money might be subrogated to the rights that the prior mortgagee would have had if his mortgage had not been discharged: Detroit F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Aspinall, 43 M. 238, 45 M. 330.

368. Where land is deeded to secure the repayment of money borrowed from the grantee to pay off existing encumbrances, and it is applied to that purpose, the grantee, if the deed is adjudged invalid, can claim subrogation to the rights of the mortgagees whose liens have been discharged; and he would be entitled to a decree of foreclosure against the land so deeded as security: Lockwood v. Bassett, 49 M. 546.

369. Where property owned by two partners is subject to a mortgage, and as between the two it is the duty of one to discharge it, and the other pays the debt on condition that the mortgage shall enure to his benefit, an equity arises in his favor entitling him to indemnity through the mortgage: Laylin v. Knox, 41 M. 40.

370. Where a mortgage is executed to secure the debts of others than the mortgager, a devisee of the mortgaged premises, who redeems them from foreclosure sale, is subrogated to all the rights of the mortgager to enforce payment of the amount he has paid against the real debtors, or, if he is himself one of those debtors, he may recover the share the others should have paid: Goodrich v. Leland, 18 M. 110.

As to subrogation in case of payment of insurance money to mortgagee, see INSURANCE, §§ 101, 102.

IX. PAYMENT AND SATISFACTION; DISCHARGE; RELEASE; MERGER.

(a) Payment and satisfaction.

As to payment generally, see PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

1. Presumptions; what constitutes.

371. Twenty years from maturity a mortgage will be presumed paid: Curtis v. Goode-now, 24 M. 18.

372. Payment of a mortgage debt is not conclusively presumed from the lapse of many years, but there must be decisive proof that it is an existing lien to warrant a decree of foreclosure: Cowie v. Fisher, 45 M. 629.

373. A mortgage is not necessarily presumed paid, from lapse of time, if the mortgagee asserted his right to foreclose in due season, and there does not appear to be any adverse holding under the mortgage; the purchaser must be understood as claiming under the sale ever since it was made: Baldwin v. Cullen, 51 M. 83.

374. June 18, 1789, defendants' ancestor gave a mortgage payable Aug. 28, 1790. The mortgagee died in 1790, but administration on his estate was not granted until 1835, and the year following a bill was filed to foreclose the mortgage. Held, that the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time was overthrown by the fact that there was no one, from the death of the mortgagee until the granting of administration, who could receive payment of the money and discharge the mortgage: Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 M. 178.

375. When a creditor by mortgage receives from his debtor property to near the amount of his claim, and surrenders the obligations, and the evidence leaves it in doubt whether it was the understanding of the parties that the property should be received in payment, it will be presumed in favor of a subsequent purchaser of the property mortgaged that such was the intent: Ormsby v. Barr, 21 M. 474.

376. Payments upon a mortgage are presumed, in the absence of a finding, to have been made at or near the time they fell due: Albright v. Cobb, 84 M. 316.

377. The only question in a foreclosure proceeding was whether the date of a receipt had been changed from April 1, 1874, to Sept. 23, 1871, and it was determined from inspection and from facts bearing upon the probabilities that the date had not been so changed, and that a payment had been made at the apparent date of the receipt which ought to have been credited upon the mortgage: Hazen v. Phillips, 39 M. 867.

378. Mortgages may be paid and extinguished without making use of any writing: Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45.

379. A mortgager who claims to have made a large payment to a deceased person shortly before the latter's death, but shows no voucher, indorsement or entry of the payment by the deceased, should produce very convincing proof to sustain his position: Wakeman v. Akey, 29 M. 308.

380. Where a note accompanying a mortgage is not produced or accounted for, it must be presumed paid, as against the party setting up the mortgage: Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 M. 28.

381. A deposit by a mortgager in a bank with instructions to the officers of the bank to apply it on the notes secured by the mortgage, which they fail to do, does not place the money subject to the control of the holder of the notes, and does not, therefore, operate as payment: Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

382. Where there was a conflict of testimony as to whether mortgages sought to be foreclosed had been drawn into a settlement and paid, the fact that after a certain meeting which was conceded to have taken place for the purpose of a settlement the mortgagee, though a money-lender of moderate means, never sought another settlement, and neglected for seven years to enforce his securities, but stood by and saw the premises sold, and the title warranted as unincumbered, without asserting any claim, was held to indicate payment: Shattuck v. Foster, 82 M. 427.

383. A person took a conveyance of land from his mother, in consideration of which he was to support her for the rest of her life. But he shifted the burden upon a debtor whose mortgage he held, bargaining to allow him upon it a dollar a week, which was to be increased to a reasonable compensation when she became more infirm, as she did two years later. The mortgage was to secure about $700, due in four years. For seven years the creditor indorsed $50 a year upon the mortgage; for the next four years $75, and for the next three $100. It was shown that after the mother became infirm from three to five dollars a week would have been a reasonable compensation for her board and care, and after she left the debtor's house her son in fact paid three dollars a week therefor. Held, that a bill to foreclose the mortgage should be dismissed and the mortgage discharged as fully paid: Gallup v. Jackson, 47 M. 475.

384. A bill to enjoin a foreclosure at law and to compel a discharge of the mortgage was sustained where the weight of evidence tended to show that the mortgage debt had been satisfied by offsetting it against a counter-claim, and that written evidence of this fact was destroyed by fire, the mortgagers being afterwards left to deal with the mortgaged premises undisturbed for years during which the lands were being sold and built upon: Green v. Engelmann, 39 M. 460.

385. A mortgage debt may be deemed not to have been settled where it appears that the mortgagee always claimed it as an existing obligation, as the mortgager well understood; that, although years had elapsed, no steps had been taken to procure its surrender or cancellation; and that the mortgager had recognized its existence: Lyon v. McDonald, 51 M. 435.

386. The evidence held to sustain the case made by the bill, that the mortgage held by defendant, and which he was seeking to foreclose by advertisement, had been fully paid and satisfied: Hanchett v. McKelvey, 32 M. 33.

387. Where a mortgagee has property in his hands for which he is accountable to the mortgager, the latter, in suing him for refusing to discharge the mortgage, can insist that the property be accounted for upon it by way of determining whether it has not been satisfied: Wilber v. Peirce, 56 M. 169.

388. Where a mortgager pays money to the administrator of the mortgagee, with distinct reference to the ownership of the mortgage by the estate, and in the expectation and understanding on both sides that on the settlement the sums of money paid are to be taken into account against the mortgage, either as payment or by way of set-off, it is not important that they should have been regarded as payments at the time they were made; nor will it necessarily affect the right of the mortgager to have them so applied that he took, from time to time, as evidence of the sums of money paid, notes reserving annual interest: Jones v. Smith, 23 M. 360.

389. A mortgage sought to be foreclosed was held to have been satisfied by the assignment and subsequent payment of another mortgage: Van Buren v. St. Joseph C. V. F. Ins. Co., 28 M. 393.

390. Where a mortgage was given to secure the payment of a promissory note, and to indemnify the mortgagee as accommodation indorser, and at the maturity of the note the mortgager procured the mortgagee's indorsement to a second note for a larger amount, with a portion of the proceeds of which the first note was retired, and which itself was met at maturity by renewal by a third note with the same indorsement, it was held that the mortgagee, having, as indorser, been compelled to pay the third note after protest, the mortgage was not in equity satisfied as between the parties, it having been given to secure not the particular note only, but the debt itself: Bozheimer v. Gunn, 24 M. 372.

391. Where a lot of land was conveyed by complainant, subject to the payment of a mortgage on certain other lands, and proceedings were had in chancery to foreclose the mortgage, and the decree became the property of one of the defendants, who also purchased the lot on which payment was charged, it was held that such purchase amounted to a satisfaction of the mortgage to the value of the lot so purchased: Mason v. Payne, W. 459.

392. Where one, by purchasing at an invalid foreclosure sale, becomes the owner of a mortgage while also owning the land from which it should be satisfied, his purchase is to be deemed a payment and satisfaction of the mortgage if the land is sufficient for the purpose: Carley v. Fox, 38 M. 397.

393. Where a guardian's sale is made subject to a mortgage, and the mortgage is owned by the purchaser at the sale, the mortgage is in effect cancelled: Lynch v. Kirby, 36 M. 239.

394. When mortgaged lands which had been sold by the mortgages in parcels were subject to two mortgages, and the proceeds of the last parcel sold were applied upon the first of the mortgages, and as a part of the same arrangement the mortgagee in the second, who was mortgager in the first and under obligations to pay it, assigned the second to a party who was to hold it for the protection of the fee against another specified claim, but this party afterwards sold it for value to one who took it in good faith, held, that under the rule that the proceeds must be applied to the satisfaction of the mortgage in the inverse order of alienation the mortgage was to be deemed satisfied in the first arrangement; and the second assignment, not being with consent of the owner of the fee, the assignee took nothing thereby: McVeigh v. Sherwood, 47 M. 545.

395. Equity has jurisdiction upon a bill seeking to have a mortgage which constitutes an apparent lien on complainant's title declared satisfied: Ormsby v. Barr, 22 M. 80.

2. To whom may payment be made.

396. Voluntary payment of a mortgage to one not entitled to collect it, after notice from the real owner not to do so, and after suit brought by such owner to foreclose the mortgage, is no protection to any one: Chase v. Brown, 32 M. 225.

397. Payment of an intestate's mortgage, if made by the mortgager in good faith to the person to whom the administrator tells him it belongs, is good: Reynolds v. Smith, 57 M. 194.

398. A mortgager who, without knowledge that the mortgage has been assigned, pays the debt to the mortgagee is entitled to have the mortgage cancelled: Ingalls v. Bond, 66 M. 338 (June 16, '87).

399. Where a mortgage given to secure a note made payable at a bank has been assigned without the indorsement of the payee upon the note, the officers of the bank holding the mortgager's money for payment of the mortgage are not justified, when the note and mortgage and the assignment are presented by the assignee for payment, in declining payment upon the objection that the note is not indorsed by the payee; the formal assignment, duly acknowledged and recorded, would be the best possible evidence of ownership, and the real owner would be entitled to demand and receive payment whether the note is indorsed or not: Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

3. Application of payments.

400. The application of payments upon a mortgage will be as justice and equity require, where no agreement controls, or where an agreement is unlawful. Scattering payments permitted by the mortgagee should, if not otherwise agreed, be applied (1) to the extinguishment of interest due; (2) to the payment of principal: Morgan v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 57 M. 430.

401. Where a mortgager and mortgagee agree that certain mortgaged property shall be sold and its proceeds applied on the general indebtedness after satisfying other claims, they still have power to make a different disposition of the proceeds, and may be bound thereby, if third persons interested in the premises do not insist that the proceeds shall be applied in reduction of the debt: Perrin v. Kellogg, 88 M. 720.

402. Where a mortgager gave a note for the whole amount of his debt, including sums for which he had become indebted before the mortgage was given and which were not secured by it, and the mortgagee applied payments made to him upon the note generally, it was equivalent to an application upon the new and old indebtedness pro rata, and a different application could not be made where it did not satisfactorily appear to have been directed or to have been for the interest of the parties: Shelden v. Bennett, 44 M. 634.

403. A mortgager who has paid interest upon ten per cent. interest, when behind in his payments, is entitled to have it allowed on the principal, as ten per cent. is the statutory maximum of interest that may be taken in Michigan: Havens v. Jones, 45 M. 253.

404. A mortgager paid a sum of money in settlement of a dispute which had arisen from the cutting of timber on the mortgaged land. The settlement left a large amount of timber on his hands ready for working up, and the settlement took account of the fact that it was cut without expense to him. Held, that in the absence of evidence of any understanding with the mortgagee that the amount paid might be applied upon his mortgage, it would not be assumed that the mortgagee had agreed to such an application of payments, nor would such application be decreed: Hart v. Carpenter, 36 M. 402.

405. Insurance policies upon mortgaged property were assigned by the mortgager to the mortgagee as additional security, and it was agreed that in case of loss the proceeds should be applied in payment of the mortgage indebtedness. Held, that the money collected upon them by the assignee should have been so applied, unless such a disposition of it would be contrary to the rights of a creditor of the assignee to whom the latter had assigned the notes and mortgage to which the policy was collateral; and if such creditor knew of the assignment of the policies and did not object, he was bound by the agreement, especially if he joined in notifying the assignor to pay the whole mortgage debt to the assignee: Wilcox v. Allen, 36 M. 160.

406. A creditor of a corporation, who held its bonds as collateral security, guaranteed its performance of a contract, and the corporation contracted with him to carry on its business and apply the proceeds to that purpose and to its current working capital, and agreed that any surplus might be applied to the payment of current indebtedness. The bonds were secured by mortgage. Held, that this did not fix the character of his possession of the corporate property as that of the mortgagee, and that the proceeds received by him did not apply as payment on the mortgage, and could only be so applied as set-off: Beecher v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 45 M. 103.

(b) Discharge.

1. In general.

407. By the discharge of a mortgage—as the term is commonly understood—something that relieves the land from the apparent lien is intended; not a mere payment: Blackwood v. Brown, 29 M. 483.

408. A mortgage cannot be discharged piecemeal on the record: Collar v. Harrison, 28 M. 518.

409. Payment at any time before a foreclosure becomes absolute, with the legal costs, if any, will discharge the mortgage, and no conveyance is necessary: Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 M. 270; Van Husan v. Kanouse, 13 M. 303.

410. Payment, release, or anything that extinguishes the debt, ipso facto extinguishes the mortgage: Ladue v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 13 M. 380.

411. A mortgage cannot survive the debt secured by it where that debt has been paid by the debtor to the holder of the mortgage: Byles v. Kellogg, 67 M. 818 (Oct. 20, '87).

412. Where the holder of a mortgage executes a quitclaim deed of the premises to one who has received a deed thereof, under an agreement that he shall pay the mortgage, the effect is to discharge the lien of the mortgage; and a subsequent assignment of the mortgage to a third person will not entitle the latter to enforce it: Jerome v. Seymour, H. 357.

413. A. bought from B. a piece of land which B. had mortgaged to C. to secure a note for $500. C. owed $450 to D., to whom he assigned B.'s note and mortgage to secure that debt. A. then paid D. the amount of C.'s debt, took an assignment of B.'s note and mortgage, and claimed that he had thereby discharged the mortgage and cleared the land of any lien. C., however, still claimed an interest in the mortgage to the extent of the surplus over his own debt, and assigned such interest to E., who assigned it to F., and F. proceeded to foreclose against A. Before the period of redemption ran out A. filed a bill against C., E. and F. to annul the foreclosure proceedings. Held, that A.'s payment to D. discharged the lien of the mortgage only pro tanto, and that A. thereafter held the mortgage in trust for C.'s assignee for the balance secured by it; also, that a lien remained upon the land for the amount of such balance, and C.'s assignee could enforce it in this suit as by way of cross-bill: Olcott v. Crittenden, 68 M. 230 (Jan. 19, '88).

414. Where notes of three persons are given in payment and a mortgage is also given as security, the mortgager is to be held for payment upon the mortgage only and under its conditions. And if the mortgagee, without the mortgager's consent, extends the time for payment of a note, the mortgage lien is discharged: Metz v. Todd, 36 M. 473.

415. A quitclaim obtained by the mortgager from the mortgagee of premises, for the purpose of perfecting title by redeeming from a sale on partial foreclosure, cannot be construed as discharging the entire mortgage: Mabie v. Hatinger, 48 M. 341.

416. If a mortgagee bids in the premises on foreclosure sale for an instalment due, and afterwards gives a warranty deed of the land, the warranty deed discharges the mortgage and releases indorsers of such notes as may be secured by subsequent instalments thereof: Bridgman v. Johnson, 44 M. 491.

417. A lien holds if not discharged, surrendered, waived or extinguished; the destruction of the paper evidence of it, which in this case was an unrecorded purchase-price mortgage, does not annihilate it so far as the parties and all persons claiming with notice are concerned: Sloan v. Holcomb, 29 M. 153.

418. Land was sold to A., subject to a mortgage to B., payment of which A. assumed. Unknown to both A. and B. there was a prior mortgage to C. on the same land, and on their discovering this, A. promised B. to pay it off. Held, that a subsequent foreclosure by C., at which A. became the purchaser, did not extinguish the lien of B.'s mortgage: Manwaring v. Powell, 40 M. 871.

419. A provision in a contract that a party shall discharge his mortgage "at the expense" of the mortgager imports, in the absence of explanation, that he is to do it on being reimbursed the expense attending the drawing, execution and recording of the discharge, and not that he is to do it only on being paid the amount called for by the mortgage, as well as being reimbursed such expense: Vary v. Shea, 36 M. 383.

420. Damages for failure to perform a contract to procure the discharge of a mortgage cannot be claimed if it does not appear that the mortgage was foreclosed or the claimant damaged: Rose v. Jackson, 40 M. 30.

421. A grantee of premises covered by a mortgage which is alleged to have been paid may maintain a bill against the mortgagee for its discharge without proving any other interest in the premises than the grant from the mortgager. If the mortgage has been paid, the mortgagee will not be allowed to dispute the mortgager's title or that of his grantee as a reason for refusing to discharge it: Ormsby v. Barr, 23 M. 80.

422. The fact that a judgment has been recovered on a note secured by mortgage is no answer to a suit by the mortgagers to have the mortgage set aside on showing that the note has been paid: Rickle v. Dow, 39 M. 91.

423. A forged discharge on the record of a mortgage gives no rights to one who takes a second mortgage on the strength thereof, unless the prior mortgagee has been negligent: Keller v. Hannah, 52 M. 535.

424. Where a discharge of a mortgage is given on the receipt of less than is due, by reason of an erroneous computation of interest, chancery may refuse to set aside such discharge, if circumstances appear rendering it inequitable for the mortgagee to collect the full amount of interest: Wright v. Garrison, 40 M. 50.

425. A discharge upon the record of a mortgage is not an absolute bar to a foreclosure, unless there has been actual satisfaction. The facts may still be investigated. Such discharge is evidence of a high character, and sufficient to sustain the rights of all persons interested, unless the person setting up the discharged mortgage shows some accident, mistake or fraud; and this must be shown satisfactorily, and, if not, the discharge is conclusive proof of payment in favor of third persons, who have a right to look to the record for protection: Ferguson v. Glassford, 68 M. 88.

As to restoration of mortgages discharged by mistake, see EQUITY, §§ 881-883.

2. Discharge by tender.

As to TENDER generally, see that title.

426. Where a mortgager, after the mortgage has become due, but before foreclosure, tenders to the holder the full amount due, which the latter refuses to receive, the lien of the mortgage is thereby discharged, and if a bill is afterwards filed by the holder to foreclose it is not necessary for the mortgager to bring the tender into court or to show that it has been kept good: Caruthers v. Humphrey, 12 M. 270; Van Husan v. Kanouse, 18 M. 808.

427. A tender of the amount due upon a mortgage, if made so that the holder of the mortgage understands it at the time as a present, absolute and unconditional tender thereof, operates ipso facto to discharge the lien of the mortgage, though the tender itself be not thereafter kept good: Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149.

428. A mortgagee loses his lien by evading tender of payment: Ferguson v. Popp, 42 M. 115.

429. An absolute tender by a subsequent mortgagee will discharge the lien of a prior mortgage; but a tender coupled with a claim of an allowance not lawfully demandable will not: Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 134.

430. One who seeks to obtain the discharge of a mortgage lien, or an assignment of the mortgage, or subrogation to the mortgagee's rights, must tender not only the amount due on the mortgage but the necessary expenses already incurred in taking steps to enforce the security: Shutes v. Woodard, 57 M. 213.

431. Where the discharge of a mortgage was sought on the ground that payment had been tendered, the court declined to consider the question of usury, but held that complainant must abide by his tender: Canfield v. Conkling, 41 M. 371.

432. Where a mortgagee has taken no steps to entitle him to an attorney fee, if such a fee is recoverable at all, he is bound to accept such a tender as would be sufficient without it: Ibid.

433. Where a mortgagee refused a tender of an award and a sum of money simply on the ground that he was not bound to receive the award, an accidental deficiency in the amount of money offered, caused by an erroneous computation of interest, was held not to prejudice the mortgager when the award had been held good on a bill to redeem: Flanders v. Chamberlain, 24 M. 305.

434. A tender by a mortgager to an assignee of the mortgage, on condition that the latter, besides discharging the mortgage, should execute and deliver to him a quitclaim deed of the land described therein, is not such an unconditional tender as will cut off the mortgage lien: Dodge v. Brewer, 31 M. 227.

435. The holder of a mortgage to whom a tender is proposed is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to look over the mortgage and accompanying papers to calculate and ascertain the amount due, and if such papers are not present, he must be allowed a reasonable time in which to get them and make the calculation; he is not bound, at the risk of losing his entire debt, to carry in his head at all times the precise amount due on any particular day: Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149.

436. A tender was abruptly made upon the street to the owner of some overdue mortgages, who was known to be sick and nearly blind, and who declined to transact the business until the next morning. The next morning he offered to receive the money, but reliance was then had on the tender and it was not paid. Held, that the tender did not discharge the lien of the mortgage: Waldron v. Murphy, 40 M. 668.

437. A mortgager, by way of tender, made repeated offers of money to the mortgagee while they were riding together on the public highway. He involved it with other matters of dealing between them, and the settlement was interrupted by a quarrel, but before any costs were incurred the mortgagee offered to receive the amount due. Held, that no tender had been made that would discharge the mortgage lien: Parks v. Allen, 42 M. 482.

438. A woman engaged in her ordinary avocations is not bound to know at all times what is owing her upon a mortgage, and to be ready to determine forthwith, without opportunity for examination and computation, whether she will accept any particular sum offered her: she must have reasonable opportunity to satisfy herself what her rights are: Root v. Bradley, 49 M. 27.

439. A mortgagee has a right to refuse any tender of the amount due on the mortgage if made by one who, as between the mortgager and mortgagee, is a stranger to their dealings, and therefore has no right of redemption; so held where tender was made by one who was neither mortgager nor mortgager's grantee, and who did not act in the interest or at the request of the mortgager and had himself no interest in the equity of redemption, but only held some tax-titles which were not subject to the mortgage: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 835.

440. Courts will hesitate to enforce the forfeiture of mortgage security for the refusal of a tender when its apparent purpose is to force the mortgagee to accept it once and with no opportunity of determining whether it is the proper amount: Post v. Springsted, 49 M. 90.

441. Where tender and refusal are set up as a defence to foreclosure they must be very clearly proved. One who means to make a fair offer of the amount due on a mortgage by way of tender and payment, and with the purpose of insisting, if such tender is refused, that the lien is discharged, is bound to be straightforward and disclose his purpose and give the holder of the mortgage a reasonable chance to act intelligently: Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 285.

442. Where tender is made to the holder of a mortgage there should be clear evidence that it was made in good faith and was understood by the holder to be a present absolute tender, intended to be in full payment and extinguishment of the mortgage without any condition: Potts v. Plaisted, 30 M. 149.

443. Where the discharge of a mortgage is demanded on the ground of a tender the evidence of tender must be clear and put defendant plainly in the wrong, especially where demand is made for the statutory penalty: Engle v. Hall, 45 M. 57.

444. A tender of the amount due on a mortgage must be open, fair and reasonable, and made at the right time and place, and to the proper person; and the refusal of such a tender must be without justifiable excuse to warrant the forfeiture of the mortgage security: Post v. Springsted, 49 M. 90.

3. Penalty for failure to discharge.

445. H. S. § 5704, in imposing a penalty for neglecting to discharge a mortgage "after full performance of the condition," means so far as the condition is legal and binding; the amount of consideration may therefore be disputed: Wilber v. Peirce, 56 M. 169.

446. The purpose of the penalty imposed by statute for refusing to discharge a mortgage on tender of the amount due is not only to indemnify the mortgagee for his trouble but to act as a punishment: Engle v. Hall, 45 M. 57.

447. The statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage cannot be recovered of one who has no interest in the mortgage or the debt, and has no means of knowing himself to be in default for not giving a discharge: Murphy v. Fleming, 69 M. 185 (March 2, '88).

448. Where payments of annual interest upon a mortgage have been received shortly after due, with the understanding between the parties that they should be accepted in full satisfaction of the yearly interest, a subsequent assignee, who purchased after maturity of the mortgage, is liable to the statutory penalty for refusing to release the mortgage upon a tender of the amount due computed upon that basis, although the tender was insufficient by strict computation, applying the payments at large: Barnard v. Harrison, 80 M. 8.

449. Said penalty is imposed only for a wrongful refusal, and not for one made in good faith by advice of counsel and under a mistake as to one's legal rights: Myer v. Hart, 40 M. 517.

450. The penalty will not be imposed if the mortgagee refused in good faith and in reliance upon supposed legal rights: Parkes v. Parker, 57 M. 57.

451. The penalty is not imposed when there has been an honest and reasonable difference between the parties as to their right: Burrows v. Bangs, 34 M. 304.

452. The court declined to impose the statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage on tender of the amount due or to order the cancellation of the lien, where the case was such that the mortgagee might in good faith have been mistaken as to what he had a right to exact: Canfield v. Conkling, 41 M. 371.

453. The penalty should not be enforced where the refusal was not manifestly unreasonable and the mortgagee honestly believes that his claim is not satisfied: Huxford v. Eslow, 53 M. 179.

454. Whether the honesty of a mortgagee in believing that the mortgage has not been satisfied is a sufficient defence to an action for the penalty for not discharging it if it has been, quere: Wilber v. Peirce, 56 M. 169.

455. One who gives an invalid mortgage has nevertheless the right to pay it off, and consequently the right to have it discharged; its invalidity therefore cannot be pleaded as a defence to an action for the penalty for refusing to discharge it: Ibid.

456. The statutory penalty for refusing to discharge a mortgage is recoverable in equity on a bill to redeem: Cowles v. Marble, 37 M. 158.

(c) Release.

457. One holding such a lien as a purchase-price mortgage can contract to release the lien and hold only the personal security to which it is collateral, and such an arrangement may be proved by circumstantial evidence, but not by careless expressions and dim inference: Sloan v. Holcomb, 29 M. 153.

458. A mortgage to secure the payment of certain judgments was given to a trustee for the benefit of different judgment creditors, each of whom already held separate mortgages on other property securing the same judgments. The holder of an interest in parcels covered by all these mortgages negotiated for a release and obtained one which purported to discharge from the earlier mortgage only, but which was evidently understood by all parties to release from the later one also. The creditors afterwards obtained an assignment from the trustee and sought to foreclose. Held, that a release by the cestuis que trustent was good in equity and discharged the later mortgage; that their bill should be dismissed, and that a cross-bill was not necessary for establishing a defence thereto: McBride v. Wright, 46 M. 265.

459. Where a mortgagee, with knowledge of a subsequent mortgage on a part of the premises mortgaged to him, releases a part or the whole of the premises not covered by the subsequent mortgage, and the remaining property is not sufficient to pay both, equity will postpone the payment of the first mortgage out of the proceeds of a sale of the remaining property to the extent of the injury done the subsequent mortgagee by the release: James v. Brown, 11 M. 25.

460. One who releases a mortgage so far as it relates to land that is primarily liable for the debt, and which at the time of the discharge is worth more than enough to pay it, loses his lien altogether, and cannot enforce it against other lands: Webb v. Rowe, 35 M. 58.

461. Where, in order to save costs, a mortgage was released as to some land already encumbered to more than its value and under foreclosure, it can hardly be said that the security of those who claimed subrogation was decreased: Perrett v. Yardsdorfer, 37 M. 596.

462. Unless a prior mortgagee has notice of facts enough to put a prudent man on inquiry he may release portions of the mortgaged premises without examining the records to ascertain, or inquiring, whether there are subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers to be affected by the release: James v. Brown, 11 M. 25; Dewey v. Ingersoll, 42 M. 17.

463. A mortgagee's knowledge of a record of a deed to, and of possession and improvement by, a subsequent purchaser, was held enough to put him on inquiry before releasing other parts of the premises from the mortgage: Dewey v. Ingersoll, 42 M. 17.

464. A mortgagee who has notice that since the mortgage was given a portion of the land has been sold cannot release any part of the land to the prejudice of the purchasers. It is enough if he is notified, by letter from the mortgager as to the names of the buyers, and if the deed is on record: Hall v. Edwards, 43 M. 473.

465. Where mortgaged property has been wrongfully released to the prejudice of subsequent purchasers and the value of the parcel paid to the mortgager, the purchasers are equitably entitled on foreclosure to have the amount for which the parcel was released deducted from the mortgage debt before their parcel is sold: Ibid.

466. A mortgage for $3,000 contained a stipulation that when $2,000 was paid the mortgagee should release a portion of the premises. Upon payment of $1,000 nearly all the rest of the premises was released. Foreclosure becoming necessary, held, that it could not be limited to $1,000, as the security on the premises that had not been released had not been confined to $2,000: Vary v. Chatterton, 50 M. 541.

467. The holder of a mortgage covering two parcels agreed in writing that when he should obtain deeds of them, i. e., on foreclosure, he would convey one of them to the mortgager's wife; the mortgager was to continue in possession of the other parcel until the mortgage-holder should sell it, and should meanwhile pay ten per cent. interest on the face of the whole mortgage. Held, that this amounted to an agreement that in consideration of the change in security the first parcel should be released from the mortgage lien. And if after making such an arrangement the mortgage-holder found it necessary to proceed to a new foreclosure in order to correct an error in his own proceedings he could not charge the mortgager with the expense: Clark v. Stilson, 36 M. 482.

Release by last secretary of corporation is valid, see CORPORATIONS, § 67.

(d) Merger.

468. Where one owning the equity of redemption of lands which are subject to two mortgages buys in the first, and takes an assignment thereof to himself, such mortgage is not thereby merged in the fee: Dutton v. Ives, 5 M. 515.

469. The purchase, by a mortgagee, of the equity of redemption will not merge the mortgage where there are intermediate rights, or the interest of the mortgagee requires that the titles should be kept separate: Cooper v. Bigly, 18 M. 463.

470. The holder of a mortgage loses no substantial rights by becoming owner of the equity of redemption: Snyder v. Snyder, 6 M. 470.

471. A quitclaim deed from a mortgager to his mortgagee does not cause a merger of the mortgage so as to deprive the mortgagee of his right of priority, where the intention and the mortgagee's interest are otherwise: Tower v. Divine, 37 M. 443.

472. A mortgage cannot remain so after acquiring the fee unless the mortgage needs to be kept alive to protect his rights: Jackson v. Evans, 44 M. 510.

473. A mortgager and his grantees having deeded the mortgaged premises and other property to the mortgagee and others, in consideration of the mortgage debt and other debts, and taken back a contract for reconveyance on certain specified conditions, the mortgage debt was held to be thereby extinguished: McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 M. 52.

474. A mortgagee's equitable title is merged in the legal title, if he acquires it, unless he intends otherwise, or unless his acceptance of the legal title is brought about by fraud or deceit. And his intent is a question of fact: Ann Arbor Savings Bank v. Webb, 56 M. 377.

475. A woman mortgaged land to her mother, and afterwards deeded it to a bank to secure loans made by the latter to her son. In order to obtain a first lien for the bank and get rid of the prior lien held by the mother, the daughter and the bank gave simultaneous warranty deeds to the mother, the bank at the same time taking from her her personal note and mortgage to secure the debt to it. The mother did not know that the effect of this, if so intended, would be to merge her equitable title and destroy her prior lien, and was left to think that it would not affect such lien. She had no counsel, and the only lawyer who took part in the transaction acted in the bank's interest, whether employed by it or not. Held, that equity would not permit the merger, and that if the bank sought to avoid the prior lien it should have required the mother, in giving her mortgage to it, to discharge the former mortgage: Ibid.

476. If a grantee of mortgaged premises assumes the encumbrance and afterwards takes an assignment of the mortgage, he extinguishes the debt, and cannot afterwards give any right to foreclose the mortgage by assigning it: Winans v. Wilkie, 41 M. 264.

477. Where the owner of lands treats a mortgage thereon that has been assigned to him as a valid instrument, and transfers it as such, he is estopped from insisting, as against his assignee, or any one claiming under him, that in his hands it had merged and disappeared in the fee. And after he has recorded the assignment a purchaser from him is also estopped from insisting on such merger: Poirrell v. Smith, 30 M. 451.

478. A man after giving a mortgage upon certain described lands agreed to get a tax-deed thereto from the state to the mortgagee, whose name was Hurst, and who was to reconvey on the repayment of moneys advanced by him to the mortgager. The tax-deed was accordingly obtained, but as it was made out in the name of Hunt, the mortgagee quitclaimed to the mortgager under that name, and the latter gave him back a warranty deed, this being done to save the expense of a foreclosure. Held, that this transaction should be treated as intended to confirm the mortgage title and not destroy it; and that the mortgage was to be regarded as continuing for purposes of security, and open to foreclosure: Hurst v. Beaver, 50 M. 612.

479. A mortgage is not merged in a tax-title acquired by the mortgagee after the mortgage was given and for the purpose of protecting it: Baker v. Clark, 52 M. 22.

X. FORECLOSURE IN EQUITY.

As to matters of pleadings, practice, etc., in foreclosure suits in common with other chancery causes, see EQUITY, IV-XII.

(a) When right of foreclosure exists.

1. In general.

480. A foreclosure bill will not lie until the debt secured by the mortgage under foreclosure falls due: Kelly v. Bogardus, 51 M. 522.

481. A mortgage securing an agreement, conditioned on the success of a pending suit, cannot be foreclosed if the suit fails: Lamb v. Scullen, 61 M. 280.

482. Where a debt is made payable after several years, but the interest is payable annually, a bill to foreclose the mortgage which secures it may be properly filed after the expiration of the year, if interest is in arrears: Dederick v. Barber, 44 M. 19.

483. A mortgage was given to secure the payment of judgments confessed by the mortgager, but which were void for want of compliance with the statute. Bill being filed to foreclose, and no proof made of any indebtedness, the bill was dismissed: Austin v. Grant, 1 M. 490.

484. A condition in a mortgage that the mortgager "shall promptly pay and discharge all notes and papers of his upon which the mortgagees shall become indorsers or acceptors, together with all the interest, costs and charges accruing thereon, so as to save said mortgagees harmless by reason of their connection with such paper," is broken at once on a failure to pay the paper at maturity, and a right to foreclose accrues, without further action of the mortgagees: Butler v. Ladue, 12 M. 173.

485. In a mortgage with the condition above set forth, the power of sale was limited to the case of the mortgagees being damnified by paying the debts. It was held that the power of sale need not be co-extensive with the condition of the mortgage, and that the remedy in equity was open for every breach of the condition, whether the parties had seen fit to provide for such a breach in the power of sale or not: Ibid.

486. Where one holds a chattel mortgage as security for the payment of a note, and afterwards takes a mortgage on real estate conditioned in the usual form for the performance of the condition of the note, he is not obliged to resort to the chattel mortgage before foreclosing that upon real estate: Davis v. Rider, 5 M. 423.

487. Where a mortgage covenanted that, on default in payment of interest, the whole amount of the debt should become due if the holder so elected, the mortgagee, who had assigned the mortgage and indorsed the notes secured by it, was held not to be so far interested in the question of election as to be entitled to disturb a decree against him as indorser on the ground that notice to him of such election was not alleged or proved: English v. Carney, 25 M. 178.

488. Whether a formal notice of an election by the mortgager to treat the whole amount as due for the non-payment of interest is necessary before commencing foreclosure, or whether the want of such notice affects anything more than the question of costs, quere: Ibid.

489. It seems that formal notice of an election to foreclose for the whole debt, if an instalment is overdue, is unnecessary, and a declaration in the bill, of such election, is enough: Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 M. 208.

490. The only effect of an omission, before filing a foreclosure bill, to demand payment at the place stipulated in the mortgage, would be to prevent a recovery of costs: Norton v. Ohrns, 67 M. 612 (Nov. 10, '87).

491. A mortgagee cannot maintain a foreclosure bill as a proceeding auxiliary to an ejectment suit: Livingston v. Hayes, 43 M. 129.

492. One who holds several securities for the same debt may foreclose either of them at his option until his debt is satisfied: McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142.

2. Lapse of time; limitations; laches.

493. The fact that an action at law upon the debt or obligation secured has become barred by the statute of limitations or by bankruptcy does not prevent foreclosure, or affect the validity of the mortgage: Michigan Ins. Co. v. Brown, 11 M. 265; Goodrich v. Leland, 18 M. 110, 117; Powell v. Smith, 30 M. 451; Webber v. Ryan, 54 M. 70; Damon v. Deeves, 57 M. 247.

494. Lapse of time, in connection with non-payment of interest, and continued possession of the mortgager, unaccompanied by any effort on the mortgagee's part to enforce payment, is not a legal but an equitable or presumptive bar, and the presumption may be rebutted by circumstances. What circumstances will rebut the presumption must depend upon the facts in each particular case: Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 M. 178; Baent v. Kennicutt, 57 M. 268.

495. Prior to H. S. § 8709, foreclosure in equity could take place at any time before a presumption of payment arises by the lapse of twenty years: Michigan Ins. Co. v. Brown, 11 M. 265.

496. A mortgage on lands given to secure notes that have been allowed to run after maturity may be foreclosed at any time within the period of the limitation of actions for the recovery of real estate (but see H. S. § 8709): Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 M. 430.

497. Foreclosure of a mortgage dated in 1855 was not barred in 1878 where there was proof of payments made as late as 1866 by the mortgager as agent for his wife, who held the mortgaged interest under an assignment from a mesne purchaser: Butler v. Hogadone, 45 M. 390.

498. The lapse of less than twenty years before filing the bill does not (this was prior to H. S. § 8709) bar the foreclosure of a mortgage given for either indemnity or payment: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 638.

499. But H. S. § 8709 (act 204 of 1879) requires suits or proceedings to foreclose mortgages on real estate to be commenced within fifteen years from the time when the mortgage became due or within fifteen years after the last payment made thereon; with a saving clause of five years as to mortgages that would otherwise have been barred at once: Pub. Acts, 1879, p. 186.

500. Foreclosure of a mortgage not under seal is not barred in less time than would bar a sealed one: McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142.

501. The dismissal of a foreclosure bill was affirmed where the mortgage was never recorded, and the mortgagee had died twenty-nine years before suit, and no attempt to procure administration on the estate or to enforce the mortgage was made until after the mortgager's death, and there were indorsements indicating that nearly the whole sum had been paid, and some evidences of a counterclaim that would have extinguished the rest of it: Burrow v. Debo, 47 M. 242.

502. A delay of twelve years from the maturity of the postponed mortgage, and six years after such foreclosure, and the postponement of suit until the original mortgager was dead and the foreclosure title vested in his heirs, should in a case of doubt put complainant to the necessity of making out a plain case: Burdick v. Wheelock, 48 M. 289.

503. A mortgagee delayed foreclosure four years after an assignment of the mortgage had been obtained and after the assignee had discharged the mortgage upon a small payment by the then owner of the equity of redemption. But the assignee had paid no consideration for the assignment and had not received the collateral securities, and as their non-delivery should have put the owner of the equity upon inquiry as to whether he was dealing with the actual owner of the mortgage, it was held that he had not acquired any rights in good faith, and that the mortgagee was not estopped from foreclosing by the delay: Fletcher v. Carpenter, 37 M. 412.

504. A., upon the receipt of a second mortgage on the M. estate, agreed to look to it before resorting to a mortgage on the L. estate, which he subsequently discharged in consideration of a mortgage upon the N. estate. A., being enjoined from proceeding to sell the M. estate, took no steps to dissolve the injunction, and two years elapsed before the injunction suit was dismissed. Meanwhile, the M. estate had been sold on the first mortgage upon it, and the time for redemption had expired. Held, that A. could not, because of his laches, foreclose his mortgage on the N. estate: Thompson v. Jarvis, 39 M. 689.

3. Effect of proceedings at law or of statutory foreclosure.

505. No proceeding can be had on a bill to foreclose a mortgage, if it appear that any judgment has been obtained in a suit at law for the debt, or any part thereof, unless to an execution against the property of the defendant in such judgment the sheriff shall have returned the execution unsatisfied in whole or in part, and that defendant has no property to satisfy the execution except the mortgaged premises (H. S. § 6706): Dennis v. Hemingway, W. 387.

506. Where bill was filed to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of three notes, and the bill stated that a judgment had been recovered on the first note, which had been nearly paid, but did not show that an execution had been issued on the judgment and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, nor distinctly claim a decree for the amount of the other two notes only, nor waive the right to the mortgage security as to the judgment, it was held that the bill could not be maintained (H. S. § 6706): Cooper v. Bresler, 9 M. 534.

507. To prevent proceedings on a foreclosure bill, it is not necessary that judgment shall have been rendered on the bond or note accompanying the mortgage, but for the money for which the mortgage was given: Dennis v. Hemingway, W. 387.

508. Whether H. S. § 6706, as to proceedings in chancery to foreclose a mortgage where a judgment has been obtained at law for the money secured by it, applies to the case of a bill to foreclose the defendant's equity of redemption in lands which had been conveyed to complainants by warranty deed by way of security, quere: Maynard v. Pereault, 30 M. 160.

509. Proving a claim that is secured by mortgage before the commissioners on an estate is not such a proceeding at law as is contemplated by H. S. § 8498, forbidding a foreclosure by advertisement while a proceeding at law is pending to recover the debt. The proceedings referred to are those in which judgment may be rendered and execution issued against the debtor's property: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 M. 96.

510. Where in a statutory foreclosure a mistake occurs which renders the proceedings irregular and voidable, the mortgagees may waive the proceedings and commence de novo either by advertisement or in equity: Atwater v. Kinman, H. 243.

511. The holder of a second mortgage began a foreclosure suit without making the prior encumbrancer a party. Pending foreclosure the first mortgage was assigned, and the assignee foreclosed at law and bid in the premises. Part of the description was left out of the foreclosure notice and omitted also from the sheriff's deed by a mistake for which the assignee was not to blame. Afterwards the holder of the second mortgage perfected his foreclosure, and he also bid in the premises. No new rights arose meanwhile. Held, on a bill by the assignee, that the statutory foreclosure might be set aside and a new foreclosure allowed in equity: Vary v. Chatterton, 50 M. 541.

(b) Defences.

As to defences by way of equitable SET-OFF, see that title, IV.

512. A release of part of mortgaged lands at the instance of the mortgager is no defence to a foreclosure of the rest if there is nothing to indicate that the release was against the rights of any of the defendants: Botsford v. Botsford, 49 M. 29.

513. An adverse tax-title cannot be pleaded as a defence to a purchase-money mortgage where no claim under it has been made against the mortgager: Smith v. Fiting, 37 M. 148.

514. Certain land that had been sold for unpaid taxes of 1856 was conveyed in 1872 with a warrant against encumbrances, and the grantees returned a purchase-money mortgage. A purchaser under the tax-title had also mortgaged the premises, and the grantees claim to have been put to expense to perfect their title in other respects. On foreclosure of the purchase-money mortgage, the existence of the adverse tax-title and the antecedent mortgage was alleged as a defence, and the right was claimed to detain the purchase money to the extent of which damages would be recoverable upon the covenants. Held, that if the grantees were entitled to any such damages, they must resort to the covenants in their deed: Ibid.

515. It is no defence to a bill for foreclosure by the assignee of a mortgage that the assignment to him was without consideration. The mortgager has no interest in the question whether the assignment was for or without consideration, except as the want of it may enable him to make available any defence he might have had as against the mortgagee: Adair v. Adair, 5 M. 204.

516. The grantee of land was allowed to withhold part of the consideration for a specified time in order to take up an outstanding title, and to secure the money withheld he gave a mortgage. Held, that it was no defence to its foreclosure that to perfect his title he had paid the amount withheld to a person who claimed to have obtained a quitclaim of the outstanding title, when it was neither averred in the answer nor shown by the proofs that the latter claim was valid or truthful: Richardson v. Tolman, 44 M. 379.

517. It seems the foreclosure of a mortgage cannot be defeated by presumptions in favor of an issue made by a subsequent encumbrancer as to the assignment of the mortgage, if such encumbrancer had not relied upon the records or upon inquiry in taking an interest in the premises in suit: Jakway v. Jenison, 46 M. 521.

518. The good faith of a second mortgagee in taking his mortgage on the strength of a forged discharge of the former one is no defence to the foreclosure of the earlier mortgage if the holder had nothing to with deceiving the later mortgagee. And as the foreclosure is an original equity proceeding which covers all questions as to the validity and amount of the security, the question of forgery is for the court to decide and not for a jury: Keller v. Hannah, 52 M. 535.

519. Where a defendant in foreclosure obtains delay in the foreclosure by promising to pay the amount of the decree, both parties supposing that his title to the mortgaged land is good, he cannot, on finding it to be defective, defend against payment on that ground: Tenney v. Hand, 32 M. 63.

520. Proof in a foreclosure case that the note which is the basis of the proceedings does not belong to the complainant, but to other parties who use complainant's name for the purposes of the suit, does not affect the proceeding any further than to entitle defendants to the benefit of any defence they might have against the real owners: Spear v. Hadden, 31 M. 265.

521. Where a complainant parted with his interest in a mortgage before answer, it was held a good objection to his foreclosure suit: Wallace v. Dunning, 1 W. 416.

522. The fact that pending a foreclosure suit the complainant borrowed money from a third person on the mortgage on the understanding that the suit was to go on and the money be repaid with interest, if it succeeded, is no defence to the foreclosure: Chase v. Brown, 32 M. 225.

523. A mortgager against whom a decree in foreclosure has been taken, making him personally liable for any balance, is not precluded from contesting the validity of the decree upon the merits on an appeal, by the fact that he has parted with his title to the mortgaged premises to one who has allowed the decree to be taken by default, and has failed to appeal: McCabe v. Farnsworth, 27 M. 52.

524. Where a bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage conditioned for the payment of a certain sum of money, it is competent to show in defence, by parol evidence, that the mortgage was given to indemnify sureties in a recognizance of bail, and that the liability of the sureties had been discharged without their being damnified: Colman v. Post, 10 M. 422.

525. Though such mortgage was conditioned for the payment of a negotiable promissory note, and both mortgage and note are assigned before due to secure the assignee for procuring bail, such assignee is a bona fide holder for the purpose only of securing bail, and when the sureties have been discharged without being damnified, neither he nor one who takes an assignment of the note and mortgage from him after they become due is entitled to collect the amount thereof as bona fide holder: Ibid.

(c) Parties.

1. Who may foreclose or be joined as complainants.

526. Where there has been an irregular statutory foreclosure, the purchaser thereof, or his grantee, not the mortgagee, is the proper party to file a foreclosure bill in chancery: Gilbert v. Cooley, W. 494.

527. The grantee of the purchaser on an irregular statutory foreclosure is entitled to foreclose in equity if occasion requires: Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

528. One holding the equitable title only to a mortgage may foreclose it in chancery: Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

529. An assignee of a mortgage may sue upon it in equity in his own name where the assignors have intentionally vested him with full title and authority, and there is no conflict between them as to whether the title is absolute or in trust: Fisher v. Meister, 24 M. 447.

530. Where the assignee of a mortgage files a bill to foreclose it, and the court find that the assignment was taken as security only, this will not affect the complainant's right to maintain his bill on the case he has stated, but goes only to the amount of the decree: McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142.

531. Even though there has been no written assignment the assignee of a mortgage is entitled to foreclose in equity on proof of his purchase: Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 M. 581; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70; Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

532. Nor need the notes secured by the mortgage be indorsed to the assignee of the mortgage to enable him to foreclose: Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

533. A. gave to B., who had backed a note for A.'s accommodation, a mortgage on real estate to indemnify him, and on A.'s failing to pay the note at maturity B. paid it, and entered up the amount in his general account against A. as a charge against him. B. afterwards assigned the note and mortgage to C. in payment of a debt. Held, that C. was entitled to foreclose the mortgage and to take a decree for deficiency against A.: Bendey v. Townsend, 109 U. S. 665.

534. Where one seeks, as assignee, to foreclose a mortgage securing a non-negotiable note, but gives no evidence of title to the debt beyond the mere possession of the note, and of an assignment for certain interests which are not shown to include the debt secured, his bill must be dismissed: Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 53 M. 124.

535. A widow, to whom her husband has bequeathed the life interest in a mortgage, can foreclose it without its being assigned to her by probate order as a specific legacy; it is enough that she distinctly avers her ownership, and that she acts with the assent of the remainder-man, which may be inferred from circumstances. And where the remainder-man is her co-executor his assent to her possession may be inferred likewise: Proctor v. Robinson, 35 M. 285.

536. W. owned the equity of redemption in land mortgaged to D., but deeded the land to B. in exchange for certain other property, and to equalize the trade and sustain his covenant of title he agreed to pay a certain portion of the amount due on D.'s mortgage, and gave S. a mortgage on the property he received to secure this agreement. S. afterward quit-claimed the land to a third person subject to D.'s mortgage, which the grantee assumed as part of the purchase price. Held, that on W.'s failure to pay D. what he had agreed to pay on D.'s mortgage, S. was entitled to foreclose the later mortgage given to him to compel such payment to be made to himself: Stuart v. Worden, 42 M. 154.

537. A mortgage conditioned for the support of the mortgagee by the mortgager during her life-time cannot be foreclosed for the benefit of persons who had boarded the mortgagee at the mortgager's request. Such a mortgage is for the benefit of the mortgagee, and not for the benefit of those who may, at the request of the mortgager, furnish her with support: Daniels v. Eisenlord, 10 M. 454.

538. One who is not entitled to receive payment or grant acquittances on a mortgage or its accompanying notes, but is simply bound to release the securities when paid or otherwise discharged, is not the proper person to file a foreclosure bill: Briggs v. Hannowald, 85 M. 474.

539. One who, having received a deed as security for the payment of a note, has transferred the note and has subsequently received delivery of a note and mortgage running to the owners of the equity of redemption under such deed, as collateral to the debt secured by the deed, has not such an interest or title as authorizes him to file a foreclosure bill in his own name without making the holder of the original demand a party: Ibid.

540. A mortgage was given to three persons to secure a debt due to them jointly. Two having died, held, that the survivor could file a foreclosure bill alone: Cote v. Deguindre, W. 64.

541. The survivor of two assignees of a mortgage may foreclose it, and it is not necessary for him to join the personal representative of the deceased assignee: Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

542. A trustee, holding a mortgage as such, need not make his cestuis que trust parties to a bill to foreclose it: Sill v. Ketchum, H. 428.

543. To a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage held by a trust company, the bondholders of the company are not necessary parties; they are represented by their trustee, and are bound by the decree so long as it stands unreversed: Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 238.

544. Partners need not be joined as complainants in the foreclosure of a mortgage given to only one of the firm as trustee for the partnership: Shelden v. Bennett, 44 M. 634.

2. Defendants.

545. The holder of the legal title to the mortgage is a necessary party where the holder of the equitable title files a bill to foreclose: Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

546. A bill to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a joint and several note is defective for want of parties if filed against only one of the makers of the note, though the mortgage was given by him only. This is especially so where the mortgage has been assigned, and if the defence to the note could only have been enforced by a joint cross-action for damages: Dederick v. Barber, 44 M. 19.

547. The description of premises in the mortgage was erroneous in one particular. To a bill to foreclose it and correct the error a person is not a proper party who owns lands which would be affected by the erroneous description, but who has never been owner or encumbrancer of any portion of the mortgaged premises as identified by the proofs: Ramsdell v. Eaton, 13 M. 117.

548. The mortgager is a necessary party to a foreclosure bill, notwithstanding the personal remedy against him is barred: Michigan Ins. Co. v. Brown, 11 M. 265.

549. Where no relief is sought against him personally, the mortgager is not a necessary defendant to a bill to foreclose a mortgage assumed by the grantee of the premises: Miller v. Thompson, 34 M. 10.

550. Adverse claimants or prior encumbrancers cannot be made parties to a foreclosure suit for the purpose of litigating their titles. The only proper parties are the mortgager and the mortgagee, and those who have acquired rights and interests under them subsequent to the mortgage: Chamberlain v. Lyell, 8 M. 448; Horton v. Ingersoll, 18 M. 409; Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

551. In a suit by a junior mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage, prior mortgagees are not necessary parties: Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734.

552. A mortgagee who files a bill of foreclosure is not bound to bring in parties interested in the equity of redemption, unless where he has actual or constructive notice of their claims, and where he has no such notice they are barred by the foreclosure: Woods v. Love, 27 M. 308.

553. But where one claims an interest in the equity of redemption, it is proper to make him a party for the purpose of foreclosing such interest, notwithstanding he also claims the land by tax-title: Horton v. Ingersoll, 13 M. 409; Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

554. Where the complainant in foreclosure dismissed his bill as against one made a party under the general allegation that he claimed some interest in the premises, as subsequent encumbrancer or otherwise, the mortgager, appealing to the supreme court from the decree in the case, cannot complain of the dismissal, since it in no respect affects his rights: Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

555. One may foreclose without reference to subsequent encumbrances if he care only to reach the equity of redemption held by the party whom he has made defendant: Avery v. Ryerson, 34 M. 362.

556. Whether, where an assignee in bankruptcy has proceeded to decree in the federal court on a bill to foreclose a subsequent mortgage, it is competent, without permission of the bankruptcy court, to make him a defendant in a bill to foreclose a prior mortgage, so as thereby to affect his rights under the subsequent mortgage, quere: Ibid.

557. Sureties who have undertaken, not for the payment of the mortgage debt, but that the mortgager shall provide a sinking fund in certain specific securities for its payment, cannot be joined as defendants in a suit to foreclose the mortgage under H. S. § 6704: Joy v. Jackson & M. P. R. Co., 11 M. 155.

558. The guarantor of the collection of a debt secured by mortgage should not be made defendant in the foreclosure: Johnson v. Shepard, 35 M. 115.

559. The fraudulent grantee of a title which is equitably subject to the mortgage is a proper party defendant to a suit to foreclose the mortgage: Adams v. Bradley, 13 M. 346.

560. The personal representatives of a deceased mortgager are not necessary parties to a suit to foreclose the mortgage against the heirs unless the personal estate is sought to be charged with any deficiency: Abbott v. Godfroy's Heirs, 1 M. 178.

561. The representatives of a defendant in foreclosure who died before the bill was filed need not be brought in where decedent's only interest in the mortgaged premises was a right of dower: Miller v. Miller, 48 M. 311.

562. The wife of a mortgager, even though she claims a homestead right in the premises, is not a necessary party to a bill to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage given by the husband alone at the time of his purchase: Amphlett v. Hibbard, 29 M. 293.

563. A man mortgaged an undivided two-thirds of certain land without inserting covenants of title or warranty. His wife afterwards acquired the other undivided third, to which he had no title when he gave the mortgage. Held, that she could not be made a defendant to a foreclosure bill: McClure v. Holbrook, 39 M. 42.

564. The wife of a defendant in foreclosure is properly made a party because she is interested in the question whether the mortgage was for purchase money so that its foreclosure would cut off her right of dower. But if the subpoena served on her has no underwriting to let her know the purpose of the suit, and if, in consequence, she appears and disclaims, and replication is filed to her disclaimer, she is entitled to the costs of a solicitor's fee on the dismissal of the suit as to her, and, if it is not allowed, to a solicitor's fee on appeal: Hal-dane v. Sweet, 55 M. 196.

565. Minors whose guardian has assigned a mortgage which he held for them are not necessary parties to a bill by the assignee to foreclose the same: Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

566. Where a mortgage is made subject to a life estate already vested in a third person, or where a third person had an undivided interest in the property before the mortgage is given, a foreclosure bill should be dismissed as to them: Pool v. Horton, 45 M. 404.

567. A defendant in foreclosure whose connection with the mortgage or the equity of redemption is not shown by the bill is not a proper party, and is entitled, so far as he is concerned, to have the bill dismissed with costs: Havens v. Jones, 45 M. 253.

(d) Pleadings.

See, generally, EQUITY, V.

1. The bill.

568. A bill to foreclose a mortgage given by Alexander Eaton, junior, to O. P. Ramsdell, was filed by Orrin P. Ramsdell against Alexander Eaton. The bill was in the usual form, but contained no direct averment that the parties to the suit were identical with the parties to the mortgage. Held, sufficient on pro confesso. The question of identity would have been open to proof if disputed: Ramsdell v. Eaton, 12 M. 117.

569. A foreclosure bill by persons describing themselves as executors of the last will of a mortgagee cannot be sustained where it does not set out his death or in any way allude to the probate of the will: Middleworth v. Nixon, 2 M. 425.

570. In stating an assignment of the mortgage it is sufficient to set it forth according to its legal import and effect, without reference to its form or phraseology: Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

571. It is not ground of demurrer to a foreclosure bill by an assignee that it does not give the date of the assignment of the bond and mortgage: Sill v. Ketchum, H. 423.

572. The averment in a foreclosure bill that the owner of a bond and mortgage assigned the same to the complainants in consideration of one dollar, and that on the same day the assignment was duly acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds according to the laws of New York, where the same was executed, is sufficient on demurrer: Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

573. A foreclosure bill filed by an assignee of the mortgage stated that the mortgage was executed in May, 1839, and that the mortgagees afterwards, to wit, Feb. 25, 1839, assigned to complainant. It then stated that the assignment was acknowledged Feb. 25, 1841. Held, that the date 1839 was a clerical error, and might be rejected as surplusage: Bailey v. Murphy, W. 424.

574. Where a mortgagee's right to certain money depended upon the title to the premises named in the mortgage being perfected in the two particulars mentioned in the mortgage, it was held that a bill to foreclose should contain distinct averments in the stating part of the bill of the performance of the two conditions precedent. A bill in the ordinary form, as in case of a mortgage for the payment of money unconditionally, except that in stating the pretences of defendant to excuse his non-payment it states that he pretends a non-compliance by complainant with such conditions, and avers that such pretence is unfounded, is not sufficient: Curtis v. Goodenow, 24 M. 18.

575. Bill was filed to foreclose a mortgage, which made persons other than the mortgager parties, charging that one of them had given a prior mortgage on the same premises, which had been since paid, but caused to be assigned to one of the other defendants for the purpose of keeping it alive against complainant's mortgage; and asking that it be decreed to be satisfied; but the bill did not show any privity of title to the land between the parties to the first and the parties to the second mortgage, or what was the state of the title at any time, or any obligation on the part of the first mortgager which would entitle the second mortgager or his assigns to require him to pay or remove such first mortgage. Held, that the bill showed no title to relief as against the parties to the first mortgage: Wright v. Dudley, 8 M. 115.

576. Where a foreclosure bill did not state that anything was due on the note executed with the mortgage, or state whether any proceedings had been had at law for the recovery of the debt, it was held demurrable: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478.

577. The allegation that the mortgage debt is due is material in a foreclosure suit; and when the answer does not admit it, any proof is receivable to disprove it which would be receivable under the general issue at the common law: Morris v. Morris, 5 M. 171.

578. An allegation that no part of the mortgage debt has been collected or paid, when the bill sets out fully the mortgage, and shows the amount of the several instalments, and when they became due, sufficiently shows the amount due: Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

579. Where a mortgage is given to secure the sureties on an official bond, it is immaterial that a bill to foreclose it does not correctly state the date of the appointment to the office, if it correctly recites the mortgage and the breach, and the testimony makes out full ground of suit: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 633.

580. Bill by persons who had guaranteed the performance of a covenant to pay certain debts to foreclose an indemnity mortgage. They averred that they had paid on the debts $1,000, "as they were obliged to do by the terms and legal effect" of the covenant, "on account of the default" of the covenantor. It was held that this was a sufficient statement that they had paid after their liability accrued, and that it was not necessary to set forth in the bill the particular sums paid: Dye v. Mann, 10 M. 291.

581. It is immaterial in such case that the payment of the debts was by part of the defendants only, and not by all jointly: Ibid.

582. It is unimportant that a foreclosure bill describes the premises in different terms from those used in the mortgage if the mortgage is sufficiently identified and the premises described in both are substantially the same. If either party wants a judicial settlement of the question what precise parcel the description belongs to, a proper case should be made therefor with proper proof: Shepard v. Shepard, 36 M. 173.

583. A foreclosure bill may properly describe the mortgaged land with accuracy even though such description varies from that in the mortgage in details that may be rejected as surplusage: Slater v. Breese, 36 M. 77.

584. In a foreclosure bill it is sufficient to set out the condition of the mortgage according to its legal effect: Jerome v. Hopkins, 2 M. 96.

585. The general allegation in a foreclosure bill, that a defendant "has or claims to have rights and interests in the mortgaged premises as subsequent purchaser, encumbrancer or otherwise," is not sufficient to put in issue any right of such defendant which he holds paramount to the mortgage, and a disclaimer is all that is necessary to protect such rights: Comstock v. Comstock, 24 M. 39.

586. Whether a bankrupt's assignee can be impleaded on foreclosure as representing the bankrupt's interests as a subsequent encumbrancer, by alleging that, "as assignee of A. B. [the bankrupt], he has or claimed to have rights and interests in the premises, . . . or in some part or parts thereof, as subsequent purchaser, encumbrancer or otherwise:" Avery v. Ryerson, 34 M. 362.

587. Where the bill charges an instrument to be a mortgage, asks to have it foreclosed as such, and contains a prayer for other or further relief, the court may declare it to be a mortgage, although there be no special prayer for that purpose in the bill: Abbott v. Godfrey's Heirs, 1 M. 178.

588. A defendant in a foreclosure decree who has a residuary interest in the mortgage foreclosed after complainant's demand is satisfied may file a bill to have the benefit of that decree, and also to foreclose the mortgage against the defendants who were not, but should have been, parties to the first suit. Such a bill is not objectionable. It is an original bill as to those who were not parties to the first bill, and a supplemental bill as to those who were: Griggs v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 10 M. 117.

589. A foreclosure bill that makes certain parties defendants as subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers is not multifarious in alleging that such defendants claim some adverse interest: Wilkinson v. Green, 34 M. 231.

590. A mortgage containing an erroneous description having been replaced by one describing the premises correctly, the mortgagee sought to foreclose it against a subsequent purchaser, but, by mistake, gave his solicitor the original instead of the corrected mortgage, and the solicitor filed a bill to correct the description and foreclose. Defendant answered, admitting his purchase under the mortgage, but averring that the mortgage had been fully paid and discharged. Complainant explained his mistake in an affidavit, and filed an amended bill setting up the new mortgage and asking for its foreclosure. The court struck the amended bill from the files. Held error. Complainant was entitled to amend, and defendant having admitted the purchase subject to the mortgage was not in position to object. The second mortgage could properly be construed as given to correct the mistake in the first without destroying the identity of the debt, and to bring out the real equity which defendant must have known was the cause of action: McMann v. Westcott, 47 M. 177.

591. It seems that a foreclosure sale is not necessarily invalidated by neglect to re-engage the foreclosure bill after amending it by adding a new party defendant: Carpenter v. Ingersoll, 43 M. 438.

2. The answer; cross-bill.

And see EQUITY, V, (f), (g).

592. Where the defence to the foreclosure of a mortgage depends on new matter by way of avoidance the defendant must allege it circumstantially and prove it as alleged: Post v. Springsted, 49 M. 90.

593. Where a mortgage permits the mortgager to make payment before the debt falls due, at his option, he must distinctly and affirmatively elect to do so, and, if he relies upon such election in defending against a foreclosure, he must not only prove it but allege it in his answer: Ibid.

594. Where a foreclosure bill calls for an answer under oath, the existence and consideration of the debt and securities is put in issue, and anything is responsive that explains the transaction. The defendant is called on to answer the whole series of material averments as well as the special interrogatories, and if his answer sets up nothing in avoidance, but only refers to the transactions mentioned in the bill, the complainant is bound by it unless he can overthrow it by counter-evidence; and he has the burden of showing the consideration and genuineness of the securities: Matteson v. Morris, 40 M. 52.

595. A junior encumbrancer joined as defendant in foreclosure, and claiming the benefit of the doctrine of marshalling assets, should allege and establish such facts as would entitle him thereto: Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 M. 430.

596. A second mortgagee, after instituting foreclosure proceedings to which he made a subsequent mortgagee a defendant, took a quitclaim from the mortgagers and acquired the first mortgage. Whether the subsequent mortgagee, in setting up these facts as a defence, could do so in an answer, or should set them up by plea or cross-bill, quere: Tower v. Divine, 37 M. 443. See supra, § 458.

597. A portion of the land covered by a mortgage having been conveyed subject to the payment of the entire mortgage by the grantee, the purchaser of another parcel is not obliged to file a cross-bill in the foreclosure suit to protect his rights, but may set out the facts in his answer, and the court, where it can be done without prejudice to the complainant, should make decree protecting his priority: Caruthers v. Hall, 10 M. 40.

598. Where a mortgagee who is himself in debt has assigned to his creditor as security the note secured by the mortgage, and then seeks to foreclose the mortgage, the creditor also can file a cross-bill to protect his equities. And on such cross-bill the mortgagee can be held personally liable to the creditor for any deficiency, even though he has not indorsed the note assigned: Wilcox v. Allen, 36 M. 160.

3. What evidence warranted by the pleadings; variance.

599. The allegation under chancery rule 91 that a defendant claims an interest in the mortgaged premises "as subsequent purchaser, encumbrancer or otherwise" will not entitle the complainant to show that a deed to such defendant subsequent to the mortgage, but recorded first, is fraudulent. If he claims the deed to be fraudulent he must set forth in the bill the facts which show the fraud: Wurcherer v. Hewitt, 10 M. 453.

600. A note given by two persons was secured by a mortgage from only one of them. The foreclosure bill described the note as given by the mortgager, but no objection was made for non-joinder, and the bill made pro-fer of the note and mortgage, and described the mortgage by its record. Held, that this was not a case of misdescription, and therefore not one of fatal variance; and the non-joinder is unimportant unless as bearing upon personal responsibility: Botsford v. Botsford, 49 M. 29.

601. Where a defence to a mortgage foreclosure is based on an alleged agreement between the complainant's assignor and the defendant the agreement must be clearly set out in the answer, and the proofs must show it to be a contract legally binding. Where both answer and proofs are vague such defence will fail: Suhr v. Ellsworth, 29 M. 57.

602. A foreclosure suit can be defended only on the grounds set up in the answer: Higman v. Stewart, 38 M. 513.

603. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage given to secure an accommodation indorser, a partnership accounting between the parties cannot, if not connected with the case, be brought into it except by setting up such facts in the answer or by cross-bill as would entitle the defendant to the benefit of an equitable set-off: Hess v. Final, 32 M. 515.

604. The holder of one of several notes secured by a mortgage that is discharged of record, in foreclosing against the present owner of the premises can introduce proof to disturb the discharge without setting out the invalidating facts in the bill; he must show a prima facie title as assignee, and if the defendant relies on a discharge he must allege and prove it: Spear v. Hadden, 31 M. 265.

(e) What matters can be litigated.

605. Whether the title obtained by one who buys from the purchaser on statutory foreclosure after the time for redemption has expired can be passed upon in a foreclosure proceeding for a second instalment under the mortgage, quere: Miles v. Skinner, 42 M. 181.

606. A title obtained under a foreclosure of the first mortgage is presumptively prior in right to a subsequent mortgage, and its validity cannot be assailed in a suit to foreclose the latter without special averments showing why it ought to be postponed: Dawson v. Danbury Bank, 15 M. 489.

607. It is not admissible in a foreclosure suit, whatever the pleadings, to proceed to litigate and settle the right of a party who sets up a legal title, which, if valid, is adverse and paramount to the title of both mortgager and mortgagee, and if it were, a bill which simply brings in the adverse claimants under the usual allegation in foreclosure bills against subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers, i. e., as claiming subordinate interests, is not properly framed to raise such an issue or to support a decree upon the title of such adverse claimants: Summers v. Bromley, 23 M. 125.

608. Foreclosure is not a proceeding in which to litigate the adverse and paramount title of a defendant who claims under the foreclosure of a previous mortgage from which the complainant does not seek to redeem: Bell v. Pate, 47 M. 468.

609. In a foreclosure suit a third person's right of dower cannot be litigated, nor she made a party: Ligare v. Semple, 32 M. 438.

610. The holder of a mortgage dated and recorded before a deed of the same property is entitled to treat all subsequent rights as subordinate; and on his bill of foreclosure such rights need not be litigated: Shelden v. Warner, 45 M. 638.

611. Where a foreclosure bill is filed against subsequent purchasers from a grantee whose deed was not recorded until after the mortgage, complainant is not concerned with the good faith of their grantor, and need not investigate the merits of subsequent interests: Ibid.

612. A title that is adverse and paramount to that of both mortgager and mortgagee cannot be litigated in a foreclosure suit; but the question whether an asserted claim is such an adverse one as to come within this rule depends, not upon what is set up in the answer in regard to it, but rather upon what the bill charges and the proofs show to be its real character: Wilkinson v. Green, 34 M. 221.

613. Where a subsequent purchaser of land from a mortgager thereof has procured quitclaims from the mortgager's grantors for the purpose of perfecting his title of record, but under such circumstances as would make it fraudulent for him to set them up as establishing an adverse and paramount title, the mortgagee, on proper allegations in his foreclosure bill, may have such adverse title declared null: Ibid.

(f) Publication; absent, etc., defendants.

As to affidavits for orders of publication and of publication, see EQUITY, IX.

614. Where a defendant is brought in by publication, the question of the validity of the subpoena which was prematurely returned not served is unimportant: Torrans v. Hicks, 33 M. 307.

615. Two things only are required by H. S. § 6685 of non-resident defendants to entitle them to appear and defend in mortgage cases: appearance before the premises are sold under a decree, and payment of such costs as the court shall direct. The costs only are discretionary with the court: Bailey v. Murphy, W. 305.

616. H. S. § 6685 extends to all non-resident defendants and makes no distinction between mortgagers and subsequent encumbrancers: Ibid.

617. A non-resident defendant was let in to defend by answer after a sale had been made, the sale being ordered to stand until final hearing. Held, that the case admitted of all rights of defence which might be established by answer, including that of redemption: Stone v. Welling, 14 M. 514.

618. Upon a default by a defendant brought in by publication there can be no decree without proofs; and the complainant should also be sworn as to payments: Brown v. Thompson, 29 M. 72.

619. In foreclosure against a non-resident brought in by publication complainant failed to offer testimony or to be sworn as to payments made on the mortgage. Held, that such failure did not oust the court of jurisdiction to pronounce a decree, and could not be collaterally made use of: Colton v. Rupert, 60 M. 318.

620. A non-resident mortgager who accepts after foreclosure sale the surplus due him, and who takes no steps to have the proceedings set aside within the time allowed by law, waives all irregularities and sanctions the validity of such proceedings: Ibid.

(g) Evidence; burden of proof; production of the securities; reference.

See, also, EQUITY, X, XI, (e).

621. Foreclosure by assignee. The mortgagee was sworn as a witness and testified that the mortgage was made to him and assigned to complainant at the request of one of the mortgagers, without any consideration moving from or to him for the mortgage or assignment. Held, that this evidence cast upon complainant the burden of proof to show a consideration for the mortgage: Bishop v. Felch, 7 M. 371.

622. The burden of proving fraud alleged as a defence to a mortgage is on the mortgager: Perrett v. Yarsdorfer, 37 M. 596.

623. Where a foreclosure case is tried on a bill and cross-bill, and the defendant, on information and belief, alleges in the cross-bill that the amount called for in the original bill is too much, it is for the defence to prove the allegation if opportunity is given. If no proof is offered the complainant is not obliged to tender evidence to disprove it: Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 M. 208.

624. The defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage has the burden of proving that the consideration therefor was less than appears therein if complainant claims that amount, and it is against him if his own theory of computation is as favorable to complainant as to himself: Wiswall v. Ayres, 51 M. 324.

625. The burden of showing that the amount due on a mortgage under foreclosure is less than the amount secured or than what remained unpaid on balance of accounts is on the defendant: Lyon v. McDonald, 51 M. 436.

626. The rule that on foreclosure defendant has the burden of showing that the debt has been paid will be relaxed where the debtor has confided in the creditor and placed himself in his hands, and for ten years neither debtor nor creditor has taken any notice of the debt, and the evidence relating to it has become uncertain and conflicting: Lashbrooks v. Hatheway, 52 M. 124.

627. Where a mortgager is an employee of the mortgagee, and the latter's agent keeps the accounts, and it is understood that moneys coming through him to the mortgager are to be applied on the mortgage, the mortgagee, to entitle himself to a decree on foreclosure, must make a clear case and a full exposition of the accounts, especially if several years have been allowed to pass without attempting to enforce payment, or to secure it except by labor: Webber v. Ryan, 54 M. 70.

628. Complainant must produce the mortgage and the accompanying securities, if any, or must adequately excuse non-production, and show that they are still in force: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478; Bassett v. Hathaway, 9 M. 28; Young v. McKee, 13 M. 552; Hungerford v. Smith, 84 M. 800; Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 M. 804; George v. Ludlow, 66 M. 176 (June 9, '87).

629. Where a case was contested on the sole ground that the mortgage and notes were of no original validity, and they were not put on file, the supreme court declined to reverse the decree for complainant on that ground, but required them to be produced and filed, or their absence accounted for by affidavit, before affirming it: Young v. McKee, 13 M. 552.

630. On a bill to foreclose a mortgage given to secure a note, it was held that the law did not raise a presumption of non-payment, but of payment, when due, unless the contrary was shown by the production of the note, or evidence accounting for it: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478; George v. Ludlow, 66 M. 176 (June 9, '87).

631. A very strong showing of the continuing obligation of a mortgage should be required, if the securities cannot be produced, where the mortgager is dead, and the defendant is an alleged subsequent purchaser, and nearly twenty years have passed since the debt matured: Hungerford v. Smith, 84 M. 800.

632. Where the notes secured by a mortgage were missing, and a foreclosure decree was allowed upon the theory that they were still in existence, complainant was required to indemnify defendant against their enforcement in case they re-appeared in the hands of strangers: Yerkes v. Blodgett, 48 M. 211.

633. The court may dispense with a reference to compute the amount due in a foreclosure case, and make its own computation if it sees fit: Ireland v. Woolman, 15 M. 258; Vaughn v. Nims, 36 M. 297.

Further as to references, see EQUITY, XI, (e).

(h) Receivers.

634. Since the passage of the statute prohibiting the mortgagee from bringing ejectment, it is questionable whether a clause in a mortgage which gives the mortgagee, in case of default, the right to take possession, in person or by attorney, of the mortgaged lands, and to operate, or cause to be operated, the works and mines thereon, can be carried into effect by the appointment of a receiver; it certainly cannot be done until after default, which, unless admitted, could not be determined on a motion to appoint a receiver: Beecher v. Marquette & P. R. Co., 40 M. 307.

635. And a neglect to apply for a receiver within a reasonable time, to take possession of mortgaged premises, is construed as a waiver of the right to make the application: Brown v. Chase, W. 43.

636. Under the practice existing when the mortgagee of real estate had a possessory right, equity would not interfere to grant a receiver unless the premises were scanty security and the mortgager was insolvent: Brown v. Chase, W. 43; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 M. 503, 505.

637. The court cannot make an ex parte order appointing a receiver to take possession of real estate under foreclosure, even though the parties themselves agree thereto by the terms of the mortgage: Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 M. 503.

638. The mortgager being entitled to possession until his title is divested by complete foreclosure, a receiver cannot be appointed in the foreclosure suit to take charge of, harvest and market a growing crop of wheat and to apply the proceeds on the mortgage debt: Wagar v. Stone, 36 M. 364.

(i) Decree.

As to decrees generally, see EQUITY, XII.

1. Form; what may include.

639. One of the defendants in a foreclosure decree, who had a residuary interest in the mortgage foreclosed after complainant's demand should be satisfied, filed a bill, the object of which was to have the benefit of that decree, and also to foreclose the mortgage against parties who were not but should have been parties to the first suit. A decree was made in the case, in the ordinary form of foreclosure decrees, and it was held not objectionable, it appearing that since the original decree payments had come due as well on the mortgage as on complainant's debt secured by it: Griggs v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 10 M. 117.

640. The ordinary allegations of a foreclosure bill do not authorize a decree declaring chattels upon the mortgaged premises to belong to the realty: Crippen v. Morrison, 13 M. 23.

641. Where by mistake a decree directed a sale of mortgaged premises in two years and three months, when complainant was entitled to take his decree for a sale in one year and three months from the filing of the bill, a correction was directed: Bates v. Garrison, H. 221.

642. It is the practice on foreclosure to allow a reasonable time for payment, definitely fixed by the decree: Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 M. 480.

643. In the foreclosure of a mortgage drawn for a larger sum than the debt it secures, recovery should be confined to the correct sum: Laylin v. Knox, 41 M. 40.

644. A mortgage for $3,000 covering various property contained a stipulation that when $2,000 should be paid the mortgagee was to release a certain portion of the premises mortgaged; $1,000 was paid and nearly all the rest of the premises was released, but it afterwards became necessary to foreclose. Held, that the foreclosure could not be limited to $1,000, as the security on the premises that had not been released had not been confined to $2,000, nor had the mortgage provided for a release in any case in which it would be necessary to foreclose: Vary v. Chatterton, 50 M. 541.

645. Where a mortgager has made a tender of payment which was not accepted and which he had not kept good, and the mortgage afterwards tendered a conveyance and demanded payment, it was decreed on foreclosure that the mortgager pay the principal of his debt with simple interest to the time of payment, less the period that intervened between the dates of the tender and of the mortgagee's subsequent offer to reconvey; and that the mortgager's costs of both courts be deducted: Ferguson v. Popp, 43 M. 115.

646. The mortgage covered two parcels of land. A defendant answered, claiming one of them by paramount title, and disclaiming as to the other, and as to the last a decree was taken. It was held that the bill should have been dismissed as to this defendant with costs, as he was under the necessity of appearing and answering to protect his interest in the parcel claimed by him: Gregory v. Stanton, 13 M. 61.

647. Where a mortgagee has taken a tax-title for the purpose of protecting the mortgage, it is proper in decreeing payment on foreclosure to provide that, on payment of the cost of the tax-title with suitable interest, the certificate of the tax purchaser shall be assigned to defendant: Baker v. Clark, 53 M. 22.

648. Where in a foreclosure suit a settlement is made between complainant and one or more defendants, and by written stipulation filed in the cause the controversy is adjusted as to a portion of the premises so that it is not to be affected by the decree, the court has no jurisdiction to make a decree affecting such portion; and if the decree made covers it, the master's deed purporting to convey it would, at least as to persons aware of the facts, be void: Thayer v. McGee, 20 M. 195.

649. A grantee took a warranty deed of the premises from grantors whose title was defective, and on the strength of it he obtained from others for next to nothing some quitclaims by which his title was perfected. The property had been mortgaged, but he had assumed the mortgage and reserved from the purchase price enough to pay it. Both mortgage and deed purported to cover the whole title. Held, that on foreclosure it was not inequitable that the decree also should cover the whole title, including the interests which had been quitclaimed: Taylor v. Whitmore, 35 M. 97.

650. Upon a bill filed to foreclose a mortgage payable in instalments at a time when only one instalment had become due and remained unpaid, and which seeks a foreclosure for that payment only, the decree cannot include other instalments not due when the bill was filed and concerning which no issue was made: Smith v. Osborn, 33 M. 410.

651. It is proper to include in the decree a sum which has fallen due on the mortgage since the commencement of suit and which remained unpaid: Howe v. Lemon, 37 M. 164.

652. The decree on foreclosure may properly cover all amounts due at the date when it is granted, even though there has to be a new inquiry into any instalments that accrue after decree: Vaughn v. Nims, 36 M. 297.

653. Foreclosure decree is given for everything due when it is granted, though suit was begun when only an instalment of the debt had matured: Johnson v. Van Velsor, 43 M. 208.

654. Where a mortgage securing two notes is foreclosed before one of them has fallen due its amount may nevertheless be included in the decree if it falls due before the decree is rendered: Hanford v. Robertson, 47 M. 100.

655. A decree that directed land mortgaged as a whole to be sold in separate undivided interests, each to satisfy the same principal, with interest at different rates, was set aside: Spear v. Hadden, 81 M. 265.

When decree may include taxes, see supra, §§ 246, 250.

That decree cannot include stipulated attorney fee, see supra, §§ 170, 171.

2. Personal decrees for deficiency.

As to proceedings for execution, see infra, §§ 779-799.

656. Under the original equitable jurisdiction, and prior to the act of April 23, 1883, there was no power to make a personal decree against even the mortgager. His personal obligation could be enforced only in a suit at law: Johnson v. Shepard, 35 M. 115.

657. Such a decree is a statutory innovation, as is also the enforcement, on foreclosure, of collateral obligations of third persons. But the statutory jurisdiction over this latter class of persons is permissive only, and not obligatory, and will not be enforced to their prejudice: Ibid.; Gage v. Jenkinson, 58 M. 169.

658. If a mortgage is collateral to any actual personal obligation, however shaped, that could be enforced at law, it may be enforced in foreclosure proceedings and a personal decree obtained, and if the mortgager dies his estate is liable for the deficiency: Shelden v. Warner's Estate, 59 M. 444.

659. There may be a personal decree for deficiency after sale against a subsequent grantee of mortgaged premises who has assumed the mortgage, if he has been made a party and is found in the jurisdiction: Crawford v. Edwards, 33 M. 354; Miller v. Thompson, 34 M. 10; Taylor v. Whitmore, 35 M. 97; Carley v. Fox, 38 M. 387; Winans v. Wilkie, 41 M. 264; Booth v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co., 43 M. 299; Unger v. Smith, 44 M. 22; Canfield v. Shear, 49 M. 313.

Further as to assumption of mortgage, see supra, VI, (b).

660. A man and his wife conveyed certain lands in consideration of the payment, by the grantees, of the husband's debts. The grantees gave back a written agreement to the wife that the lands should be reconveyed to her alone on repayment of their advances. This agreement purported to make the wife covenant to pay the advances, but she did not sign it. The transaction was conceded to be a mortgage. Held, that under H. S. § 5650, declaring that no mortgage shall be construed as implying a covenant for the payment of the sum secured thereby, the wife could not be held personally liable for any deficiency on foreclosure sale: Howe v. Lemon, 87 M. 164.

661. In foreclosing a lien for redemption from a statutory foreclosure, no personal decree can be made against the original mortgagers for any deficiency, as the lien is confined to the land, and does not revive their personal liability extinguished by such foreclosure: Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 M. 468.

662. Absolute personal decrees against parties claimed to be collaterally liable for a mortgage debt cannot be granted in the original foreclosure decree: Johnson v. Shepard, 35 M. 115; Vaughan v. Black, 63 M. 215.

663. Where an absolute personal decree for the deficiency on foreclosure has been granted in the first instance against guarantors of the collection of the mortgage debt, they are not in default in not asking a bill of review, so long as the proper proceedings to fix them finally are not yet begun: Johnson v. Shepard, 35 M. 115.

664. It is only where a personal decree is sought against sureties or other persons than the mortgager that a personal decree must be based on some written obligation (H. S. § 6704): Shelden v. Warner's Estate, 59 M. 444.

665. Where the right of action for a debt is barred, there can be no personal decree on foreclosure of the mortgage that secures it: Michigan Ins. Co. v. Brown, 11 M. 265; Baent v. Kennicutt, 57 M. 268.

666. If the bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage against a non-resident mortgager, who does not appear, a personal decree cannot be made against him for any deficiency that may remain after sale: Lawrence v. Fellows, W. 468.

667. No personal decree can be rendered against a defendant brought in by publication but who was not served with process and has not appeared: Innes v. Stewart, 36 M. 235.

668. No personal decree can be made against parties not personally served within the jurisdiction where the land lies, or not submitting voluntarily by appearance: Outhwile v. Porter, 18 M. 533; Booth v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 43 M. 299.

669. Complainant in foreclosure is a stranger to any agreement binding an infant defendant to the other defendants, or to any settlement of accounts between them, and cannot sue upon such an agreement or settlement in order to obtain a personal decree against the infant for a deficiency: Wood v. Truax, 39 M. 623.

3. Validity and effect; conclusiveness.

See, also, EQUITY, XII, (b), (c).

670. A decree of foreclosure rendered during the infancy of a feme covert who did not come of age until the time for appeal expired was held absolutely void as to her: Chandler v. McKinney, 6 M. 217.

671. A decree in foreclosure against minor defendants rendered upon stipulation with their guardian ad litem waiving irregularities, notices and time to make answer, and allowing decree to be taken at once without answer, is void for want of jurisdiction: Taylor v. McConnell, 53 M. 587.

See EQUITY, §§ 1298-1300.

672. Where a decree in a foreclosure suit refuses to determine the priority of right between the mortgagee and a defendant claiming under a deed alleged by him to be paramount to the mortgage, it is in effect a dismissal of the bill as to such defendant: Comstock v. Comstock, 24 M. 39.

673. A recorded mortgage is not cut off by foreclosure sale under a subsequent mortgage so long as no party to the foreclosure suit had, or seemed or was supposed to have, any right or interest in the other mortgage or any power or control over it. It still remains an incumbrance and a foundation for redemption: Avery v. Ryerson, 34 M. 362.

674. A. held a second mortgage on one parcel, which also covered additional lands over which it was prior to an encumbrance held by the party claiming the first parcel under the first mortgage, the last mentioned mortgage was foreclosed; A. being made a party to the suit under the general allegation that he held or claimed some interest in the premises, etc. Held, that he had a right to treat this averment as relating only to his interest which was subject to the mortgage being foreclosed, and that his further interest would not be affected by the decree in that suit: Dawson v. Danbury Bank, 15 M. 489.

675. Where, after sale of mortgaged premises, the personal residue of the decree in foreclosure was sold and assigned as a decree for less than the amount adjudged due, and a note secured by the mortgage, but not yet due and not included in the decree, was sold also, the vendor was held not liable to refund the purchase price received by him as for a total failure of consideration, on the ground that the personal decree was invalid for failure of personal service; the assignment would transfer the note and the mortgage debt with authority to enforce it by all appropriate remedies, and if there was any failure of consideration it was only partial: Lillibridge v. Tregent, 30 M. 105.

676. Where one is made defendant in a foreclosure suit, who is holder of both a second mortgage on the lands and a chattel mortgage of fixtures, the decree in the usual form will bar his rights under the mortgage of the lands, but will leave his chattel mortgage unaffected: Crippen v. Morrison, 13 M. 23.

677. Where it does not appear that a defendant in foreclosure had attended the reference for the computation or the amount due on the mortgage, he is nevertheless barred by the decree in foreclosure from suing the complainant to recover back money alleged to have been paid the complainant to apply on the mortgage, but which he claims had not been so applied. It is presumable that he had notice, where the subsequent proceedings imply that the reference had gone on regularly; and the determination of the exact amount due on the mortgage involves the determination of the precise amount of any payments, and these questions are finally adjudicated by a decree in foreclosure: Hazen v. Reed, 30 M. 331.

678. A defendant in ejectment cannot go behind or call in question an absolute decree of foreclosure against him to introduce defences that were open to him, if at all, in the proceedings in equity, but which he did not then rely on: Adams v. Cameron, 40 M. 506.

679. A decree in foreclosure merges the obligation and security and determines conclusively the amount of the debt: Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8; Haldane v. Sweet, 58 M. 429.

680. Equities which, if they existed, were proper subjects for adjudication in a foreclosure suit, and which formed part and parcel of the security which was therein enforced, passed by the foreclosure sale if not excepted from it: Richter v. Jerome, 123 U. S. 233.

681. The assignment of a note and mortgage after beginning foreclosure cannot affect the decree or sale thereunder if it neither appears of record nor is brought to the knowledge of the court: Bigelow v. Booth, 39 M. 622.

(j) Sale.

1. When may be made; notice.

682. Whether or not H. S. § 6701 strictly requires a year's interval between the service of subpoena and sale in foreclosure, its purpose is certainly to give the mortgager time to make payment and save the lands, and that purpose is not served by allowing a sale within six months after he first has notice that a bill has been filed, even though it has been on file for six months previous; the court has discretion to postpone the sale until the expiration of a year from service of subpoena: Detroit F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Renz, 38 M. 298.

683. The one year and six weeks that must elapse before the sale on foreclosure may be computed from the date of taking out the subpoena, if it is taken out with the intention in good faith of serving it as soon as possible, and there is no laches in obtaining service: Culver v. McKeown, 43 M. 322.

684. A foreclosure sale cannot be allowed to take place within less than a year from the time when all defendants have been properly brought in: Burt v. Thomas, 49 M. 462.

685. Where a party brought in by an amended bill as defendant in foreclosure is charged with a personal liability, the year allowed before foreclosure sale should run from the date of filing the amended bill: Canfield v. Shear, 49 M. 313.

686. A foreclosure sale is illegal if made without a notice to defendants before the date fixed by the decree for the payment, in default of which sale may be made: Shier v. Prentis, 55 M. 175.

687. Direction in decree that notice of sale be given "according to the course and practice of the court" intends same notice as on sheriff's sale and is sufficiently clear: Ireland v. Woolman, 15 M. 253. Notice need not be personal: Sanford v. Haines, 71 M. —.

688. Where a sale that has been duly advertised is put off until another time, with a notification to those in attendance that it will be thus held open, a second formal advertisement of it is not needed to make it valid if it takes place at the adjourned date: Isbell v. Kenyon, 33 M. 63.

689. The omission to state in an advertisement of a mortgage sale that only an undivided portion will be offered instead of the entire parcel is not a jurisdictional defect that can be objected to in a collateral proceeding, but an irregularity that should be complained of in the same case: Brown v. Phillips, 40 M. 264.

690. The right of defendant in foreclosure to all the time the decree allows him for making payment cannot be presumed waived in order to sustain a sale prematurely made without notice to him: Shier v. Prentis, 55 M. 175.

691. Whether the practice of beginning publication before default in payment as provided by the decree is permissible, quere: Perrien v. Fetters, 35 M. 232.

692. An affidavit which shows publication in a daily newspaper "once in each week for seven successive times," and gives the date of the first publication, is not sufficient to prove compliance with the requirement that publication be made once in each week for six successive weeks: Ibid.

693. Defects in the printer's affidavit of the due publication of notice of a foreclosure sale are not cured by the fact that the officer who conducted the sale has stated in his report thereof that due publication was had of the notice of sale: Ibid.

694. Due notice of sale is indispensable in foreclosure cases, and is a step in the nature of execution. Strict proof of it should always be made and put on record, and this should be unambiguous on its face: Ibid.

695. An affidavit of publication annexed to a report of sale under a foreclosure decree and therein referred to must be considered as proof of the facts therein stated: Ibid.

696. Regularity is presumed in foreclosure proceedings if the reverse is not shown: Rugles v. First National Bank, 43 M. 192.

2. Method and order of sale.

As to marshalling securities, see, also, supra, VI, (c).

697. Sale on foreclosure in equity may be made as an entirety or in parcels, as the court may think most likely to bring the highest price: Macomb v. Prentis, 57 M. 225.

698. A decree allowing a sale as an entirety will not be disturbed for that reason where the land was originally described as one lot, and there is no showing that it should be sold in parcels: Vaughn v. Nims, 36 M. 297.

699. Land mortgaged as a whole cannot on foreclosure be sold in separate undivided interests: Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 M. 224; Spear v. Hadden, 31 M. 265.

700. Where there are several notes falling due at different times, the fact that one note becomes due first will not, of itself, give it a preference over the rest, where the mortgaged premises are insufficient to pay the whole: Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251.

701. Where several notes of the same date but falling due at different times are secured by one mortgage, a foreclosure decree cannot give priority to any of them: Wilcox v. Allen, 36 M. 160.

702. On foreclosure of simultaneous mortgages a ratable application of the proceeds of the sales thereunder should be decreed if there is not enough to pay both: Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 M. 477.

703. Where nothing appears to show the propriety of any other disposition, a sale of mortgaged premises should be made in the inverse order of their alienation or encumbrance by the mortgager: Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463; Ireland v. Woolman, 15 M. 253; McKinney v. Miller, 19 M. 142; Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524; Sibley v. Baker, 23 M. 312.

704. In marshalling securities covering several parcels, the land may be sold in such order as will best carry out the principles of equity: Dalrymple v. Sheehan, 20 M. 224.

705. Where a part of the mortgaged premises has been aliened by the mortgager subsequent to the mortgage, the rule in equity, on a foreclosure and sale, is to require that part of the premises in which the mortgager has not parted with the equity of redemption to be first sold, and then, if necessary, that which has been aliened: Mason v. Payne, W. 459.

706. Where a portion of the land covered by a mortgage is conveyed subject to the payment of the entire mortgage by the grantee, the subsequent purchaser of another parcel has a right to insist that the parcel so before conveyed shall be first sold to satisfy the mortgage before resort is had to the parcel so purchased by himself: Caruthers v. Hall, 10 M. 40.

707. An exception of the mortgage from the covenants of warranty contained in a subsequent deed of the lands could not affect the grantee's equitable rights in reference to the order of sale of the property covered by said mortgage: Cooper v. Bigly, 13 M. 463.

708. A man gave two promissory notes, dated alike and secured by a mortgage, though one of them was also secured by surety. Held, on foreclosure, that the one secured by the mortgage only must be first satisfied before the proceeds of a sale of the land could be applied to the payment of the other: Hanford v. Robertson, 47 M. 100.

709. Where part of mortgaged premises is covered by a second mortgage held by complainant in foreclosure and another part by a third mortgage held by a defendant, the latter cannot complain that the foreclosure decree provides for the sale first of the parcel covered by the second mortgage, but requires the sale of that parcel to be subject to the payment of the second mortgage: Slater v. Breece, 36 M. 77.

3. Who may purchase; rights of purchasers.

710. One who has received the mortgage title to lands under an arrangement which, in legal effect, makes his rights no more than those of a mortgagee, is not thereby precluded from becoming a purchaser at a chancery sale on the foreclosure by a third person of another mortgage, and holding the title like any other purchaser; and such a purchase would cut off all previous equities of the other party: Moote v. Scriven, 33 M. 500.

711. A mortgager's wife who has joined in the mortgage to release her dower loses her original right by foreclosure, and has as good a right as any one to buy in the property from the foreclosure purchaser after the foreclosure becomes absolute: Gantz v. Toles, 40 M. 725.

712. The purchaser under a defective sale becomes vested with complainant's rights in the mortgage: Richards v. Morton, 18 M. 255. See infra, §§ 874-878.

713. Every one will be conclusively presumed to understand that bidders at a chancery foreclosure sale stand on equal terms: Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 M. 18.

714. A mortgagee as purchaser under a foreclosure sale stands in the same position as any other purchaser: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

715. At a foreclosure sale the complainant has the same rights, in bidding, as any third person, and takes the same interest if he becomes a purchaser: Ledyard v. Phillips, 47 M. 305.

716. An agreement whereby the mortgager transfers to the mortgagee all the crops growing on the mortgaged premises, except enough to pay for harvesting and other running expenses, does not preclude the mortgagee, in case he becomes the purchaser on foreclosure, from taking the entire interest sold under the mortgage, without any reservations in the mortgager's favor: Ibid.

717. A foreclosure deed to the mortgagee gives him the same estate as a foreclosure of the equity of redemption, and is as effective as against the owner of the equity as if executed by such owner: Ruggles v. First National Bank, 43 M. 192.

718. H. S. § 6708, declaring that the commissioner's deed in a mortgage sale shall be an entire bar against the mortgager and mortgagee, does not mean to give the purchaser title by barring the true owner, when neither mortgager nor mortgagee had any title: Summers v. Bromley, 28 M. 125.

719. Title by foreclosure dates from the giving of the mortgage and not from the completion of the foreclosure: Gamble v. Horr, 40 M. 562.

720. The title of a purchaser on valid foreclosure of a mortgage regularly recorded relates back to the delivery of the mortgage as against all intervening purchasers and encumbrancers who are made parties or who become interested pendente lite: Ruggles v. First National Bank, 43 M. 192.

721. A foreclosure purchaser of land which was mortgaged with the consent of the contract purchaser is entitled to possession as against the latter, and the grantee of the purchaser on foreclosure is equally entitled to possession so far as relates to all matters preceding the sale: Ketchum v. Robinson, 48 M. 618.

722. The purchaser at a foreclosure sale in chancery becomes the owner of the crops then growing on the premises: Scriven v. Moote, 36 M. 64; Ledyard v. Phillips, 47 M. 305.

723. Growing crops pass with the soil under foreclosure deed, and on proper application the court may perhaps provide for their preservation until possession is given to the purchaser: Ruggles v. First National Bank, 43 M. 192.

724. The confirmation of a foreclosure sale covering growing crops relates back to the sale, and entitles the purchaser to control the crops from that time if no equities prevent, and after due notice to interested parties: Ibid.

725. The mortgager of land cannot claim crops growing on it at the time of foreclosure sale, on the strength merely of an alleged parol agreement with the purchaser, who before foreclosure held an execution title to the land, that the latter would reconvey on payment of his advances with interest; even a mortgagee, unless estopped, could buy in the title and hold it like any other purchaser, and any previous equities would be cut off by the sale: Scriven v. Moote, 36 M. 64.

726. Where a mortgager, under an order of court, and as a condition to the granting of an injunction against proceedings by a foreclosure purchaser to get possession, gives a bond conditioned to prosecute his bill to redeem to final decree; and, if the decree should be adverse, to pay a fair rental value for the premises, and to pay all taxes and all legal costs, and not to commit waste, it cannot operate, in the absence of any showing of an acceptance of the bond by the obligee, or of any action taken or claim made under it, to deprive the purchaser of any of his substantial rights in the premises or the crops growing thereon: Ibid.

727. The purchaser of land at a foreclosure sale may file a bill to compel the foreclosure of a prior mortgage upon that and other property, and to have the other property first sold; and if, pending the suit, the prior mortgagee purchases the interest of the complainant, he may file an original bill, in the nature of a supplemental bill, setting up the change of title, and is entitled to the same relief that could have been had under the original bill: Cooper v. Bigly, 18 M. 463.

728. An agreement between a complainant and defendant in foreclosure by which the former is to bid in the premises and convey them to the latter for the amount of his claim does not preclude any other person interested from paying the decree and defeating the arrangement: Detroit Savings Bank v. Truesdail, 38 M. 430.

729. A mortgagee's title by purchase on foreclosure cannot be attacked under a tax-title by one who has indemnified him against such title: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

4. Report; confirmation.

730. An error in reciting the date of a foreclosure decree in the commissioner's report of sale is immaterial where the record furnishes the means of correcting it: Ruggles v. First National Bank of Centreville, 43 M. 192.

731. It is not good practice, in directing the correction of a commissioner's report of a foreclosure sale, to order that on filing the corrected report "the said sale be and the same is hereby in all respects confirmed." But it does not make the proceedings void: Ibid.

732. No right becomes fixed in the purchaser until the sale becomes absolute by confirmation: Demaray v. Little, 17 M. 386.

733. Our statutes do not dispense with the practice of obtaining an order confirming sales: Ibid.

734. A foreclosure sale cannot be made absolute so long as objections duly taken to the report of the commissioner have not been passed on: Howard v. Bond, 42 M. 131.

735. A purchaser on foreclosure cannot demand possession until the commissioner's report of sale is confirmed: Ibid.

736. A decree of foreclosure was granted and sale made in 1861 to a third party. In 1866, five weeks after the mortgagor's death, and without making his representatives parties, a report of sale was filed, an order nisi of confirmation entered, and conveyance made by the commissioner who had made the sale. In an action of ejectment the court was equally divided upon the question whether title passed under the sale: Hochgraeff v. Hendrie, 66 M. 556 (July 7, '97).

737. An order allowing a writ of assistance, and reciting that the defendant had been served with a certified copy of the order confirming the report of sale, will not, of itself, amount to an order of confirmation: Richards v. Morton, 18 M. 255.

738. The usual order nisi is a sufficient order of confirmation in a chancery foreclosure sale, if any order is needed where the defendant has not appeared: Torrans v. Hicks, 93 M. 307.

5. Setting aside sale.

739. Defendants seeking to set aside a sale in a foreclosure case must move promptly after they become aware of the facts of which they complain: Lyons v. Branson, 48 M. 194.

740. A party claiming to be aggrieved by a sale in chancery which has been duly confirmed will not be relieved on an allegation of irregularity in the sale, where there is unreasonable delay in applying for relief, and it is not clearly shown that he has a substantial and meritorious ground of complaint: Goodwin v. Burns, 21 M. 211.

741. A sale was made January 28th and confirmed April 18th. Another sale, upon another mortgage of the same property, was made January 21st, and confirmed February 1st, all in the same year. The party complaining knew of the sales at or about the time they took place, and he had knowledge of all the facts on which his claim for relief was based in June. In October he filed his petition to set the sales aside. Held too late. Ibid.

742. Petition being filed to set aside a sale under a decree in chancery on the ground of inadequate consideration, and the complainant—who was the purchaser—not having sought to take advantage of petitioner's embarrassments, and not appearing to have been at any time unwilling to receive the amount due upon the decree and the amount paid to redeem from prior sales, and to transfer to petitioner all rights acquired by the purchase, it was held that, under these circumstances at least, it was a fatal objection to the petition that it did not offer to pay the decree, or to increase the bid if a resale was ordered: Leonard v. Taylor, 12 M. 398.

743. A foreclosure sale may properly be reopened for want of notice of the order for sale, or of the confirmation thereof, and for gross inadequacy of price, especially if the petitioner for a re-sale gives bonds to produce a purchaser at a higher price: Nugent v. Nugent, 54 M. 557.

744. Where a mortgagee is the purchaser on foreclosure, and the sale is objected to for inadequacy of price, objections to re-opening it are open to scrutiny: Ibid.

745. A much stronger case must be made to set aside the sale after confirmation of report of sale than before: Bullard v. Green, 10 M. 268.

746. On application to set aside a sale the court cannot inquire into the regularity of the proceedings resulting in the decree, nor whether the decree was for a greater or less sum than it should have been: Ibid.

747. The sale will not be set aside on the ground of surprise when the surprise springs from the negligence and inattention of the party himself who complains of it: Ibid.

748. A sale at $350 will not be set aside on the ground of inadequacy of consideration when the petition states the premises to be worth $700, and the evidence is that they have since been sold by the purchaser at that price on long time, but that for cash they would not sell for over $400: Ibid.

749. Nor, if the inadequacy of price was sufficient, would it be set aside on a petition presented six months after the sale, and which does not sufficiently excuse this delay: Ibid.

750. A foreclosure sale in chancery will not be set aside on the ground of surprise and inadequate consideration, after a long unexcused delay, which has continued until an execution has been issued for a deficiency, and a sale made under which third persons have acquired vested interests, and the complainant has made payments to redeem from former sales: Leonard v. Taylor, 12 M. 398.

751. Sale set aside on the ground of surprise where defendant had obtained an agreement from complainant to postpone it, upon which he relied, but the instructions to postpone were not received by the solicitor in season, and the sale was made at much less than the value: Demaray v. Little, 19 M. 244.

752. Resale ordered on condition that the bid of the purchaser be advanced to a specified sum, and that he be paid the amount with interest and counsel fee. A bid was obtained on the resale for the sum specified, but the amount actually paid was only sufficient to satisfy the first purchaser; payment of the balance being delayed by consent of the mortgager until confirmation of sale. Held, that this delay was no ground for setting aside the second sale: Ibid.

753. A mortgagee who bids off land at a foreclosure sale upon a decree granted him for the amount due, and who, having prior encumbrances thereon, pays more than the amount due under the decree, supposing that the surplus will be returned to him to apply on his prior encumbrances, but who gives out at the sale that whoever purchases must take the land subject to these prior encumbrances, has no equities that will support his application to have his purchase set aside on the ground that he has been misled as to his right to have the surplus money returned to him: Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 M. 18.

754. Transfer of a bid made on foreclosure sale will not be ground for ordering a new sale: Culver v. McKewen, 43 M. 322.

755. Where a foreclosure sale was so managed that advantage was taken of the absence of one who had a lien on a portion of the land, and who had no notice of the proceedings, and the remainder of the land, though it would have abundantly satisfied the whole debt, was bid in at nominal prices, and the portion on which he had a lien was bid in at its full value in order to cut off his equities, it was held that equity would relieve, and that the sale should be re-opened on petition of the encumbrancer upon his compliance with proper terms, as by giving security that on a resale he would bid for the parcels first charged with the satisfaction of the demand a sum equal to its amount, and repay to the foreclosure purchaser all sums spent by him in improving the land since its purchase, less a reasonable rent for that time: Gilbert v. Haire, 43 M. 283.

756. A foreclosure was had for an instalment of interest. The owner of the equity of redemption disputed the validity of the proceedings and filed a bill to have them annulled. While this bill was pending the owner of the mortgage foreclosed by advertisement for the principal. The owner of the equity when the second foreclosure was begun filed his supplemental bill, setting up a tender in full of the mortgage. The foreclosure proceedings nevertheless went on to a sale. The chancery court having found the tender, held, that it was proper to set aside the foreclosure proceedings with costs to complainant; and that, in the absence of any tender, the court had full jurisdiction to dispose of the whole controversy, and if the owner of the mortgage disregarded the equity suit and proceeded to a sale, the sale must be subject to the final decree of the court: Louder v. Burch, 47 M. 109.

757. The equities must be clear and strong to warrant setting aside a chancery sale at the instance of a purchaser on the ground of misapprehension of his rights, where the premises sold were farming lands, and the amount bid was large, and the next highest bid was within one hundred dollars of that on which the premises were struck off, and was made with full knowledge, and where, therefore, the probabilities of serious loss are great if the sale should be re-opened: Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 M. 18.

758. One who attacks a judicial sale as invalid after strangers have acquired rights under it must do so by some original proceeding in which an issue can be formed and tried in the ordinary way and the persons concerned brought in as parties. And this applies to a motion to set aside a foreclosure sale after complainant's death and after a stranger has occupied the land: Crawford v. Tuller, 35 M. 57.

759. Notice of a motion to set aside a foreclosure sale should be given to strangers who have acquired rights in the premises under such sale: Lawrence v. Jarvis, 36 M. 281.

760. An order setting aside a foreclosure sale and opening the case cannot be made without bringing in such third persons as have acquired rights under the sale: Jewett v. Morris, 41 M. 689.

761. A foreclosure sale ought not to be set aside on merely disposing of the plea to the bill of review filed to set it aside: Thomas v. Burt, 52 M. 489.

762. Where a purchaser at a chancery foreclosure sale takes possession of the premises, pays laborers for work done thereon at the time of the sale, and makes arrangements and advances money to have a wheat crop sown for the following year, he so far affirms the sale as to preclude himself from insisting that it is still inchoate, and that an order granted afterward for opening it is therefore discretionary and not subject to appeal: Ledyard v. Phillips, 32 M. 18.

763. Re-opening a foreclosure sale is so far within the discretion of the lower court that the supreme court is not disposed to disturb an order permitting it, where the discretion has not been abused: Nugent v. Nugent, 54 M. 557.

6. Surplus moneys.

764. Where a third mortgagee, at the prior foreclosure of a second mortgage, bids a sum greater than the amount due on the decree in such foreclosure, the surplus is to be paid into court and to be applied on some one of the securities on the proper petition being presented: Sibley v. Baker, 23 M. 312.

765. The fact that a mortgagee who has assigned his mortgage has indorsed one of the notes secured by it in blank, and the other without recourse, does not affect the equal security afforded by the mortgage to the notes pro rata. The sum realized from a foreclosure sale, therefore, should be applied upon the pro rata principle, and such indorser need pay only his proportionate share of any deficiency, instead of paying the whole amount of the note indorsed in blank: English v. Carney, 25 M. 178.

766. The surplus arising from a foreclosure sale was claimed by the mortgager's divorced wife and by an execution creditor. Held, that, as the record did not show the cause of divorce, the nature of the wife's interest could not be ascertained, and the supreme court could not award the surplus: Bowles v. Hoard, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

767. An assignee of a second mortgage who took it with notice of its invalidity, and who is unable to produce it or the accompanying note, or give any proof of its validity, cannot claim the surplus realized on the foreclosure of the first mortgage: Kent v. Mellus, 69 M. 71 (March 2, '88).

768. A levy of execution on the mortgaged lands, made at a time when the mortgager (and judgment debtor) had no title to it, and not followed by any sale by virtue of it, will not entitle the judgment creditor to the surplus moneys after foreclosure, notwithstanding the mortgager, pending the foreclosure proceedings, became vested with the title to the land subject to the mortgage: Smith v. Smith, 13 M. 258.

769. All the parties to a foreclosure suit are entitled to notice of an application for surplus moneys after foreclosure and sale, that they may appear and contest the right of the applicant and assert their own; and an order for the payment of the moneys to the petitioner without such notice, or the appearance of the parties, is erroneous: Ibid.

770. If the owner of the equity of redemption dies after sale the surplus moneys are personal estate; and his personal representatives should be made parties to a petition to obtain them: Ibid.

771. In distributing the surplus received from a foreclosure sale of a homestead exceeding $1,500 in value and incapable of division, a mortgage of the homestead interest is entitled to be paid before anything is applied on antecedent levies: Vermont Savings Bank v. Elliott, 53 M. 256.

772. A., who held a mortgage under circumstances that made him B.'s trustee, brought a foreclosure suit. Held, that the owner of the equity of redemption could not, in such suit, be heard to assert that the money to be derived from the sale should be secured in some way for B.'s benefit; that the matter was not germane to the suit: Nugent v. Nugent, 50 M. 377.

773. Bill by the mortgagee, who had become purchaser at foreclosure sale at a sum exceeding the amount due on the decree, to be relieved from payment of the surplus on the ground that he was equitable owner of the fee, and that the bids had been run up by fraudulent combination. Bill dismissed as not supported by the proofs: Buchoz v. Walker, 19 M. 294.

(k) Proceedings for further decrees upon instalments.

774. When a decree is for the payment of a sum by instalments, a sale cannot be ordered for default in paying one of them until an opportunity has been afforded the party to contest the alleged default, and a decree upon one hearing will not authorize a sale for a subsequent instalment, without a new hearing and adjudication: Perkins v. Perkins, 16 M. 162.

775. Where after decree in a foreclosure suit another instalment falls due on the mortgage, and a petition is presented under H. S. § 8714 for a further order of sale, the petition should set forth briefly all the facts necessary to enable the mortgager, as well as the court, to understand its object: Albany City Bank v. Stevens, W. 6.

776. A copy of the petition for a further decree upon an additional instalment due, with notice of the time of presentation to the court, must be served on the mortgager, or if it cannot be served personally by reason of his absence from the state, it should be served on his solicitor: Ibid.

777. The proceeding for a further decree upon an additional instalment due upon a mortgage after payment of a prior decree is essentially a new suit in all except form, and notice must be given to every person whose interests are to be affected as in the original suit (correcting the dictum in Albany Bank v. Stevens, W. 6, to the effect that a copy of the petition for a further decree on an additional instalment need not be served on defendants made parties as subsequent encumbrancers), and the rights of the parties can only be fixed by proofs as in other cases: Brown v. Thompson, 29 M. 72.

778. Where a mortgage is payable in instalments, each is so far separate from the rest that in a foreclosure suit upon an instalment a payment before decree of the amount due ends the suit (H. S. § 6711), and it is only by virtue of § 6712 that such a payment after decree does not have the same effect: Ibid.

779. Complainant has ten years after decree within which to take out an execution for deficiency: Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8.

780. The proceeding for execution is substantially a new one, equivalent to the legal process of scire facias. It cannot be sought against persons not properly charged in the bill, and it cannot be adjudicated except upon the occasion of a deficiency reported. Parties not properly charged have every defence open to them, and they are not called on to defend unless cited: Vaughan v. Black, 68 M. 215.

781. The setting forth of a personal liability in the decree is always provisional, and until a deficiency arises and the defendants are called in to answer for it, they are not bound to pay it even if responsible: Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 48 M. 468.

782. Execution is not to be awarded in a decree for sale on foreclosure so long as it is not known that there will be a deficiency: Howe v. Lemon, 87 M. 164.

783. Where a foreclosure decree provides for the sale of land, there is no personal liability to be enforced against defendant until after it is sold and a deficiency reported: Mickle v. Maxfield, 42 M. 304.

784. An execution for deficiency cannot issue without special application to the court, in writing and verified, showing the right thereto: Ibid; Gies v. Green, 42 M. 107; Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 M. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8.

785. Guarantors of collection who have not objected to being joined as defendants in foreclosure are not precluded from a hearing before execution issues on a contingent decree against them: Johnson v. Shepard, 85 M. 116.

786. Notice of a petition for an execution to enforce collection of a deficiency on foreclosure must be given to defendant: Gies v. Green, 42 M. 107; McCrickett v. Wilson, 50 M. 518.

787. An application for the issue of an execution for deficiency must be served, wherever practicable, on the defendant against whom the relief is sought, and notice must be given him of the time when the application will be presented; if personal service cannot be had, the court may direct substituted service on a showing of the facts: Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 M. 489.

788. The answer to a petition for execution for deficiency must state the grounds of objection thereto, and must be verified and filed: Ibid; Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8.

789. If an answer to an application for an execution for deficiency on foreclosure presents matter of discharge, complainant may take issue on it by replication if necessary, and in proper cases the court may order a reference to take proofs: Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 M. 489; Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8.

790. An application for such execution can be resisted only on grounds that are consistent with the decree and such as usually operate in its discharge: Ibid.

791. A decree of foreclosure and the commissioner's report of a deficiency on the sale establish a prima facie case for the issue of execution for such deficiency: Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8.

792. A decree in foreclosure adjudging defendant personally liable for a deficiency, taken together with the report of the deficiency, make out a prima facie case against him, and on resisting an application for an execution against him he has the burden of showing matter in discharge of the decree: Ransom v. Sutherland, 46 M. 489.

793. In resisting the issue of execution for deficiency defendant cannot attack the validity or regularity of the foreclosure proceedings, nor treat the order confirming the sale as void, so long as it has been set aside: Wallace v. Field, 56 M. 8.

794. No objections can be made to the issue of execution for a deficiency unless they arose after confirmation of the foreclosure sale and recognize the decree and go to its discharge: Haldane v. Sweet, 58 M. 429.

795. Proceedings for execution for the deficiency on foreclosure are new and supplementary and not merely in continuation of the foreclosure; and any dealing between the creditor and the principal debtor which substantially changes their contract relations would release a guarantor of collection, if entered into before their liability was finally settled, and would also be a defence to proceedings for execution: Johnson v. Shepard, 35 M. 115.

796. Where persons interested in a chancery foreclosure sale interfere to prevent a fair sale to the highest bidder, as by arranging with persons intending to bid, to protect their interests, whereby such persons are deterred from bidding, they are estopped from claiming a deficiency on the sale, and will be enjoined from proceeding at law to recover it: Innes v. Stewart, 36 M. 285.

797. A bank foreclosed a mortgage on some mill property and obtained a decree for sale. In order that the property might be leased and made profitable as soon as possible, the mortgager's assignee, believing that nothing could be realized beyond the debt, proposed to the bank to anticipate the date fixed for the foreclosure sale, provided he could be sure of a bid high enough to cover expenses. The bank promised to bid, and at the sale the property was bought in its interest, subject to the mortgage. It was afterward sold, however, under the foreclosure decree at a sum much below the mortgage debt, and the bank thereupon notified the assignee that payment of the deficiency would be claimed out of the assets which he held. On his petition an order was made satisfying the decree by the property sold, and on appeal this order was affirmed on the ground that, in arranging with the bank to anticipate the sale, the assignee was left to suppose that the bank, by taking title, would have no further claim against him: East Saginaw Savings Bank v. Grant, 41 M. 101.

798. For a case where the court sustained a bill to restrain collection of a deficiency, as in fraud of an agreement, see Smith v. Smith, 46 M. 301.

799. Proceedings to collect a deficiency on foreclosure are purely statutory, and a petition to set them aside for want of notice is permissible without filing a bill of review: McCrickett v. Wilson, 50 M. 518.

800. The refusal of the court to issue execution to enforce payment of a deficiency arising on a foreclosure sale concludes the proceedings in the case, and a subsequent order for leave to bring a suit at law upon the note is unauthorized: Shields v. Riopelle, 63 M. 453.

XI. FORECLOSURE BY ADVERTISEMENT.

As to redemption, see infra, XII, (c).

(a) Generally; when appropriate or allowable; who can foreclose.

801. The statutory provisions for foreclosure are to be treated as a part of every mortgage with a power of sale executed under the statute; and the sale under the power is a distinct exercise of authority under the terms of the contract: Hoffman v. Harrington, 38 M. 392.

802. The statutory proceeding, being ex parte, must conform in all matters to the conditions expressed by the legislature: Lee v. Mason, 10 M. 403.

803. Foreclosure by advertisement must comply substantially with statutory requirements: Grover v. Fox, 36 M. 461; Miller v. Clark, 56 M. 337.

804. And those who conduct the foreclosure must observe good faith and pay a proper regard to the interests of all who may be affected by the proceedings; and no defect or misstep in matters of substance will be cured or excused by any proof that it happened by mistake and was not induced by a bad purpose: Grover v. Fox, 36 M. 461.

805. Statutory foreclosures are matters of contract authorized by the mortgager, and ought not to be hampered by an unreasonably strict construction of the law: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 233.

806. H. S. § 6498, forbidding the beginning of a statutory foreclosure if any "suit or proceeding shall have been instituted at law to recover the debt," etc., refers to suits on the debt, and not to previous foreclosure proceedings: Ibid. Or to having proved the debt before commissioners: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 M. 96.

807. Foreclosure is not barred by the existence of another mortgage as prior security: Connerton v. Millar, 41 M. 608.

808. A release of a parcel of land from a mortgage does not defeat the right to sell the rest of the mortgaged premises under a power of sale: Durm v. Fish, 46 M. 812.

809. A mortgage was assigned by an indorsement which merely referred to it as "the within mortgage," and this was recorded in the same volume but not on the same page with the mortgage itself, the register, in recording it, connecting the two by cross-references. Held, that this was a valid record, and that the assignee could foreclose: Soule v. Corbley, 65 M. 109.

810. The mortgage assignments which

H. S. § 8498 requires to be recorded before the mortgage can be foreclosed at law are those only that are voluntary; such transfers as result from the operation of law need not be recorded. The executor or administrator of an owner of a mortgage can therefore execute the power of sale as owner of the legal title therein: Miller v. Clark, 56 M. 337.

811. The right to foreclose by advertisement is confined to mortgages containing a power of sale: Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261, 264; Hebert v. Bulte, 42 M. 489.

812. Whether, if a trustee's mortgage is valid as an equitable charge, it is capable of statutory foreclosure, as there can be no legal power of sale, seems doubtful: Weaver v. Van Aken, 71 M. — (June 22, '88).

813. It seems that equity will not interfere to prevent a foreclosure and sale of the whole premises for a single instalment: Disbrow v. Jones, H. 48.

814. A foreclosure by advertisement of mortgages given simultaneously cannot settle the relative rights of the mortgagees or of the foreclosure purchasers. A bill in equity is necessary for this and to marshal the assets: Van Aken v. Gleason, 34 M. 477.

815. Under H. S. § 8498, a mortgage payable in instalments stands upon the same basis as to foreclosure as if each instalment were secured by a separate and independent mortgage, neither having priority over any others, and a foreclosure under the power of sale for an instalment simply is entirely unsuited to the enforcement of the respective liens or the adjustment of the respective interests: McCurdy v. Clark, 27 M. 445.

816. Statutory foreclosure is not allowable in cases where there are conflicting equities that can only be worked out and protected in a court of chancery, as where the ownership of the security is so uncertain that the value of the equity of redemption must be greatly depreciated by permitting a foreclosure at law. So held where, after the legal title to a note and the record title to the mortgage by which it was secured had passed out of the creditor's hands by assignment and delivery, and his assignee had again assigned them to one who had previously bought the mortgaged premises, the original creditor had again assigned an interest which he still claimed in the mortgage, and the assignee had sought to foreclose against the purchaser of the land: Olcott v. Crittenden, 68 M. 230 (Jan. 19, '88).

817. Under H. S. § 8498, where several distinct payments or notes are secured by the same mortgage, no one of them has any preference over the others in consequence of its falling due sooner; but all, whether held by the same or different persons, have equal claim to be paid ratably out of the land: English v. Carney, 25 M. 178; McCurdy v. Clark, 27 M. 445.

818. Where a purchaser on foreclosure, by way of keeping good his lien during the period of redemption, pays taxes and insurance which, under the mortgage, the mortgager himself was bound to pay, he cannot, when further instalments fall due, again resort to the power of sale for the purpose of securing repayment: Walton v. Hollywood, 47 M. 385.

819. H. S. § 8498, by which the lien of a mortgage is preserved for successive foreclosures by advertisement for instalments of the debt as they fall due, would not, it seems, apply where title was obtained by a foreclosure on default in the payment of interest on a note, and the sale was not made subject to the principal debt: Miles v. Skinner, 43 M. 181.

820. An assignment pending the foreclosure proceedings puts an end to them, and a sale afterwards made under an advertisement in the name of the assignor does not cut off the equity of redemption: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 338.

821. None but the legal holder of a mortgage — the legal owner of the debt secured is such holder — can foreclose by advertisement; he can foreclose for the benefit of any one interested: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 228.

(b) Notice of sale.

As to printer's fees for publication, see COSTS, § 162.

822. The notice of a statutory foreclosure must conform to the statutory requisites; but if it contains all that the statute requires it will not be void for errors in other respects which are not misleading: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

823. The notice cannot be held void for not containing what the statute does not require: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 228.

824. It need not state the commencement and discontinuance of previous foreclosure proceedings: Ibid.

825. Nor need it state the hour and minute when the mortgage was recorded: Ibid.

826. It is not bad for misstating the date of the mortgage if it accurately refers to the record, thereby giving the means of correction: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

827. Nor is the notice void, though erroneously dated, if published for the proper time and giving the proper time and place of sale: Ibid.

828. The notice must purport to emanate from the owner of the legal title to the mortgage: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 338; Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 223.

829. If the notice purports to be signed by the party foreclosing, it is not fatally defective for being signed in the wrong name; if the true name is specified in the body of the notice, the party is not required to sign it: Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 M. 312.

830. Nor is the notice bad for calling the mortgagee "Dixon" instead of "Dickson," where it otherwise identifies the mortgage by date and parties: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

831. But if the notice does not give the mortgager's name the sale will be void: Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 223.

832. A sale under a mortgage given by a married woman — her husband joining therein — upon her own land is not void because the notice of sale describes her as his wife: Yale v. Stevenson, 58 M. 537.

833. A notice which states that the premises will be sold, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," is in the usual and proper form, and is not objectionable as not designating the precise parcels to be sold; and if it describes the land in two government subdivisions it is presumptively desirable to sell them separately, though if they are in one connected estate it may be proper to sell them together; and the expression "I will sell" in a notice signed by the mortgagee does not preclude the sheriff from making the sale: Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 M. 549.

834. Two mortgages, one of which contains land not covered by the other, cannot be combined in one advertisement and all the land be sold on one bid and for a gross sum: Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

835. A notice of twelve weeks, excluding the day of the first publication and including the day of sale, is sufficient: Gantz v. Toles, 40 M. 725.

836. The notice must be published not merely twelve times, once a week, but once a week for twelve successive weeks; and a sale is invalid if made on a notice which, although published twelve times in separate weeks, provided for selling on a day less than twelve weeks from the first publication: Bacon v. Kennedy, 56 M. 329.

837. An affidavit of publication which states that the newspaper in which the notice was published was printed and published weekly and every week, and that the publication was for thirteen successive weeks, the first being Nov. 26, 1879, and the last Feb.

18, 1880, is explicit that the notice was published once in each week: Snyder v. Hemmingway 47 M. 549.

838. A statutory foreclosure is not invalidated by a change in the name of the newspaper in which the foreclosure advertisement is published, and by the removal of the publication office to another place in the same county, if the paper otherwise preserved its identity: Perkins v. Keller, 48 M. 53.

839. In ejectment by a purchaser on foreclosure the original affidavit of publication showed that the notice of sale was insufficient, but another affidavit was produced, correcting the first, and the publisher gave evidence tending to show that the sale was regularly advertised, and that the original affidavit was incorrect. Held, that the testimony was admissible, but that it was for the jury to pass on, and could not be treated as conclusive by the court: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

840. An affidavit of publication of notice of sale, made between seven and eight years after the sale took place, was held not presumptive evidence of the facts therein stated, under R. S. 1883, p. 501, § 9: Mundy v. Monroe, 1 M. 68.

841. Notice of a foreclosure sale is indispensable to its validity, and as it is the act of the party, and not of the officer making the sale, the presumption of the performance of official duty does not apply for the purpose of making out a valid foreclosure without actual proof of notice: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

842. If the notice of sale is insufficient the consequence will be the continuance of the right of redemption until foreclosure by lapse of time or in equity: State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 M. 447.

(c) Sales.

1. In general.

843. The sheriff may sell though the notice of sale says that the mortgagee will sell: Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 M. 549.

844. A sheriff's deputy may sell on foreclosure by advertisement: Heinmiller v. Hatheway, 60 M. 391.

845. Under H. S. § 8503, if the premises consist of several parcels not adjoining each other, the sale of the parcels must be separate, and the deed given in pursuance of the sale must show the price at which each parcel was sold: Lee v. Mason, 10 M. 403.

846. A foreclosure sale by advertisement is void if one advertisement is made to cover two mortgages in which the descriptions were not identical, and if both parcels are sold on one bid and for one gross sum: Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

847. Mortgaged premises may be sold as a single parcel where they were so mortgaged, even though they have been since subdivided by the mortgager but without the mortgagee's concurrence; but where the parties have joined in obtaining the release of a parcel so situated as to leave the rest in distinct parcels and thus affect the security, the sale is void if not made in parcels: Durm v. Fish, 46 M. 312.

848. A mortgage sale of several lots which were fenced and used as one parcel when the mortgage was given and had continued so was not void under C. L. (1871) § 6918 (see H. S. § 8506): Yale v. Stevenson, 56 M. 587.

849. Where a foreclosure sale is made in parcels, the power of sale is exhausted when enough parcels have been sold to satisfy the mortgage debt and all costs and expenses, and it then affords no authority to make further sales of the remaining parcels: Grover v. Fox, 86 M. 461.

850. Whether, where mortgaged premises are made up of contiguous parcels occupied together as a single farm, a sale in parcels is essential to a valid foreclosure, quere: Ibid.

851. A foreclosure sale cannot stand as a valid sale in bulk, if, having been made in parcels, it is incapable of being sustained as a sale in parcels; a sale must be contemplated as it was: Ibid.

852. H. S. § 8506, providing that, where mortgaged premises consist of distinct farms, tracts or lots, they shall be sold separately, does not apply to a tract divided by a highway or by section lines, but occupied as one farm and mortgaged in one parcel: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 88 M. 96.

853. The requirement that a foreclosure sale be made in parcels is in the redemptioner's interest and for the protection of his right to redeem each parcel separately; but where, for a valuable consideration, one has waived his right to redeem, in advance, he cannot object that sale was not made in parcels; the objection cannot be raised by the mortgagee as against his own proceedings, when no one else is in position to raise it: Clark v. Stilson, 86 M. 482.

854. Sale is to be made in the inverse order of alienation or encumbrance of the parcels: Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 134.

855. One who joins in a mortgage of his own and of another's property to secure the other's debt is entitled to have the other's lands sold first to satisfy the debt: Carley v. Fox, 86 M. 387.

856. If a bidder at a statutory foreclosure sale withdraws his offer while the other bidders are still present, the sale should be re-opened, especially if some other person promises a higher bid: Miller v. Miller, 48 M. 311.

857. H. S. ch. 298, contemplates that every opportunity shall be given to bidders so that premises may be sold at the best price obtainable, and to that end authorizes the sale to be postponed from time to time. And it does not contemplate legal proceedings to enforce payment of a bid if the bidder is irresponsible or refuses to pay it. The sale should be re-opened: Ibid.

858. Subsequent purchasers cannot resist the re-opening of a mortgage sale if the successful bidder takes back his offer immediately after acceptance, and while competing bidders are still present: Ibid.

859. A sheriff has no right to execute deeds to purchasers on foreclosure if he has previously, to the knowledge of competing bidders, sent a notice of the re-opening and postponement of the sale for publication: Ibid.

860. A foreclosure having taken place by advertisement, and land having been struck off for the amount claimed to be due, which included a considerable sum not allowable as costs, and the owner of the mortgage having become the purchaser without paying to the officer making the sale the amount of the bid less what was legally demandable, held, that the same was incomplete, and that he could not claim title under it: Louder v. Burch, 47 M. 109.

861. A statutory foreclosure sale is not necessarily invalid because the mortgagee claimed in his notice of sale an attorney's fee to which he was not legally entitled, and made the purchase for a sum which included such fee: Millard v. Truax, 47 M. 251, 50 M. 343; Kennedy v. Brown, 50 M. 336.

Further as to attorneys' fees, see supra, §§ 170-181.

862. In the absence of any averment or proof on the subject it is not a presumption of law that the mortgagee making such a purchase did not pay over to the officer any surplus to which the mortgager would be lawfully entitled. Therefore it cannot be presumed that he retained any illegal allowance which had been claimed by him: Millard v. Truax, 47 M. 251.

863. A mortgage sale is not necessarily invalid for being made for more than was in fact due; the excessive claim becomes important only when it is attempted to redeem from the sale, and its importance depends upon its magnitude or apparent want of good faith: Millard v. Truax, 50 M. 348.

864. Inadequacy of price cannot vitiate a statutory foreclosure sale otherwise fair and regular; for the owner of the equity of redemption cannot be prejudiced thereby, since he may always redeem within the year by refunding the amount paid, with interest at the rate fixed by the statute: Cameron v. Adams, 31 M. 426.

865. A foreclosure sale for instalments due on a mortgage is not presumed to have been made subject to other instalments: Millard v. Truax, 50 M. 348.

866. Part payments on a mortgage, made after foreclosure by advertisement, and received with the clear understanding that the redemption was to be completed by paying the whole sum necessary for that purpose within the year allowed by the statute, are in affirmance and not in avoidance of the sale, and their acceptance does not operate as a waiver of the foreclosure: Cameron v. Adams, 31 M. 426.

2. Surplus moneys.

867. The burden of proof is not upon the party claiming under a statutory foreclosure to show that he made payment after the sale of the surplus over the amount due: Damon v. Deves, 62 M. 465.

868. Where, upon a foreclosure sale, the mortgagee bids in the property for a greater amount than that for which the lien exists, the surplus is due at once to the owner of the equity of redemption: Kennedy v. Brown, 50 M. 336; Millard v. Truax, 50 M. 348.

869. Non-payment by the sheriff to the mortgager of the surplus received on foreclosure sale does not defeat the sale, for the sheriff must account for the money to the mortgager even though he fails to obtain it, and if the mortgager redeems without getting it he still has an unquestionable right to have it taken into account: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

870. In the absence of fraud or oppression the mere failure to pay over the proper surplus to the officer who makes the sale — the amount of an illegal attorney fee being retained — does not render the sale ineffectual to pass the title if no steps are taken to redeem: Damon v. Deves, 62 M. 465.

871. A mortgagee who, on foreclosure, bids off the premises at a sum exceeding the debt and legal charges is estopped, at least in the absence of evidence, from claiming that he did not have to bid the surplus sum to obtain the land, and he cannot repudiate that part of his bid as fictitious. Nor can he deny that he is liable for the surplus to the owner of the equity of redemption on the ground that he has not paid it over to the sheriff for the latter's benefit: Kennedy v. Brown, 50 M. 336.

872. H. S. § 8510 provides that on foreclosure sale any claimant to the surplus may file his claim with the officer making sale, and that a reference to a commissioner to take proofs may be ordered by the court. Held, that — apart from any question as to the validity of this statute — a petition for such reference is fatally defective if it does not establish a prima facie right to a part of the surplus; and it does not do this if it does not show how the parties cited are related to the mortgaged lands. And in the proceedings before the commissioner all parties interested in the equity of redemption must have notice so that they may produce any defence that they have: Allen v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 57 M. 196.

3. Rights of purchasers.

873. A mortgager in possession under color of title is presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary to be owner of the inheritance, and a purchaser on valid foreclosure acquires the same interest which he holds: Wyman v. Baer, 46 M. 418.

874. Void proceedings having been taken to foreclose a mortgage, and the holder of the mortgage having bid in the premises, he afterwards sold them and gave a warranty deed thereof. It was held that this deed conveyed his mortgage interest in the lands: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 336.

875. Although a statutory foreclosure be irregular, so as to be no bar to the equity of redemption, yet the purchaser succeeds to all the interest of the mortgagee: Gilbert v. Cooley, W. 494; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

876. Including, in the case of a mortgage executed prior to 1843, the right of possession: Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

877. A purchaser under a defective foreclosure of a mortgage made since 1843 is only in the position of a mortgagee, and can only recover possession by new foreclosure proceedings: Nims v. Sherman, 43 M. 45.

878. The rights of the grantees of a purchaser at an irregular foreclosure are simply those of a mortgagee: Morse v. Byam, 55 M. 594.

879. Under R. S. 1838, p. 501, ch. 8, and until the enactment of H. S. § 8498, a foreclosure sale by advertisement of mortgaged premises for one of several instalments, unless made subject to the lien of the other instalments, forever freed the premises from the mortgage: Kimmell v. Willard's Administrators, 1 D. 217.

880. Semble, that a mortgagee might protect himself against such consequence of a statute foreclosure for one of several instalments, either by bidding off the premises for the whole sum secured by the mortgage, or by having them exposed to sale, charged expressly with the payment of the future instalments: Ibid.

881. Where one who forecloses for one of several instalments owing upon his mortgage sells subject to the other instalments, the purchaser takes the land charged with the payment of the subsequent instalments: McCurdy v. Clark, 27 M. 445.

882. Where one who forecloses for a single instalment upon his mortgage neglects to sell subject to the other instalments, his foreclosure may bar the equity of redemption of the mortgager, and of subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers, but, as between him and the purchaser at the sale, the latter has purchased only an instalment of the mortgage, and the remaining instalments retain their relative positions; a subsequent foreclosure for another instalment would do nothing toward an adjustment of the respective interests of the parties; if each bid off the whole land neither would become owner of any particular part of it or of any definite undivided interest in it, but each would still have a lien, which, though foreclosed as to those holding subordinate rights, would remain, as to the other, a mere lien; neither could redeem from the other, and neither could gain or lose precedence or position by the foreclosure sale: Ibid.

883. In foreclosing by advertisement a mortgage securing separate notes, the mortgagee can preserve his lien for subsequent foreclosures by selling the premises subject to the payment of the principal indebtedness; if he sells them discharged from further incumbrance he can depend on the mortgagor's personal liability: Miles v. Skinner, 42 M. 181.

884. Where a foreclosure by advertisement for the first instalment due on a mortgage and for interest on the other instalments has become absolute, and the land has been bid off and not redeemed, the mortgagor's wife may, with her own money, buy it from the purchaser on foreclosure, and if the sale was not made subject to succeeding instalments, she acquires full title: Ibid.

885. Where a mortgage is foreclosed for an instalment only it remains in force as to notes secured by subsequent instalments; and indorsers of such notes may look to the security for indemnity if called on to pay them: Bridgman v. Johnson, 44 M. 491.

886. A purchaser of real estate at a statutory mortgage sale acquires an inchoate title, subject to be defeated by redemption; and when his title becomes absolute by the failure to redeem, it relates back to the time of the purchase: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

4. Proof of foreclosure and sale.

887. Parties claiming under a purchase at a mortgage sale need not, in support of their title, produce the note secured by the mortgage: Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 M. 549.

888. But the mortgage and the power of sale must be proved: Hebert v. Bulte, 42 M. 489; Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 M. 549.

889. And the sheriff's deed is not of itself evidence of a regular foreclosure: Barman v. Carhartt, 10 M. 388; Hebert v. Bulte, 42 M. 489.

890. Nor do the affidavits of publication of notice of sale, and of the fact of sale pursuant thereto, prove, by themselves, a valid foreclosure: Hebert v. Bulte, 42 M. 489.

891. Those affidavits are not required to be recorded, and the proof of sale may be made by oral testimony: Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261; Lee v. Clary, 38 M. 223.

892. When the mortgage is shown and a sale apparently in accordance with its terms, a presumption arises that will protect purchasers whose rights are collaterally attacked; Snyder v. Hemmingway, 47 M. 549.

5. Deed.

893. Under the act of April 19, 1883, the deed could lawfully be made by the person selling, or his executors, whether in or out of office: Hoffman v. Harrington, 38 M. 892.

894. A sheriff's deed on foreclosure is not made invalid by an error in setting forth the date of a mortgage, which is so described otherwise as to be clearly identified. The statute does not prescribe the form of such a deed: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

895. The deed must state the price for which each parcel was sold, or the foreclosure will be held invalid: Lee v. Mason, 10 M. 408.

896. A deed which represents the lands as sold as a single tract and for one gross sum, when in fact the sale was in parcels, is erroneous: Grover v. Fox, 36 M. 461.

897. The deed must be acknowledged; a falsely antedated deed and certificate of acknowledgment are invalid: Ibid.

898. And such a falsely antedated deed and certificate made ten months after sale will not cure defects in a deed made at the time of the sale: Ibid.

899. The provision in H. S. § 8505 requiring the officer to indorse upon the deed the time when it will become operative is directory merely: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232; Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261.

900. The foreclosure is not void by reason of the sheriff erroneously stating the time of redemption, in his certificate indorsed upon the deed, as one year instead of two. To avoid the foreclosure it must be shown that a tender of the redemption money was actually made within the two years: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232.

901. The statute fixes the time for redemption, and a sheriff's certificate fixing an impossible time does not invalidate the foreclosure: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

902. Prior to the amendment by act 152 of 1875 to H. S. § 8505, which now requires the sheriff's deed to be deposited with the register of deeds "as soon as practicable and within twenty days after" sale, a delay of more than a year was held to invalidate the foreclosure: Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261.

903. The sheriff's deed on foreclosure at law should be filed immediately after sale, and where this is done without unreasonable delay, the year for the redemption of the premises runs from the date of the filing: Lilly v. Gibbs, 39 M. 394.

904. Whether there may not be so long a delay as to render the whole proceeding as one of foreclosure void, quere: Ibid.

905. But it seems that a brief delay, while it might subject the sheriff to a mandamus requiring him to perform his duty, ought not entirely to destroy the foreclosure: Doyle v. Howard, 16 M. 261.

906. And the neglect to file the deed within twenty days after the sale does not of itself invalidate the foreclosure, but extends the time for redemption by the period of the delay: Perkins v. Keller, 43 M. 53.

907. The presumption of law that a public officer performs his duty applies where the question is whether a sheriff's deed on foreclosure was immediately filed by him, and, unless the circumstances of the case overturn it, prevails so far as to throw the burden of proof upon the party who questions the fact: Sinclair v. Learned, 51 M. 335.

908. A statutory foreclosure is not invalidated by neglect for more than twelve years to record the sheriff's deed; for if redemption is not made within one year from the date of the sale and deposit of the deed all rights are barred: Sanford v. Cahoon, 68 M. 223.

909. A mortgagee bid in the property at a foreclosure sale, but afterward extended the time of payment and made such arrangements with the mortgager as rendered the sale ineffective. The mortgager defaulted again in payment and the mortgagee then recorded the sheriff's deed, assigned the mortgage, and quitclaimed the land. Held, that the sheriff's deed was then of no force, because the proceedings on which it depended had been invalidated: Dodge v. Brewer, 31 M. 227.

910. A sheriff's deed by itself is no evidence of a regular foreclosure of mortgage by advertisement under the statute: Barman v. Carhartt, 10 M. 338; Hebert v. Bulte, 42 M. 489.

911. H. S. § 8506, in declaring that a sheriff's deed on foreclosure shall vest in the grantees all the interest which the mortgager had at the time of executing the mortgage, or at any time thereafter, does not enlarge any estate definitely limited in the mortgage, but as between original parties may bind a subsequently acquired interest: Brayton v. Merithew, 56 M. 166.

XII. REDEMPTION.

912. The equity of redemption is not an equitable, but is practically a legal, estate: Gorham v. Arnold, 23 M. 247; Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

913. And it is an interest in land such as can only be conveyed by writing: Cowles v. Marble, 37 M. 158; Rawdon v. Dodge, 40 M. 697.

914. A mortgager may release to the mortgagee the equity of redemption for a valuable consideration, when it is done voluntarily and there is no fraud, and no undue influence is brought to bear upon him for that purpose by the creditor: Batty v. Snook, 5 M. 231.

915. Equity is jealous of all contracts between mortgager and mortgagee by which the equity of redemption is to be shortened or cut off: Ibid.

916. But an agreement contemporaneous with or subsequent to a transaction that is in effect a mortgage is void if it stipulates to give up the equity of redemption on default: Ibid.

917. The owner of a mortgage agreed, in writing, with the widow of the owner of the equity of redemption, that he would bid the property in on foreclosure and pay her a certain amount, less the sum then due on the mortgage. Instead of doing so he allowed the property to be struck off to another person for much less than its value and for less than half of what he had agreed to pay her, and took a conveyance of it from the purchaser. The sale was not such a public sale, with competition, as the law contemplates. Held, that the widow and heirs of the owner of the equity of redemption were entitled to have the sale vacated; and as this was not a proceeding to enforce the agreement with the mortgagee or to determine who would have been entitled to the moneys which he was to have paid to the widow, the question whether the agreement was not a fraud upon the rights of the heirs or of creditors does not arise: Fix v. Loranger, 50 M. 199.

918. A second mortgagee's right to redeem a prior mortgage cannot be cut off or prejudiced by arrangements between the mortgager and the holder of the first mortgage for an extension of the time in which to pay it: Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 134.

919. A guardian has a right to redeem the lands of his ward from mortgagesale: Marvin v. Schilling, 12 M. 356.

920. A mortgagee cannot transfer title to any part of the mortgaged premises free and clear of the right to redeem: Gorham v. Arnold, 22 M. 247.

921. The mere assumption of a mortgagee, evidenced by his giving a deed, that he has title in fee, cannot bar the equity of redemption; neither can an occasional occupation under such deed, or any occupation short of a continuous and notorious one adverse to the right to redeem: Humphrey v. Hurd, 29 M. 44.

922. The right to redeem from a mortgage executed prior to 1843 could not affect the right of possession, and could only be asserted by bill: Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

923. To bar the equity of redemption the mortgage should be foreclosed by advertisement or in equity: Comstock v. Howard, W. 110.

924. Before the period of redemption from a statutory foreclosure expired, A., the mortgager, died. His widow sold the land to B. by warranty deed, in consideration of B.'s paying her $25 and what was due on the mortgage. B. redeemed, and A.'s heirs afterwards brought ejectment against him. Held, that B. had a lien on the land for the redemption money paid by him, with interest, less the use and occupation of the premises over and above improvements: Webb v. Williams, W. 544.

925. A lien for redemption money is an independent equity, and not merely appurtenant to the mortgage held by a mortgagee who has redeemed; so that proceedings to enforce the lien may be taken before such mortgage matures, and the discharge of the mortgage does not cut off the lien: Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 M. 468.

926. When a mortgager redeems it should always be construed as payment, he being personally liable for the debt. But when his vendee redeems, who is not personally liable, and there is an intervening mortgage between the one redeemed by him and his equity of redemption, the same rule should prevail as in case of redemption by a subsequent mortgagee: Johnson v. Johnson, W. 331; Webb v. Williams, W. 544.

(b) Proceedings in equity.

As to costs on bill to redeem, see COSTS, §§ 175, 176.

1. When allowed; who entitled.

927. Where a mortgage of indemnity was foreclosed at law before the mortgagee had been damnified the mortgager was held entitled to redeem: Thurston v. Prentiss, W. 529.

928. Where one whose land had been sold in statutory foreclosure was induced by the acts and conversation of one who had bought the land from the foreclosure purchaser to believe that the title had been taken for his own benefit, and to give up efforts to get from other quarters the money to redeem until it was too late, held, that he is entitled to a decree for a redemption, and an accounting: Newman v. Locke, 66 M. 27 (May 5, '87).

929. If a mortgager wishes to test in the court of chancery the validity of a statutory foreclosure he must file a bill to redeem. He cannot file a bill to set aside the sale and have the property resold, although the mortgagee may have abused the power to sell and purchased the property himself: Schwarz v. Sears, W. 170.

930. Relief in equity against forfeiture is founded upon the principle that the possessor of a legal right shall not be allowed to use it to work oppression or injustice; and when a mortgager not guilty of laches brings himself within this principle, and it can be applied without injustice to others, the court should administer the proper relief: Sandford v. Flint, 24 M. 26.

931. A mortgagee may not so execute the power of sale contained in his mortgage as to compel the mortgager to pay more than he owes or forfeit his estate; and if it is attempted, either through mistake or fraud, a court of equity, if appealed to properly and in season, will prevent the forfeiture by allowing the party to pay the true sum in redemption of the estate: Ibid.

932. Where one standing in position of mortgager of a mortgage was present at and assented to a subsequent assignment of the mortgage by his assignee, to secure a debt of the latter less than the amount that it was first assigned to secure, it was held that he was not thereby estopped from asserting his right to redeem, since he must be understood as assenting only to an assignment of such interest as his assignee had in the mortgage: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 86.

933. Nor would statements made by him at the time, that if the debt he was owing was paid from the mortgage he would be satisfied, estop him from redeeming: Ibid.

934. And where a receiver in chancery, to whom a mortgager of a mortgage had assigned, was called upon by a subsequent assignee to redeem his interest in the mortgage, and was told that, unless such redemption was made, such assignee was about to transfer the mortgage to another, and the receiver declined to redeem, and told the assignee he might sell to whom he pleased, whereupon the assignee did sell, but to one who was aware of the conditional nature of the assignments, it was held that the receiver was not thereby estopped from asserting his right to redeem: Ibid.

935. Courts of equity cannot extend the time for redemption on a statutory foreclosure where redemption within the time limited has been prevented by accident and misfortune, or by an unavoidable mental and physical disorder: Cameron v. Adams, 31 M. 426.

936. The right of a second mortgagee to redeem from the foreclosure of the prior mortgage is barred if he allows the foreclosure to become absolute: Gantz v. Toles, 40 M. 725.

937. A foreclosure under the power of sale, if made for an excessive amount, may be set aside before the proceedings under it are perfected, on a bill filed by the debtor for leave to redeem on paying the amount due: Schwarz v. Sears, H. 440.

938. Where, pending the year of redemption from a statutory foreclosure, the owner of the equity of redemption is induced by the acts and statements of the foreclosure holders and of their grantee to give up efforts to raise the money in time, and to believe that he will be allowed further time, the title will be considered as taken for his benefit: Newman v. Locke, 66 M. 27 (May 5, '87).

939. One whose sole interest in lands is under a trust deed, by virtue of which he is to be entitled to the lands after payment of the mortgages upon it and certain other specified demands, is not entitled, if he repudiates the trust, to file a bill to redeem from the mortgages: Smith v. Austin, 11 M. 84.

940. Equity will not lend its aid to enable a volunteer to pay off a mortgage on the lands of another, or to subrogate him to the rights of a mortgagee in a mortgage so paid: Smith v. Austin, 9 M. 465.

941. One who shows no subsisting legal or equitable right in the property, nor any lien or charge upon it, cannot maintain a bill to redeem from a mortgage: Harwood v. Underwood, 28 M. 427.

942. Transactions between the parties with reference to a sale by the defendant to the complainant of a mortgage interest cannot have any force as the foundation for a bill to redeem from the mortgage: Ibid.

943. The mere levy of an execution upon lands to which the judgment debtor never had any title, and in which he never held any leivable interest, does not constitute any lien or charge upon the lands, or invest the execution creditor with any right or title on which to found a suit for the redemption of a mortgage upon them: Ibid.

944. No one has any right to redeem from a mortgage who has no existing interest in the land; but the tender of redemption money is construed as the claim of such an interest, and if the mortgagee receives and retains the money tendered he cannot repudiate the claim: Millard v. Truax, 50 M. 348.

945. A second mortgagee has an absolute right, at any time after a prior encumbrance comes due, to redeem from and be subrogated to it until his own mortgage, as well as the former, shall be paid up and his whole claim refunded. And where a statutory foreclosure has been had that is void for irregularities, and the purchaser's assignee refuses to recognize his right to redeem, he can maintain a bill against such assignee for an accounting as to the amount due and for the removal of the apparent cloud caused by the foreclosure and for leave to redeem on equitable terms: Sager v. Tupper, 85 M. 184.

946. A bill to redeem, filed by several persons jointly, cannot be maintained if the ground of their joint claim fails, whatever any one of them, claiming title from another source, might be entitled to in a separate proceeding: Bigelow v. Booth, 39 M. 622.

947. Suit to redeem having been brought by the administrator of the grantor in a deed absolute that was in fact a mortgage, it was for the first time objected at the hearing on pleadings and proofs that the heirs of the mortgaging grantor should have been joined as complainants. Held, that as the heirs were nowise prejudiced, and the administrator, under the statute, had such an interest in the real estate as entitled him to redeem, and complete justice could be done to the parties in the case as it stood, the objection was not well taken: Enos v. Sutherland, 11 M. 588.

948. A bankrupt had a mortgage on certain property. Sale being had under a later mortgage, his assignee, who had not been impleaded in foreclosing it, took from the mortgager an order for the surplus, but only with the idea of using it to procure redemption of the bankrupt's mortgage without litigation. Held, that his taking the order did not preclude his bringing suit to redeem, and such a defence could not be heard if not asserted in the answer: Avery v. Eyerson, 34 M. 362.

949. Where no steps have been taken to redeem a mortgage for nearly forty years after its maturity, and more than thirty after an open attempt to foreclose, it requires a very strong showing to authorize a bill to redeem: Hoffman v. Harrington, 33 M. 392.

950. Where a second mortgagee asked to redeem in equity, and more than twenty years had elapsed since the right to redeem accrued, it was held the right was barred by lapse of time, whether the premises had been occupied under the first mortgage for twenty years or not: Cook v. Finkler, 9 M. 131.

951. Where a second foreclosure by advertisement was begun pending a suit in equity to redeem from the mortgage and to enjoin a sale under a prior proceeding, it was held that as the court of equity could take complete jurisdiction upon the bill then pending, and as the dispute between the parties could only be adequately dealt with in equity, the new proceeding by advertisement was unnecessary and was taken subject to the final action of the court in the equity suit, and should be set aside: Louder v. Burch, 47 M. 109.

2. Pleadings and practice.

952. One who files a bill to redeem from a mortgage must show by his bill that he has an interest in the equity of redemption: Lamb v. Jeffrey, 47 M. 28.

953. Where any other person than the mortgager files a bill to redeem the bill must show that complainant has some title or interest in the land derived through the mortgager, or in some way springing out of his general equity of redemption. And it must show the nature or derivation of the title or interest so claimed: Smith v. Austin, 9 M. 465.

954. Where a bill to redeem only stated that complainant, after the giving of the mortgage, became interested in the land by contract, but without setting out the contract, or stating the parties, or its terms, or the interest contracted, it was held insufficient: Ibid.

955. Recitals in exhibits attached to the bill, and which the bill prays may be made a part of the bill with all their averments, which recitals speak of complainant as having "become the purchaser" of the mortgaged premises, cannot aid the bill in this particular; the recitals not showing from whom the purchase was made, nor the interest purchased, nor whether it was subject to the mortgage or not: Ibid.

956. In a bill by a mortgager for relief against a statutory foreclosure for a sum larger than was due upon the mortgage, an offer to redeem is not an indispensable requisite in a case where there is no reason to believe the defendant has been misled, and the case shows that the parties have gone into the merits fully as upon a bill to redeem: Sandford v. Flint, 24 M. 26.

957. Bill to redeem from a conveyance claimed to be a mortgage. The bill was not filed until thirty-four years after the maturity of the mortgage, which the bill alleges to have remained unpaid, and twenty-four years after the grantee had sold and conveyed the land. A party seeking to redeem after such a lapse of time is bound to show affirmatively in his bill such facts as will establish the instrument as continuing in force and subject to redemption: Reynolds v. Green, 10 M. 355.

958. The bill showed that the grantee in the mortgage conveyance, and those claiming under him, had claimed and disposed of the premises as absolute owners for more than twenty years, and that possession had been had under them. It averred that the possession had not been continuous and adverse for twenty years, but did not show that it was taken within that time. No excuse was shown for the delay in applying to redeem, and it was held that the averments in the bill were too uncertain to found a right to redeem upon: Ibid.

959. Where an assignee in bankruptcy files a bill to redeem, the objection that it is not shown that the assignee obtained permission from the court of bankruptcy to bring the suit will not be considered unless it is pleaded, if at all: Avery v. Ryerson, 34 M. 862.

960. Where a bill for relief against a mortgage neither counts upon nor mentions an alleged assignment to the complainant of a right to redeem, such assignment is outside the issue: Glass v. Glass, 50 M. 289.

961. If one who files a bill to redeem avers that he owns a certain mortgage which is a subsequent mortgage to that of defendant, and his bill is not demurred to, it may be sustained notwithstanding he fails to set forth such facts as show that his mortgage and that from which he seeks to redeem are mortgages in the same chain of title. Especially is this so when it appears that defendant has recognized his right to make payments by receiving interest from him: Lamb v. Jeffrey, 47 M. 28.

962. If one has acquired possession of lands under a mortgagee, but asserts a paramount title, the assignee of the mortgagor who files a bill to redeem is not obliged to show that the mortgagor had title when he gave the mortgage, but the defendant must take upon himself the burden of showing that the title he sets up in opposition to the mortgage title is valid and paramount: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Bronson, 14 M. 361.

963. Upon a bill to redeem defendant will not be allowed to increase the amount apparently due by showing an agreement, not stated in either the bill or the answer, to pay extra interest on the mortgage: Fosdick v. Van Huse, 21 M. 567.

964. Where a party comes to have a foreclosure set aside and for leave to redeem he must bring into court the amount admitted to be due. The deposit will only be dispensed with where there is uncertainty as to the amount due: Schwarz v. Sears, H. 440.

3. Decree.

965. A., the holder of the first of five mortgages on a piece of land, took proceedings in chancery to foreclose it, making all the subsequent mortgagees parties except D., the last. Decree for the sale was obtained, and a sale made at which B., the administrator of C., the second mortgagee, became the purchaser for a few dollars over the amount of the first mortgage. B. bought in his own name, but stated at the time that he bought to protect the interests of the C. estate. He then filed his bill against D., setting up all the facts and praying that D. be decreed to redeem by paying the amount of both the A. and C. mortgages and costs, or be foreclosed. D. filed a cross-bill, claiming the right to redeem on paying the amount of B.'s bid, with interest. The mortgaged premises were shown to be worth at least the amount of the A. and C. mortgages. Held, that D. could not be permitted to redeem without paying the amount of both: Baker v. Pierson, 6 M. 522.

966. The redemption of a mortgage will not be decreed on any terms other than the payment of the mortgagee's claim: Cowles v. Marble, 37 M. 158.

967. On a bill to redeem from an irregular foreclosure, if the foreclosure proceedings are found invalid the decree should provide for redemption from the mortgage as an unforsclosed security, and not for redemption from the void sale, and in fixing the amount to be paid on such redemption it is erroneous to make a rest in computing interest at the date of the sale, and the decree should provide for a sale as on foreclosure to produce satisfaction in case of failure to redeem: Grover v. Fox, 36 M. 461.

968. Where, on bill to redeem, a deed absolute in form is adjudged to be a mortgage, and the mortgagee had, before the bill was filed, conveyed to one of the other defendants, the decree should direct the amount due to be paid to such grantee instead of the mortgagee: Emerson v. Atwater, 12 M. 814.

969. It is proper in such a case to direct a sale of the premises to satisfy the amount due in default of payment by the time fixed, instead of decreeing a strict foreclosure: Ibid.

970. On a bill to redeem in a case where a controversy exists as to the amount due upon it, the mortgagee having proceeded to foreclose by advertisement, if the court allows the redemption the proper decree is that, unless the redemption money is paid within a specified time, the premises be sold as in foreclosure cases, and not that the title shall be absolute in the mortgagee: Fosdick v. Van Huse, 21 M. 567.

971. The proper decree where a mortgagor files a bill to cancel a mortgage past due and which his adversary is seeking to foreclose, but which the court finds to be valid, is a decree for redemption. Every such bill is regarded as in the alternative a bill to redeem: Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 M. 505.

972. Where the decree on a bill to redeem provided that, if redemption were not made within three months, defendant should have strict foreclosure, it was modified on appeal so as to permit defendant to proceed to sale: Newkirk v. Newkirk, 56 M. 525.

973. Where a bill to enforce the discharge of a mortgage had been filed before the time for redemption had expired, but after foreclosure was begun, and it was held that the complainant mortgager was not entitled to a discharge, he was allowed to redeem on paying the amount of the debt with interest at the stipulated rate, and the costs of foreclosure, with interest, but without the attorney fee provided for in the mortgage: Parks v. Allen, 42 M. 482.

974. Where, as preliminary to a bill to redeem from a prior mortgage, the amount necessary for redeeming from an irregular statutory foreclosure thereof was deposited with the register of deeds, the court on granting leave to redeem stopped interest on the deposit during the time it remained in the register's hands and while the adverse party refused to receive it and contested the redemption: Sager v. Tupper, 35 M. 134.

975. Where one who seeks to enforce a right to redeem from a prior mortgage omits to keep good his tender in his bill, the omission, as in cases of specific performance, only raises a question of costs: Lamb v. Jeffrey, 41 M. 719.

976. A dismissal of a bill to redeem from foreclosure makes the foreclosure absolute and bars the mortgager's rights: Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 M. 505; Adams v. Cameron, 40 M. 506.

(c) Statutory redemption from foreclosure by advertisement.

977. A subsequent mortgagee could, under R. S. 1838, redeem premises sold on the statutory foreclosure of a prior mortgage: Kimmell v. Willard's Administrator, 1 D. 217.

978. A subsequent mortgagee may redeem a prior mortgage which has been foreclosed by advertisement: Carter v. Lewis, 27 M. 241.

979. A second mortgagee is entitled to redeem from a prior mortgage and have the benefit of an assignment of the mortgage: Lamb v. Jeffrey, 41 M. 719.

980. Any one who has any interest in mortgaged premises, or in any part of them, is entitled to redeem them from foreclosure, and he must redeem completely if at all: Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 M. 468.

981. A tenant in common of mortgaged land from whom the foreclosure has been purposely concealed may redeem; but he must not have been guilty of laches, nor have acquiesced by accepting his share of the surplus: Norton v. Tharp, 53 M. 146.

982. Where a mortgage executed prior to the statute abolishing ejectment by mortgagees was assigned for the purpose of securing the assignor's debt, the right of the assignor to redeem stands upon the same footing as that of the mortgager of real estate: Graydon v. Church, 7 M. 86.

983. A subsequent purchaser whose deed, by reason of his having had notice of the mortgage, is subject to the lien, is entitled to redeem, and the question of the bona fides of his purchase cannot be raised by the mortgagee: Stone v. Welling, 14 M. 514.

984. Redemption from a statutory foreclosure cannot be conditioned on the payment of any allowances in the nature of fees beyond what are authorized by statute, and an attorney fee paid under protest on redeeming was allowed to be recovered back: Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 M. 455.

985. A sale on statutory foreclosure satisfies the mortgage debt and releases the personal obligation to the extent of its proceeds; but a subsequent encumbrancer who redeems from it thereby obtains such an interest in the land as will protect him, and later encumbrancers who are also benefited must not only repay the redemption money, but must pay his mortgage; and as the two claims are distinct, the liens therefor are not merged, and the payment of one cannot release the other: Powers v. Golden Lumber Co., 43 M. 468.

986. One who holds a mortgage under a fraudulent assignment is entitled, if he has redeemed upon the foreclosure of a prior mortgage, to receive from the owner of the land the amount of the redemption, but he cannot have interest thereon where his concealment of the fact of such assignment to himself and his refusal to give it up have delayed settlement and prevented the owner from redeeming: Wallace v. McBride, 70 M. 586 (June 15, '88).

987. A bill in equity is not needed to enable a mortgager to redeem from a foreclosure sale within the period allowed for redemption: McHugh v. Wells, 39 M. 175.

988. Where there is an existing mortgage a subsequent mortgagee can be made to redeem against it or be barred of all rights under his mortgage: Tower v. Divine, 37 M. 443.

989. The statute of 1840 for the foreclosure of mortgages (Laws of 1840, p. 145) required redemption moneys to be paid to the register of deeds, and to no other person; and it was his duty, upon such payment, to destroy the deed, and pay over the money to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns: Woodbury v. Lewis, W. 256.

990. The register of deeds has no right to receive anything but money in redemption of property sold. His powers are limited to receiving the money and destroying the deed. He is a special agent for these purposes only, and his acts are not binding on the purchaser when he exceeds or departs from his authority without the assent of the purchaser: Ibid.

991. Although the register of deeds is allowed to receive nothing but money, yet it is a sufficient payment, in redemption of a foreclosed mortgage, to give him, at his request and in good faith, a check for the amount required, keeping the money to meet it in the bank until called for: Carter v. Lewis, 27 M. 241.

992. An offer to a mortgager to give him time within which to redeem the whole or a part of the premises from statutory foreclosure cannot avail to correct illegalities or to preclude the mortgager from taking advantage of them and demanding redemption, and a limit of ten days proposed for redemption is inequitable: Grover v. Fox, 36 M. 461.

XIII. ACTIONS AT LAW FOR THE DEBT OR DEFICIENCY.

993. H. S. § 6703, declaring that legal proceedings to recover a mortgage debt for which a foreclosure suit is pending shall not be had unless authorized by the court, leaves the question of permitting such proceedings to be determined in equity by the court where the foreclosure is pending, and not at law. That court will compel an election of remedies, or permit the double action, in its discretion: Joslin v. Millsbaugh, 27 M. 517.

994. A party sued on a note secured by mortgage set up as a defence that a foreclosure had been commenced and carried to a decree. Held, that this was no bar to the action, but that defendant should have moved the court pending the foreclosure to restrain the unauthorized action: Goodrich v. White, 39 M. 489.

995. Leave to proceed at law while foreclosure is pending in chancery ought not to be granted ex parte where defendant is within reach: Ibid.

996. Proceedings at law to recover a deficiency on mortgage foreclosure can be taken only by leave of the court in which the foreclosure was decreed: Innes v. Stewart, 36 M. 285.

997. The rule that proceedings at law to enforce payment of a deficiency on foreclosure cannot be taken without leave of the court in which foreclosure was had does not apply to an action begun by leave of the probate court upon the bond of the mortgager's residuary legatee; and the omission to obtain leave also from the court in chancery is a mere irregularity that can be waived by defendants: Culver v. Superior Court Judge, 57 M. 25.

998. It seems that where proceedings by foreclosure and for a deficiency thereon are ineffective, an action at law can be instituted for the debt without leave from the court in chancery: Ibid.

999. After sale of mortgaged premises on foreclosure in equity, the court cannot authorize an action at law for the deficiency until an execution has been issued therefor under order of the court and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part: Shields v. Riopelle, 63 M. 458.

1000. Land was mortgaged to one person to secure three notes payable at different times. He foreclosed to obtain payment of the first two notes, and sold and bid in the land subject to the third note not yet due. There was no redemption. Held, that the mortgagee could not sue the mortgager on the remaining note, as the latter would then be entitled to reimbursement from the land, thus causing a multiplicity of suits: Shermer v. Merrill, 33 M. 284.

NAME.

1. A girl who has been practically, though not formally, adopted into a family, in pursuance of an understanding that she should be in all things as a daughter, may use the name as her own in bringing suit against the head of the family: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

2. A bastard child can only have a name by reputation or baptism, and does not take the mother's name unless gained by reputation: Shannon v. People, 5 M. 71.

3. A change of name does not necessarily destroy identity so long as that to which the name pertains remains the same: Perkins v. Keller, 48 M. 53.

4. The use by a person of different names is immaterial where the question is one of identity only, and the identity is clearly established: Boyce v. Danz, 29 M. 146.

5. The fact that one who contracted in the name of O'Connor calls herself Connor is immaterial where she is known by both names and the identity is clearly made out: Hibernia Ins. Co. v. O'Connor, 29 M. 241.

6. Jonathan and John are not, in contemplation of law, the same: Moore v. Graham, 58 M. 25.

7. Dickson and Dixon are idem sonans: Reading v. Waterman, 46 M. 107.

8. So are Finnegan and Finegan: People v. Mayworm, 5 M. 146.

9. So are Kenney and Kinney: Kinney v. Harrett, 46 M. 87.

10. So are Trowbridge and Trobridge: Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 M. 44.

11. If a foreigner's identity is in doubt by reason of varying modes of spelling his name, whether the sounds of the various forms, e. g., Boyce and Bice, as pronounced by foreigners, are not sufficiently identical to make the rule of idem sonans applicable, quere: Boyce v. Danz, 29 M. 146.

12. It seems that there is no rule of law which makes an invariable distinction between the written signs for I and J: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 63.

13. An abbreviation which, according to the common understanding, fully expresses the name thereby intended, is sufficient: People v. Tisdale, 1 D. 59.

2. The writ is never granted in any case except as equitable bail for a sum due and ascertainable as a money demand: Fitzhugh v. Maxwell, 84 M. 198.

3. A statute is invalid which gives a circuit judge or court the power to issue a ne exeat against a debtor at discretion: Risser v. Hoyt, 53 M. 185.

4. The writ cannot be issued and served before service of subpoena: Peltier v. Peltier, H. 19.

5. Ne exeat cannot issue in divorce cases before decree: Bailey v. Cadwell, 51 M. 217.

6. A circuit court commissioner or injunction master cannot issue a ne exeat in any case: Ibid.

I. IN GENERAL.

(a) What constitutes; proximate cause.

1. Generally.

1. Negligence is neither more nor less than a failure of duty: M. C. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 M. 440.

2. Negligence consists in a want of that reasonable care which would be exercised by a person of ordinary prudence under all the existing circumstances, in view of the probable injury: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 M. 99.

3. Negligence consists in the failure to observe that degree of care which the law requires for the protection of the interests likely to be injuriously affected by the want of it: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Stark, 28 M. 714; Kendrick v. Towle, 60 M. 363.

4. Negligence is the failure to observe, for the protection of another's interests, such care, precaution and vigilance as the circumstances justly demand and the want of which causes him injury: Brown v. Street R. Co., 49 M. 153.

5. To charge a person or a corporation for negligence in the performance of any public work, whereby any person has sustained special damage, the law must have imposed a duty, so as to make that neglect culpable: Dermont v. Detroit, 4 M. 435.

6. The law does not hold any one responsible upon the ground of negligence for not doing that which it was practically impossible to do: M. C. R. Co. v. Burrows, 83 M. 6.

7. The law does not impose impracticable rules of duty, but is satisfied with what is fairly reasonable under the circumstances: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

8. Where a right and duty concur, as where the exercise of the right is contingent on the performance of the duty, the mere failure to discharge the duty is negligence if a third person is injured in consequence: Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 M. 430.

9. Negligence implies fault, and cannot be predicated of a lawful and customary use of one's own premises: Alpern v. Churchill, 53 M. 607.

10. No liability for negligence can be established on a stipulation of facts which states that the act complained of was due to mistake or negligence: Gillett v. Detroit Board of Trade, 46 M. 309.

11. The degree of care required in any business must be in proportion to its nature and risks, but the law cannot require business to be conducted on any unusual basis, though the business be one of great risks, and requiring great caution. All rules applied must be reasonable and not oppressive, and must be applied with reference to the ordinary conduct of affairs: M. C. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 M. 440.

12. The nature of the business determines whether the degree of care exercised by those employed in it is such as the law requires: M. C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 M. 176.

13. Ordinary care has relation to the situation and condition of the parties, and varies according to the exigencies which require vigilance and attention: Baker v. F. & P. M. R. Co., 68 M. 90 (Jan. 5, '88).

14. The question of diligence or negligence always depends upon the circumstances peculiar to each particular case; the general neglect of mill-owners to use spark-catchers on their chimneys will not excuse such neglect in a particular instance, nor be pertinent evidence in an action for damages caused by sparks from the chimney of one mill, at least without some showing that the other mills were similarly situated: Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 M. 181.

15. Where a mill is surrounded by numerous wooden buildings which are endangered by the frequent escape of sparks, etc., from its chimney, the owner is bound to use the best well-known device for checking escape of sparks, whether it is expressly adapted to a mill chimney or not, if it can be used upon it; in erecting and operating the mill, he must use such precautions for lessening danger and preventing injury as a prudent man, conversant with the business, the danger, and all the surroundings, would have used, or he will be liable for loss arising from it. The fact that the mill had been used for a long time without doing injury is not of weight: Ibid.

16. In an action for negligent injury resulting from the lack of due precautions in the conduct of one's business, defendant cannot be permitted to answer that the profits on the business are not sufficient to warrant taking them. And the question as to the necessity for the precautions is for the jury. So held where it was a question whether in blasting in an open mine the pit ought not to be covered before firing the blast: Beauchamp v. Saginaw Mining Co., 50 M. 163.

17. In an action for negligent injury to property rightfully stored on another's premises, it is unimportant that a third person was joint owner of it with the plaintiff, or that defendant was not aware of plaintiff's interest; plaintiff was not bound to give notice of his interest: Moomey v. Peak, 57 M. 259.

18. It is negligence to disregard a positive regulation that boats moving at night shall exhibit lights, even though the practice may have been otherwise; and if injury is done, it is for the jury to determine how far it was connected with such negligence: Billings v. Breinig, 45 M. 65.

19. The taker of counterfeit coin or of a counterfeit of paper money which had been made a legal tender by law must use due diligence to ascertain its character and to notify the giver, to entitle him to recover its value. Any unnecessary delay beyond such reasonable time as would enable the taker of counterfeit money to inform himself as to its genuineness, and notify the giver, operates as a fraud on the giver and prevents a recovery: Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 M. 336.

20. In dispensing medicines a druggist is held to a high degree of care; but actual negligence in him or his employees is a necessary element in his liability when a mistake has occurred: Brown v. Marshall, 47 M. 576.

21. Damages are recoverable against a register of deeds who undertakes to furnish plaintiff a full abstract of the title to lands which the latter desires to purchase, if, in consequence of the careless omission therefrom of any mention of a particular encumbrance, the purchaser is put to additional expense to perfect his title: Smith v. Holmes, 54 M. 104.

22. While the law does not hold persons using machinery to any absolute duty of insuring its safety, it requires some care in introducing untried novelties; and where the result of any defect must be an immediate danger to human life, it devolves on those who expose such life to the danger of a new experiment that turns out badly to show that they have followed such a course as the understood rules of service or mechanics applicable to such matters rendered safe according to ordinary probabilities: Marshall v. Widdicomb Furniture Co., 67 M. 167.

23. It is negligence for the manufacturer of a steamboat engine to disregard, in setting and adjusting it, the usual and reasonable precautions against mischief from it: Clark v. Locomotive Works, 32 M. 348.

24. Putting ashes in a wooden barrel in violation of a municipal ordinance is not negligence per se; it is a question of fact whether it is negligent in a particular case: Cook v. Johnston, 58 M. 437.

25. Hallooing on the public highway to the driver of a team for the purpose of warning him that another driver wishes to pass him cannot be treated as an act of negligence that will make one jointly liable with the driver if the latter's team takes fright and does the passing team an injury,—especially if the warning was meant to prevent a collision: Pigott v. Lilly, 55 M. 150.

26. Leaving a buggy standing at an angle to the beaten track, and so near that by backing one foot it would be in the way of passing vehicles, is negligence: Joslin v. Le Baron, 44 M. 160.

27. Those whose duty it is to keep a bridge in repair may be charged with notice of a deficiency, if, when repairs are going on, caused by suspicious appearance in one part of the timber, a full examination is not made: Stebbins v. Keene, 60 M. 214.

28. Machinery propelled by steam is notoriously dangerous, and the care and caution required by the owner to prevent injury to neighboring property must be commensurate with and in proportion to the risks assumed: Kendrick v. Towle, 60 M. 363.

29. Racing along a city street is itself such an act of negligence as to make the racing parties responsible for a collision caused by it: Potter v. Moran, 61 M. 60.

30. To drive along an embankment forming part of a highway, and built across low land as an approach to a bridge across a river, at the time of an overflow, is not negligence per se; whether it would be negligence in a particular case depends on the circumstances, and is for the jury: Harris v. Clinton, 64 M. 447.

31. It is not negligence for the owner of a boat laid up in winter quarters to leave her hatchway open and unprotected by railings: Caniff v. Blanchard Navigation Co., 66 M. 638.

32. One whose uninclosed grounds people cross without objection is not liable to one who falls into an unguarded cistern there: Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 M. 1.

33. Nor is he any more liable in the case of a child's falling into such cistern than he would in the case of an adult's doing so: Ibid.

34. A small boy, finding a dynamite cartridge in a common packing-box among the saw-dust, proceeded to crack it on a stone, and maimed himself for life. The boy was rightfully on the premises, and his father was at work hard by. The packing-box was on the ground under a rude shed and was marked "Powder," but neither the boy nor his father could read. It had been left exposed by the agent of the landlord. Held, that an action would lie against the landlord for the injury; and that neither the child nor his father could be said to be guilty of contributory negligence: Powers v. Harlow, 53 M. 507.

35. Whoever expressly or impliedly invites others upon his premises assumes the duty of warning all who may accept the invitation of any danger in coming of which he knows or ought to know but of which they are not aware: Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Mining Co., 49 M. 164.

36. The owner of land is liable in damages to those coming thereon, using due care, at his invitation or inducement, express or implied, on any business to be transacted with or permitted by him, for an injury occasioned by the unsafe condition of the premises, which is known to him, which he has suffered negligently to exist, and of which they have received no notice: Donaldson v. Wilson, 60 M. 86.

37. Premises upon which gas works are located need not be fenced in order to prevent injury to persons who, for their convenience, or for other reasons than defects in the usual way of entrance and departure, leave such way; and one who leaves such way becomes at best a licensee, and cannot recover for injuries from a defect at a distance from the way: Armstrong v. Medbury, 67 M. 250.

38. Persons engaged in a manufacturing business must be allowed to use the premises for that purpose in such manner as they choose, so long as that management is not dangerous to the ordinary use of the public having business with the manufactory, or to the employees: Ibid.

39. Where plaintiff sued for injuries received in falling into a hole on defendant's ground, held, that the situation of the hole, its proximity to the travelled path, and whether plaintiff was negligent in falling into it, were questions of fact for the jury: Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 69 M. 363 (April 6, '88).

40. A traveller, at night, fell into an open draw on a toll-bridge. Held, in his action against the bridge company, that if negligence was shown a liability existed; that it might be shown that the bridge company knew its draw-tender to be incompetent, and that the light was so placed as not to show the opening, and generally the situation and circumstances existing at the time: Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 M. 413.

41. A gratuitous bailee must not be reckless; he must observe such care as the circumstances reasonably require of him: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Weir, 87 M. 111.

42. A gratuitous bailee is liable only for gross negligence: Barrows v. Cushman, 87 M. 481.

43. Where one of two innocent parties must suffer a loss occasioned by the negligence of one of them, it must rest on the one who caused it, however honest his intentions may have been: Wilson v. Arnold, 5 M. 98, 105; Moran v. Palmer, 13 M. 367, 377; Stebbins v. Walker, 46 M. 6.

44. The limits indicated of the principle that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the fault of a third, he shall sustain the loss whose negligence put it into the power of the third to occasion it: Burson v. Huntington, 21 M. 415, 482, 435; Holmes v. Trumper, 22 M. 427, 432; Gibbs v. Linabury, 23 M. 479, 490; Smith v. Osborn, 33 M. 410.

See ESTOPPEL, §219.

45. When one of two parties equally innocent must suffer, the law leaves the loss where it has chanced to fall: First National Bank v. Burkham, 32 M. 328, 331.

46. A telephone company, in introducing its wire into a store which it did not own or control, lifted up a loose plank in the sidewalk, and replaced it in the same condition. The company having nothing to do with maintaining the sidewalk, and not having created the danger, was not liable to one who thereafter stepped on the plank and was injured: Davis v. Michigan Bell Telephone Co., 61 M. 807.

47. Where a fire, caused by the defendant's negligence, actually passes from one to another of the plaintiff's buildings without any contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part, or any fault of a third party, which could be regarded as a proximate cause, and for which the third party could be held liable, it is not error to hold defendant liable for the burning of the second as well as of the first building. If such a rule of damages is ruinous to him by whose negligence fires occur, it is better that he should suffer than that he should be allowed to ruin others who are innocent of neglect or wrong: Hoyt v. Jeffers, 80 M. 181.

48. There can be no recovery for an injury that is not a proximate consequence of the negligence complained of; the court cannot select some cause back of the proximate one whereon to base an action: Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 54 M. 55.

49. A carrier's negligence in carrying a passenger beyond his station and misinforming him as to where he was, was held not to be the proximate cause of an accidental injury suffered by him after he had ascertained his situation and while he was approaching the right road: Ibid.

50. Where plaintiff's horse, frightened by a hole in a bridge, backed against the railing of the bridge, which gave way and threw plaintiff below, the defective condition of the bridge is the proximate cause of the injury: Smith v. Sherwood, 62 M. 159.

51. The illegal obstruction of a highway by a freight train standing across it is not the proximate cause of the injury which a driver, who is waiting to get across the track, may suffer from having his horses frightened by a passing train while he is detained there: Selleck v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 58 M. 195.

52. A railroad car was left for three or four days at a highway crossing so near the travelled part of the way that a wagon could not pass without the wheels or whiffle-tree coming in contact with the bumper of the car. The car frightened a horse attached to a passing wagon, and the driver was injured. Held that, in the absence of testimony that the horse was vicious or unusually excitable, or that the driver failed to use due care, the position of the car was the proximate cause of the injury, and the company was liable: Peterson v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 M. 621.

53. A passenger's negligence in going to the platform of a car while it is still moving does not affect his right to recover for an injury suffered in properly alighting after the train was stopped: Wood v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 370.

54. Where, in an action for fatal injury, it becomes a question whether death resulted from the injury or from some disease with which it had become involved, the party causing the injury cannot escape full liability without showing that death must have resulted if the injury had not been done: Beauchamp v. Saginaw Mining Co., 50 M. 163.

As to negligence in carriage and delivery as proximate cause of damage, see CARRIERS, §§ 43, 90.

As to identification of passenger with driver of conveyance so as to preclude recovery for injury from latter's negligence, see CARRIERS, §§ 152-154.

That a parent is not guilty of negligence in allowing a child to ride upon a street railway car unattended, see CARRIERS, § 135.

Officers' liability for negligence, see OFFICERS, VI.

As to the degree of care required of carriers of passengers, see CARRIERS, V, (b).

That negligence may be predicated upon the construction of a public work, but not upon its plan, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 403-416, 418; COUNTIES, §§ 92, 93.

2. Injuries to employees.

55. A servant cannot recover from his master for a negligent injury received in his service without showing some fault on the part of the master: Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 43 M. 34.

56. Accidental injuries to a servant will not sustain an action against the master where they arise from the servant's voluntary use of machinery which he understands and to which no objection has been made as being peculiarly unsafe: Richards v. Rough, 53 M. 212.

57. A youth of nineteen employed for three years in a furniture factory where many different kinds of machinery were used was told by the foreman that unless he wished to run a certain split-saw three or four days he would have to lay off. He chose to run the saw, and on the fourth day lost his little finger by reason of the flying up of the piece of wood he was cutting. He had already complained that the work was too hard for him, and he had had no previous experience with it. The casualty was of a kind that had never happened before in the experience of the foreman, and consequently could not be foreseen. Held, that it was an accident for which he could not recover: Prentiss v. Kent Furniture Mfg. Co., 68 M. 478.

58. An employer cannot be held liable as for negligence in omitting to guard against accidents that are not likely to happen: Sjogren v. Hall, 53 M. 274.

59. For an injury received by a workman who catches his hand in the exposed cogs of an ordinary planing-machine the master is not liable: Schroeder v. Michigan Car Co., 56 M. 132.

60. When a master has done all that can be reasonably required of him to prevent risks to his servants, he has done all that he owes them: Smith v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 46 M. 253.

61. A master is bound only to use ordinary care in protecting his servants from dangers that are not within their knowledge or observation: Richards v. Rough, 53 M. 212.

62. A master's liability for injuries to his servant from defective arrangements is not that of an insurer or guarantor if the defect was apparent to ordinary observation. It is a question of reasonable care and diligence in providing against it: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

63. An employer is not required to use every possible safeguard against accident to his employees from the machinery on his premises. Reasonable care is the requirement: Lindstrand v. Delta Lumber Co., 65 M. 254.

64. An employer is not under obligation to his servants to make use of the safest or most recent mechanical appliances for the purpose of insuring the safety of his employees: Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 33 M. 133; McGinnis v. Canada Southern Bridge Co., 49 M. 466.

65. Business establishments are not bound at their peril to use only the best machinery and implements and the safest methods: M. C. R. Co. v. Smithson, 45 M. 212.

66. Employers may use such machinery as they choose, provided it is sound, well made and kept in repair; and in an action for injuries caused by its use the question whether a different kind of machinery would not have been safer cannot be considered: Richards v. Rough, 53 M. 212.

67. Masters do not impliedly warrant the machinery and appliances used by their servants to be safe beyond any contingencies or even to be as safe as those of other employers: Ibid.

68. An employer who introduces improved and complex machinery must take such corresponding precautions to keep his employees from harm in using it as are customary with prudent men: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

69. A master is liable for injuries to his servant resulting from the master's negligence in exposing the servant to risks which the latter is incapable of appreciating: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 M. 205.

70. An employer must furnish a suitable place in which his servant, with due care, may do his work without exposure to dangers that are not usual to his occupation as ordinarily performed: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420; Smith v. Peninsular Car Co., 60 M. 501.

71. An employer is not liable in damages for injuries received by employees who have voluntarily assumed the risks of the employment with full knowledge of the methods employed: M. C. R. Co. v. Smithson, 45 M. 212.

72. An employee assumes the risks usually incident to the employment: Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 33 M. 183; Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 42 M. 84; Day v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 42 M. 523; Piqueño v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 52 M. 40; Richards v. Rough, 53 M. 212; Gardner v. M. C. R. Co., 58 M. 594; Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61; Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 632; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 122 U. S. 189.

73. And also those that ordinary observation makes apparent: Kean v. Detroit Copper Mills, 66 M. 277; Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 632.

74. An employee assumes the risks of his employment when the machinery used is not defective and the usual means are adopted to guard against accident: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

75. There is no breach of duty in employing a servant subject to the ordinary risks of the employment if the servant himself is aware of the risks and consents to encounter them: McGinnis v. Canada Southern Bridge Co., 49 M. 466.

76. The only risks which a servant assumes are those which properly belong to his employment: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 M. 205.

77. A servant does not assume the risk of the master's negligence, or of that of any one to whom the master entrusts his superintending authority: Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 42 M. 84.

78. It seems that a master need not expressly notify his servant of a risk where the nature of the business and of the risk is such that the only effective notice he can have is from his own general experience and the visible presence of that from which the danger is to be apprehended: M. C. R. Co. v. Smithson, 45 M. 212.

79. The proprietor of a lime-kiln was in the habit of having the stone removed from the base of the kiln, as it was burned, and of pushing the mass, wedged into the crater above, down into the emptied space. When the mass gave way those who were upon it and crowding it down would step back to the margin of the crater to escape going down with it. The proprietor had an inexperienced laborer helping him at his work when an unusually large quantity of burned stone had been removed, and he did not warn him of the danger. When the mass dropped the workman fell with it and was burned to death. Helä, that his employer was liable for causing his death by negligence: Parkhurst v. Johnson, 50 M. 70.

80. Where extraordinary risks or latent dangers, of which the workmen, either from ignorance or inexperience, lack knowledge, attend the employment, the employer should caution such workmen accordingly: Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, 60 M. 501.

81. The infancy of an employee does not of itself give him a cause of action against his employer for setting him at dangerous work, if it appears that he was of average intelligence, that his duties were explained to him when he entered upon the employment, and that he had in mind its dangers and the purpose to avoid them: McGinnis v. Canada South Bridge Co., 49 M. 466.

82. In an action against an employer for an injury caused by his setting plaintiff, a boy of thirteen years old, at work upon a dangerous machine, it is not proper to instruct the jury that if the employee was properly instructed the employer would not be liable; the questions whether the machine was dangerous, and whether the boy was too young to understand its dangerous nature, were for the jury: Steiler v. Hart, 65 M. 644.

(b) Evidence; presumptions; burden of proof.

83. The question whether a servant is acting within the scope of his employment depends upon facts, as to which the finding of a jury is conclusive: Schulte v. Holliday, 54 M. 73.

84. In an action for damages caused by the recklessness of defendant's servant in leaving his horse unhitched, it is proper for the identification of the turn-out to show that the name of defendant's firm appeared on the vehicle: Ibid.

85. A servant's long continued and notorious habit of leaving his master's horse unhitched may be shown in an action against the master for damage caused thereby: Ibid.

86. Where a person sued for damages caused by the recklessness of a driver in his service defends on the ground that the team belonged to a third person and that the driver was in his employment, it is proper to show that defendant and the third person had been in partnership until shortly before the injury: Ibid.

87. Where, in an action for injury caused by sparks from a burner, there was evidence that warranted the inference that the burner was in a defective condition, it was proper to show that when a change had been made after the damage was done the dangerous emission of sparks ceased: Alpern v. Churchill, 53 M. 607.

88. Testimony to prove want of reasonable care need not be such as to drive the jury to that conclusion: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 67 M. 677.

And further as to evidence in actions for damages from negligence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 43-53, 75-84, 119, 124, 126, 142, 143, 156, 183, 189, 397, 400-402, 415, 424, 561, 562, 566-573, 577, 581, 599-605, 609-612, 884, 885, 924.

89. The owner of a stallion was sued for the value of a mare that was ruined by service per rectum. Held error to require plaintiff to show that such service was due to defendant's negligence; the inference would be that it was: Peer v. Ryan, 54 M. 224.

90. Negligence cannot be presumed in an action for injury arising therefrom, but it must be proved affirmatively: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Judson, 34 M. 506; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 M. 537; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Kirkwood, 45 M. 51; Brown v. Street R. Co., 49 M. 153; Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 51 M. 236.

91. Negligence must be affirmatively proved; but, like other facts, it may be shown by irresistible inference from circumstances: Alpern v. Churchill, 53 M. 607.

92. Negligence may sometimes be inferred from all the evidence taken together, even though the only direct evidence on the subject tends to negative it; and wherever the facts might support different inferences it is a question for a jury: Crosby v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 58 M. 458.

93. Negligence, when relied upon as a cause of action, must be proved. It may be inferred from facts proved, but not from mere conjecture: Hewitt v. F. & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

94. Negligence must be founded on competent evidence, and will not be presumed from the mere fact of the occurrence of the accident on the defendant's land: Early v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. — (June 16, '87).

95. Negligence is not to be presumed, but must be affirmatively proved by the party alleging it in the manner pleaded; and the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that defendant was entirely responsible for the injury complained of by reason of the neglect pleaded, and that the party injured did not contribute to it: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 M. 257.

96. Negligence cannot be presumed against the defendant in an action for personal injury if it did nothing outside of the usual course of its business, unless that course of business was itself improper, or special circumstances required particular caution: Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 51 M. 236.

97. There is no presumption of negligence in not turning out of the travelled track to avoid colliding with a team hitched by the roadside, but negligence must be proved: Joslin v. Le Baron, 44 M. 160.

98. In an action for negligent injury plaintiff has the burden of showing defendant's negligence: Le Baron v. Joslin, 41 M. 313.

99. In an action to recover damages sustained because of defendant's negligence the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that the injured party was exercising ordinary care at the time of the injury, and that the injury was the result of defendant's negligence: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 67 M. 677 (Jan. 5, '88).

100. In an action for injury to a person crossing a defective bridge with a team it was error to charge that the fright of a team was no defence unless the jury found it was caused by something else than the defect, for that places the burden upon the defence of proving that it was something else; while in fact it was the plaintiff's duty to establish his own case and show the affirmative fact, if it existed, that the defect caused the fright: Merkle v. Bennington, 58 M. 157.

101. If a servant shows that he has been injured in consequence of an unusual risk due to his master's negligence the master has the burden of showing that the servant knew of the increased danger: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

102. In an action for injury caused by the conduct of a servant the burden of proof is not on plaintiff, after he has shown that at the time the injury was done the servant was in the employment of defendant in his regular business, to show further that he was acting in the course of his employment: Schulte v. Holliday, 54 M. 73.

103. Where a servant, while on an errand for his master, drove against a foot passenger, the master when sued for the injury has the burden of showing that the servant was not engaged in the course of his employment, but was driving around for pleasure: Cleveland v. Newsom, 45 M. 62.

(c) Whether question of law or fact.

104. A question of negligence is a question of fact as a general rule: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 M. 99; Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 M. 492; Le Baron v. Joslin, 41 M. 313.

105. The question of diligence or, reasonable care is generally one of mixed law and fact and never exclusively one of fact; juries may act upon it only where there is evidence tending to prove it; the existence of such evidence and its relevancy, and tendency to prove diligence, are questions of law; so, also, where there is no evidence tending to prove diligence, and where facts found or admitted are such that all reasonable men will be likely to draw from them the same inference: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

106. If the question of negligence depends upon a disputed state of facts, or if the facts, though not disputed, are such that different minds might honestly draw different conclusions from them, the court cannot give positive instructions, but must leave the jury to draw their own conclusions upon the facts and upon the question of negligence depending upon them: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 M. 99.

107. To warrant the court in any case in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence the case must be so clear against him as to warrant no other inference: Ibid.

108. Where the case upon the facts is not free from doubt the court should submit the question of negligence to the jury: Sheldon v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 59 M. 172; Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 M. 257.

109. The question of negligence, where the testimony is conflicting, is for the jury: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 64 M. 98.

110. Where there is any evidence of negligence the case should go to the jury: Nelson v. Lumbermen's Mining Co., 65 M. 283 (April 14, '87).

111. The question of negligence, where there is any evidence fairly tending to prove it, is for the jury: Hassenyer v. M. C. R. Co., 48 M. 205.

112. Whether it is negligence to drive across a city street a horse harnessed, and drawing a whiffletree with a long chain attached, such as is commonly used in moving lumber, is a question for the jury, especially where the driver is shown to have been negligent in his manner of driving: Bueck v. Lindsay, 65 M. 105.

113. An employee was killed by a knife flying out of a rapidly revolving shaper-head, the first time it was used, and as soon as it reached its highest velocity, before it was applied to cutting lumber. The head was got up on a new plan, and differed from others in use, particularly in the device employed to check the knife's centrifugal tendency. The head was made accurately from the plan. Held, that the fact that the knife did fly out when fastened in as well as it was designed to be, had a tendency to prove that the design was bad, and that the case should have gone to the jury on the question whether the implement was reasonably safe and properly designed, and whether the principle involved in it was not a departure from safe methods as before applied: Marshall v. Widdicomb Furniture Co., 67 M. 167.

114. In an action for injury from a mining blast the questions whether any notice was given before the blast was fired, and, if so, whether it was sufficient, are questions of fact; and if there is any conflict in the evidence it must go to the jury: Beauchamp v. Saginaw Mining Co., 50 M. 163.

115. Whether, in a particular case, there is negligence in the management of a steam-engine as a means of locomotion in a highway is a question of fact for the jury: Macomber v. Nichols, 84 M. 212.

116. In an action for fatal injury the jury may properly consider how far the victim had knowledge of the danger and how far he relied on the action and the presumed knowledge of his superiors: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 385.

117. The degree of care required of a party is a question of law for the court and should not be left to the jury to determine, as it would be by a charge that he must exercise "such a degree of care as the law requires:" Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 57 M. 216.

118. The question whether there is evidence tending to show negligence is one of law, to be determined from the testimony only. Where the court is in doubt, the case should go to the jury: Palmer v. Harrison, 57 M. 182.

119. If the jury are satisfied from all the circumstances that defendant was wanting in due care, plaintiff is entitled to their general verdict, though they are unable to describe or define the want of care; and special questions requiring them to state what defendant did or omitted should not be allowed: Peer v. Ryan, 54 M. 224.

II. RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR; NEGLIGENCE OF CONTRACTOR AND FELLOW-SERVANT; WHO DEEMED FELLOW-SERVANT.

120. Where a trespass is committed by the subordinate employees of a corporation, the doctrine respondere superior applies to the corporation rather than to its agent in charge: Bath v. Caton, 37 M. 199.

121. Where an employee is exercising a distinct and independent employment, and is not under the immediate control, direction or supervision of the employer, the latter is not responsible for the negligence or carelessness of the employee: De Forrest v. Wright, 2 M. 368.

122. So, where a public licensed drayman was employed to draw merchandise from a warehouse and deliver at the store of his employer, and through his carelessness a barrel of the merchandise rolled against and injured the plaintiff, the employer was held not liable: Ibid.

123. To render an employer liable for the fault or negligence of his employee, the injury complained of must arise in the course of the execution of some service lawful in itself, but negligently or unskillfully performed: Moore v. Sanborne, 2 M. 519.

124. A master is liable for an injury done by his servant in the course of his employment, where the latter acted carelessly and recklessly and in negligent disregard of his master's instructions, but not if the injury was wanton, wilful and intentional. Recklessness is only a high degree of negligence; the master's responsibility is not affected by the degree: Cleveland v. Newsom, 45 M. 62.

125. Acts not fairly or reasonably incident to the nature, character or purpose of the business in which the servant is employed, or not in the discharge of the duties entrusted to him, do not render the master liable: Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co., 63 M. 639.

126. The manufacturer of an elevator which had been in use two or three days sent an employee, at the purchaser's request, to see what was the matter with it. After taking the car to an upper floor the latter said to one of the purchasers, "Let us load it up," and the purchaser accordingly directed a servant to assist in the loading. The elevator fell while being loaded, and the servant was hurt. Held, that he had a right of action against the manufacturer, who was in possession by his employee: Necker v. Harvey, 49 M. 517.

127. A master is liable for the negligent driving of a servant, even while the latter is acting temporarily for a third person who has hired the team and its driver from the master: and it is immaterial that the person hiring expressly asked for the services of this particular driver: Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice Co., 50 M. 516.

128. When the keeper of a boat laid up in winter quarters has positive orders from the owner to allow no one on board without a permit, and, disregarding such orders, invites on board a person who is injured by falling through an open hatchway, the owner of the boat is not liable for injuries sustained thereby: Caniff v. Blanchard Navigation Co., 66 M. 638 (July 7, '87).

When master not liable for servant's negligence causing fire to spread, see DAMAGES, § 408.

129. One who obtained a license from the city to encumber the street adjacent to his premises for the purpose of filling his ice-house, and hired another to do the work under a contract, was held liable for injuries to passers-by, arising from the latter's negligence, as for the negligence of an agent: Durmstatter v. Moynahan, 27 M. 188.

130. A husband or a father is not liable for an injury resulting from his wife's or his son's negligent driving, unless the use of the vehicle driven is in some way connected with his authority or fault: Ricci v. Mueller, 41 M. 214; Brohl v. Lingeman, 41 M. 711.

131. A corporation may be held liable for a contractor's neglect in not properly guarding against danger from an excavation in a public street: Detroit v. Corey, 9 M. 165.

That the negligence of a municipal officer does not render the municipality liable as for the negligence of an agent, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, § 419.

132. Where a mining corporation contracting for the removal of ore reserves to itself such arrangements as are necessary for the protection of workmen, it is liable for such injuries as happen to employees of the contractors without the fault of the employees: Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 M. 492.

133. A. leased his mine to B., B. agreeing to become responsible for any injuries to workmen, etc. A. retained no control over the mine, which was in an ordinarily safe condition. One of B.'s workmen was injured by a fall of rock in the mine. Held, that A. could not be made liable for damages: Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Mining Co., 49 M. 164.

134. Where a boom-company which has built a series of dams in a river lets to contractors the work of driving and delivering to itself at the mouth of the river a large quantity of its logs, it is liable for the damages caused to a third person by floods which the conditions of the contract rendered necessary in the contractors' operations: McDonald v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 M. — (June 23, '88).

135. A bridge company is not liable to one who, in driving over its bridge, is injured by reason of his horse becoming frightened at objects displayed, negligently or otherwise, by the toll-keeper, on her premises, at the entrance of the bridge; such premises having been leased to the toll-keeper by the company, and being, during the continuance of the lease, beyond the company's control: Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co., 63 M. 689.

136. The extent to which a foreman was affected by intoxication when he gave directions to an employee is a question for the jury in an action by the employee for injuries sustained in obeying such directions: Kean v. Detroit Copper Mills, 66 M. 277.

137. Where a foreman and an inferior employee have equal knowledge of the danger accompanying an act required by the foreman to be performed in respect to certain machinery, the employee can comply with the order or not as he chooses, and the employer is not liable if he is injured in complying, even though the dangerous nature of the act is not explained to him by the foreman: Ibid.

138. An employer is not liable to an employee for injuries resulting from negligence, misconduct or unskilfulness of fellow-servants engaged in the same general employment, where the employer himself is not in fault: M. C. R. Co. v. Leahey, 10 M. 193; Davis v. D. & M. R. Co., 20 M. 105; M. C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 M. 510; Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 495; Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

139. A servant assumes the risk of injury from the carelessness of fellow-servants, provided they have been prudently chosen and not retained in the employer's service after he has knowledge of their unfitness or negligence: Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 42 M. 84.

140. A servant assumes the risk of a fellow-servant's negligence, even though the latter is in a position of greater responsibility or a different line of employment, so long as both are in the same general business, so that the negligence of one may contribute to the danger of the other: Ibid.

141. Employers are bound to have safe rules of business, use care in selecting their immediate agents, and remove such persons or change such regulations as they believe to be unfit: M. C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 M. 510.

142. Employers are not bound to treat an agent as incompetent unless for some error or misconduct going to his general fitness: Ibid.

143. Employers have a right to trust that an agent or officer carefully chosen will use good judgment in making his appointments and doing his own duties, and to rest in that belief until, in the exercise of the general vigilance which devolves on them, they find they have erred: Ibid.

144. A master is liable for injuries to servants that spring from such negligent acts of fellow-servants as are due to their incompetency if the master himself has been negligent in selecting competent servants, or has kept incompetent ones after hearing of their unfitness, or when he might have heard of it by using ordinary care in making inquiry: Hills v. C. & G. T. R. Co., 55 M. 487.

145. A master cannot, by delegating it to another, relieve himself of the duty of exercising due care in the employment and retention of competent servants, and, if he does delegate it to a general manager, foreman or superintendent, he remains responsible: Quincy Mining Co. v. Kitts, 42 M. 84.

146. Actions by employees against their employer, for injuries caused by fellow-servants, are based on the actual negligence of the defendant or of some representative who is held in law to personate him; and, where the business requires the employment of many servants, beyond the possible constant supervision of either the employer or of such representative, there can be no negligence without the failure to use such precautions in choosing agents and guarding against perils as diligent prudence and foresight require: Smith v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 46 M. 258.

147. Where an employer has shown due care in the choice of his servants, no presumption of the latter's unfitness arises afterwards; but if it appears that a servant has been repeatedly guilty of carelessness or incompetency it is for the jury to determine whether the master knew of it or would have known if he had exercised ordinary care: M. C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 M. 176.

148. In an employee's action against his employer for injuries sustained by being caught in a machine, when the injury complained of is claimed to have resulted from obedience to a foreman's directions, evidence that the foreman was a man of intemperate habits, and that he had been discharged for getting drunk but had been reinstated, is competent: Kean v. Detroit Copper Mills, 66 M. 277.

149. The negligence of a servant in a particular instance cannot well be shown by testimony of his incompetency or carelessness on other occasions; but if it is also shown that the master knew of the cases or that they were of such a character and so frequent that he must have known of them, he, the master, may be chargeable with negligence in retaining such servant: M. C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 M. 176.

150. A mining captain who has the entire management of the mine without direction or interference by the owner occupies the owner's place and is not a mere fellow-servant of a laborer employed in the mine, even though he was not appointed directly by the owner, but only by the owner's agent. And the owner is liable for his negligence: Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 M. 179.

151. A common workman employed about a mine, but not himself a miner, is not a fellow-employee of the miners in any such sense that he cannot recover for an injury caused him by the mining operations. And his employer is bound to see that the premises where he works are reasonably safe: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 335.

152. One who has furnished suitable materials and employed competent carpenters to construct scaffolding to be used by them in putting the cornice upon his house is not liable, where the same scaffolding is used by painters hired to paint the cornice, for injuries caused to one of the painters by the breaking of the scaffolding. The carpenters and painters are fellow-servants: Hoar v. Merritt, 62 M. 386.

153. Where defendant had given another person full control of erecting a building and of the men employed thereon, he was held liable for an injury to a workman from such person's negligence, even though such person himself worked about the building: Slater v. Chapman, 67 M. 523.

154. A boat's mate and her captain are fellow-servants, and if one is injured through the other's negligence the owner of the boat is not liable: Caniff v. Blanchard Navigation Co., 66 M. 638.

155. Whether one who works at odd jobs around a mill-yard wherein are his employer's saw-mill and salt-block, and who occasionally loads salt on a barge for market, is the fellow-servant of men in the salt-warehouse handling barrels, so as to preclude his recovery for injuries received from a descending elevator through their negligence, querre: Sell v. Rietz Lumber Co., 70 M. 479.

And see RAILROADS, VI, (b).

III. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

(a) In general; what constitutes.

156. Where an injury of which a plaintiff complains is the result of his own negligence or fault, or of the fault of both parties, without intentional wrong on the part of the defendant, no action can be maintained: Williams v. M. C. R. Co., 2 M. 259.

157. In an action to recover for an injury arising from the defendant's negligence in carrying on his lawful business without wanton or intentional wrong, plaintiff cannot recover if his own negligence directly or proximately contributed to produce the injury: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

158. One cannot recover for an injury caused by another's negligence if his own negligence contributed thereto: M. C. R. Co. v. Leahey, 10 M. 193; Le Baron v. Joslin, 41 M. 313, 44 M. 160.

159. One who voluntarily exposes himself to evident risks caused by another's negligence cannot recover against the latter for bodily injuries resulting from such exposure, even though the exposure was for the purpose of saving property or the life of an animal: Cook v. Johnston, 58 M. 437.

160. One cannot recover for injury to his horse and vehicle resulting from defendant's negligence in driving on the wrong side of a highway, if by using ordinary care himself he might have avoided the collision which caused it: Daniels v. Clegg, 28 M. 32.

161. One driving a carriage on a dark night is not guilty of contributory negligence, if, hearing a buggy coming at full speed behind him, he takes the side of the road that belongs to him, though it turns out that if he had remained where he was he would have escaped injury: Flower v. Witkovsky, 69 M. 371 (April 13, '88).

162. Contributory negligence is no defence if defendant's own conduct is wanton, wilful or reckless, and results in the injury complained of: Bouwmeester v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 68 M. 557.

163. Contributory negligence by the owner of cattle is no defence to his action for injuries to them resulting from defendant's neglect to maintain side-fencing as required by statute of railroads: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 M. 510; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cameron, 45 M. 451.

164. In an action for negligent injury negligence by plaintiff which did not contribute to the injury need not be regarded: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

165. Contributory negligence presumes a careless act or omission: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

166. It is not necessarily negligence to take a choice of risks, or to do, without freedom of choice, an act involving danger; but it is negligence to risk life or limb merely to escape inconvenience or mental vexation: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bangs, 47 M. 470.

167. Courts are bound to know that there is a difference between reasonable care and no care at all, or utter negligence, and that if one who has good reason to apprehend danger does not make some use of his faculties to ascertain and avoid it, he does not exercise the ordinary or reasonable care demanded by the circumstances: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

168. But no one is bound to keep a constant lookout against dangers which could not be expected to exist so long as ordinary care is used by those whose action only can cause them: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 M. 667.

169. Contributory negligence in order to constitute a defence must have been negligence contributing to the injury itself for which the action is brought. If it was subsequent negligence, and only contributed to increase the injurious consequences, it goes to the amount of recovery only: Brown v. Marshall, 47 M. 576.

170. Every one may use his own property as he pleases, provided he does not use it to the injury or annoyance of others; and his own neglect of his own property does not excuse another for injuring it, nor constitute contributory negligence: Underwood v. Waldron, 38 M. 232.

170a. Where a duty rests upon parties jointly, and is neglected by both, neither can sue the other for damages resulting from their mutual faults: Ibid.

171. One who invites another to bring upon his premises for use a dangerous implement, knowing it to be such, will take upon himself the consequences which naturally follow: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Spear, 44 M. 169.

172. Contributory negligence cannot be predicated of the erection, in a customary, lawful and proper manner, of buildings constructed of the usual material upon the owner's premises, even though there are establishments in the neighborhood from which there is risk of fire or damage. And the owner of such buildings is not bound to incur the expense of providing his buildings with extra safeguards: Alpern v. Churchill, 53 M. 607.

173. The owner of a steam saw-mill near which another person builds a railroad and runs an engine is not guilty of contributory negligence, though, having knowledge of the dangerous character of the engine in the way of emitting sparks, he allows the combustible offal of the mill to accumulate upon his premises as he did before the railroad was built: Kendrick v. Towle, 60 M. 363.

174. One who is familiar with boats laid up in winter quarters, and with the location and condition of their hatches, is guilty of contributory negligence if he fails to exercise care in avoiding an open hatchway on a boat so laid up: Caniff v. Blanchard Navigation Co., 66 M. 688.

175. One who in broad daylight heedlessly steps under a descending elevator is guilty of contributory negligence: Hutchins v. Priestley E. W. & S. Co., 61 M. 252.

176. A horse, left at a livery-stable over night, got untied and ate from a convenient bag of corn. In the morning his owner did not water him, but drove him eighteen miles in the heat, and the horse became injured. Held, that the stable-keeper could be held responsible in case, only, it was found that he was guilty of negligence, and that the owner of the horse had not contributed to the injury, either in fastening the horse or in improperly driving him: Dennis v. Huyck, 48 M. 620.

177. Sparks from a steam-thresher set fire to some hay stored on the premises. The owner of the hay was plowing in the same field, but had made no protest against the use of the thresher. In an action by him for the negligent destruction of the hay, it was held that in the absence of proof that he had any special knowledge of the risk of using such machinery, or of the skill and competency of those who had charge of it, he was entitled to an instruction that if he did not consent to, or participate in, what was done, he was not guilty of contributory negligence: Moomey v. Peak, 57 M. 259.

178. One cannot recover for an injury done his wagon by collision if his driver's want of ordinary care contributed to produce the collision: Mabley v. Kittieberger, 37 M. 860.

179. It is not necessarily negligence to walk in the travelled part of a city street if it is not shown that it is usually so occupied with teams as to make foot travel imprudent: Cleveland v. Newsom, 45 M. 62.

180. One passing along the sidewalk of a public street has a right to expect some warning before any sudden movement across it of a standing train of cars, and when injured by the sudden backing of one, without warning, across the walk, there would have to be very positive proof of negligence on his part to defeat his right of recovery: McWilliams v. Detroit Central Mills, 31 M. 274.

181. Where it appears that a plaintiff suing for an injury caused by an obstruction of a highway was using the highway on a proper errand at a place where it was habitually used and where an obstruction making it impracticable or reckless to pass would have been unlawful, and where plaintiff's testimony shows ordinary care, there is no such proof of contributory negligence as authorizes the court to take the case from the jury: Laughlin v. Grand Rapids Street R. Co., 62 M. 220.

182. A person who, in the lawful use of a highway, meets with an obstacle or other cause of insufficiency, may yet proceed if it is consistent with reasonable care so to do; and that is generally a question of fact for the jury, depending on the nature of the obstruction or defect, and all the surrounding circumstances: Harris v. Clinton, 64 M. 447.

183. Testimony showing that plaintiff's wife was sick, and that he was consequently anxious to reach home, when it is admitted that he was able to leave home to attend to his ordinary business, cannot be shown to excuse his incurring a risk that he might not otherwise have taken in driving along a dangerous highway: Ibid.

184. A man walking along a country road upon a dark night stepped into a hole, for which he was, however, on the lookout. Held, that his knowledge of the defect did not necessarily establish his negligence, but was only a fact for the jury to consider in deciding whether he was negligent or not: Lowell v. Watertown, 58 M. 568.

185. Where, in an action for a personal injury, the evidence shows that defendant took up a sidewalk and dug a ditch across and left it exposed at night, and that plaintiff stepped off the walk upon the ground and then fell into the ditch, the case should not be taken from the jury on the ground of contributory negligence: Flater v. Fey, 70 M. 644 (June 15, '88).

186. A man was driving a traction-engine across a bridge. The bridge gave way and the driver's foot slipped and caught in the chain so that he was seriously hurt. Held, that in an action for the injury the court should have charged, if there was evidence to support the instruction, that the driver was negligent in having no guard for his foot if he knew of the danger, or in removing it if there had been one: Stebbins v. Keene, 55 M. 552.

187. One who crosses a bridge with an unusually heavy load does so at his own risk: Fulton Iron Works v. Kimball, 52 M. 146.

188. There is contributory negligence in driving across a bridge so recklessly and turning off from it so abruptly as to suffer injury in consequence of catching the wheel in or upon some crack or obstruction not in the travelled part of the way. And it is no excuse that others are similarly careless, especially if one is not familiar with the bridge and cannot therefore rely upon the carelessness of others: Abernethy v. Van Buren, 52 M. 388; Beckwith v. Van Buren, 66 M. 89.

189. Where a horse in a highway was driven loose to a watering place and sustained an injury from a heap of stones left by defendant in the highway near his own fence and eight or ten feet outside of the travelled road, quere—the court being equally divided—whether defendant could be held liable: Bennett v. Hazen, 66 M. 657.

As to contributory negligence of passengers on railroad and street cars, see CARRIERS, §§ 128, 132, 134-150.

As to contributory negligence in actions for injuries against railroads, see RAILROADS, VI, (c), (d); and in actions against municipal corporations for defects in highways, streets or bridges, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 176-219.

190. Where a clandestine intruder upon another's premises is accidentally injured while the lawful possessor is expelling him, his contributory negligence should be considered in fixing responsibility therefor: Taylor v. Adams, 58 M. 187.

(b) In case of employees.

191. A fairly intelligent youth of sixteen had his hand mutilated by the jointer in a planing-mill where for two weeks he had been at work. He had had no previous experience with such machinery, but the dangerous nature of the jointer was manifest to any one who looked at it, and he would not have been hurt if he had not laid his hand, without looking, upon the table in which the jointer operated. Held, that the injury was accidental, and he could not recover for it: Palmer v. Harrison, 57 M. 182.

192. It is not contributory negligence for an employee who is in doubt about the safety of the place where he has to work to defer to the opinions and assurances of those who are supposed to know, and from their position are bound to have special knowledge, as to whether it is safe or not: Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39 M. 492.

193. Where a servant in obeying his master's orders incurs the risk of machinery which it is reasonably probable may be safely used by extraordinary caution and skill, he is not guilty of concurring negligence: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 M. 205.

194. A servant has a right to trust the prudence and caution of his employer, and to rely upon his not putting him in charge of implements which, from improper construction or other cause, are so dangerous that a prudent man would not make use of them: Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. Guildersleeve, 33 M. 133.

195. An employee has a right to assume that it is safe to do what he is hired to do unless his knowledge warns him it is not: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 335.

196. An employee is not bound, before beginning work, to familiarize himself with the condition of all the machinery he may come in contact with. It is enough if he knows his own work and the risks directly connected with it: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

197. An employee who voluntarily remains in service in spite of defects in the machinery used and in the means employed to guard against accident, and without any promise by the employer to correct them, is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for any injury he may suffer in consequence: Ibid.

198. A servant who continues without objection to use machinery which he has found to be unsafe assumes the risk, and cannot recover for injuries which he may receive in consequence of doing so: Richards v. Rough, 53 M. 212.

199. A workman in a grain elevator stayed on the premises during the time allowed him for his dinner. Within that time he was ordered to aid in opening a ventilator, and, by reason of a defect, sustained injury without fault on his part. Held, that his employer was liable: Broderick v. Detroit Union R. R. etc. Co., 56 M. 261.

200. An employee in an iron foundry was injured in consequence of the slipping of a fellow-workman on an icy path, over which they were carrying, under orders to do so, a ladle full of molten iron. Held, that the workmen should have been warned of the dangerous character of the service arising from the contact of water and ice with melted iron, and that without such warning they could not be charged with contributory negligence in not declining the service, or in not removing the ice before going upon it: Smith v. Peninsular Car Works, 60 M. 501.

201. A laborer in a saw-mill who undertakes to saw a piece of scantling by leaning over the saw with one arm stretched across it, so that, if he slips, the destruction of his arm is inevitable, is guilty of contributory negligence: Lindstrand v. Delta Lumber Co., 65 M. 254, 68 M. 261.

202. A direction to a workman employed in loading slabs on a defective dump-car to fix it up as well as he can does not direct him to incur danger in using a circular saw to which he is not accustomed, nor, if it did, would it justify him in so doing, or in being careless in his use of the saw: Ibid.

203. While passing from a pit-mine on an inclined track upon which a "skip-car" used in taking out ore was run, and which track was generally used by the men, it being the most convenient though not the only way of reaching the mine, an employee was struck by the descending car lowered by the foreman's direction without the usual signal or warning. In an action for the injury received, held, that the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was for the jury: Luke v. Wheat Mining Co., 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

204. A workman employed in a saw-mill to carry slabs from the gang-plank, while pulling backwards at one that was too heavy for one man to carry, slipped on some wet bark and fell against certain cog-wheels that caught his pantaloons and injured him. He had not been warned and did not know that the wheels were uncovered. Held, that the question whether he was guilty of contributory negligence ought to have been left to the jury: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

As to when the employee of a railway company will be precluded from recovering for injuries by reason of his knowledge of and failure to object to defects in appliances or method of doing business, see RAILROADS, VI, (a).

(c) Effect of age, sex, etc.

See RAILROADS, §§ 430-434.

205. In judging of negligence all the circumstances are to be taken into the account, and among others the age and sex of the person injured, so far as these are important: Hassenyer v. M. C. R. Co., 48 M. 205.

206. Duty can only be predicated of one who has capacity to understand and perform it; and therefore a child not of an age or discretion to understand the danger in riding upon the front platform of a street-car cannot be charged with negligence in so doing: East Saginaw C. R. Co. v. Bohn, 27 M. 508.

207. The law does not exact of any one judgment or caution not naturally to be expected from persons of his age and capacity: Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 M. 1.

208. Age and sex should be considered in deciding the question of the negligence of one who had not avoided a collision on the highway; if the care is such as would ordinarily be taken by a person of the age and sex of the party concerned there is no negligence: Daniels v. Clegg, 28 M. 32.

209. The caution required of a child riding on a railroad train is according to his maturity and capacity, to be determined by the circumstances in each case; and the degree of discretion in avoiding danger depends upon the child's age and knowledge: Ecliff v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 64 M. 196.

210. The age, intelligence and experience of one who has suffered from an injury are admissible, as they help determine whether he has been guilty of contributory negligence: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

211. The age and intelligence of a laborer injured by machinery, and his experience in the use of such machinery, may be considered by the jury in an action by him for the injury: Huizaga v. Cutler & S. L. Co., 51 M. 273.

212. The age of a person injured in crossing a railway track in a cutter driven by another may properly be considered in an action against the company for the injury, as bearing upon contributory negligence: Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 M. 430.

213. Children must be expected to act upon childish instincts, and those who are answerable for their safety must take precautions accordingly, and must expect them to meddle with anything that is likely to tempt them if left exposed to their view and within their reach: Powers v. Harlow, 53 M. 507.

214. A child of tender years is not expected or required to exercise the same degree of care as an adult, and one cannot be guilty of contributory negligence unless failing to exercise the degree of care that would be reasonably expected of a child of her sex, age and intelligence, under all the surrounding circumstances: Cooper v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 261.

215. When contributory negligence is sought to be attributed to a child the child can only be held to that degree of care which may reasonably be expected from one under the same conditions, of the same age, sex, intelligence and judgment: Baker v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 68 M. 90.

216. It is not a rule of law that a less degree of care in circumstances of danger is required in a woman than in a man; and an instruction to that effect is erroneous. The rule of reasonable care and prudence knows nothing of sex: Hassenyer v. M. C. R. Co., 48 M. 205.

As to contributory negligence of person intoxicated, see CARRIERS, §§ 150, 151.

(d) Evidence; burden of proof; question of fact or law.

217. Contributory negligence cannot be shown by the statement of one who had no personal knowledge of it: Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 M. 501.

218. In an action to recover damages arising from a collision on a highway, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove negligence and misconduct on the other's part, and to show ordinary care and diligence on his own: Daniels v. Clegg, 28 M. 32.

219. In cases of collision of vessels the burden of proof is on plaintiff not only to show negligence on defendant's part, but ordinary care on his own: Drew v. The Chesapeake, 2 D. 33.

220. If plaintiff brings action for a negligent injury, and the action of the two parties must have concurred to produce it, it devolves upon him to show that he was not guilty of negligence; and if he gives no evidence to establish that fact, the court may properly instruct the jury that they should return a verdict for defendant: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 M. 99.

221. In an action for negligent injury plaintiff may show that the person injured had exercised due care, and had not contributed to the injury; this need not be shown by direct evidence, but may be inferred from the circumstances: Billings v. Breinig, 45 M. 65.

222. In an action for a negligent injury the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show that she acted with due care, or that her own negligence did not contribute to the injury, as well as that the company was guilty of such negligence. It was error to charge that "the plaintiff is not bound to prove more than enough to raise a fair presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant, and of resulting injury to herself, and if she does this, she is entitled to recover unless the defendant produce evidence sufficient to rebut the presumption:" L. S. & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

223. The burden of showing that plaintiff in an action for a railway injury was guilty of contributory negligence is upon defendant: Guggenheim v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 150 (June 9, '87).

224. In an action for negligent injury, if the proofs are such that reasonable minds may differ as to the fact of contributory negligence, the case should go to the jury; its absence need not be conclusively shown: Teipel v. Hilsendegen, 44 M. 461.

225. Contributory negligence depends on what the party is bound to expect, and the case should not be taken from the jury when to do so will prevent their giving to either party the benefit of any inference which might be drawn from a comparison of all the facts: Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 240.

226. The fact of contributory negligence is for the jury to determine from all the circumstances, if the facts tending to establish it are disputed, and especially if it appears that the plaintiff had exercised care and would not have been likely to be hurt if defendant had done his duty: Palmer v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 56 M. 1.

227. When the fact of contributory negligence depends on the credibility of witnesses or upon inferences in which intelligent persons may honestly differ, it is a question for the jury: Swoboda v. Ward, 40 M. 420.

228. In an action for injury the neglect of any precaution by plaintiff can only raise a question of contributory negligence for the jury: Lewis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 54 M. 55.

229. Where the whole of the testimony and all legitimate inferences therefrom show that injury arose from want of due care on the part of the injured person, the question of contributory negligence is one of law for the court: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 67 M. 677.

NOTICE.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES NOTICE.

- (a) In general.
- (b) Notice to one person as binding another.
- (c) Notice imparted by possession.
- (d) Notice imparted by recitals in deeds, etc.
- (e) Lis pendens.
- (f) Notice to grantees of a bona fide purchaser.

II. EFFECT OF NOTICE.

III. PURCHASERS WITHOUT NOTICE.

- (a) In general.
- (b) Burden of proof as to notice.

As to the requisites, etc., of notices in particular proceedings, see the appropriate titles; see, also, the Index.

As to who are protected against unrecorded instruments, see RECORDING ACTS, IV.

As to what is sufficient change of possession, in case of chattel mortgage, to constitute notice thereof, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, §§ 59-62.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES NOTICE.

- (a) In general.

As to effect of record as notice, see RECORDING ACTS, III.

1. In equity that is notice of a right which is sufficient to put parties on inquiry: Norris v. Showerman, 2 D. 16.

2. One is chargeable with notice, not only where the evidence raises a presumption that he knew, but where there is just ground for inferring that reasonable diligence would have led him to a discovery of the truth: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 346.

3. A person is chargeable with constructive notice when, having the means of knowledge, he does not use them. If he has knowledge of such facts as would lead any honest man, using ordinary caution, to make further inquiries, and does not make, but studiously avoids making, the obvious inquiries, he must be taken to have notice of those facts which, had he used ordinary diligence, would have been readily ascertained: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109; Hains v. Hains, 69 M. 581 (April 20, '88); Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 437.

4. But if he inquires of the party in interest, he will not be responsible for not pushing his inquiries further, unless the answer he receives corroborates other information, or reveals the existence of other sources of information: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

5. One cannot claim to be ignorant where reason and experience show that knowledge would be a necessary consequence of the facts established: Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Conant, 40 M. 530.

6. The laws of constructive notice can never be so applied as to relieve a party from responsibility for actual misstatements and frauds: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

7. Where one purchases property which was subject to an equity in the seller's hands, it is enough that he have knowledge of such facts and circumstances indicating the equity as would have led a prudent man to inquire in regard to it, and that he omitted to do so: James v. Brown, 11 M. 25.

8. Such notice as men usually act upon in the ordinary affairs of life is all that can be required to charge a subsequent purchaser or encumbrancer. If it is sufficient to direct attention to the prior right and to enable its nature to be ascertained by inquiry, it is enough: Willcox v. Hill, 11 M. 256.

9. One is not bound to investigate mere neighborhood rumors as notice: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 M. 96.

10. Where a person is entitled to notice, and has not stipulated or consented that it may be transmitted by mail, he is not bound by it if so sent until actually received: Burhans v. Corey, 17 M. 282.

11. Third persons are not bound to take notice of arrangements to extend times for payment or to exchange securities, and cannot be presumed to have knowledge thereof: Morgan v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 57 M. 430.

12. A purchaser of premises, a mortgage upon which has been discharged of record, who is informed by the mortgager that such mortgage is still outstanding, and is held by a certain named person, is affected with notice that the discharge was recorded by mistake, and is not protected by an abstract showing the mortgage to have been discharged: Ferguson v. Glassford, 68 M. 36.

13. C. gave a mortgage misdescribing the premises, but in another mortgage, referring to the first, described them differently. A lawyer, familiar with the land and owning a partnership interest in an adjacent lot, after examining these mortgages and noticing the discrepancy, sold his lot to C. and took from him a mortgage covering land that the first one ought to have covered. C. then discovered the mistake in the first mortgage and gave a new one correcting it. Held, that the lawyer had had sufficient notice to put him on inquiry, and could not defend against the foreclosure of the corrected mortgage on the ground of the priority of his own: Michigan Mut. Ins. Co. v. Conant, 40 M. 530.

14. A purchaser as against a previous unrecorded deed is charged with notice not only of all that is definitely communicated to him, but of all that a proper use of that information would have enabled him to ascertain: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 346.

15. Notice of an unrecorded deed can hardly be made out by proof of blind remarks and of ambiguous and misleading hints to a subsequent mortgagee, which he did not understand in the sense which they must bear to put him on inquiry: Shepard v. Shepard, 36 M. 173.

16. Advertising and selling a chattel subject to a mortgage thereon is, to purchasers, such notice of the mortgage as dispenses with filing: Kellogg v. Secord, 42 M. 318.

17. A corporator is not charged with constructive notice of corporate acts and may deal with the corporation as a stranger may, if his personal connection with corporate action is not such as to notify him of reasons to the contrary: Rice v. Peninsular Club, 53 M. 87.

18. One who, before taking a mortgage, learns from the mortgager that a third person claims some interest in the land, takes with constructive notice of all that reasonable inquiry would have disclosed; e. g., as to matters involved in a suit pending between such third party and the mortgager wherein the former claims that the title is his, and that the latter's was, under a patent, procured by fraud from the state; and he can claim no more than his mortgager's rights: Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 437 (April 20, '88).

19. A mortgager gave a warranty deed of the land subject to the mortgage. A woman, acting through her husband, bought it from the mortgager's grantee. The mortgage was foreclosed and the mortgager bid in the land. The woman filed a bill to remove the cloud from her title and to compel the mortgager to convey to her the interest he received by the foreclosure sale. The court found that she was not a bona fide purchaser without notice that the land was sold subject to the mortgage, and held that it would be unjust to compel a conveyance without payment of the mortgage, and dismissed the bill with costs: Berry v. Whitney, 40 M. 65.

20. One dealing in good faith with a person in whom legal title stands has no concern with, and need not inquire into, any parol understanding of which he has no notice, and by which some equitable interest in the land is claimed by another: Hull v. Swarthout, 29 M. 249.

21. In purchasing from a tenant in common, one has a right to suppose the usual relations exist, and is not bound by partnership equities between the tenants affecting the land in their hands: Adams v. Bradley, 12 M. 346.

22. A partnership relation is not notice to a purchaser in good faith that land held by the partners from different grantors and under deeds of different dates is partnership property, even if held in common and used for partnership purposes: Reynolds v. Ruckman, 35 M. 80.

23. A grantee gave back a purchase-money mortgage before delivery of the deed. Afterwards, at the time the deed was actually delivered, this grantee mortgaged the premises to a third party in whose presence the delivery was made, and who had no notice of the former mortgage. Held, that the delivery of the deed in the latter's presence was notice to him that until then the mortgager had no title to encumber to his prejudice. The second mortgage was accordingly given precedence of the first: Heffron v. Flanagan, 37 M. 274.

24. One who purchases premises covered by an undischarged mortgage, the mortgagee being well known and easily accessible to him, and he having knowledge of facts sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry, cannot claim to be a purchaser without notice of the equities of the mortgage simply because the mortgager has possession of, and exhibits to him, the notes described in the mortgage; he stands in no better position than the mortgager himself: Bozheimer v. Gunn, 24 M. 372.

25. A prior mortgagee who merely fails to make inquiry is not chargeable with notice of a subsequent mortgage; he should have actual knowledge: James v. Brown, 11 M. 25.

See MORTGAGES, §§ 463, 464.

26. Filing in the register's office a certified copy of an attachment on lands is not notice to third persons having prior rights: Columbia Bank v. Jacobs, 10 M. 849; Millar v. Babcock, 25 M. 187; French v. De Bow, 38 M. 708.

27. A sheriff's notice of attachment was held ineffectual where by mistake it failed to describe the land attached: Barnard v. Campau, 29 M. 162.

28. Notice of the levy of an attachment on land must be definite and certain to be good as against persons holding in good faith under conveyances subsequent to the institution of suit: Davis Sewing Machine Co. v. Whitney, 61 M. 518.

29. A certificate of levy of execution on "lot seven of lots 12, 13 and 14 of the Labrosse and Baker farms in Detroit" is not sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice that it is intended to cover lot 7 of John Gibson's subdivision of lots 12, 13, 14 and 18 of said farm according to a specified recorded plat: Burrows v. Gibson, 42 M. 121.

30. Where the terms of a contract providing for the sale and disposition of the proceeds of an accompanying mortgage are such that no one in the possession of his senses would be apt to execute said instrument, an assignee having notice of the contract is chargeable with notice of the mortgager's incompetency: Kent v. Mellus, 69 M. 71.

31. Parties claiming through a general assignee are bound, in case of a controversy, to inquire of him for any facts in his knowledge bearing upon it, and failure to do so is gross negligence: Ryerson v. Eldred, 23 M. 537.

32. All persons contracting with a public officer for public work are bound to take notice of the provisions of the statute under which the work is let: Mackenzie v. Baraga Treasurer, 39 M. 554.

33. Notice to one of several trustees, of the revocation of an oral license, is notice to all: Druse v. Wheeler, 26 M. 189.

34. Notice of a prior encumbrance to charge a subsequent encumbrancer or purchaser need not come from a party in interest: Willow v. Hill, 11 M. 256.

35. A legal notice must disclose on its face that it emanates from some person or court claiming to have the power to act in the manner indicated by the notice: Niles v. Ransford, 1 M. 388.

Failure to make further inquiry, held, in a particular case, not to charge mortgagee with notice: CHATTEL MORTGAGES, § 121.

(b) Notice to one person as binding another.

See, also, AGENCY, VII, (c).

36. A notice to an attorney is binding upon his client: Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 M. 561.

37. A mortgagee of land against which at-attachment proceedings have been started is not without notice where his counsel, before advancing the money secured by the mortgage, recognized the attachment as a lien to be got rid of in order to clear the title, and caused money to be tendered for that purpose: Chase v. Welsh, 45 M. 345.

38. An attorney's knowledge of matters not within his employment is not notice to his client: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 M. 96.

39. A client is not chargeable with notice of facts known to his lawyer if the latter did not obtain this knowledge while doing business for him: Warner v. Hall, 58 M. 871.

40. Notice to one's agent or to those who conduct one's business for him is actual notice to him: Baker v. Pierson, 5 M. 456.

41. Notice to a person acting in a very humble or inferior capacity is not notice to his employer: M. C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 M. 510.

42. Notice to the foreman of a mill that sparks from its chimney are endangering adjacent property is, in the owner's absence, equivalent to notice to the owner, and evidence of it is admissible in an action for damages caused by a fire starting in that way, inasmuch as said notice may tend to hold the owner to a somewhat stricter measure of diligence: Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 M. 181.

43. Notice of defects in merchandise may properly be given to the agent or broker through whom the sale has been made: Henkel v. Welsh, 41 M. 664.

44. In the course of a business conducted in a wife's name but wholly by her husband, notice to him is notice to her: Leland v. Collier, 34 M. 419.

45. Where an interpreter is employed in negotiating a sale, the party furnishing such interpreter is bound by the statements made to him, and it need not be shown that such statements were communicated by the interpreter to such party: Highstone v. Burdette, 61 M. 54.

46. Where one of several joint vendors is manager of the business and makes all the bargains, he must be presumed to act for all where there is a joint interest and joint duty; and notice to him in proceedings arising out of a breach of warranty caused by the existence of a lien upon the property sold is notice to the rest, unless in cases where the original lien has been extinguished and the existing lien springs from a contract with the buyer: De Witt v. Prescott, 51 M. 298.

47. Whatever is done by one member of a partnership in the course of the business is presumed to be known to the others: Osborn v. Osborn, 36 M. 48.

48. A firm must be presumed to have had notice of everything of which any partner had notice: Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Bates, 31 M. 158; Howland v. Davis, 40 M. 545.

As to when insurer or insured is bound by notice to or knowledge of insurance agent, see INSURANCE, §§ 350-352, 355, 358.

(c) Notice imparted by possession.

49. Where a party purchases land in the possession of a third person, with a knowledge of that fact, he takes it subject to all equities existing between his vendor and the person in possession: Rood v. Chapin, W. 79; Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260; Norris v. Showerman, 2 D. 16; Woodward v. Clark, 15 M. 104.

50. One who purchases lands in the actual possession of third parties with full knowledge of the possession held and the rights claimed by such parties is in no better position to assert equities against them than his grantor: Dunks v. Fuller, 32 M. 242.

51. The purchaser or mortgagee of land that is occupied by some one else than the grantor or mortgager is bound to inquire of the occupant as to the latter's rights, and if he does not is chargeable with notice of them: McKee v. Wilcox, 11 M. 353; Allen v. Cadwell, 55 M. 8.

52. Actual possession of lands is notice of the title of the party in possession, whatever it may be, and not merely of that which the registry may happen to disclose: Russell v. Sweezey, 22 M. 285.

53. Possession of land is notice to a purchaser that the holder has an interest in it even though no deed to him is recorded: Hommel v. Devinney, 39 M. 523.

54. Actual possession of real estate is notice, to purchasers or encumbrancers, of the rights of those in possession. It was therefore held in the case of a wife living with her husband on land which they had occupied under a certificate of purchase from the state, but which certificate the husband had assigned without her concurrence to another person who obtained a patent to the land and mortgaged it, that the mortgagee was chargeable with notice of the wife's homestead rights, and could not be regarded as a bona fide purchaser: Allen v. Cadwell, 55 M. 8.

55. Immediate possession and constant occupancy by one who holds under a land contract operate as full notice of his rights under the contract, so far, at least, as concerns enclosed premises: Seager v. Cooley, 44 M. 14.

56. Occupancy of land, when the occupant has a recorded deed to an undivided interest in it and a contract right to the remaining interest, is such notice of the occupant's rights as will protect the land from the lien of a mortgage of later date than the deeds, except to the extent of the interest remaining in the mortgager: Weisberger v. Wisner, 55 M. 246.

57. Where a son took possession of, and continued to occupy, land which his father agreed that he should have by way of advancement from his estate, such possession and occupation were notice to the world of his interest in the property: Michie v. Ellair, 54 M. 518.

58. The possession of a tenant is notice to a purchaser of the actual interest the tenant may have in the premises: Disbrow v. Jones, H. 48.

59. The continued occupation, cultivation and improvement by a husband of homestead premises after his wife has left him and while she is living apart from him, constitute notice of his claim of ownership to one who acquires title from the wife, although a deed from the husband mediately to the wife is on record: Stevens v. Castel, 68 M. 111.

60. The fact that for thirty years a third person has been improving another's land, paying taxes, etc., is enough to put a purchaser on inquiry as to his rights: Twiss v. George, 83 M. 253.

61. A purchaser of a portion of some mortgaged premises situated on one of the principal streets of the village where the mortgagee resided, promptly recorded the deed and went into actual possession, improving the premises and living on them. Held, that the mortgagee's knowledge of this was enough to put him on inquiry before releasing other parts of the premises from the mortgage lien: Devey v. Ingersoll, 42 M. 17.

62. Occupancy of premises by a railroad in course of construction is constructive notice of the company's rights therein: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Brown, 87 M. 533.

63. Possession of land by a grantor is no notice of any rights or equities in him to one who acquires an interest in the land on the faith of his recorded conveyance: Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 M. 395.

64. Mere possession after deeding land is not of necessity notice that the grantor still has rights or equities in the premises inconsistent with those conveyed: Abbott v. Gregory, 39 M. 68.

65. One remaining in possession of lands which he has conveyed by mortgage will be presumed to hold subject to the title so created; and after foreclosure of the mortgage his continued possession will not be notice of any other interest or title he may have acquired but which does not appear of record in him: Dawson v. Danbury Bank, 15 M. 489.

66. Where the evidence shows that the grantor in an unrecorded deed held possession of the realty thereafter as the grantee's agent, such possession is notice of the grantee's title of which a sheriff who levies on the land as belonging to the grantor is bound to take notice: Blish v. Collins, 68 M. 542.

67. The possession and use of land by a firm is not notice to purchasers that the land is partnership assets where the record title shows that the partners are tenants in common owning undivided half interests therein. It is consistent with individual ownership as tenants in common, and will not even put purchasers upon inquiry: Hammond v. Paxton, 58 M. 394.

68. Where one who has leased land to a firm buys out the right of one of the partners and afterwards gives a mortgage on the premises, the possession of the new firm is notice to the mortgagee that erections put up by the former firm are not covered by the mortgage, because the other partner's rights cannot be taken away: Kerr v. Kingsbury, 39 M. 150.

69. Possession alone is not such actual notice, as, under R. S. 1888, p. 260, § 25, would protect the title of one claiming and occupying under an unrecorded deed, against one who subsequently took a mortgage from the grantor without being aware of such possession: Hubbard v. Smith, 2 M. 207.

70. Possession and occupancy of land by a grantee is not sufficient notice to subsequent purchasers to answer the purpose of recording the deed, if it is not open, manifest, unequivocal and apparently by virtue of the unrecorded conveyance. So held where the grantee was the grantor's husband and continued to live on the premises with her: Atwood v. Bearss, 47 M. 72.

71. A purchaser from a party in possession of mortgaged premises is bound by a pending foreclosure suit, if he has notice thereof, to the same extent to which the party is bound: Baker v. Pierson, 5 M. 456.

72. An immediate and continuous change of possession of chattels into the hands of a mortgagee is the best possible notice of his rights as against all others: Pursell v. Thayer, 39 M. 467.

73. A second mortgagee of personalty in possession of a prior one takes with notice of all the latter's rights: Grimes v. Rose, 24 M. 416.

(d) Notice imparted by recitals in deeds, etc.

74. Where a second mortgage states that it is given subject to an earlier one, filing is unnecessary to maintain the priority: Flory v. Comstock, 61 M. 522.

75. Where a mortgagee in good faith brought a bill for the correction of the description in the original deed of the premises to his mortgager, it was held that it did not lie with the original grantor or his heirs, or purchasers from them without consideration, to say that inasmuch as a careful inspection of the record would have disclosed the mistake, the mortgagee did not take his mortgage in good faith. The record could be no better notice to him than the deed itself was to the grantor or grantee, or than the record was to the heirs: Cummings v. Freer, 26 M. 128.

76. A. sold land to B., and B. sold it to C., but the former deed was not recorded, and A. sold it again to D., who appears to have had notice of the other conveyances. S., hearing that the land had been abandoned, got an abstract of title which showed the conveyance to C. He immediately took a quitclaim from D., leased the land, and filed a bill to remove the cloud on his title. Held, that he had sufficient notice to put him on inquiry, was therefore not a bona fide purchaser, and could not maintain his bill: Stetson v. Cook, 39 M. 750.

77. One who takes up a mortgage that refers to another has constructive notice of the latter: Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 M. 81.

78. One who purchases property without looking into the title deed of his grantor is chargeable with notice of any defect in the title appearing on the face of such deed: Wilson v. Arnold, 5 M. 98.

79. A grantee or mortgagee is chargeable with notice of whatever appears in the chain of title through which he claims: Mason v. Payne, W. 459; Fitzhugh v. Barnard, 12 M. 104; King v. Potter, 18 M. 184; Case v. Erwin, 18 M. 434; Browning v. Howard, 19 M. 323; Baker v. Mather, 25 M. 51; Dwight v. Tyler, 49 M. 614; Wait v. Baldwin, 60 M. 622; Plumer v. Johnston, 63 M. 165; McKay v. Williams, 67 M. 547.

80. And with the reasonable inferences therefrom: Fitzhugh v. Barnard, 12 M. 104.

81. A deed conveyed land to three partners in the proportion of an undivided half to one and an undivided fourth to each of the others, and added, "this being the proportional undivided interest of each of the above partners in the lumber firm and lands of Milo A. Skinner & Co." The first-named grantee mortgaged his undivided half. Held, that the deed did not necessarily import notice of the rights and interests of others in the portion mortgaged: Van Slyck v. Skinner, 41 M. 186.

82. A second mortgagee takes subject to a prior unrecorded mortgage expressly referred to in the deed to his mortgager and excepted therefrom: Baker v. Mather, 25 M. 51.

83. A mortgage was given in 1832, and was foreclosed in 1835, and the premises conveyed to the mortgagees; but the deed was not recorded in the proper county. The mortgagees soon after transferred the land by deed, which was duly recorded. In 1856 the mortgager made a deed of the same premises, subject to the mortgage, describing it as given "in 1830 or 1831." Held, that this was sufficient notice to the grantee, not only of the mortgage, but that it was still unpaid; and after the lapse of twenty-four years he had every reason to believe it had been foreclosed. The grantee, therefore, could not, in good faith, claim anything in opposition to the mortgage and the rights which had accrued under it: Fitzhugh v. Barnard, 12 M. 104.

84. Where a purchaser cannot make out a title but by a deed which leads him to another fact, he is presumed to have knowledge of that fact: Norris v. Hill, 1 M. 202.

85. Notice of a part of an agreement under which a lessee holds and occupies must be deemed notice of the whole of it to his assignee: Norris v. Showerman, 2 D. 16.

(e) Lis pendens.

86. Lis pendens may be filed as soon as the bill is filed in the suit: Gordon v. Tyler, 53 M. 629.

87. A lis pendens need not be filed to bind one who has actual notice. It is required, in the absence of actual notice, to charge a party with constructive notice: Baker v. Pierson, 5 M. 456.

88. The purpose of a notice lis pendens is to prevent defendant from so alienating the property in dispute as to affect complainant's rights and to bind it wherever it may be when decree is entered: Hammond v. Paxton, 53 M. 398.

89. The object of the notice lis pendens in chancery proceedings against real estate is to enable persons interested to ascertain from it the persons and property affected by the bill, together with the general nature of the matters in controversy. But they are left to examine the court record for details and particulars, and are bound by what appears in the bill and proceedings thereon: Alterauge v. Christiansen, 48 M. 60.

90. A notice of lis pendens for partition sufficiently states its object if it states that it is "for the purpose of partitioning and setting apart, either by division or by sale, and a division of the proceeds among the complainant and defendants, of the hereinafter described lands and premises according to their respective titles and interests therein; the complainant's interest being now claimed as an undivided fifth part thereof:" Ibid.

91. The operation of a lis pendens as notice lasts, if the suit is not abandoned, until it is closed by final decree, provided it is prosecuted with reasonable diligence and in good faith; otherwise a purchaser who has no actual notice is not affected by it: Hammond v. Paxton, 58 M. 393.

92. A notice lis pendens is ineffective as against a mortgagee whose mortgage antedated the notice though it was not recorded until after the notice was filed: Ibid.

93. A notice lis pendens affects those only who afterwards and pending suit seek to obtain interests, as purchasers or encumbrancers, in the property it refers to; and one who has begun suit to establish an equitable lien thereon upon the basis of previous dealings with defendant does not himself become thereby a purchaser or encumbrancer within the protection of the recording laws as against any rights acquired before the notice is filed: Ibid.

94. A suit and cross-suit constitute one cause, and notice of the suit is notice of the cross-bill also. So held in the case of a lis pendens filed in an original foreclosure suit, but not in a cross-suit for foreclosure; it was constructive notice to all the defendants: Hall Lumber Co. v. Gustin, 54 M. 624.

95. Filing a notice lis pendens in a suit to correct a deed is notice to the world that defendant is liable to be divested of any title claimed by him; and any subsequent purchaser of a mortgage given by defendant takes it with constructive notice of that fact, even though he never knew of the lis pendens or though it had without his fault been lost from the files and not been entered on the file-book: Heim v. Ellis, 49 M. 241.

96. A suit is abandoned if before its completion another seeking the same relief is instituted and carried to decree in its place; and the effect of a lis pendens filed on the institution of the first suit is not transferred to the other: Hammond v. Paxton, 58 M. 394.

97. Where the notice of pendency of an attachment suit, in addition to what was required by statute, erroneously stated that the writ was returnable in November next, instead of November instant, it was held that the mistake did not vitiate the proceedings: Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 93.

98. The chief purpose of the notice lis pendens required by statute in mechanics' lien cases is to bind subsequent interests, and such notice seems unnecessary as against the original parties to the bill: Sheridan v. Cameron, 65 M. 680.

(f) Notice to the grantees of a bona fide purchaser.

99. Although a party may not himself be a bona fide purchaser without notice, yet if his grantor was such a purchaser, the former is entitled to all his rights, and to the protection which the law would give him: Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 260.

100. A defendant's title, resting on priority of record of a second deed, will prevail against that of a plaintiff who claims through a prior unrecorded deed from the same original grantor, if any one of the subsequent mesne purchasers through whom such defendant derives title purchased in good faith and for a valuable consideration, without notice of said prior unrecorded deed (H. S. § 5683): Shotwell v. Harrison, 23 M. 410.

II. EFFECT OF NOTICE.

As to effect of recording as notice, see RECORDING ACTS, III.

Effect of notice on subsequent mortgagee's part as dispensing with reffiling, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, § 111.

101. Notice of a prior mortgage puts a subsequent purchaser upon inquiry as to its extent, and he takes subject to its amount: Doyle v. Stevens, 4 M. 87.

102. Whether an unrecorded deed would be void where the subsequent deed was a mere quitclaim of such interest as remained in the grantor, and followed sundry mesne conveyances to persons who were affected by notice of the first grantee's equities, quere. A judgment in ejectment to the contrary was left undisturbed by a divided court: De Veaux v. Foubender, 57 M. 579.

103. A person cannot be an innocent purchaser of land which his grantor informs him has already been conveyed by him to another person: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 346.

104. A subsequent purchaser who has notice, actual or legal, of a prior conveyance, is not protected, unless the grantee in such conveyance, or person to be benefited by the charge, was a particeps criminis in the fraud: Fox v. Willis, 1 M. 321.

105. One who takes a deed from heirs of a deceased person with notice of a claim under a prior unrecorded deed from the ancestor of his grantors to another, cannot, by having his deed recorded first, acquire any priority over those claiming under the earlier deed; his failure to find the prior deed disclosed in the registry would give him no right to suppose the claim of which he had notice to be unfounded: Munroe v. Eastman, 31 M. 283.

106. If one who has contracted to sell land conveys to a third person, such person, if aware of the contract, takes the property subject to the same equities to which it was subject in the grantor's hands: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

107. A bill in equity to establish rights in land should be dismissed as to a bona fide purchaser of a portion of it who had no notice of complainant's equities; but if his grantor is charged with notice, the land retained by such grantor may properly be charged with the whole amount of complainant's lien: Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 M. 252.

108. A sale of standing timber being one of an interest in real estate, a subsequent purchaser by warranty deed of the land with notice thereof cannot sue the vendee of timber for removing it: Russell v. Myers, 32 M. 522.

109. Notice by the grantee of land to his grantor to remove timber which the grantee knows has been previously sold to another, is not binding on the purchaser of the timber: Wood v. Elliott, 51 M. 320.

III. PURCHASERS WITHOUT NOTICE.

(a) In general.

110. One who buys property knowing that the vendor holds it in trust for the purpose of raising money on it for the true owner's use, and who gives in consideration for it a note by the true owner and his own due-bill, is not a bona fide purchaser without notice: Storrs v. Wallace, 61 M. 437.

111. One who takes by quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser: Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578; Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 494.

112. Purchasers at public judicial sales or under a quitclaim deed usually buy at their own risk of the regularity of title: McGoren v. Avery, 37 M. 120.

113. Innocent purchasers under a forged deed are in no better position as to title than if they had purchased with notice: Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 M. 1.

114. Good faith does not give one who holds under a forged deed or mortgage any rights against the person whose name has been forged, or his heirs: Austin v. Dean, 40 M. 386; Camp v. Carpenter, 52 M. 375; McGinn v. Tobey, 62 M. 252.

115. One who purchases from one who holds by a record title that is bad on its face for fraud cannot claim to be a bona fide purchaser without notice of the invalidity of his grantor's title: McKay v. Williams, 67 M. 574 (Nov. 10, '87).

116. Where purchasers of land, the record title of which is free from any indication of a valid outstanding claim in any one, hold a good legal title combined with the full equities of bona fide purchasers without notice, they cannot be disturbed in their right without superior equities, and there are no equities superior to those of such purchasers: Loomis v. Brush, 36 M. 40.

117. Pending a chancery suit in which no lis pendens had been filed, affecting lands to which the defendant had the complete legal title of record, such defendant executed a mortgage to a third person to secure a bona fide debt, and then made a settlement of the suit. Held, that the mortgagee had a right to rely upon the record title, and was not bound by the settlement: Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 416.

That an assignee for creditors is not a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, see ASSIGNMENT, § 189.

As to who are to be deemed subsequent purchasers without notice and for valuable consideration so as to be protected against unrecorded instruments, see RECORDING ACTS, IV.

(b) Burden of proof as to notice.

118. The burden of proving notice, either actual or constructive, is on the party alleging it: Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 M. 96.

119. Purchasers of land which has been fraudulently transferred to their grantor must establish the good faith of their purchase, and it cannot be presumed: Letson v. Reed, 45 M. 27.

120. Notice to a purchaser from an agent to sell lands, of the agent's fraud in obtaining a deed to himself from his principal, cannot be presumed without proof: Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 M. 433.

121. Under the recording law of June 9, 1819, it was necessary for a party who would avoid the effect of a subsequent conveyance first recorded to show that the grantee in such conveyance had notice of the prior conveyance when he took his deed, or that he had not paid a valuable consideration: Godfroy v. Disbrow, W. 280.

122. The good faith of a purchase of land need only be shown by the purchaser by proof of the record, on which he had a right to rely if he had no notice of the prior deed from any other source: Shotwell v. Harrison, 23 M. 410.

123. Notice on purchaser's part of a prior unrecorded deed is an affirmative fact to be proved by the party claiming under such deed: Ibid.

124. In a suit to correct and foreclose a mortgage, the burden of proof is on complainant to show that a subsequent purchaser had notice of complainant's unrecorded lien: Hanold v. Kays, 64 M. 439.

125. Where an execution purchaser of land has recorded the certificate of sale in advance of any conveyance from the debtor to other persons, he is presumed, until the contrary appears, to be entitled to recover in an action of ejectment against the latter, who have the burden of proving themselves to be or to derive title from bona fide purchasers: Atwood v. Bearss, 45 M. 469.

Further as to burden of proof where a party claims to be a bona fide purchaser without notice and for a valuable consideration, see RECORDING ACTS, IV, (b), (c).

NUISANCE.

I. IN GENERAL; WHAT CONSTITUTES.

- (a) Public nuisances.
- (b) Private nuisances.

II. ABATEMENT.

- (a) In general.
- (b) By injunction.

III. ACTIONS FOR NUISANCE.

I. IN GENERAL; WHAT CONSTITUTES.

(a) Public nuisances.

1. Nothing can be a nuisance which the sovereign authority allows, especially when the allowance is on public grounds, and made to facilitate the use of that which is common to all: Attorney-General v. Evart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

2. That which is permitted by competent authority is not a nuisance: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 M. 62.

3. What the state authorizes it cannot prosecute as a nuisance: Chope v. Detroit & H. P. R. Co., 37 M. 195.

4. Permission from a municipal council to make a basement staircase opening in a sidewalk would of itself rebut any presumption that such an opening was a nuisance: Everett v. Marquette, 53 M. 450.

5. A public nuisance must be something that subjects the public to inconvenience or annoyance: People v. Carpenter, 1 M. 278; Clark v. Lake St. Clair Ice Co., 24 M. 508; Attorney-General v. Evart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

6. Processions in city streets for political, religious, social or other demonstrations, by day or reasonable hours at night, are not necessarily nuisances, and regulation, not prohibition, unless under clear authority of the charter, is the extent of a city's power: Frazee's Case, 63 M. 396.

7. An unauthorized obstruction across a public street is a public nuisance: Pontiac & L. P. R. Co. v. Hilton, 69 M. 115.

8. The obstruction of a mere cul de sac in the interior of a city block which led into alleys that extended to public streets was held not to be a public wrong such as might be redressed by public prosecution: People v. Jackson, 7 M. 432; Tillman v. People, 12 M. 401.

9. Every encroachment on a way is not necessarily a nuisance: People v. Carpenter, 1 M. 278; Clark v. Lake St. Clair, etc. Ice Co., 24 M. 508.

10. A purpresture — whereby is meant an enclosure by a private person of a part of that which belongs to the public and which ought to be open and free to the enjoyment of the public — is not necessarily a public nuisance, for it may exist without inconveniencing the public: Attorney-General v. Evart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

11. A flight of stairs, fifteen feet high and three feet eight inches wide, was erected within the limits of Woodward avenue, in the city of Detroit, leading from the ground to the second story of a building standing on the line of the street adjacent to the stairs. Held, that though this was an obstruction not authorized by the acts of the governor and judges, or by the ordinances of the city, yet whether it was an annoyance to the public so as to constitute a nuisance was for the jury to decide: People v. Carpenter, 1 M. 278.

12. The extension of city boundaries to take in toll-gates does not make them a public nuisance: Chope v. Detroit & H. P. R. Co., 37 M. 195.

13. A roof built twelve or fifteen feet above an alley is not necessarily an obstruction, nor is anything that does not interfere with its accustomed use: Beecher v. People, 38 M. 289.

14. A platform built in a public alley at the rear of a store for convenience in transferring goods is not necessarily a nuisance: Bagley v. People, 48 M. 855.

15. A wooden awning over a sidewalk in front of a store is not per se a public nuisance: Hawkins v. Sanders, 45 M. 491.

16. Nor is a tree in the highway: Clark v. Dasso, 84 M. 86.

17. Steam-engines as a means of locomotion in public highways are not necessarily a nuisance: Macomber v. Nichols, 34 M. 212.

18. A bridge over a navigable stream is not necessarily a nuisance; it may or may not be such according to circumstances; and the vessel-owner who brings suit for an injury occasioned by it must show the circumstances that make the injury fairly chargeable to some one as a wrong: Ibid.

19. Coasting on a public street is not necessarily a nuisance, and the licensing of such a use of a city street is within the discretion of the common council, which discretion the courts will not review: Burford v. Grand Rapids, 53 M. 98.

20. Where one creates in a public street obstructions which in the first instance are lawfully there, but which he is bound to remove as speedily as possible, they become unlawful from the beginning if he does not remove them in a reasonable time; and what is such time is for the court to determine where the facts do not conflict or are conceded: Bowen v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 M. 496.

21. Excavations, properly and safely constructed under the public streets in cities for the convenience of the owners of the premises adjoining are not unlawful; and they are not liable to be treated as nuisances if kept in repair, and the use of the street is not interrupted for an unreasonable length of time: Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 M. 1.

22. A person lawfully using a water-course cannot be guilty of a public nuisance, unless that nuisance is the consequence of his own conduct; and a mere change in the mode of enjoyment, which involves no increase of evil, cannot be injurious. So, a mill-dam is not a nuisance where the stream without it would produce the same extent and kind of mischief: Beach v. People, 11 M. 106.

23. Polluting the waters of an ancient stream, thus rendering them unfit to drink, is not a public nuisance unless the stream is one where the public has rights: Messersmidt v. People, 46 M. 437.

24. The erection of a wooden building within the limits of a city or village is not per se a nuisance, even though prohibited by ordinance: St. Johns v. McFarlan, 33 M. 72.

25. A house of ill-fame is a public nuisance, and, therefore, indictable: Welch v. Stowell, 2 D. 332; Slaughter v. People, 2 D. 334.

26. Declaring a thing to be a nuisance does not make it such, if not such in fact; and an officer removing as such that which is innocent cannot be justified: Horn v. People, 26 M. 221.

27. The question of nuisance or no nuisance is one depending on the particular facts: People v. Carpenter, 1 M. 273; Crippen v. People, 8 M. 117; Clark v. Lake St. Clair, etc. Ice Co., 24 M. 508; The City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 M. 479.

(b) Private nuisances.

28. The erection and use by defendant of a high platform on his own premises overlooking another's base ball ground to which an admission fee is charged will not be restrained as a nuisance: Detroit Base Ball Club v. Depert, 61 M. 68.

29. Courts cannot limit the distance up or down to which a man may enjoy his property, and if one builds higher than his neighbor he subjects himself to no liability unless he interferes with the rights of others: Ibid.

30. Whether a fence erected maliciously and with the sole purpose of shutting out the light and air from a neighbor's windows can be enjoined as a nuisance, quere; the court being equally divided: Burke v. Smith, 69 M. — (April 20, '88).

31. One who has taken up his residence in a portion of the city mainly appropriated to business purposes cannot complain of the establishment, or obtain an injunction to restrain the carrying on of any new business near him, provided it is not in itself objectionable as compared with those already established, and is carried on in a proper manner: Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 M. 448.

32. The business of forging was conducted on a large scale in cheap wooden buildings in the neighborhood of costly residences. The residents were injured in their persons and property by the smoke and soot from the forge; their houses were jarred by the concussion of the heavy steam-hammers, which disturbed the peace and affected the health of the neighborhood, and in some instances damaged the foundations of the houses. Held to be a clear case for relief by injunction against a nuisance: Robinson v. Baugh, 31 M. 290.

33. However lawful a business may be in itself and however suitable the location, it cannot be carried on so as to directly damage the property of others, in the absence, at least, of anything conferring any prescriptive right; yet a resident of a trading or manufacturing neighborhood must submit to such ordinary personal annoyances and discomforts as are fairly incidental to legitimate trading and manufacturing carried on in a reasonable way: Ibid.

34. Where a nuisance is caused by the mode of conducting a business, it is no defence to a bill filed to enjoin it that some of the complainants have establishments in the same vicinity to which similar objections lie: Ibid.

35. Complainants in a bill to enjoin a nuisance caused by one's mode of carrying on the forging business were held not estopped by acquiescence where the grievance complained of existed only about two years, and that which gave greatest offence only about one year, before the bill was filed, and complaints of the injurious character of the business were made to the common council some months previously, and to the defendant himself at an early day: Ibid.

36. The location of a burying ground by a township board of health in the neighborhood of complainant's well held not to be a private nuisance: Upjohn v. Richland Board of Health, 46 M. 542.

37. It is an irreparable injury to create intolerable smells near the homestead of a neighbor, or undermine his house by excavations, or cut him off from the street by buildings or ditches, or otherwise destroy the comfortable, peaceful and quiet occupation of his homestead; also to break up his business, destroy its good-will, and inflict damages that cannot be measured because the elements of reasonable certainty are wanting in computing them. A nuisance may threaten irreparable injury even to unoccupied land where it is devoted to some special use or where the person causing the nuisance is irresponsible: Edwards v. Allouez Mining Co., 38 M. 46.

38. A dam which overflows land and injures water privileges is a nuisance which the owner of the overflowed land and of the water privileges has a right to abate by tearing it down: Winchell v. Clark, 68 M. 64.

II. ABATEMENT.

(a) In general.

39. A public nuisance cannot be lawfully abated by a private person not directly injured or individually annoyed by it, and if in a public highway he can only interfere with it as far as is necessary to exercise his right of passing along the highway, and then without wanton violence: Clark v. Lake St. Clair, etc. Ice Co., 24 M. 508.

40. An unauthorized obstruction across a public street may be abated by any citizen desiring to travel along the street if he can do so without a breach of the peace: Pontiac & L. P. R. Co. v. Hilton, 69 M. 115.

41. A city council authorized to compel the owners and occupants of slaughter-houses, etc., to cleanse and abate whenever necessary for the health, etc., of the inhabitants of the city, can exercise such power only in abating legal nuisances, and cannot interfere with what is not a nuisance in fact: Wreford v. People, 14 M. 41.

42. Where the charter only allows the city council to prevent future erections and locations of such establishments as slaughter-houses, the council has no right to put an end to any existing business of the kind, so long as it is not a nuisance in fact: Ibid. See supra, § 6.

43. The power to abate a nuisance is limited to the removal of that in which the nuisance consists: Welch v. Stowell, 2 D. 332.

44. Neither individuals nor the common council of a city have a right to abate the nuisance occasioned by the occupation of a building as a house of ill-fame, by demolishing the building. The nuisance is not the building itself but the use to which it is put: Ibid.

45. Where the alleged nuisance arises from the use of things innocent in themselves, the case does not call for their destruction in order to effect an abatement: Messersmidt v. People, 46 M. 487.

46. The court on an indictment and conviction for a public nuisance is not obliged to order a removal of the nuisance: Crippen v. People, 8 M. 117.

47. Property can be destroyed for the abatement of a nuisance — as here, a mill-dam — only so far as is determined to be necessary therefor. And the fact that property is decreed to be a nuisance does not oblige the court to order its destruction: Shepard v. People, 40 M. 487.

48. Before any judgment of abatement is given there should be a finding of a present state of things, showing not only the appropriateness but the necessity of such a judgment: Messersmidt v. People, 46 M. 487.

(b) By injunction.

49. The statutory provision (H. S. § 7965) as to the jurisdiction of chancery in cases of nuisance was not intended to extend or enlarge that jurisdiction: Norris v. Hill, 1 M. 202.

50. Nuisances may be stayed or prevented by injunction, and the complainant will not be first required to establish his right at law, unless doubtful and in dispute: White v. Forbes, W. 112.

51. In cases of nuisance, H. S. § 7965 confers jurisdiction in equity where there is not a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law, and gives power to grant injunctions to stay or prevent the nuisance, but it is not essential that a trial at law should precede the filing of the injunction bill. If the court of equity deems a finding by jury needful, it may, in its discretion, direct one, but it is not bound to do so: Robinson v. Baugh, 31 M. 290.

52. A bill in equity will lie against complainant's neighbor for building and maintaining a cornice that projects over complainant's boundary line to the permanent injury and depreciation of his property. And this is so though a remedy be given by statute for the abatement of a private nuisance where the party complaining thereof has recovered therefor in an action on the case: Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 M. 482.

53. A bill in equity was filed to compel the removal of an unsightly cornice which defendant had built upon his house so as to project into plaintiff's lot. At the time defendant bought his lot plaintiff's fence was on the line asserted by the bill, and it was pointed out to defendant as the line claimed to be the true boundary. Held, that the bill would lie: Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 66 M. 331.

54. Ownership of a homestead locally affected by a nuisance injurious to health is such a special interest as will give one a right to complain of the nuisance as a special grievance to him, and to obtain equitable interference: Treat v. Bates, 27 M. 390.

55. The allegation in a bill to abate the private nuisance of an encroachment on complainant's premises, that defendant has claimed ownership of a strip thereof, is not such a statement of a dispute about a boundary as would deprive the court of jurisdiction, if the bill states with certainty the actual boundary and complainant's ownership on one side: Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 M. 482.

56. A suit was brought in equity to enjoin, as a nuisance dangerous to health, a dam that had existed for forty years on property of defendant, who also owned the land covered by the mill-pond. There was no showing how long the complainants had held the lands claimed to be affected, except the allegation that they had held the same for several years prior to the filing of the bill. Held, that as complainants had probably bought when the dam was in existence, and knowing its features and influences, they were not entitled to the same equitable considerations that would prevail had defendant created the alleged nuisance after they had acquired and settled upon their respective premises, and that they should seek their remedy at law where defendant could have a jury trial: Ronayne v. Loranger, 66 M. 373.

57. The attorney-general has no authority, unless in extraordinary cases, to proceed at his own instance, as relator for the state, to sue a private person by information in chancery to abate a mill-dam on the ground of its being hurtful to health; such a case should be prosecuted, if at all, by the public, and submitted to a jury: Attorney-General v. Hane, 50 M. 447.

58. Nor can the attorney-general proceed by information in equity to restrain and abate the appropriation by a booming company of part of the bed of a small stream not navigable except for floating logs; such an appropriation is neither a purpresture nor a public nuisance: Attorney-General v. Ewart Booming Co., 34 M. 462.

59. The fact that similar nuisances are maintained in the same vicinity by others who have not been prosecuted is no reason for declining to stop one maintained by defendant; nuisances separately maintained must be proceeded against separately, and it is of no legal moment which is taken first, or that the prosecution is carried on against only one at a time: Robinson v. Baugh, 31 M. 290.

60. A perpetual injunction was granted to prevent the erection of a dam which would have flooded the lands of complainant, on the grounds of injury to the property and the probability that disease would be generated by the overflowing of the water: White v. Forbes, W. 112.

61. Where the partial abatement of a dam would prevent the overflow of the land of one who complained of it as a nuisance, but its entire abatement was necessary to abate a public nuisance affecting his homestead, a decree for such complete abatement was affirmed: Treat v. Bates, 27 M. 390.

62. A wooden building encroached six inches on a private alley for more than twenty years. The owner attempted to veneer it with brick, whereby it would encroach three inches more. It did not appear that the encroachment would materially injure the right of way. Held, that the adjacent owner was not entitled to remedy by injunction: Hall v. Rood, 40 M. 46.

63. Equity will not require the walls of a building to be torn down because of an encroachment of four and a half inches upon the street; relief must not be disproportionate to the injury: Big Rapids v. Comstock, 65 M. 78.

III. ACTIONS FOR NUISANCE.

64. Any one who upholds and sustains a private nuisance, to another's injury, is answerable for the injury done: Caldwell v. Gale, 11 M. 77.

65. One is not liable for an injury occasioned by a nuisance on premises in his possession, unless his possession gives him the legal control of the premises: Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 M. 1.

As to whether landlord or tenant is liable for nuisance, see LANDLORD AND TENANT, §§ 73-76.

66. A city is not liable for a nuisance brought within a street by widening it: McCutcheon v. Homer, 43 M. 483.

67. An individual can sue for the special injury resulting to himself from defendant's neglect to perform a public duty; so held of an action against a railway company for the personal damage caused by leaving its cars standing across a highway for a longer time than is allowed by statute: Patterson v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 56 M. 172.

68. One cannot sue another for damages from a nuisance which both have united in committing: McGinnis v. Carrier, 39 M. 111.

That one cannot recover for a nuisance if his own unlawful conduct has contributed thereto, see DAMAGES, §§ 184, 185.

69. The question discussed whether, where one erects a dam on his own land, which causes the land of another to be flowed, and then conveys the land on which the dam is situated, a suit can be brought against his grantee for the nuisance before he has been served with notice of it, and requested to remove it: Caldwell v. Gale, 11 M. 77.

70. If such notice be necessary, and has once been given by the owner of the land flowed, it will inure for the benefit of his grantee, or of any one claiming title through or under him: Ibid.

71. Where a notice from plaintiff's grantor was sufficient to entitle him to maintain the action, and such notice was proved, and the court erroneously charged that the notice must be given by the plaintiff or by some one authorized by him, it was held that to entitle the plaintiff to take advantage of the erroneous ruling it was not necessary that the attention of the court should be specially called to the evidence of notice at the time of the charge: Ibid.

72. In an action by an individual for a public nuisance, recovery can be had only for such damage as was peculiar to plaintiff, and as was the natural and proximate consequence of the nuisance: Powers v. Irish, 23 M. 429.

Offences of resisting and impersonating officer, see CRIMES, §§ 475-478, 480.

I. WHAT IS AN OFFICE AND WHO ARE OFFICERS.

1. An office is a special trust or charge created by competent authority. If not merely honorary, certain duties will be attached to it, the performance of which will be the consideration for its being conferred upon the particular individual who for the time being will be the officer: Throop v. Langdon, 40 M. 673.

2. While a private person may have a valuable interest in an office, office is in this state a public trust in which the public interest is paramount: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323 (Jan. 26, '88).

3. The term "officer," in Const., art. 18, § 1, applies to the occupant of an office that has some permanence, and is not created by a temporary nomination for a transient purpose: Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 M. 361; Shurbun v. Hooper, 40 M. 504.

4. An officer is distinguished from an employee in the greater importance, dignity and independence of his position; in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond; in the liability to account for misfeasance or non-feasance, and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of his position: Throop v. Langdon, 40 M. 673.

5. But the fact that an oath of office has been taken does not prove that the person taking it is an officer rather than a clerk; nor does the fact that one is independent of his superior officer in the tenure of his position make him an officer also: Ibid.

6. The title "clerk" is properly that of an employee; and the chief clerk in the office of the assessor of the city of Detroit is not an officer, though the tenure of his position is independent of the assessor: Ibid.

7. The superintendent of fisheries is not an officer within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the state, but is an employee of the state board of fish commissioners and is removable at their pleasure: Portman v. Fish Commissioners, 50 M. 258.

8. Referees of causes in the circuit court are not officers required to take the constitutional oath: Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 M. 361.

That constitutional character of office must remain unchanged, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 709-711.

II. ELIGIBILITY; SELECTION; APPOINTMENT; REMOVAL; FILLING VACANCIES.

See CITIES AND VILLAGES, V, (a); SCHOOLS, III, (a), (b).

9. Residence within the circuit is not a condition to eligibility to, or tenure of, the office of circuit judge, unless a judge actually residing within his circuit removes from it, in which case he vacates his office: Royce v. Goodwin, 22 M. 496.

See CONSTITUTIONS, § 648.

10. No one who is not a duly qualified attorney is eligible to the office of prosecuting attorney: People v. May, 3 M. 598.

11. Particular political opinions cannot be made a condition to holding office: Attorney-General v. Detroit, 58 M. 218.

As to the constitutional prohibition against tests, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 706-708.

12. An express requirement of the constitution as to the mode of choice of officers not only precludes every other mode, but must be taken as a circumstance bearing upon the identity of the office: McClintock v. Laing, 19 M. 300.

13. All officers and functionaries exercising powers of government and control over political action must derive their powers and office either from the people directly or from the agents or representatives of the people: Attorney-General v. Detroit, 58 M. 213.

14. No public office can be obtained or exercised without either election or appointment: Ames v. Port Huron, etc. Co., 11 M. 139; Abels v. Ingham Supervisors, 42 M. 526.

As to the requirement that judicial officers must be elected by the people, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 634-641, 643, 645.

As to method of voting, ballots, canvassing returns, etc., see ELECTIONS.

As to determination of title to office, see QUO WARRANTO.

That the legal title to office cannot be tried on MANDAMUS, see that title, § 24.

15. The power of appointment to office is a franchise: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323.

16. A purpose to make an appointment which has never been carried out cannot sustain official action by the person intended: Bench v. Otis, 25 M. 29.

17. In an action brought by one who has purchased of an agent, appointed by the commissioner of the land office, timber which had been taken by a trespasser from state lands, neither the trespasser nor one claiming under him can dispute the validity of the agent's appointment: Ballou v. O'Brien, 20 M. 304.

18. Where a board is empowered to appoint certain officers whose action it is its duty to supervise, it cannot appoint such officers from its own membership, and it seems that a resignation from the board, subsequent to such appointment, would not enable the member to act as such officer: Kinyon v. Duchene, 21 M. 496.

19. The several counties composing a judicial circuit should act affirmatively, through their respective boards of supervisors, as a basis for the appointment of a stenographer for the circuit; otherwise the law authorizing such appointments is not operative in every part of it. But, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, such action may be fairly presumed where a stenographer's commission has been issued: Goodale v. Marquette Supervisors, 45 M. 47.

20. It seems that the Wayne county auditors have the power of appointing county superintendents of the poor: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323 (Jan. 26, '88); Vrooman v. Michie, 69 M. 42.

21. The power of appointing county superintendents of the poor having been expressly vested in the Wayne county auditors before the constitution of 1850, and never taken away by statute, and it not being among the constitutional powers of the board of supervisors, the supreme court is not disposed to interfere with the long practical construction of such power, which is sufficient to render the auditors' appointees officers de facto at least: Ibid.

22. An officer cannot be removed from his office by the body possessing power for that purpose, without an intent on their part to remove him. And where the duration of his term is fixed by statute, and the body possessing the power of removal and appointment makes a new appointment on the mistaken idea that a vacancy exists, such appointment does not have the effect to remove the incumbent: Stadler v. Detroit, 13 M. 846.

23. Power to authorize removal for a cause to be defined by law does not allow removals at discretion and without cause: People v. Lord, 9 M. 227.

24. Removals at will are not in accordance with the policy of the state: Mead v. Ingham County Treasurer, 36 M. 416.

25. In a proceeding to remove a person from a public office, the trial and judgment of removal must relate to the same office specified in the charge or complaint: Hall v. People, 21 M. 456.

26. The governor's power of removal under Const., art. 12, § 8, can only be exercised for the specific causes mentioned in the constitution, and upon charges which shall specify the particular acts or neglect relied on to make out the cause alleged; and the respondent must have notice of these charges and specific allegations, and reasonable notice of a time and place when and where he will have an opportunity for a hearing thereon, upon which he may produce proofs. And the governor has judicial power to examine into and pass upon these charges: Dullam v. Willson, 58 M. 392.

27. H. S. § 651, permitting the governor to remove any state or county officer except the state treasurer and judges, held void, because at the time it was adopted the governor had no judicial power under the constitution: Ibid.

28. Act 165 of 1877 (H. S. § 483, subd. 17) permits a board of supervisors to remove an officer appointed by it on charges preferred to the board, or its chairman, and after notice of the hearing and a copy of the charges has been delivered to the officer, and full opportunity has been given him to be heard in his defence. Held, that as to time and notice of hearing the board does not act as an ordinary court, but as a public board authorized to use its own time and methods, subject only to the condition that no one shall be removed without charges and reasonable notice, nor without a full opportunity to be heard; and a service on August 7th of a copy of charges and notice of meeting to be held August 18th to investigate them, was held sufficient, though made on the authority of two supervisors without a meeting of the board: Gager v. Chippewa Supervisors, 47 M. 167.

29. Prior to act 165 of 1877 (see H. S. § 483, subd. 17) the board of supervisors had no general power to remove county officers. H. S. § 483, subd. 14, gives the power only for the two causes named — failure to report and neglect to give bond; and not a discretionary power to remove: Mead v. Ingham County Treasurer, 36 M. 416.

30. Supervisors having acted without authority in making the appointment of new officers to fill a supposed vacancy caused by their removal of existing officers, their immediate recognition of the appointment as one to be respected cannot be regarded as of any importance; they merely attributed validity to their own invalid act: Ibid.

31. One of three superintendents of the poor having been a party to a controversy out of which grew the attempted removal of the other two by the supervisors, and the appointment of others in their places, his recognition of the new appointees as his colleague or co-superintendents would be of little force to make out that they were officers de facto: Ibid.

32. To justify a removal from office, the records of the board of supervisors must show all the facts to warrant it. In the case of the removal of a county treasurer for neglecting to give further bonds, the records should show some finding or resolution of the board that the existing bond was insufficient, the requirement of a new bond, notification to the treasurer of that fact, failure on his part to comply, and subsequent proceedings for his removal, of which he should have notice and an opportunity to make defence: McGregor v. Gladwin Supervisors, 37 M. 388.

33. It is misfeasance, warranting removal from office, for superintendents of the poor to draw orders on the county treasurer in favor of persons without whose knowledge they themselves draw the money, and compel the payees to take from themselves at exorbitant prices such goods as they see fit to give them; or to use their official power and the poor fund to coerce the recipients of their favor to vote under their dictation; or not to refund to the treasurer money which has been repaid to them by persons to whom they have afforded temporary relief: Gager v. Chippewa Supervisors, 47 M. 167.

34. Vacancies in the office of judge of probate are to be filled by the governor's appointment (Const., art. 6, § 14). A circuit court commissioner was authorized by R. S. 1846 (ch. 91, § 16) to act as judge of probate while the vacancy lasted. Held, that the statute did not conflict with the constitution, and that it applied also to cases in which the judge was temporarily disqualified by interest, relationship, sickness or absence: Kelley v. Edwards, 38 M. 210.

35. A judge of probate was re-elected, but died before the commencement of his term, and an appointment was made by the governor to fill the vacancy. January 1st (when the new term would commence) the governor, on the supposition that there was now a new vacancy, made a new appointment. It was held that the second appointment was void, and that under the constitution the person first appointed would hold until a successor was elected and qualified: People v. Lord, 9 M. 227.

36. Where a vacancy existed in the office of recorder of Detroit, and a circuit judge was performing the duties under designation by the common council, and no election had been ordered by the council to fill the vacancy, the electors of the city could not fill it at the regular city election (1865): People v. Witherell, 14 M. 48.

37. The city council of Grand Rapids can fill an office held by its appointment where there is no one holding for a regular term: Saunders v. Grand Rapids, 46 M. 467.

III. TENURE; RESIGNATION.

38. A public office is not a contract relation; and the legislature, when not restrained by the constitution, may abolish or modify at will official tenures and profits: Wayne Auditors v. Benoit, 20 M. 176.

39. The terms of the circuit judges and regents of the university, elected in the ninth and tenth judicial circuits, under the act of Jan. 29, 1858, commenced as soon as they had been duly declared elected: People v. Garlock, 5 M. 284.

40. H. S. § 667, which provides that, when a vacancy in a county office shall have been filled by appointment of the governor, the appointee shall hold for the unexpired portion of the regular term, cannot constitutionally apply to the office of judge of probate, or be regarded as repealing the statutes providing for special elections to keep that office filled: People v. Lord, 9 M. 227.

41. An appointment by the governor under Const., art. 6, § 14, to fill a vacancy in the office of probate judge, is not merely for the residue of the term in which the vacancy occurred; the appointee holds until the place is filled by a new election: Ibid.

42. The governor cannot, by any provision in the commission appointing a probate judge to fill a vacancy, limit the appointment, or make its continuance depend upon his pleasure: Ibid.

43. Where the statute prescribes the duration of an official term, it is not competent for the appointing power to restrict the term to a shorter period in making the appointment: Stadler v. Detroit, 13 M. 346.

44. The city physicians of Grand Rapids are not authorized by the charter to hold over where their successors are not chosen within a fixed time after their terms expire and a vacancy occurs in the office: Saunders v. Grand Rapids, 46 M. 467.

45. Where by a city charter a justice of the peace appointed to fill a vacancy can hold only until a certain date, his office ends then absolutely, and a judgment thereafter rendered by him is void: Edison v. Almy, 66 M. 329 (June 18, '87).

46. A circuit judge who has sent in his resignation to take effect in five days is during that time still in possession of his office: Bashford v. People, 24 M. 244.

47. The tender of a resignation by a supervisor or clerk of a township by filing the same with the clerk is not valid and effectual as a resignation so as to relieve the officer of his official character, without an acceptance by the township board, or an appointment to fill the vacancy: Edwards v. United States, 103 U. S. 471; Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 480.

And see MANDAMUS, §§ 242, 243.

48. An officer's resignation is presumptively shown as to third persons where the resolution appointing his successor recites such resignation and where a person of the same name as the former officer signs the other's official bond: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

IV. PROOF OF OFFICIAL CHARACTER; OFFICERS DE FACTO.

49. It cannot be presumed that a de facto official has neglected to make any necessary qualification: First National Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 M. 526.

50. One who is shown to have been an officer at a certain time must, till the contrary is shown, be presumed to continue such till the expiration of the term for which he is elected: Kinyon v. Duchene, 21 M. 498.

51. Parol evidence is admissible to prove official character: Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 1 D. 119; Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 D. 124; Facey v. Fuller, 13 M. 527; Jhons v. People, 25 M. 499.

52. Where the question of official character arises collaterally, parol evidence is admissible to show an actual incumbency de facto: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439.

53. Parol proof is admissible to show who are the officers of a school district: Crane v. Bennington School District, 61 M. 299.

54. In a collateral proceeding one's official character is sufficiently shown by a resolution of appointment which recites his predecessor's resignation, and by proof that he proceeded to the discharge of his duties without his right being questioned: Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

55. In the case of a public officer or of an officer of a corporation, proof that the individual has notoriously acted as such, is, in general, sufficient proof of official character: Albright v. Cobb, 30 M. 355.

56. Public proclamation by the inspectors of election, after canvassing the votes, that a specified person has been elected, is sufficient prima facie evidence of his right to the books and papers of the office to warrant an order to the former incumbent to show cause why he should not surrender them to his successor: Curran v. Norris, 58 M. 512.

57. The statutory proceeding for compelling a public officer to surrender the books and papers of his office to his successor (H. S. ch. 295) is summary and does not apply for determining the latter's right to the office, but only for ascertaining whether he has been declared by the proper authority to have been elected or appointed: Ibid.

58. The right to office of a person in actual possession cannot be questioned collaterally: Wayne Auditors v. Benoit, 20 M. 176.

59. The actual legal right of one in possession of an office cannot be tried in a collateral proceeding between third persons: Facey v. Fuller, 13 M. 527; Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439.

60. But in any such proceeding the mere proof of user by any one who knows the fact will be sufficient to show his official action valid: Facey v. Fuller, 13 M. 527.

61. In a trial for perjury, evidence that the oath was administered in open court by one who was acting as deputy clerk is sufficient proof of his official character. In a collateral proceeding it is enough that he was shown to be an officer de facto: Keator v. People, 33 M. 484.

62. The title to office cannot be tried collaterally: Jhons v. People, 25 M. 499; Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323.

63. One's title to the office of judge of the recorder's court of a city cannot be tried in a collateral proceeding by certiorari upon a judgment given by him as such recorder, there being no claim that any other person is the duly elected and qualified recorder: People v. Gobles, 67 M. 475.

64. Where it is not disputed that a person is an officer de facto, the court will not consider in a collateral proceeding whether he is or is not an officer de jure: Mead v. Ingham County Treasurer, 36 M. 416; Moiles v. Watson, 60 M. 415.

65. The filing of an information to test the right to a public office is conclusive between the parties that relator was not acting as officer and that respondent was; but it is not competent for them to settle between themselves which should hold the office, none having that right who was not lawfully chosen; and that, if controverted, must be settled by public authority: School District v. Root, 61 M. 373.

66. Where no officer de jure is provided for there can be no officer de facto: Carleton v. People, 10 M. 250.

67. A person actually obtaining an office with the legal indicia of title is a legal officer until ousted, so far as to render his official acts as valid as if his title were not disputed: Wayne Auditors v. Benoit, 20 M. 176.

68. Persons in the actual and unobstructed exercise of office must be held to be legal officers, except in proceedings where their official character is the issue to be tried as against themselves: Thons v. People, 25 M. 499.

69. The county of Muskegon was organized by setting off certain townships from existing counties. The act for that purpose was passed Feb. 4, 1859, and provided for an election of county officers "at the annual township election to be held in April next," which officers were to enter upon the discharge of their duties "on the first day of June next." But the act not having been ordered to take immediate effect, did not take effect under the constitution until May 16, 1859. An election was nevertheless held for county officers in April, 1859, and the persons who were chosen qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of county officers at the time specified. Quere (the court being equally divided), whether, even if the election in April, 1859, was unconstitutional, the persons elected were not de facto county officers: Carleton v. People, 10 M. 250; Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 M. 125.

70. There can be no holding over de facto, whether a successor is chosen or not, where the statute under which an officer is appointed to fill a vacancy in an elective office provides that the person so appointed shall hold only until a certain date after appointment: Edison v. Almy, 66 M. 329.

V. POWERS AND ACTS.

(a) In general.

As to presumptions favoring performance of official duty, regularity of acts, etc., see EVIDENCE, §§ 1565-1583.

As to officers' capacity to sue, see PARTIES, §§ 20-26.

71. Officers who are created by statute must confine their acts within its provisions and not go beyond the plain letter: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486; James v. Howard, 4 M. 446.

72. Where a board's time of meeting is, by statute, made subject to the direction of the members, there can be no doubt of the legality of the meeting when all meet: Hulin v. People, 31 M. 323.

73. The action of a board of several persons must be determined by their votes as evidenced by their record; their action separately amounts to nothing, and their joint action must be evidenced in some way as the act of a lawful majority; and it requires affirmative action to create a term of time "specified:" Newcombe v. Chesebrough, 33 M. 321.

74. A public officer charged with the duty of selling property for the best price cannot himself become the purchaser; as, a county treasurer, who has charge of the sale of lands for delinquent taxes: Clute v. Barron, 2 M. 192.

75. Public officers are agents so far as to be within the rule prohibiting agents from acting for themselves and their principals in the same transaction: People v. Overysse, 11 M. 222.

76. The same person cannot act at the same time in a public and in a private capacity, and in antagonistic interests: Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 M. 44.

77. One who is shown to be entitled to the office of supervisor can compel his predecessor to deliver to him the books and papers pertaining to the office (H. S. § 8539): Schneider v. McIvor, 58 M. 511.

78. A public officer can define and change the duties of the clerks in his office if no rule of law or custom prevents: Throop v. Langdon, 40 M. 874.

79. A sheriff's duties relate to the execution of orders, judgments and process of courts: the preservation of the peace; the arrest and detention of persons charged with the commission of public offences; the service of papers in actions, etc.; they are connected with the administration of justice and not with the collection of the revenue: White v. East Saginaw, 43 M. 567.

80. A prosecuting attorney can in nowise control the action of the sheriff when a writ has been placed for execution in the latter's hands; the sheriff may take his advice if doubtful as to his duty; but is not relieved from responsibility if he fails in his duty in following it: Beecher v. Anderson, 45 M. 543.

81. A sheriff as such has no authority to employ watchmen for the jail or to rent an office for himself at the expense of the county: Peck v. Kent County Supervisors, 47 M. 477.

82. Where a sheriff had been authorized by resolution of the board of supervisors to draw on the county treasurer for such sums as should be necessary to defray his actual expenses incurred in the county's behalf, it was presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that moneys received by him under the resolution were disbursed by him thereunder for the county's benefit: Mecosta Supervisors v. Vincent, 65 M. 503.

(b) Of deputies.

83. Where a deputy officer executes a deed in the absence of his principal, the proper method is to perform the act in the name of his principal: Westbrook v. Miller, 56 M. 143.

84. An indorsement or certificate signed by the deputy auditor-general upon a county treasurer's bond to account for moneys to be received at tax sales has the same force and validity as if signed by the auditor-general: People v. Johr, 22 M. 461.

85. The deputy auditor-general may sign a tax-deed in his own name when his superior is absent: Westbrook v. Miller, 56 M. 148; Drennan v. Herzog, 56 M. 467; Fells v. Barbour, 58 M. 49.

86. The deputy of the county clerk need not sign writs in the name of the clerk. Where a writ was signed "W. M., deputy clerk," in the absence of the clerk, it was held sufficient: Calender v. Olcott, 1 M. 344.

87. Where a statute provided that in the absence of the county treasurer from his office the deputy treasurer might perform all his duties, it was held that such deputy might administer an oath which another section of the statute provided might be administered by the county treasurer, or, in his absence, by a justice of the peace: Malonny v. Mahar, 3 D. 432, 1 M. 26.

88. A sheriff cannot constitute a deputy for a particular act except by warrant in writing: People v. Moore, 2 D. 1.

89. The under-sheriff may act in his own name, and need not sign a return to a writ made by him in the name of the sheriff: Calender v. Olcott, 1 M. 344; Allen v. Hazen, 26 M. 142.

90. A deputy-sheriff may in his own name sign the return to a writ, and he may take a replevin bond in his own name: Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 M. 78.

91. The deputy-sheriff may perform sheriff's duty in latter's inability in case of tie vote for county clerk: Evans v. Sutherland, 41 M. 177.

92. Under H. S. § 596, expressly empowering sheriffs to serve any process which constables may execute, no special direction for the purpose is necessary; and a deputy-sheriff is not liable in trespass on the ground of want of authority to act, for levying a justice's execution addressed to any constable, etc.: Foster v. Wiley, 27 M. 244.

93. Where judgment in trover has been obtained against a deputy-marshal for goods which he has taken while acting under specific instructions from the marshal and in reliance on the latter's oral promise to indemnify him, he can maintain a bill against the marshal to obtain protection against such judgment by compelling the latter to indemnify or pay him: Robinson v. Bennett, 50 M. 500.

VI. LIABILITIES.

(a) To the public.

94. County treasurers are responsible as debtors, and not merely as bailees, for the county funds that come into their hands, and their liability is absolute and not affected by unavoidable loss or accident: Perley v. Mustogon, 32 M. 182.

95. If an officer is required or authorized by law to make deposits in any particular place or with any particular person, he is usually, if not universally, protected from any further responsibility so long as he leaves it there and is not a guarantor of the safety of the deposit; and the ownership and the liability appear to be co-extensive: Ibid.

96. One who has borrowed county funds and repaid them to the treasurer cannot afterward be held liable to the county for them; as he is the only legal custodian of the county funds, no one can be required to do more than put them in his hands: Ibid.

97. If one can be made liable to the county for receiving money from the county treasurer with a dishonest understanding, knowing it to be county funds required to be officially accounted for and restored, it must be by an action on the case or a bill in equity, and not an action for money had and received; the action would not be based on the source or identity of the particular fund which had been used, but would depend rather upon the state of the accounts; the wrong is much in the nature of a voluntary transfer of property in fraud of creditors. And it is questionable how far the county is directly damnified even in such a case, if the treasurer's sureties are responsible, or damnified beyond the deficiency in their ability: Ibid.

98. The county treasurer's books are presumed to show the amount due from the treasurer to the county: Bay City State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 M. 447.

99. A county treasurer who receives moneys collected on a judgment in an action upon the bond of a predecessor accounts for them precisely as if he had originally collected them from the tax-payers: Marquette v. Ward, 50 M. 174.

100. A special commissioner named by statute to lay out a state road is not a county officer, though required, for purposes of record, to render an account of his proceedings to the board of supervisors; and funds held for him by a county treasurer are not county funds: Alcona v. White, 54 M. 503.

101. The county clerk is liable for such entry and jury fees only as are actually paid to him. The entry of a cause on the calendar is prima facie evidence of the payment of the entry fee, which, however, may be rebutted. But the fact that a jury was had in a case affords no presumption that it was called on demand of a party, and a jury fee paid: People v. Treadway, 17 M. 480.

102. The act of 1858, p. 145, § 62 (H. S. § 1064), which required that, upon the neglect of any township treasurer to pay over or account for the taxes required by his warrant to be collected, the county treasurer should issue his warrant to the sheriff, requiring him to collect the money of the township treasurer and his sureties, did not authorize the issue of such a warrant against a defaulting ward collector of Detroit: James v. Howard, 4 M. 446.

103. Such warrant is constitutional process (see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 25, 52), but the provisions of the statute are open to criticism; and the warrant must show facts which presumptively confer jurisdiction to issue it: Weimer v. Bunbury, 80 M. 201; Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 M. 54.

104. A township treasurer's consent that a warrant might issue against him unless he paid in the deficiency within a specified time is no defence for subsequently issuing a defective warrant: Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 M. 54.

105. A township treasurer is not to be presumed in default for not paying over taxes levied in the roll until it is shown that the roll, with a proper warrant attached, was duly delivered to him; and the county treasurer will not be authorized to issue his warrant without evidence that such roll and warrant were so delivered: Weimer v. Bunbury, 80 M. 201.

106. Where the action of the tax collector is made a necessary preliminary to that of the county treasurer, due performance on their part will not be presumed, in the absence of evidence, for the purpose of charging him with having failed to perform duty; the presumption of official regularity applies with equal force to each: Ibid.; Houghton Supervisors v. Rees, 34 M. 481.

107. Whether public funds can be transferred by a public treasurer to his successor by giving certificates of deposit, quere: Lansing v. Wood, 57 M. 201.

108. Where an official treasurer is sued by his successor for the funds in his official custody, he cannot base his defence on any question of the regularity of the proceedings whereby the funds came into his possession: Mason v. School District, 34 M. 229.

(b) Liability of officers to individuals injured by their acts or negligence.

Officers not liable on contract made in behalf of village, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, § 120.

1. Judicial duties; immunity of judicial action.

109. A public officer is liable for a failure to perform duties of a judicial nature if he neglects them maliciously: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 342.

110. No action lies against a judicial officer for any act done by him in the exercise of his judicial functions, provided the act, though done mistakenly, was within the scope of his jurisdiction: Gordon v. Farrar, 2 D. 411; Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

111. This principle of protection is not confined to courts of record, but applies as well to inferior jurisdictions; the only difference being that authority in a court of general jurisdiction is to be presumed, while the jurisdiction of inferior tribunals must affirmatively appear on the face of their proceedings: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

112. The rule of protection where the action is judicial does not depend upon whether the tribunal is a court or not, but upon the nature of the duties to be performed: Ibid.

113. No action lies against a judicial officer for taking jurisdiction in good faith upon an erroneous determination of the sufficiency of the appearance for the defence: Morton v. Crane, 39 M. 526.

114. Officers having quasi judicial powers are not liable for injury resulting from acts done understandingly and in good faith within the limits of an authority expressly granted to them: Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 M. 90.

115. Where the duties of an officer or board are quasi judicial no action can be predicated upon an erroneous performance: Bay County v. Brock, 44 M. 45.

116. Inspectors of election act judicially in determining whether a person offering to vote has the requisite qualifications as to color or descent to entitle him to vote as a "white male citizen," under the constitution; and they are not liable to an action for improperly refusing a vote because the person offering it was partly of African descent: Gordon v. Farrar, 2 D. 411.

117. A township board acts judicially in auditing claims against the township, and its members are not liable individually for erroneous allowances: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

118. There can usually be no remedy for a wrong where such remedy would involve the review of lawfully vested discretion. There must generally be an excess of jurisdiction an act outside of the discretion vested: Sage v. Laurain, 19 M. 137.

119. A justice of the peace who, without authority, issued an execution against a surety, was held liable as a trespasser: Shadbolt v. Bronson, 1 M. 85.

120. In an action against a justice of the peace for issuing an execution against a man's property it is not enough for him to show that he was such justice, and then rely upon the execution and the judgment, unless it appears that the necessary proceedings have been taken to give him jurisdiction of the parties and the cause, or rightfully to call his official powers into action: Clark v. Arford, 5 M. 182, 187.

121. A magistrate who issues a warrant for arrest where he has no jurisdiction is liable: Johnson v. Maxon, 28 M. 129, 134.

2. Ministerial duties.

122. A public officer is liable to private individuals for injuries resulting to the latter from his failure to perform ministerial duties in which the latter have a special and direct interest: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 342.

123. Failure to perform a public duty is actionable by an individual only when the public duty also involved a duty to himself as an individual, and where he has suffered a special and peculiar injury by reason of its non-performance: Moss v. Cummings, 44 M. 359.

124. A discretionary power cannot excuse an officer for refusal to exercise his discretion: Merrill v. Humphrey, 24 M. 170.

125. Acts done by authority of a valid statute and with reasonable care will not support any liability for resulting damage: Highway Commissioners v. Ely, 54 M. 173.

126. If a justice of the peace, without special instructions, receive bank-bills, current as money at the time, from a constable who has collected the same on the execution, and enter satisfaction of the judgment, he will be liable to the judgment creditor for the amount, even though he afterwards tender him the bills received and they became depreciated or worthless: Heald v. Bennett, 1 D. 513.

127. A justice of the peace who receives uncurrent or depreciated bank-bills of a constable, and gives a receipt for the amount on the back of the execution, is liable, as for so much money had and received, to the judgment creditor, who is not restricted to the remedy given him by statute on the justice's bond: Welch v. Frost, 1 M. 80.

128. A sheriff or constable has no power to receive anything except the legal currency of the United States on an execution in his hands for collection, and if he does so, without special instructions, it is at his own risk: Heald v. Bennett, 1 D. 513; Welch v. Frost, 1 M. 80.

129. Superintendents of the poor, being empowered by statute to keep up farms for the employment and support of the county poor, may be held liable, as owners and managers of the farm property, for injuries resulting from their management, such as negligently allowing fires kindled upon the premises to extend to the property of others, or permitting the spread of contagious diseases from the farm stock to other animals, or allowing the stock to trespass upon other lands: Rowland v. Kalamazoo Poor Superintendents, 49 M. 553.

130. Whether the trustees of a school district contracting for the building of a school-house are liable to an action by a material-man injured by their neglect to take from the contractor the bond required by H. S. §§ 8411a-8411c, for the payment for labor performed or materials furnished, quere; but held, that such material-man, having been a surety upon the bond given by the contractor to the school district for the performance of the work, could not sue the trustees for such negligence, his relations to the parties to the contract being such that he must be held chargeable with notice that no bond for his protection was required by the board: Owen v. Hill, 67 M. 43 (Oct. 6, '87).

131. H. S. § 8608, providing for a penalty against a sheriff who shall refuse, for more than six hours after demand and tender of the legal fees, to deliver a copy of a warrant to one whom he has arrested, is valid: Stewart v. Riopelle, 48 M. 177.

132. An officer in whose hands a writ of attachment is placed is required to use such diligence in the levy and filing as men ordinarily would exercise in their own business to protect their interests; and failing in this, he is negligent, and liable in damages: Springett v. Colerick, 67 M. 362.

133. The fact that property upon which an attachment might have been levied was subject to a mortgage that has since been foreclosed cannot excuse the sheriff's neglect to attach it: Ibid.

134. A sheriff, before levying a writ of attachment upon property of the title to which there is reasonable doubt, has a right to require a bond of indemnity, and to refuse to execute the writ by seizure of such property until the bond is given: Smith v. Cicotte, 11 M. 383.

135. If the sheriff seizes the property on promise of bond of indemnity by the creditor, which the latter afterwards fails to give, and the property is then taken away by the adverse claimant, the sheriff may make return to the writ setting forth these facts, and he will be protected: Ibid.

136. In an action against a sheriff for damages on account of his failure and neglect to serve a writ of attachment, when the defence is set up that the property upon which he was instructed to levy had been transferred to an assignee by assignment for the benefit of creditors, defendant must show that a bond had been filed by the assignee within the time required by statute, or that creditors had intervened to enforce the assignment: Beard v. Clippert, 63 M. 716.

137. In an action against a sheriff for failure to execute a capias ad respondendum it is admissible to show what plaintiff's debtor said in regard to his circumstances at the time of purchasing goods of plaintiff's agent: Hatch v. Saunders, 66 M. 181.

138. In an action against a sheriff for permitting the escape of a defendant in a capias, evidence is admissible to show that the debtor was arrested by the sheriff or his deputy: Ibid.

139. Damages for a sheriff's omission to serve process are in their nature unliquidated: Schwab v. Coots, 44 M. 463.

140. Where the sheriff fails to return an execution the debt is assumed to be lost, and the execution creditor is prima facie entitled to recover of him the full amount; the sheriff is, however, allowed to show in defence that the defendant had no property from which the money could be made, however faithfully he had performed his duty. But a showing that the judgment debtor had transferred the lands levied on, prior to the levy, does not make out this defence where the lands, notwithstanding this transfer, were sold on the execution for the amount of the debt. And where the execution creditor bid in the lands himself, the sheriff cannot defend on the ground that the damages sustained by the creditor were sustained as a purchaser and not as an execution creditor: Dunphy v. Whipple, 25 M. 10.

141. In an action by special bail against the sheriff for having falsely returned to an execution that the defendant could not be found in his county, it cannot be said as matter of law that the sheriff's neglect to inquire of the plaintiff in the execution as to the defendant's whereabouts tended to show negligence: Koch v. Coots, 48 M. 80.

142. A sheriff is answerable for the fault of his deputy in making an improper return of a writ: Frosser v. Coots, 50 M. 263.

143. A declaration claiming damages from the sheriff for the false return of a writ is sufficient after judgment to support a recovery, though the return had been made by deputy: Ibid.

144. If an officer with an execution misuses the property levied upon, he is liable to the execution debtor therefor, and possibly to the creditor also, if the sale on the execution fails to satisfy the judgment: Stilson v. Gibbs, 40 M. 42.

145. A deputy-sheriff having levied upon wheat in the mow, threshed and removed it before selling it, and in an action of trespass on the case for unlawful seizure and sale sought to justify by showing that when he had levied on a former crop under the same judgment the defendant had removed it in the night. But as it appeared on cross-examination that it was removed by the holder of a chattel mortgage thereon, it was held that the justification, if it was one, failed, and that the evidence should have been stricken out; Stilson v. Gibbs, 46 M. 215.

146. An officer who has levied on a crop of wheat and threshed it can be held responsible for what has been wasted in threshing as well as for what has been taken: Stilson v. Gibbs, 58 M. 280.

147. A sheriff who attempts to sell goods covered by a writ of replevin previously served upon himself or his receiptor becomes a wrong-doer: Mayhue v. Snell, 37 M. 305.

148. A sheriff who has had judgment in replevin for goods seized by him under an execution is not liable for not thereafter setting it aside as exempt, unless requested: McGuire v. Galligan, 57 M. 39.

149. An officer sued for exceeding his authority in making a levy has the burden of showing the extraordinary circumstances justifying his action: Stilson v. Gibbs, 40 M. 42.

150. Where trover is based on a wrongful levy, the fact that as part of the proceedings the proceeds of the goods seized were credited to the plaintiff is no bar to the action, and can only be shown in mitigation of damages; and that only if the plaintiff assented to the credit: Bringard v. Stellwagen, 41 M. 54.

151. If a sheriff wrongfully levies upon goods and retains his fees from the proceeds, he is liable for conversion even though he causes the rest to be formally credited upon the alleged indebtedness: Ibid.

152. In trover against a sheriff, by parties claiming property levied on by him, a judgment in favor of the party for whom the sheriff levied must be specially alleged and proved to authorize defendant to introduce evidence showing that a chattel mortgage given by the debtor, under which plaintiff claims, is fraudulent: Comstock v. Hollon, 2 M. 355.

153. A sheriff was sued for acts of his deputy in enforcing an execution. The execution was introduced as part of the plaintiff's case. Held, that the sheriff's right to show that it issued on a valid judgment followed as of course: Stilson v. Gibbs, 40 M. 42.

154. An individual tax-payer of a school district cannot sue the moderator to recover back his share of a tax which the district was compelled to pay through the moderator's illegal conduct: Wall v. Eastman, 1 M. 268.

155. It seems that an individual tax-payer has no right of action against a supervisor for assessing property on a false valuation except on the ground of fraud or malice; the wrong is one to be redressed by public prosecution: Moss v. Cummings, 44 M. 359.

156. The presumption that a public officer has done his duty applies to an assessor who has omitted lands from assessment, if the facts as shown do not exclude it: Perkins v. Nugent, 45 M. 156.

157. One who had purchased the equity of redemption of certain mortgaged lands, after a tax had been assessed thereon, had certain personal property on the land, but the tax collector falsely returned nulla bona, and the tax became a lien on the land, from which the owner of the mortgage had to redeem after foreclosure. Held, that the latter had a right of action at common law against the collector for injury resulting to him in being compelled to redeem from the tax sale: Raynsford v. Phelps, 43 M. 342.

158. A tax sale based upon a void tax does no such injury to a mortgagee of land as will sustain an action for damages against the tax collector as for making a false return of unpaid taxes; and in such suit the collector is not estopped by his return from showing that the tax was void: Raynsford v. Phelps, 49 M. 315.

159. A tax collector who has levied on property is not necessarily a trespasser ab initio in keeping it a little longer than is necessary in giving notice and making sale. If the detention is lawful, the expense of it is a lawful charge; if not, the excess may be recovered in a proper action: Bird v. Perkins, 88 M. 28.

3. Protection by process.

160. A ministerial officer executing, in good faith and without oppression, a warrant regular upon its face and issued by an officer having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, will be protected by the warrant, and is not required to look beyond it for his authority to serve it: Ortman v. Greenman, 4 M. 291; Dunn v. Gilman, 84 M. 256.

161. As a general rule, a sheriff or other officer cannot justify under process issued by a court or officer having no jurisdiction of the subject-matter: People v. Rix, 6 M. 144.

162. But where the jurisdiction of the subject-matter, in the tribunal issuing process, depends upon matter of fact, the existence of which cannot be determined from the law and which is not of public notoriety, a ministerial officer will not be held bound to ascertain it at his peril, unless the law has clearly given him the right to demand the information and to determine the fact: Ibid.

163. Where, therefore, the statute conferred jurisdiction of certain proceedings only, as was claimed, upon the circuit court commissioner of the county holding the senior commission, and did not provide a period when the term of either should commence, or what should be the date of the respective commissions, but the governor might appoint and issue commissions at any time; and no provision was made for making public the fact of the priority of either, or by which it could be obtained in any county office, and no power given to the sheriff to demand inspection of the commissions or to require the information from the proper state office, it was held that the sheriff who had obeyed process issued in such proceedings by the commissioner who in fact held the junior commission (though the sheriff was not shown to have known that fact), and delivered up, in pursuance of such process, property which he had attached, was not liable on his official bond for so doing: Ibid.

164. Where a writ is bad on its face — e. g., where it was issued under and expressly refers to an unconstitutional statute — any one seeking to enforce it is a wrong-doer: First National Bank v. Walkins, 21 M. 483.

165. An officer is not protected in what he does under the authority of a superior if the latter acts under an invalid statute: Swart v. Kimball, 48 M. 442.

166. A sheriff who seizes property outside of his county is a mere trespasser, and his writ does not protect him: Craig v. Grant, 6 M. 447.

167. So with a federal marshal who, under a provisional warrant in bankruptcy, seizes property outside of his district: Carr v. Phillips, 39 M. 319.

168. An officer is protected by process fair on its face even though he has outside knowledge of illegalities: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228; Bird v. Perkins, 33 M. 28.

169. An officer is justified in obeying any process which appears to be lawfully issued to him, and which apprises him of no legal reason why he should refrain from doing so: Mathews v. Densmore, 43 M. 461.

170. An officer does not render himself liable in trespass for proceeding in good faith to serve a justice's execution after he has been told by defendant that an appeal has been taken, where the justice insisted that the appeal had not been perfected; he has a right to rely upon his process until he is officially notified of its having been superseded: Foster v. Wiley, 27 M. 244.

171. An officer, in executing a search-warrant fair on its face, and issued by a court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, is not liable for his official acts in following in good faith the command of his writ and the official directions of the court; and this is so though it be made clearly to appear that the property seized had not in fact been stolen, and that the party suing out the writ was not entitled to its possession: Dunn v. Gilman, 34 M. 256.

172. Property in an officer's possession by virtue of a valid search-warrant is in the custody of the law, though the proceedings on such writ be not conclusive as to ownership; an owner claiming that his rights have been interfered with by such proceedings has no remedy against such officer: Ibid.

173. A county treasurer's warrant under act 228 of 1875, to raise the amount of a liquor tax by distress and sale, would, if fair on its face, be a sufficient protection to the officer executing it, in proceedings against him for tort: Wood v. Thomas, 38 M. 686.

174. A sheriff when sued in trespass is protected by an execution fair on its face: Watkins v. Wallace, 19 M. 57.

175. An officer will be protected in the service of an attachment fair on its face and appearing to have been issued by a magistrate having jurisdiction of the subject-matter: People v. Rix, 6 M. 144; Michels v. Stork, 44 M. 2.

176. A writ of attachment, if valid on its face, though issued upon a defective affidavit, protects the marshal who executes it when he is sued for seizing the property of the attachment debtor (reversing on this point Mathews v. Densmore, 43 M. 461): Mathews v. Densmore, 109 U. S. 216.

177. An invalid writ of attachment does not justify the officer who executes it in seizing property in the possession of mortgagees: Mathews v. Densmore, 43 M. 461.

178. An officer who levies an attachment upon the property of a third person is a trespasser, and his writ does not protect him from personal liability for his wrong doing: Weber v. Henry, 16 M. 399.

179. Where property not belonging to the execution debtor is taken the taking is necessarily tortious and is always a trespass: Heyman v. Covell, 36 M. 157.

180. A federal marshal is not protected in seizing property belonging to one person under a writ directed against others: Ibid.; Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 31; Carew v. Matthews, 41 M. 576; Mathews v. Densmore, 109 U. S. 216.

181. A writ of replevin will not protect an officer in taking the property described from some person besides the defendant, owning and holding it in good faith: Sexton v. McDowd, 38 M. 148.

182. An officer's process protects him from liability for the mere entry of premises to seize property, where there is no other act to make it wrongful: Finn v. Peck, 47 M. 208.

183. The claim that an officer wholly loses the protection of his writ when he proceeds to an unauthorized sale goes to the question of damages only, and is for the jury: Stilson v. Gibbs, 40 M. 42.

184. Where an officer levied upon goods, and after offering them for sale was informed of the existence of a mortgage upon them (which mortgage did not stipulate for possession of the goods by the mortgager), and he then changed his offer to a sale of the defendant's interest in the goods, and sold accordingly, it was held that a sale in this form did not protect him from liability to the mortgagee, who might either replevy the goods or recover the value from the officer and purchaser: Eggleston v. Mundy, 4 M. 295.

185. A supervisor is not liable in trespass on account of any errors or defects in the description of real estate in the assessment roll: Clark v. Axford, 5 M. 182.

186. A supervisor is protected by the township clerk's certificate of the amount of township indebtedness to be raised in placing the same upon the roll, notwithstanding the same is made up in part of illegal allowances made by the township board of which he was a member: Wall v. Trumbull, 16 M. 228.

187. A tax assessment is in the nature of a judgment, and cannot be assailed for fraud or irregularity in a suit against an officer who enforces it under process which on its face is valid: Moss v. Cummings, 44 M. 359.

188. A township treasurer is not liable in trover, or in any action of tort, for enforcing the collection of an excessive tax, if his warrant therefor from the supervisor is fair on its face: Byles v. Genung, 52 M. 504.

189. When a supervisor is sued in trespass for the taking of personal property under a warrant for the collection of taxes, issued by him and attached to the tax-roll, evidence that he was at the time supervisor, and, as such, signed the warrant, does not make out a prima facie justification. He must also show that the roll had come to his hands from the board of supervisors, as provided by law, and that the various taxes had been certified to him for assessment by the competent authorities. When his jurisdiction has been thus shown, his acts will be presumed regular and valid till the contrary appears: Clark v. Azford, 5 M. 182.

190. A supervisor executing a tax-warrant is held to a knowledge of any illegality manifest on the face of it, and is responsible for his acts under it: Atwell v. Zeluff, 26 M. 118.

191. The rule that a ministerial officer is protected in the execution of process, issued by a court or officer having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of the process, if it be regular on its face and do not disclose a want of jurisdiction, merely protects him from personal responsibility as a trespasser or wrongdoer; it does not confer upon him any right of or to property, and he may be sued in replevin for goods wrongfully taken: Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233; Adams v. Hubbard, 30 M. 104; Gidday v. Witherspoon, 35 M. 368.

192. And in such an action he cannot justify under his execution unless he first shows a valid judgment under which it issued: Beach v. Botsford, 1 D. 199; Gidday v. Witherspoon, 35 M. 368; Andrews v. Smith, 41 M. 683; Wilson v. Martin, 44 M. 509. See McGuire v. Galigan, 53 M. 453.

193. A tax-warrant regular upon its face and disclosing no illegality cannot avail the collector when sued in replevin for seizing goods not subject to taxation: Le Roy v. East Saginaw C. R. Co., 18 M. 233.

VII. OFFICIAL. OATHS AND BONDS.

(a) General matters.

194. The absence of any record in the town books showing that the assessors were sworn does not furnish prima facie evidence that they were not sworn: Sibley v. Smith, 2 M. 486.

195. A county officer who is kept out of office by a person holding a certificate of election is not required by H. S. §§ 638, 639 to file his oath and bond until his title is established: People v. Mayworm, 5 M. 146; People v. Miller, 16 M. 56.

196. A sheriff failing to renew his bond, as required by H. S. § 584, but continuing to execute the duties of his office, will be deemed to be sheriff de facto, at least, by virtue of his election, and the sureties on his prior bond will continue to be liable for his acts: Dunphy v. Whipple, 25 M. 10; Springett v. Cole- rick, 67 M. 362.

197. Whether the constitutional provision (art. 10, § 5) that "in default of giving such security his office shall be deemed vacant" was designed to go further than to authorize the legislature to provide by law for treating the office as vacant, quere: Dunphy v. Whipple, 25 M. 10.

198. Where a proper order was made upon the township treasurer by a highway commissioner who was performing the duties of his office, though he had not yet filed his official bond, payment was enforced: McKenzie v. Baraga Township Treasurer, 39 M. 554.

199. A county treasurer's bond to the board of supervisors for the faithful performance of his official duties was held valid, though there was no statute requiring it: St. Joseph Supervisors v. Coffenbury, 1 M. 355.

200. The bond required by H. S. § 1098 to be given by the county treasurer to the auditor-general to account for moneys received at tax sales is an official one, which he must give: Attorney-General v. St. Clair Supervisors, 30 M. 388.

201. As the obligee named in a sheriff's bond has no active duty to perform, and no voice in taking or approving of the bond, or in bringing suit upon it, and there is no importance in the people being named as obligee rather than the county, it being important only that some party shall be named as promisee in whose name suits may be brought, the provision for naming the people may be treated as directory merely, and a bond sufficient in substance, which parties have given for the statutory purpose, which has had the statutory approval, and on which the public have relied, will be held sufficient to give the intended security: Bay County v. Brock, 44 M. 45.

202. The amount and sufficiency of the county treasurer's bond are left by H. S. §§ 520 and 483 to the discretion of the board of supervisors: McGregor v. Gladwin Supervisors, 87 M. 888.

203. A township treasurer should be a party to his own official bond: Johnston v. Kimball, 39 M. 187.

204. Bonds referred to in our statutes as "official" are, it seems, bonds of public officers only: Bissell v. Wayne Probate Judge, 58 M. 287.

(b) Execution and approval of bonds.

205. Public officers, in receiving official bonds into their custody, have a right to rely upon the genuine signatures of sureties voluntarily affixed to a regular document conforming to law, without making inquiry of the sureties: McCormick v. Bay City, 23 M. 457.

206. One who signs in blank as surety on an official bond and delivers it to his principal for completion makes the latter his agent for the whole business, and is estopped and bound by the action of such agent without regard to any secret instructions as to the condition on which it should be completed: Ibid.

207. Sureties are not liable on an official bond signed by them alone, and without their knowledge or consent accepted without the signature of a principal who is named upon its face as the primary debtor. And the burden of proving their consent to its being so accepted is on those who try to enforce it: Johnston v. Kimball, 39 M. 187.

208. A surety cannot officially approve his principal's official bond: Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 M. 44.

209. Where a statute requiring that an official bond shall be accepted and approved by a municipal council points out no mode of proceeding, whatever mode is taken should carry with it some action sufficient to express in an affirmative manner the assent and approbation of the body: O'Marrow v. Port Huron, 47 M. 585.

210. The delivery to the auditor-general by a county treasurer of the bond provided for by H. S. § 1098 is in law part of its execution, and is an action upon such bond if no affidavit denying its execution is filed as provided by circuit court rule 79, no proof of execution or delivery is required: People v. Johr, 22 M. 461.

212. Although the auditor-general might, and as between himself and the people ought to, have refused a county treasurer's bond which had not been approved by the prosecuting attorney and by both the circuit court commissioners of the county, as required by the statute under which it was given, and so, also, might and ought to have declined to allow the treasurer to make the tax-sales and have appointed another person to make them, as the statute contemplates and provides on failure of the treasurer to give the statutory bonds; yet, when on the faith of the defective bond the treasurer has been allowed to make, and has made, the sales, and has received the money, neither he nor his sureties on the bond, it being in all its provisions in strict compliance with the statute, can be heard to object that, when so executed and accepted, it was not properly approved. The statute requirement as to the approval of the bond is for the security and protection of the public, and not of the obligors of the bond. The people in their corporate capacity, having brought suit upon this bond as executed, are at liberty, so far as the obligors upon the bond are concerned, to waive the approval thereof, and the obligors cannot insist upon the approval for the purpose of defeating their liability: Ibid.

213. Where a common council, whose acceptance and approval of an officer's bond is required by charter, instead of passing on the bond orders it to be handed to the mayor for his decision, and he refuses to consider it, and hands it back to the clerk directing him to put it on file, which he does, it does not bind the sureties: O'Marrow v. Port Huron, 47 M. 585.

214. The sheriff-elect entered into a bond, with sureties, which was intended for his official bond as sheriff, and was in all respects correct except that the county was named as obligee therein when the statute required the bond to be given to the people. The board of supervisors approved of the bond as sufficient. Held, that as the statute empowered and required the supervisors to examine and approve the bond and the sureties therein, this approval was final and the bond a valid official bond: Bay County v. Brock, 44 M. 45.

(c) Construction of bonds; sureties' liabilities.

215. The obligations created by an official bond to pay over moneys are not created by the bond, but imposed by law, and the bond is but a collateral security for the performance of a legal obligation: Spencer v. Perry, 18 M. 894.

216. A recital in an official bond that the officer's term is one year, whereas such term is fixed by statute at two years, so that it cannot be limited by the body appointing the officer, is mere surplusage, and the bond is valid for two years: Stadler v. Detroit, 18 M. 846.

217. A city treasurer's bond to the county treasurer, after stating the duty covered by the obligation, added the words, "reference being had to the warrant of the supervisor of said township attached, or to be attached, to the assessment roll of the year 1872." This clause was in excess of the statutory terms of the bond. Held, that it was surplusage and a nullity, and that the absence of a warrant could not make the bond inapplicable to moneys actually received on the roll: Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 M. 79.

218. The obligation of an official bond is strictissimi juris and nothing can be taken by construction against the obligors; the sureties do not undertake for anything beyond the letter of their contract and are only liable within its terms: Detroit Savings Bank v. Ziegler, 49 M. 157.

219. The official bond of a city officer must contain everything required by the charter, and, while the council may add to it by requiring further duties, none of the prescribed duties can be omitted, nor can an absolute obligation be made a conditional one: Detroit v. Weber, 26 M. 284.

220. An officer cannot reasonably be compelled to give a bond going beyond his official duties, as a condition of being allowed to hold his office, but the bond ought properly to be regarded as the measure of official duty: Perry v. Muskegon County, 32 M. 132.

221. Where a city charter requires the controller to perform "such duties in relation to the finances as shall be prescribed by ordinance," an ordinance imposing upon him the duty of negotiating city bonds is proper, and his sureties are liable for misappropriation by him of the proceeds of such bonds or for any unauthorized disposal of the bonds themselves: Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 M. 44.

222. Duties not yet existing and not germane to an office are not within the contemplation of sureties on the official bond, nor properly covered by their obligation. To bind the sureties the duties must plainly belong to the office: White v. East Saginaw, 43 M. 567.

223. Sureties upon a city treasurer's bond cannot claim release from liability because of the neglect of a committee of the council to examine the treasurer's accounts monthly as required by ordinance, or because they signed such bond in reliance upon the controller's assurance that such examinations had been or would be made, which was untrue in fact: Detroit v. Weber, 26 M. 284.

224. Sureties on an official bond are only liable for their principal's default as officer, acting under color of office: Stevenson v. Bay City, 26 M. 44.

225. Sureties on an official bond are discharged when the duties and obligations of the office are essentially changed by statute and their risk increased: White v. East Saginaw, 43 M. 567.

226. An official bond covers whatever duties were imposed before it was given, even though such duties were added after the passage of the statute prescribing the terms of the bond: Marquette County v. Ward, 50 M. 174.

227. A county treasurer's bond requires him to account for "all moneys which shall come to his hands as treasurer." Held, that this covers moneys collected by him under the liquor tax law, though they neither belong to the county nor go into the county treasury: Ibid.

228. Sureties on a bond given by a city or county treasurer are not liable in an action thereon for moneys not collected, or moneys lawfully accounted for: Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 M. 79.

229. Sureties upon the official bond of a township treasurer for his second term of office only are not liable for the default of their principal during his first term: Paw Paw v. Eggleston, 25 M. 36.

230. The sureties on the official bond of a city treasurer are liable only for the defaults of their principal during the term for which their bond was given, and where he has held the office for preceding terms their liability is to be determined by considering the term for which they were sureties by itself, precisely as if he had succeeded some one else, they to account for all the public money that came into his hands during that term: Detroit v. Weber, 29 M. 24.

231. In an action upon the bond of a defaulting treasurer the question arose whether the defalcation was confined to his second term of office for which the bond was given. His cash book showed that at the end of his first term there was no deficiency, but he testified that there was "probably" or "possibly" a deficiency, though he did not discover it for a year afterwards. Held, that there was nothing in this to show a defalcation during the first term: Marquette v. Ward, 50 M. 174.

232. Where moneys cannot lawfully be paid out of a public treasury, except upon warrants drawn according to statute, moneys paid by the treasurer without such warrants cannot be set up in reduction of liability on his bond: McCormick v. Bay City, 28 M. 457.

233. Sums actually paid during one term of office are not to be disallowed to the sureties for that term because their principal, in stating his account at the close of the previous term, had credited himself upon his books with the same sums, by false entries made to help force a balance: Detroit v. Weber, 29 M. 24.

234. The sureties in a county clerk's official bond are liable for his act in fraudulently countersigning and filling up a warrant upon the county treasurer which had been signed in blank by the chairman of the board of supervisors. Though this was a misuse of his authority it was nevertheless an official act: People v. Treadway, 17 M. 480.

235. The statute expressly vests all control and use of state prison moneys in the agent, and he cannot be relieved from his responsibility, nor can any of his statutory power be transferred to the clerk, and if the agent allows the clerk to receive and pay out prison funds in his absence it is as the agent's own servant and not officially as clerk: Hulin v. People, 81 M. 323.

236. The statutes and the lawful rules of the inspectors of the state prison are the measure of the official liability of the clerk of the state prison for which his sureties are bound, and it reaches only what would come within a fair construction of each: Ibid.

237. The state prison inspectors cannot, by their rules and regulations, impose upon the clerk any duties that will allow him, as such, to do any part of the agent's responsible work that involves discretion or requires security: Ibid.

238. Where the gist of an action is the alleged embezzlement of funds of the state prison by the clerk of that institution, as their lawful custodian, the question of his liability for falsifying accounts, as a distinct ground of action, is outside the issue; so is the inquiry how far his bond is meant as a guaranty against dishonesty or speculation where his office gives him an opportunity to steal through propinquity to others who have charge of the funds: Ibid.

239. An officer's sureties are not bound by a false settlement of his accounts: Rice v. Sidney, 44 M. 37.

240. In a particular case, in an action against the treasurer's bondsmen, it was held that they were entitled to show a ratification, by the municipal body empowered to settle with the outgoing treasurer, of a transfer, from him to his successor, of the public funds by means of certificate of deposit: Lansing v. Wood, 57 M. 201.

241. Where, under H. S. § 8335, the officer accepting a replevin bond has become liable for the sufficiency of the sureties therein, an action lies against his sureties on his official bond without first obtaining judgment against him: People v. Lee, 65 M. 557.

242. A township treasurer's bond, running to "the people of the state of Michigan," instead of to the township, cannot be sued in the township's name. The state and the township being distinct political organizations, the error in the bond could not be avoided by any averment in the declaration: La Grange v. Chapman, 11 M. 499.

243. A suit on the bond of the clerk of the state prison is properly brought by the people through the attorney-general: Hulin v. People, 31 M. 323.

244. Where a statute designates a public officer as the obligee in a bond required from another officer for the public security, he became the proper person to bring suit on the bond in the absence of statutory provisions: Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 M. 79.

245. In an action by a public officer upon a bond running to him in his official character, the objection that it is not enough to designate the plaintiff by his official title alone, but that his individual name should be given, is one that must be taken before pleading to the merits, and cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court: Ibid.

246. A county may sue in the name of its board of supervisors upon its treasurer's bond given to the board; and any objection that it should have sued in its own name is waived by pleading the general issue: Johr v. St. Clair Supervisors, 88 M. 582.

247. By statute, the party for whose use a sheriff's bond is sued is to be deemed the plaintiff in the action. Where one of two persons jointly entitled to prosecute the action died, it was held that action should be brought in the name of the people for the use of the survivor alone, without joining the administrator of the one deceased: Jackson v. People, 6 M. 154.

248. A declaration on the official bond of a county treasurer in an action to recover moneys which have passed into his hands describes such moneys properly enough as moneys of the county where, as in the case of liquor taxes, the county collects them only as trustee for its towns and villages: Marquette County v. Ward, 50 M. 174.

249. A declaration on a coroner's official bond for taking an insufficient replevin bond sufficiently alleges a breach if it alleges that defendant did not well and faithfully perform his duty in the premises as coroner, and under this allegation makes the necessary specifications: People v. Lee, 65 M. 557.

250. In an action to charge the county treasurer on his bond with failure of duty in not forwarding lists of delinquent tax lands to the auditor-general, plaintiff must show, not merely that returns of such lands were in fact made by the collectors to the treasurer, and that no transcripts were received by him from the auditor-general up to April 1st, but, also, that the transcripts were not forwarded within a reasonable time after actual returns to the treasurer by the collector: Houghton Supervisors v. Rees, 84 M. 481.

VIII. COMPENSATION.

(a) In general.

251. Under Const., art. 4, §§ 15 and 17, the speaker of the house of representatives cannot, as speaker, receive any compensation or mileage beyond what he receives as a representative: People v. Whittemore, 2 M. 306.

252. Where services performed by an officer are within his official duties, either when he takes the office or afterwards imposed, his salary, however inadequate, must be his only compensation: Detroit v. Redfield, 19 M. 376.

253. When the law implies that a particular service is already paid for by an official salary, it can raise no implication of an agreement to pay for it separately: Detroit v. Whittemore, 27 M. 281.

254. Where one who had been employed to conduct a suit on behalf of a city was afterward appointed to the salaried position of city counsellor, whereby the conduct of the suit fell within the line of his official duty, it was held that he could not recover on a quantum meruit for services rendered therein after the appointment was made, and that all previous understandings relating to services which it then became his duty to perform officially terminated by and merged in the appointment, unless otherwise expressly agreed: Ibid.

255. A city controller directed and authorized by the common council to receive, as agent of the city, certain bounty bonds and apply them in the manner designated by the special act authorizing their issue, is entitled to the same compensation that any other person so designated should have, and the law implies a promise to pay what his services are reasonably worth: Detroit v. Redfield, 19 M. 376.

256. A police justice appointed by a common council to act with a committee of its members in revising the city ordinances is entitled to compensation from the city for his labor, whether the revision is passed or not; and the committee has nothing to do with his employment beyond dividing the labor, which, however, would bear on the amount of his services: McBride v. Grand Rapids, 47 M. 236.

257. An officer cannot recover compensation for voluntary services outside of the line of his duties, if rendered on his own responsibility in a case wherein he alone could not have hired their performance: Perry v. Cheboygan, 55 M. 250.

258. A police justice is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services (unless intended to be gratuitous) for extra-official services in aiding the city to collect fee-moneys from the county: McBride v. Grand Rapids, 47 M. 236.

259. The members of the board of water commissioners of the village of Cheboygan render their services, as such, gratuitously: Perry v. Cheboygan, 55 M. 250.

260. Under H. S. § 476 a county clerk whose compensation has been fixed by the board of supervisors at a specified annual salary is entitled to no additional compensation for services as clerk of the board of supervisors: Stetson v. Calhoun Supervisors, 36 M. 10.

261. A county clerk whose salary has been fixed by the board of supervisors is not entitled to extra compensation from the county for services as building committee, and in purchasing wood and trees, etc., except upon a showing of facts from which a contract for payment could be implied: Ibid.

262. Where the board of supervisors has fixed an annual salary for the county clerk to be in full for all services and so understood by him, he cannot afterwards claim extra compensation for services as such clerk, in criminal cases, drawing juries, recording births, deaths, etc., for which the law allows specific fees, with the intent, it would seem, that these should be paid in addition to the sum allowed him as clerk of the board of supervisors: Ibid.

263. A board of supervisors can include in the compensation of the county treasurer the amount received for office charges or payments under the tax-laws: Munger v. Bay Supervisors' Clerk, 88 M. 807.

264. An official stenographer may recover for copies of testimony—other than the one he is required to file upon request—made by him under special contract. So long as stenographers discharge their official duties properly, they are not required to devote all their time to the public service: Langley v. Hill, 63 M. 271.

265. The statutes relating to stenographers contemplate that they shall receive annual salaries, and are accordingly on duty not only during the sessions of court but at other times, so that a per diem allowance by a board of supervisors, in place of a salary, is unauthorized: Stockwell v. Genesee Supervisors, 56 M. 221.

266. A stenographer appointed for a judicial circuit cannot compel the individual counties composing it to pay him specific sums by way of compensation, without showing that their respective quotas toward his statutory salary amount to those sums: Goodale v. Marquette Supervisors, 45 M. 47.

267. A township assessor, in making an assessment that he had no right to make, e. g., for a liquor tax belonging to a village, is not the township's agent, and is not entitled to compensation from it: Decatur v. Decatur Township Board, 83 M. 835.

268. An officer who accepts payment of the amount allowed for his services by the proper auditing board may not make a further claim for the same services: Perry v. Cheboygan, 55 M. 250.

269. Where an officer claims compensation for services not within the scope of his duties they cannot be shown to have been gratuitous by evidence that he made no claim for compensation in conversation with third persons who would have no authority to make compensation or fix the amount thereof. But his statements that he made no claim or did not expect or desire pay would be competent: McBride v. Grand Rapids, 49 M. 239.

(b) Salaries.

270. Under the constitution of 1850, and prior to the present organization of the supreme court, the office of judge of the supreme court was not a distinct office from that of circuit judge, but two sets of duties were attached to one office under the latter designation. And the salary of the circuit judges, as fixed by the constitution, was a remuneration for all duties attached to the office, and could not be increased by the legislature: People v. Auditor-General, 5 M. 193.

271. It is competent for the legislature to provide, as it did in 1863 (Laws of 1863, p. 332), that the salary of the clerk of the police court of Detroit should be prescribed by the common council of Detroit, notwithstanding it was payable by the county of Wayne; and the county board of auditors could not reduce the salary after the common council had fixed it: People v. Wayne Auditors, 13 M. 233.

272. A board of auditors, after fixing a salary, cannot change such salary without some further action, spread upon its record: Miller v. Wayne Auditors, 41 M. 4.

273. Acceptance of a salaried public office does not establish contract relations between the officer and the public whereby the latter must continue to pay the same salary as was paid at the time of the appointment to office: Wyandotte v. Drennan, 46 M. 478.

274. The legislature has ample power to fix the salaries of public officers, and, unless restrained by the constitution, to change them at any time, even during the official term, and it can delegate this power to municipal councils: Ibid.

275. A probate judge is a state, not a county, officer, and under the constitution his salary cannot be controlled by the board of supervisors, which has at most the delegated power of fixing the salary once, and cannot change it, if at all, until the legislature directs: Douvielle v. Manistee Supervisors, 40 M. 585; Chapman v. Berrien, 50 M. 811.

276. Act 188 of 1871 gave the board of supervisors power to fix the salary of the judge of probate. Act 140 of 1873 amended it, but did not alter the effect of this provision. Held, that the mere fact of the amendment and reenactment of the empowering clause did not authorize a board to fix again a salary which they had once fixed: Chapman v. Berrien, 50 M. 811.

277. An official salary may be deemed to bind the parties paying and receiving it if no other compensation is provided by law, and the officer accepts it as fixed and goes into office on those terms; but this presumption does not arise where the salary has been cut down after the officer's election: Douvielle v. Manitowish Supervisors, 40 M. 585.

278. A probate judge's silent acceptance of his salary as reduced by the board of supervisors from the amount previously allowed him is an implied assent to their fixing it at the lower rate, and precludes him from claiming more: Thomas v. St. Clair Supervisors, 45 M. 479.

279. A protest is ineffective unless made to the body having power to act upon the subject-matter. If a salaried officer protests that the amount of salary allowed him is less than he is entitled to, it is of no effect to make the protest to the functionary entrusted with the mere duty of paying him, if the latter has no part in fixing the salary, and is under no obligation to report the protest to the body which fixes it: Ibid.

280. Const., art. 10, § 10, does not give the Wayne county board of auditors power to fix the compensation of its members, and a statute fixing salaries is valid: Kennedy v. Gies, 25 M. 83.

281. H. S. § 558 empowered boards of supervisors to fix the compensation of the prosecuting attorney from time to time. Act 154 of 1879 provided that annual salaries should be fixed by the board on or before the 31st of October, before the officers' terms began, and should not be changed during the term. Held, that this would not prevent a board which had fixed a salary before act 154 was passed from changing it for the second year of the prosecuting attorney's term. Such a construction does not make the act retrospective: Knappen v. Barry Supervisors, 46 M. 22.

282. The act of a board of supervisors in fixing the salary of a prosecuting attorney does not constitute a contract between the latter and the county; and where the constitution does not prevent, the legislature can authorize the board to change the salary so far as it has not already been earned, even though a part of the official duties are duties to the state: Ibid.

283. The three counties comprising a judicial circuit, through their board of supervisors, assented to the employment of a stenographer without stipulating as to his compensation, and this, under the statute, left his salary at $2,000. This sum was apportioned among the counties and paid for four years, when one of the counties was detached from the circuit. Held, that the previous assent of the counties to the employment of a stenographer at the statutory salary did not continue to be binding after this change, but that they were entitled to make new arrangements: Hitchcock v. Blackman, 47 M. 146.

284. One of the counties continued without objection for three years to pay its proportion of $2,000, but the supervisors then voted to reduce the sum to be paid by them to $800. The stenographer received this without protest for four years, when the supervisors withdrew their assent to the employment and refused to pay longer. Held, that under these circumstances it must be deemed that no arrangement has been made, except so far as one party has paid and the other received money in satisfaction of services previously rendered: Ibid.

285. The stenographers' act (H. S. § 6504) contemplates that a person appointed stenographer should hold his office indefinitely, and independently of the county and the electors; that the appointment may be made for an entire judicial circuit whatever the number of counties it contains; and that it may be made for a single county when the circuit contains no more. But the entire circuit cannot be compelled to pay the appointee more than the statutory salary of $2,000, and this should be apportioned by the circuit judge among the counties composing it (§ 6511): Goodale v. Marquette Supervisors, 45 M. 47.

286. The city council of Cadillac has power to fix the health officer's salary, and the board of health cannot bind the council by assuming to fix it: Coleman v. Cadillac, 49 M. 322.

As to salary of physician employed by BOARD OF HEALTH, see that title, § 6.

287. Where a common council is empowered by statute to fix the salary of an officer, merely appropriating for payment a less sum than had been paid before does not fix the salary at the smaller sum if the council continues to allow monthly bills at the former rate: Fountain v. Jackson, 50 M. 260.

288. Where the statute provides that an officer's salary shall be fixed by a board of public works and approved by the common council, the latter body alone cannot reduce it: Fountain v. Jackson, 50 M. 15.

That salary of member of board of public works could be reduced during his term of office, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, § 130.

289. An officer de jure cannot enforce as against the public the payment of the salary of his office while another is de facto the incumbent: Wayne Auditors v. Benoit, 20 M. 176.

290. Where a person duly elected has obtained judgment of ouster against one who has kept him out of office under cover of a certificate of election from the returning board, he may qualify after obtaining judgment, and is entitled to recover damages for the time he was excluded, and the entire official salary from the beginning of the official term, without deduction for the services of the incumbent or his own earnings while ousted. The salary belongs to the office and is independent of the amount of work personally done by the officer: People v. Miller, 24 M. 458.

291. A legally elected officer, duly qualified and standing ready to perform the duties of his office, is entitled to the salary, if it has not been paid, even though debarred from the performance of his duties by an intruder acting in good faith: Comstock v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 397.

As to enforcement of payment by MANDAMUS, see that title, §§ 161, 162.

(c) Fees.

292. A legislative intention to give unearned fees cannot be inferred from uncertain terms in a statute: Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 30 M. 253.

293. A legal "folio," in computing fees as compensation, is 100 words (H. S. § 9034): Thornton v. Sturgis, 38 M. 639.

294. The fees allowed by statute for services in certain cases, over which the board of supervisors have no control, cannot include anything not clearly within their terms: Lee v. Ionia Supervisors, 68 M. 330.

295. The statute of 1840, allowing to "the secretary of state, auditor-general, any clerk," etc., one dollar a day "for attending on subpoena with bills, records or other written evidence," was held not to apply to a justice in attendance with his docket. He is not such a clerk as was intended by the statute: Pren-tiss v. Webster, 2 D. 5.

296. A police justice's trial fee of one dollar may be charged in all cases, however short the trial, but not where the case was dismissed or a nolle prosequi entered: Grand Rapids v. Kent Supervisors, 40 M. 481.

297. A justice can have no trial fee in a criminal cause where defendant pleads guilty: Potts v. Jackson Supervisors, 47 M. 635.

298. An agreement by a justice of the peace with a litigant that he will charge no fees unless the judgment in his case is collected is void, and prevents the justice from recovering his fees if the party refuses to pay them: Willem v. Bateson, 63 M. 309.

As to payment of justice's fee for return, see APPEAL, §§ 490, 491.

299. Where the law fixes the sheriff's fees for services, as in the case of services for collections on execution, it is not competent for him to make an agreement with the debtor or with his receptor for goods seized on execution for any additional compensation: Burk v. Webb, 32 M. 173.

300. A sheriff who has levied only on real estate is not entitled to poundage until the property taken is sold or money collected on the judgment; and this is especially so where statutory provision is made for the payment of his fees: Peck v. City National Bank, 51 M. 353.

301. A sheriff's charges for executing a justice's mittimus, issued at the request of bail in criminal cases for the re-arrest of their principal (H. S. § 9488), are not a public charge: Kinney v. Kent Supervisors, 51 M. 620.

302. A sheriff has no legal right to traveling fees for writs not served: Clark v. Ingham Supervisors, 38 M. 658.

303. A sheriff has no statutory right to fees for travel in bringing back goods seized on a search-warrant, he already having been allowed for service of the writ and travel to place of service: Vincent v. Mecosta Supervisors, 52 M. 340.

304. A sheriff is not entitled to payment for merely colorable attendance in court, when he can produce no certificate from the court showing his attendance, and when he has, in fact, been employed elsewhere. But he should be paid for any substantial performance of his duty: Ibid.

305. The fee allowed to the sheriff by H. S. § 9055 for every prisoner committed or discharged is not allowable for every time a prisoner is taken to court and brought back to jail; the words "committed" and "discharged" refer only to the beginning and end of the term of imprisonment, and between those periods the prisoner, unless he escapes, is in continual custody: Lee v. Ionia Supervisors, 68 M. 330.

306. Sheriffs' fees for board of prisoners in criminal cases are not fixed by law and are within the discretion of the board of supervisors: Cicotte v. Wayne County, 59 M. 509.

307. H. S. § 9055, giving such sums to the sheriff for services not otherwise provided for as the board of supervisors may allow, does not apply to services performed by him not in the capacity of sheriff but in that of an agent to serve a requisition for a fugitive from justice: Follansbee v. St. Clair Supervisors, 67 M. 614 (Nov. 10, '87).

308. The county was liable for the sheriff's fees in prosecutions under the prohibitory liquor-law: Mixer v. Manistee Supervisors, 26 M. 422.

309. A constable who refuses to serve process unless greater fees are promised than the law allows cannot recover upon such agreement or upon the quantum meruit: Andrews v. Wilcoxson, 66 M. 553.

310. Under H. S. § 9054, allowing a constable a per diem compensation for attending court on the order of a magistrate, no fee can be charged for constructive attendance, nor for actual attendance unless a trial or examination is being held: Hickey v. Oakland Supervisors, 62 M. 94.

311. Constables in Detroit are entitled to compensation for serving the criminal process of justices of the peace: Allor v. Wayne Auditors, 48 M. 76.

312. H. S. § 9056, fixing the fees of a circuit court commissioner in criminal examinations, applies where he takes the evidence in person. Where it is done by a stenographer the board of supervisors is the final judge of proper compensation: Pistorius v. Saginaw, 51 M. 125.

313. A defendant's refusal to pay stenographer's fees does not exclude his defence, certainly after trial has begun: Wheaton v. Atlantic Giant Powder Co., 41 M. 718.

314. That a town clerk remits or gives credit for his fees for filing a mortgage concerns none but the officer: People v. Bristol, 35 M. 28.

As to township clerk's fees for return to certiorari, see CERTIORARI, § 117.

315. Under the statutes in force in 1861 and 1862 the township-treasurer had the right to retain of his own authority only two per cent. of the taxes of 1861 collected by him for his fees, where neither the electors of the township, nor the supervisor, had fixed his compensation at a higher rate: Texas v. Wager, 13 M. 39.

316. Whether the supervisor has the right to fix the compensation when the electors have neglected to do so, quere: Ibid.

317. Where the electors did not determine what percentage should be added to the taxes for the collection expenses, and the supervisor added two and a half per cent., and, in his warrant for their collection, directed the treasurer to retain that amount for his fees, and the treasurer retained four per cent., paying over the remainder, it was held that he was liable to the township for the amount he had retained over two and a half per cent.: Ibid.

318. The tax-collector in Detroit in 1855-56 was not entitled to collect from the city a percentage for his fees on taxes returned uncollected: Kelsey v. Detroit, 7 M. 315.

319. Under the charter of Grand Rapids the city marshal cannot claim fees upon local assessments collected by the city clerk after the marshal has returned the rolls as uncollected after the expiration of the warrants attached: Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 30 M. 253.

320. An amendment to the tax law allowing sale to be made to pay the marshal's fees will not apply to assessments made before the passage of the law unless plainly so intended: Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395.

That warrant for collection of local assessment may include percentage for collector's fee, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 203, 204.

321. Retention of fees by an officer from the proceeds of a wrongful levy renders him liable for conversion: Bringard v. Stelluragen, 41 M. 54.

Fees as costs, and taxation thereof, see COSTS.

PARENT AND CHILD.

- I. CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.
- II. ADOPTION; EMANCIPATION.
- III. RIGHT TO CHILD'S EARNINGS.
- IV. OBLIGATION TO SUPPORT, ETC.
- V. DEALINGS BETWEEN PARENTS AND CHILDREN.
- VI. MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

As to the disabilities, etc., of INFANTS, see that title.

I. CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.

As to GUARDIANSHIP, see that title.

1. Neither parent has any right to the custody of a child as against the child's own welfare: Corrie v. Corrie, 42 M. 509.

2. Where the custody of children is disputed by their parents the children are considered to be as deeply interested as either of the parents, and the court is not disposed, even in a case of parental misconduct, to take any discretionary step that may prejudice them: Rowe v. Rowe, 28 M. 353.

3. In proceedings by habeas corpus to determine which parent is entitled to a child's custody, there should be full inquiry and examination on oath to enable the court to decide what the child's welfare requires: Corrie v. Corrie, 42 M. 509.

4. Habeas corpus will not be granted as a matter of right to change the custody of children where it does not clearly appear that such change would be for their interest: Heather Children's Case, 50 M. 261.

5. The court was equally divided upon the question whether habeas corpus should issue to compel the production of a child under guardianship here who had been removed from the state and detained abroad: Jackson's Case, 15 M. 417.

6. In a particular case, the court, being equally divided as to the question of a parent's right to the custody of his child, dismissed a writ of habeas corpus without deciding rights or prejudicing future remedies: Stockman's Case, 56 M. 218.

7. A resident of Washington, D. C., on his wife's death, placed, in compliance with his wife's dying wish, their child, a girl seventeen months old, in the custody of his wife's parents, who lived in Michigan, and who kept the child some years, except during a few months when she was in Washington with her father. In order to regain the child, whose health she feared would suffer in Washington, the maternal grandmother agreed in writing to return her when the father desired. Such return being refused, the father instituted habeas corpus proceedings wherein the question was not finally settled, the child, however, remaining with its mother's parents. The father died, leaving a will appointing his parents guardians of the child, who was about six years old, and they qualified as such in Washington, soon after the maternal grandparents qualified as guardians in Michigan. Upon habeas corpus brought by the father's parents it appeared that the Michigan guardians were proper persons and well able to care for the child, who was now nine years old, and who desired to remain with them, while there was some evidence against the fitness of the petitioners, whose claim was, therefore, denied: Stockman's Case, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

8. Where a divorce is granted to a wife for cruelty she is prima facie entitled to the custody of very young children of the marriage; and children three and five years old were awarded to her though the proofs did not show her to be entirely without fault: Klein v. Klein, 47 M. 518.

9. A decree in a divorce case dissolving the marriage and providing for a child's custody will not be altered upon a petition that sets up no new facts or change of circumstances: Chandler v. Chandler, 24 M. 176.

10. A mother is not to be deprived of the custody of her child by the father's testamentary appointment of a guardian for it (H. S. § 6306): Goss v. Stone, 63 M. 319.

11. Nor is the mother bound by any order of a probate judge sending her child to the state public school without notice to her where she was within the county, or to any of the child's friends or relations: Goodchild v. Foster, 51 M. 599.

12. The right to adjudicate as to children's custody belongs to the courts alone, and circuit court commissioners cannot act: Rowe v. Rowe, 28 M. 353.

II. ADOPTION; EMANCIPATION.

13. Where, on his father's death, a child was adopted by his uncle, who stood in loco parentis to him, and to whom he sustained the relation of an adopted child till he came of age, it is presumed twenty years from his majority, if nothing appears to the contrary, that his mother assented to his arrangement with his uncle, whatever it was, and to his emancipation from any parental control or rights that she could have asserted at the time: Sword v. Keith, 31 M. 247.

14. Where one has lived in another's household from early youth to the age of thirty-six years, the two treating each other as daughter and father, she may be regarded as a member of his family though not related to him by blood or marriage; and she has an insurable interest in his life: Carmichael v. Northwestern Mutual Ben. Ass'n, 51 M. 494.

15. A girl who had been practically though not formally adopted into a family in pursuance of an understanding that she shall be in all things as a daughter may use the family name as her own in bringing suit: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

16. A minor who has been adopted into a family, and performed labor for his adopted father as a child would for a parent, cannot recover for his services without an understanding or agreement that he shall; but if there is such an understanding, they constitute a valid consideration for a subsequent promise to pay: Sword v. Keith, 31 M. 247.

17. Where an infant is taken into a family the presumption is that neither its support nor its service is to be recompensed except as the one compensates the other: Thorp v. Batesman, 37 M. 68.

18. It seems that the probate judge has no authority, even on the joint application of the natural and the adoptive parents, to revoke his order of adoption made under H. S. § 6379. As to the effect of revocation of adoption, see Morrison v. Sessions, 70 M. 297.

19. Emancipation may take place suddenly and by express arrangement, or it may occur gradually and by conduct implying mutual assent; and even in the latter case it may be brought about in a short time: Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 M. 310.

III. RIGHT TO CHILD'S EARNINGS.

20. The earnings of a minor son belong to his father unless the father has given him his time and earnings: Allen v. Allen, 60 M. 635.

21. But a request to charge the jury imperatively and unqualifiedly that a father is entitled to his minor son's earnings and wages should be rejected: Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 M. 310.

22. And a father cannot recover for wages earned before her majority by a daughter whom he had manumitted, and where he has made no contract with her employer in regard to such wages: Bell v. Bumpus, 63 M. 375.

23. Where a father sues for the value of his minor son's services, and the defence of emancipation previous to the son's going to work for defendant is set up, an inquiry as to whether the boy did not ask and obtain his father's permission before going to work for a third person named was properly excluded where the record did not show at what time such other service began, or how long prior to the engagement with defendant: Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 M. 310.

24. In such a suit defendant may show that the boy in the course of his service embezzled money, thus rendering his service not only valueless but positively injurious: Ibid.

25. Where a parent sued in assumpsit for the wages of his minor son, wrongfully harbored by one who had enticed him away from his father's house, it was held that, in the absence of any evidence or claim that the parties ever actually agreed together at all in regard to the minor's services, the assumpsit could not be so referred to any real agreement of a date later than that of defendant's enticement, as to imply that it rested on a distinct arrangement, which left the original wrong as a ground for a separate suit: Thompson v. Howard, 31 M. 309.

IV. OBLIGATION TO SUPPORT, ETC.

26. Where a minor son spends most of his time away from home and is allowed to retain most of the wages which he receives for his labor, a dealer who furnishes him clothing cannot recover its value from his father if the latter has never authorized the son to buy on his credit, or authorized or confirmed the transaction, and if there is no showing that the articles furnished were in any proper sense necessities, or that the father has failed in his duty to supply the son's wants; Tyler v. Arnold, 47 M. 564.

27. A father is under legal obligation to provide for the support of his children, even if they remain with their mother after her divorce; and as against the public and the children he cannot escape the duty: Courtright v. Courtright, 40 M. 633.

28. The parental duty of giving personal care and protection to children is distinct from the duty to support them: Ibid.

29. Divorced persons agreed in writing that certain of their children might stay with their mother as much of the time as they wished, but that she should make no claim against the father for their support, and in consideration of this the father agreed that they might remain as aforesaid, and that he would of his own free will do for them towards their support, maintenance and education what seemed to him right, and at least would provide in store pay and provisions each year for five years an amount in value equal to fifty dollars. One child remained with its mother one year, another five, and another six, and she had to give them her personal care and protection. Held, that the father pay the mother $50 a year for five years, not as support due the children, but as recompense to the wife for taking sole personal care of them: Ibid.

30. A widow is not legally bound to support her step-children: Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 240.

31. A father is liable for the support of his adult son in case he becomes a public charge: Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 M. 280.

32. But to render the father liable such adult son must be a poor person within the meaning of H. S. § 1741: Clinton v. Laning, 61 M. 355.

33. For the damages recoverable by a father compelled to support his adult son permanently disabled by defendant's fault, see Ibid. And see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, § 56.

34. The proceedings under H. S. § 1742 to compel a son to support his mother are summary, enforceable by attachment, and not reviewable on writ of error: Smith v. Lapeer Poor Superintendents, 34 M. 58.

As to proceedings to compel support of bastard, see BASTARDY.

V. DEALINGS BETWEEN PARENT AND CHILD.

35. In dealings between father and son there is no implied promise on either's part to pay for board, clothes, money and the like furnished in consequence of the relationship, and an express promise must be shown to support a recovery: Allen v. Allen, 60 M. 635.

36. In the absence of express agreement a widow is not liable to her daughter-in-law with whom she lives for the support of herself and her imbecile son; the law implies no promise to pay by reason of the relationship: Howe v. North, 69 M. 272.

And see supra, §§ 16, 17; CONTRACTS, § 99.

37. Where a son living in his father's family expends money at his father's request and with his knowledge and assent in building a house for him, the father is liable to the son for the amount so expended, unless there was a different understanding between them: Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 44 M. 413.

38. A father's settlement with his son for services after he has reached his majority is not to be discouraged, and the transfer of property made in satisfaction will not be disturbed in favor of the father's administrator where there is no proof of fraud or undue advantage: Bowen v. Lockwood, 26 M. 441.

39. Under the circumstances of the case a son's agreement to support his parents (for which they deeded their property to him) was held to imply support at his home and not elsewhere unless he failed in his duty: Pratt v. Pratt, 43 M. 174.

40. In an action for defendant's breach of a contract to provide a home for and support his father-in-law, in consideration of the latter's paying over all his wages to the former, the extent of the provocation for plaintiff's abandoning the arrangement is for the jury: Ehlert v. Klenger, 43 M. 61.

41. A son whose parents have turned over to him their property in consideration of his supporting them stands as their guardian and may take no advantage in dealing with them; and a mortgage extorted by him will be reduced to the actual consideration: Bowe v. Boue, 42 M. 195.

42. A son's dealings carried on while acting in a fiduciary capacity for his aged father, and which involved conveyances to the son for little or no consideration, were rescinded, and the court refused to allow the son for his outlays as he had been in possession of the property: Thorn v. Thorn, 51 M. 167.

43. Where a mother whose mind is weakened by age has dealings in reference to her property with a son who has control of it, and relies upon his integrity not to mislead her, the dealings must be characterized by perfect good faith, and the burden of establishing fairness is on those whose claims are based on such dealings: Crawford v. Hoeft, 58 M. 1. See CONTRACTS, § 597.

44. Under an agreement that a mortgagor should assume the burden of the mortgagee's undertaking with the latter's mother to support her for life, the compensation for which agreement was to be regulated in a particular manner and to be allowed upon the mortgage, such mortgage was held, after some years, to have been satisfied: Gallup v. Jackson, 47 M. 475.

45. An arrangement for the immediate and actual transfer of personalty to a son in consideration of his undertaking to support his parents, if performed, gives title as upon a present sale and authorizes the son to hold as against his father's administrator: Chambers v. Hill, 34 M. 523.

46. A son's agreement to support his parents during life in consideration that he is to be vested with what personalty is on their premises need not be written where his taking possession and proceeding to perform amount to a delivery and part payment: Hill v. Chambers, 30 M. 422.

47. An agreement by a daughter and her husband to support her father during his life is a sufficient consideration for a conveyance of the father's lands to the daughter, and, having been executed, upholds the conveyance as against a previous will: Goff v. Thompson, H. 60.

Further as to agreements for support and conveyances in consideration thereof, see EQUITY, §§ 251, 262, 266, 279, §16, 336.

48. A father's conveyance of land to his son without consideration is valid as against the former's administrator where no creditors claim: Warren v. Tobey, 32 M. 45.

49. Payment for land by a parent or one in loco parentis, title being taken in the child's name, raises a presumption of a donation or advancement, not of an intention to create a trust: Waterman v. Seeley, 28 M. 77.

50. Less positive and equivocal testimony is required to establish the delivery of a gift from a father to his children than between persons not related: Love v. Francis, 63 M. 181.

Further as to gifts between parent and child, see GIFTS, §§ 1, 6, 8, 13, 16-20, 27.

51. Where an aged father conveys land to his son, it being expected that the former shall remain thereon, the fact that the price paid is low (though not grossly inadequate) is not evidence that the son knew the father could not make a conveyance free of liens, nor would the fact of relationship indicate such knowledge: Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 M. 138.

52. In a particular case the testimony was held to show that a son was honestly indebted to his father in an amount sufficient to form an adequate consideration for a conveyance from the former to the latter, and that there was no fraud as against other creditors in the transfer: State Bank of Fenton v. Whittle, 48 M. 1; Woodhull v. Whittle, 68 M. 575.

As to preference of parent or child by the other as creditor, and as to validity as against creditors of agreements and transfers between parent and child, see FRAUD, §§ 133-135, 146, 148, 169-173, 249-251; also, EQUITY, § 406.

Reformation of mortgage wrongly taken in son's name, see EQUITY, § 817.

VI. MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

That legitimacy of children is presumed, see EVIDENCE, § 1526.

That children should be made parties where their interests are involved and legitimacy is questioned, see INFANTS, § 80.

53. A father is not liable for injury from his son's careless driving, unless the son was acting for his father or under his control: Brohl v. Lingeman, 41 M. 711.

54. A parent who allows an unattended child to ride on a street-car is not chargeable with negligence: East Saginaw C. R. Co. v. Bohn, 27 M. 503.

55. A father is entitled to assert the rights of his minor child to admission to the public school: People v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 M. 400, 413.

56. A parent cannot release her child's right of action for an injury: Power v. Harlow, 57 M. 107.

57. Without express authority legal counsel cannot be engaged by a father for his son lately a minor: Carrell v. Potter, 23 M. 377.

58. Children cannot intervene in a divorce suit between their parents, or seek to have set aside for fraud a divorce granted their mother: Baugh v. Baugh, 37 M. 59.

License to parent extended to child, see LICENSE, § 19.

PARTIES.

I. IN WHAT NAME ACTION MAY BE BROUGHT OR DEFENDED.

II. PLAINTIFFS.

(a) Who may be plaintiff; real party in interest.

1. In general.

2. In case of assignment, etc.

(b) Joinder of plaintiffs.

III. DEFENDANTS.

(a) Who proper and who necessary parties defendant.

(b) Joinder of defendants.

IV. MISJOINDER OR DEFECT OF PARTIES, HOW TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF.

V. TRANSFERS PENDING SUIT; BRINGING IN NEW PARTIES; SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES.

VI. PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY.

As to who have right of action and who are liable, see the titles of the various actions.

As to parties in equity, see EQUITY, IV.

As to parties in chancery foreclosure, see MORTGAGES, X, (c).

As to parties in suits for SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, see that title.

I. IN WHAT NAME ACTION MAY BE BROUGHT OR DEFENDED.

See EQUITY, IV, (a).

1. The common law requires the process to state with certainty who are the parties, and does not sanction the use of a copartnership name, or generally allow anything else than the christian names and surnames of the suitors, and this is still the law of the circuit courts (see H. S. § 6872, as to justices' courts): Barber v. Smith, 41 M. 138, 142; Smith v. Canfield, 8 M. 493.

2. H. S. § 6872, permitting suits to be brought in justices' courts in partnership names, amendable afterwards by inserting the partners' names, does not apply to cases where there is no partnership in fact: Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 M. 449.

3. When a plaintiff, as administratrix, declares on the common counts in assumpsit, and states an indebtedness to the plaintiff, without showing any indebtedness to the intestate, and does not, except by the addition of the words "administratrix upon the estate," etc., at the commencement of the declaration, show that the plaintiff brings suit as administratrix, the several counts must be construed as causes of action accruing to the plaintiff in her individual character: Barnum v. Stone, 27 M. 332.

4. The use just after the plaintiff's name of the phrase "for the use and benefit of" some person named other than the plaintiff, in the beginning of a declaration on an insurance policy, no assignment being set forth, and no allusion made in the body of the declaration to any other interest or title than such as the plaintiff held, has no force to make the issue different from what it would have been if the phrase had been left out: Clay F. and M. Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt, etc. Manuf. Co., 31 M. 346.

5. Where suit is brought upon a contract in the name of the promisee, "for the use and benefit of" another person named, the promisee is the legal plaintiff, and it is not necessary to show on the trial that the contract has been assigned to the person for whose use the suit is brought: Farwell v. Dewey, 12 M. 436.

6. Where the law empowers a person who has a claim or cause of action to authorize another to begin and prosecute suit thereon it will be for the use and benefit of the person really entitled; the claim or cause of action is not assigned to the plaintiff: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

7. An administrator may sue either in his individual or his representative character for money had and received after the death of his intestate for the use of the estate, but for money received in the intestate's life-time he must sue in his representative character: Barnum v. Stone, 27 M. 332.

8. A foreign executor can sue in his own name on a note belonging to the estate and payable to bearer; but if the note is not negotiable, or is payable to order and not indorsed, the executor should sue in his official capacity: Knapp v. Lee, 42 M. 41.

9. Before the probate court has passed upon the title or possession the general administrator only can bring suit for personal property in the intestate's possession and control: Palmer v. Palmer, 55 M. 293.

10. A devisee or legatee cannot represent a decedent's estate in the prosecution or defence of suits: Hillman v. Schwenk, 68 M. 297 (March 2, '88).

11. A society that cannot be incorporated because organized to resist the enforcement of laws cannot sue in its society name for the collection of a debt: Schuetzen Bund v. Agitations Verein, 44 M. 318.

12. The bond of the clerk of the state prison is properly sued by the people through the attorney-general: Hulin v. People, 31 M. 323.

13. A county may sue in the name of the board of supervisors upon its treasurer's bond to the board: Johr v. St. Clair Supervisors, 38 M. 532.

14. The township cannot sue in its own name on its treasurer's bond running to the people of the state: La Grange v. Chapman, 11 M. 499.

15. The legislature has power to direct in what name suits by cities, villages and townships shall be brought: Smith v. Adrian, 1 M. 495; Romeo v. Chapman, 2 M. 179.

16. Prosecution for penalty under R. S. 1846, ch. 41, for selling spirituous liquor without license was properly brought in the name of the village: Smith v. Adrian, 1 M. 495.

17. And, in the case of the village of Romeo, should have been so brought instead of in the name of the president and trustees of the village: Romeo v. Chapman, 2 M. 179.

18. A suit in behalf of a village should ordinarily be brought in the corporate name, though exceptions may be made by statute; and where the statute makes the president and trustees ex officio highway commissioners, a suit for the village against mill-owners to recover the cost of constructing a bridge on a street over their mill-race should be brought by them in their official name as commissioners, not in their name as a common council. But misnomer is curable by amendment: Merrill v. Kalamazoo, 35 M. 211.

19. Where a bequest had been made to the "corporation of the village of New Baltimore," and a probate order granted leave to sue upon the residuary legatee's bond "for the use and benefit of the common council of New Baltimore," suit was properly brought for the use and benefit of the village of New Baltimore: Hatheway v. Sackett, 32 M. 97.

20. The legislature has power to direct what officer shall bring any class of public actions, and what shall be done with sums collected therein: Denver v. White River Log & Booming Co., 51 M. 472.

21. All public officers, even if not expressly authorized by statute, have a capacity to sue commensurate with their public trusts and duties: Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 M. 79.

22. A public officer designated by statute as the obligee in a bond required from another officer is the proper person to bring suit thereon, and the objection that the declaration should give his individual name as well as his official character must be taken before pleading to the merits: Ibid.

23. Supervisors being ex officio assessors of their respective townships, and required by law to preserve and keep all books, assessment rolls and other papers belonging to their office, may bring suits in their official character to recover possession of such rolls: Phenix v. Clark, 2 M. 327.

24. H. S. § 2121, authorizing the supervisor to sue in his name of office on behalf of his township for the penalty for neglecting to kill a dog that has bitten any person, etc., does not authorize the supervisor of a city ward to sue: Bizby v. Steketee, 44 M. 613.

25. Actions for injuries to highways and bridges cannot be brought by the township in which they are situated, but must be brought by the overseer of highways, or, if he is disqualified, by the commissioner of highways: Denver v. White River Boom Co., 51 M. 472.

26. The authorities of a village become moving parties in the character of plaintiffs or petitioners when they decide to commence proceedings to open a street: People v. Brighton, 20 M. 57.

27. Omission to sue a municipal officer by his official title is not a substantial objection if his liability is shown: Hart v. Port Huron, 46 M. 428.

28. The declaration in an action by a commissioner of highways against the county surveyor for his failure to lay out a quarter section line correctly is not demurrable on the ground that defendant is sued in his individual character while described in his official: Highway Commissioner v. Beebe, 55 M. 187.

II. PLAINTIFFS.

(a) Who may be plaintiff; real party in interest.

1. In general.

See EQUITY, IV, (b).

As to who may bring EJECTMENT, see that title, §§ 18-60; also, DOWER, §§ 82, 85.

As to who can sue for injuries caused by sales of liquors, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, §§ 30, 31.

29. It is the policy of our legislation to permit the real party in interest to sue in his own name: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

30. A servant, agent or attorney cannot enforce in his own name the rights of his principal or master: Police Justice v. Kent Supervisors, 38 M. 421.

31. An undisclosed principal who is the only person entitled may sue upon a sale made by his agent: Jenness v. Shaw, 85 M. 20.

32. A principal's right to sue upon a contract made by his agent is established if the agent notifies the other party that he must account to the principal; such a notification operates as an equitable assignment of the agent's interest in the contract: Dustin v. Radford, 57 M. 163.

33. Where an agent enters into written contract for his principal in his own name, the principal must enforce it in the name of the nominal contracting party: Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 M. 489, 496.

34. An action at law must generally be brought in the name of the party who holds the legal interest as distinguished from the equitable right, even though the latter embraces the exclusive interest in the benefit to be derived from the property: Ibid.; Forrest v. O'Donnell, 42 M. 556.

35. A third person cannot sue for damages growing out of the mere breach of a contract between others; e. g., the failure to furnish machinery of the strength required by contract does not give the purchaser's servant a right of action for an injury caused him by a breakdown: Necker v. Harvey, 49 M. 517.

36. When one agrees to pay separate sums of money to two persons named, on land being conveyed to him, each of them may sue upon the agreement: Rorabacher v. Lee, 16 M. 169.

37. A written contract for the transportation of goods entered into by the real owner of the property in the name of those from whom he purchased — they having been the original shippers by another line, from which defendants received them, and required by defendants to be thus made in the name of such original shippers — may be sued upon by said real owner of the property in their names: Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 M. 489.

38. At common law no one could sue on an express contract except the parties to it. Under the equitable action for money had and received a beneficiary may sometimes sue, but this can only be where the parties have given him such a right as transfers the fund to his control: Davis v. Lenawee County Savings Bank, 53 M. 163.

39. An agreement by which A. undertakes to pay to B. $125, and to C. $110, provided D. should convey a certain portion of land according to the conditions of a bond executed by D. to A., gives a separate right of action to B. and C., upon which each can sue after the condition has been performed by D. or performance thereof been waived by A.: Rorabacher v. Lee, 16 M. 169.

40. The rule that a stranger to the consideration cannot sue on the contract does not apply where the contract was made directly with him, and he is therefore in privity with the defendant: Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 53 M. 238.

41. A. cannot base an action at law against B. merely on B.'s promise to C. to pay C.'s debt to A.: Hicks v. McGarry, 38 M. 667.

42. An action cannot be maintained on a promise made to a third party based on a consideration moving from such third party, there being no averment of a promise to the plaintiff: Pipp v. Reynolds, 20 M. 88.

43. A covenant in the assignment of a contract, by which the assignee agrees to pay certain specified liabilities of the assignor under the contract, does not enable a party to whom the assignor is indebted to bring an action for such indebtedness against the assignee: Turner v. McCarty, 22 M. 265.

44. The mortgagee of land cannot sue on a promise made to the mortgager by the latter's grantee to pay the mortgage, because it is a promise to a third person: Booth v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 43 M. 299.

45. Suit was brought in the name of parties to a written contract for the benefit of assignees of such contract, and was sought to be supported by proof of labor done by the assignees in pursuance of an arrangement between them and the contracting party modifying the terms of the contract, which arrangement was not shown to have been authorized or assented to by the assignors. Held, that the action could not be maintained, as the modified contract was not a contract between the parties to the record: Litchfield v. Garratt, 10 M. 426.

46. An action for rent must be brought in the lessor's name where the lease has not been assigned: Hecht v. Ferris, 45 M. 376.

47. Where a lessor has conveyed the reversion with the rent, or has assigned the rent, retaining the reversion, the grantee or assignee, as the case may be, may sue for the rent: Perrin v. Lepper, 34 M. 292.

48. The grantee of leased land, not the grantor who by agreement has a beneficial interest in part of the rent, is the proper person to sue on the lease for rents: Hansen v. Prince, 45 M. 519.

49. Where, by arrangement between a minor and his father with a third party, the latter undertook to obtain without charge the highest bounty attainable on the minor's enlistment in the army, and he did obtain bounties but failed to account in part, held, that the father might sue in his own name for the moneys: Spencer v. Towles, 18 M. 9.

50. A father who has employed a person to collect damages from the seducer of his daughter may sue such person for money obtained but withheld: Heimbach v. Weinberg, 18 M. 48.

51. A party to a contract cannot sue upon a note deposited by the other party with a third person merely as security for fulfilling the contract, where the damages for non-fulfilment have not been determined in a suit upon the contract: Rumney v. Coville, 51 M. 186.

52. An individual stockholder cannot, at least before the corporate authorities refuse, on proper application, to act, bring suit for a wrong that constitutes a joint injury to all the stockholders, such as a conspiracy with some of the directors to suspend and destroy the company's business: Talbot v. Scripps, 31 M. 268.

53. A single tax-payer in a school district cannot individually sue the moderator to recover back his part of a tax which the district was compelled to levy because of the moderator's illegal action: Wall v. Eastman, 1 M. 268.

54. Personal actions do not descend to heirs, and they cannot sue on a contract made by their ancestor unless they have a cause of action on covenants running with the land: Bourget v. Monroe, 58 M. 563.

55. An executor may bring trover for a conversion of the estate's goods that occurred but was not sued on in testator's life-time: Rogers v. Windoes, 48 M. 628.

56. The obligee's administrator can sue on a bond drawn to heirs or assigns: Rynearson v. Fredenburg, 42 M. 412.

57. An administrator can sue on an insurance policy for the use and benefit of a deceased mortgagee to whom it was payable: Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 M. 420.

58. Whoever sues upon an insurance policy must be able to enforce the whole of it; and persons named therein as payees to the extent of a partial interest only, such as mortgagees of a part of the property insured, cannot sue: Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Davenport, 37 M. 609.

59. A mortgagee who for his own protection, the mortgager having neglected to insure as agreed, takes out a policy in the mortgager's name, but payable and delivered to himself, may sue thereon: Hopkins Manuf. Co. v. Aurora F. & M. Ins. Co., 48 M. 148.

60. Owners of a vessel may sue in their own names on an insurance policy taken out by charterers which states that in case of total loss the insurance shall be paid to the owners: Richelieu & O. N. Co. v. Thames & M. Ins. Co., 58 M. 182.

61. A debt due to two or more persons jointly must, after the death of one of them, be sued by the survivor or survivors: Cole v. Dequindre, W. 64; Teller v. Wetherell, 9 M. 464.

62. Upon the death of one of two persons jointly entitled to sue in the people's name upon a sheriff's bond, action should be brought in such name for the survivor's use without joining the administrator of the deceased: Jackson v. People, 6 M. 154.

63. Any one who has the right of possession under a lease can sue in an action on the case for disturbance of such right: Ives v. Williams, 53 M. 636.

64. Execution purchasers may sue for wood and timber wrongfully severed from the freehold: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Atkinson, 44 M. 166.

65. A landlord may bring an action for waste against his lessee's assignee: Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106.

66. The reversioner is the proper person to sue for waste committed by a tenant or by any person for wrongfully cutting timber: Howard v. Patrick, 88 M. 795.

67. None but the owner of the inheritance can sue for such an injury to the freehold as the washing away of land: Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 57 M. 216.

68. The girl or woman seduced may, if of full age, bring an action in her own name for seduction: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540; Weiher v. Meyersham, 50 M. 602.

69. Where one has transferred his interest in a partnership his transferee and the remaining partners cannot bring an action against him on a balance due to the firm on his private account before the transfer: Learned v. Ayres, 41 M. 677.

70. A husband cannot sue his wife on a contract that is purely executory: Jenne v. Marble, 87 M. 319.

71. A wife living apart from her husband can bring replevin against him for her individual property after making due demand therefor: White v. White, 58 M. 546.

72. A husband cannot sue in his own name on a non-negotiable due-bill belonging to his wife: Blackwood v. Brown, 82 M. 104.

2. In case of assignment, etc.

73. Several non-negotiable causes of action may be united by assignment in one ownership so as to enable the assignee to bring a single action: Watertown F. Ins. Co. v. Grover & B. S. M. Co., 41 M. 131; Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Holthaus, 43 M. 423; Crippen v. Fletcher, 56 M. 886.

74. An assignee of a chose in action cannot sue where his assignor could not: Learned v. Ayres, 41 M. 677.

75. The assignee of the vendee's interest in a written land contract may in his own name sue the vendor for breach of his agreement: Cook v. Bell, 18 M. 387.

76. Action for breach of covenants of warranty running with the land cannot be brought by a mere assignee thereof while the grantee keeps the premises himself: Ely v. Hergesell, 46 M. 325.

77. Assignees of particular portions of a perfected labor claim cannot bring separate actions for the different amounts, even though the divisions of the claim correspond with the periods for which the laborer was hired: Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Mining Co., 43 M. 231.

78. The assignee of a non-negotiable demand may still sue thereon in the name of the original contracting party, as he was compelled to do at common law: Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 M. 489; Peters v. Gallagher, 37 M. 407; Moon v. Harder, 38 M. 566; Park v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 41 M. 352.

79. The assignee of a non-negotiable note can sue it in his own name: Peltier v. Babilion, 45 M. 884.

80. Negotiable paper may always be sued by the party having the legal title in the name of another: Bachelder v. Brown, 47 M. 366.

81. An agent may sue in his own name a note which he holds for collection and which is payable to bearer or indorsed in blank: Brigham v. Gurney, 1 M. 349; Boyd v. Corbitt, 37 M. 52; Moore v. Hall, 43 M. 143; Coy v. Stiner, 53 M. 42.

82. When, by indorsement for collection, authority is given to an agent to sue in his own name on negotiable paper, the legal title in trust is transferred, and the authority to collect is not revoked by the death of the principal and owners: Moore v. Hall, 43 M. 143.

83. One holding a note as collateral security may, with the owner's assent, sue it in his own name: Loddell v. Merchants', etc. Bank, 33 M. 408.

84. One need not be the real or beneficial owner of a note payable to bearer to enable him to recover; but he cannot claim to recover as owner upon a note payable to bearer to which he did not obtain title until after he began suit: Hovey v. Sebring, 24 M. 232.

85. Where a note is payable to order an indorsement in blank by the payee does not prevent his suing on the note still in his hands: Kerrick v. Stevens, 58 M. 297.

86. Mere assignees of negotiable paper cannot sue in their own names where not holders by negotiable transfer: Redmond v. Stansbury, 24 M. 445; Robinson v. Wilkinson, 38 M. 299; Spinning v. Sullivan, 43 M. 5; Davis v. Merrill, 51 M. 480; Minor v. Bewick, 55 M. 401.

87. The assignee of a mortgage cannot at law sue in his own name upon the negotiable notes securing it, unless they are indorsed to him: Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

88. An assignee of the guaranty of a note can sue thereon in his own name: Waldron v. Harring, 28 M. 493.

89. A note payable to order and indorsed by the payee, with a guaranty either of payment or of collection, may be sued by the indorsee: Green v. Burrows, 47 M. 70; Russell v. Klink, 53 M. 161.

90. Where the party to whose order a note is payable indorses a guaranty thereon, such indorsement need not be negotiable to enable the indorsee to sue the maker: Phelps v. Church, 65 M. 281.

91. Where a railroad company which has accepted a voluntary subscription in aid of its proposed line assigns its property and franchises, including such subscription, the assignee company, having built the road in accordance with the agreement, may sue thereon: Michigan M. & C. R. Co. v. Bacon, 38 M. 466.

92. Under our statute authorizing suits by assignees of rights in action, the general doctrine is that of causes of action for torts only such as survive to the personal representatives of the injured party can be sued for by an assignee: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218.

93. Assignees need not sue in the names of their assignors, nor is it necessary to bring an action in the name of one person for the use and benefit of another, even in cases where the right of action for a tort is assignable: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

94. A right of action for the wrongful cutting of timber on the assignor's land is enforceable in the assignee's name: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218; Grant v. Smith, 26 M. 201; Upham v. Dickinson, 38 M. 338.

95. A cause of action for deceit cannot be sued by the assignee thereof: Dayton v. Fargo, 45 M. 153.

96. One who has joined in unlawfully cutting another's timber cannot take from him an assignment of his right of action and sue his co-trespassers thereon: Upham v. Dickinson, 38 M. 338.

97. A plaintiff in trover for conversion described himself as "assignee," and the court ruled that he could not recover on proof of a conversion subsequent to the assignment, as the declaration purported to be for a cause of action that had accrued before. Held error; the term "assignee" is here treated as simply descriptive: Bloom v. Sexton, 33 M. 181.

(b) Joinder of plaintiffs.

See EQUITY, IV, (b), 2.

98. An action for the joint use and benefit of two or more persons should not be brought where their interests are several: Probate Judge v. Abbott, 50 M. 479.

99. One of two joint parties to a contract cannot sue alone thereon: Coe v. Wager, 43 M. 49.

100. Where an insurance policy is taken out by a widow upon her property and that of her minor children, all the persons insured must join in suit thereon, unless some have assigned to others: Monaghan v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co., 53 M. 289.

101. Plaintiff agreed to sell defendant a certain piece of land, and to cause it to be conveyed within ten days by deed executed by himself and others. Plaintiff was to have the right to quarry stone on the land for a certain time. In an action brought by him for the refusal of defendant to allow him to take away the stone quarried, held, that there was no presumption that the other co-grantors were jointly interested in the stone so as to be necessary parties to the suit: Clemens v. Conrad, 19 M. 170.

102. Wool belonging to different persons in severalty was sold at a uniform price per pound to a vendee knowing the ownership, by one of the owners acting also as agent for the others. Held, that an action for the ratable share of the price belonging to an owner was properly brought by him solely, and that all the owners should not join in one action: Burhans v. Corey, 17 M. 232.

103. A joint owner of a cause of action cannot introduce a new joint owner into the contract by individual assignment: Learned v. Ayres, 41 M. 677.

104. Where a contract describes the parties on one side as principal and sureties and stipulates that the principal shall perform the obligations and receive the pay while the sureties shall only be liable for liquidated damages on his default, it is, in effect, a severable contract, and the principal sureties need not be joined as plaintiffs in a suit upon it: Widner v. Western Union Tel. Co., 47 M. 612.

105. A declaration on a contract is not demurrable for the non-joinder of plaintiff's sureties where the latter have no such interest in it as would entitle them to receipt for money due on it to their principal, and are only bound to pay certain liquidated damages on his default: Ibid.

106. In an action of trespass by tenants in common, in relation to their land, or in any action merely personal, they must all join as plaintiffs: Draper v. Williams, 2 M. 536.

107. In an action for injury to an easement a person who owns a portion of the land to which it is appurtenant must be joined as plaintiff: Day v. Walden, 46 M. 575.

108. In an action for the use and occupation of premises for a right of way, other persons who also have a right of way are not necessary parties where the right was in neither case exclusive: Ledyard v. Morey, 54 M. 77.

109. The overseers of two adjoining road districts cannot join as plaintiffs in an action for an injury to a bridge partly in each district, nor, on their refusal to sue, can the highway commissioners of the township bring a joint action: Port Huron Highway Commissioners v. Stockman, 5 M. 528.

110. Where two or more sureties pay the debt out of a joint fund, they may join as plaintiffs in an action against their co-surety for contribution: Smith v. Rumsey, 83 M. 183.

111. One partner cannot sue alone in trespass for his proportion of damages done to partnership business: Bigelow v. Reynolds, 68 M. 344.

112. One partner may bring replevin for partnership property seized on execution for another's individual debt to the execution creditor: Hutchinson v. Dubois, 45 M. 143.

113. A partner suing for his exemption out of firm property need not join his co-partners as plaintiffs: McCoy v. Brennan, 61 M. 382.

114. The unlawful levy of an attachment against one member of a firm on specific chattels of the firm is injurious to both partners, and they may sue for such injury jointly and recover a joint judgment if the injury is tangible and the property disturbed or destroyed: Haynes v. Knowles, 86 M. 408.

115. Surviving partners can sue in their own names without joining decedent's representatives for the price of firm goods sold by them: Bassett v. Miller, 89 M. 133.

116. A surviving partner has the sole right of action for a trespass on the firm's property: Pfeffer v. Steiner, 27 M. 587.

117. No joinder of husband and wife is necessary where the wife sues for a personal grievance or cause of action: Berger v. Jacobs, 21 M. 215; Leonard v. Pope, 27 M. 145.

118. Under H. S. § 6297, a wife can maintain an action in her individual name without joining her husband for an assault committed upon her. Damages for such injuries, when recovered, will become her individual property, which she can release before judgment or appropriate afterwards. For the injury sustained by the husband, for loss of service, etc., he can maintain an action in his own name: Berger v. Jacobs, 21 M. 215.

119. A married woman may bring a sole action for slander: Leonard v. Pope, 27 M. 145.

120. Where one has engaged in his own name to furnish his own services and those of his wife, she need not be joined as plaintiff on the contract, but he may sue alone: Sines v. Wayne Poor Superintendents, 58 M. 503.

121. Under H. S. § 6297, an action for the personal sufferings of a married woman from an injury received in a railroad accident should be brought by the wife alone, and not by the husband and wife jointly; the statute supersedes the common law in this respect. Whether, where they have sued jointly, the error may be cured by amendment, quere: M. C. R. Co. v. Coleman, 28 M. 440.

122. A wife may sue alone or husband and wife may join in suit for exempt property: Shepard v. Cross, 83 M. 96; Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 M. 540.

123. In a suit brought in 1854, by the husband alone for personal property acquired by the wife before her marriage, held, that the wife should have been joined: Brown v. Field, 4 M. 322.

That married woman could sue in her own name on liquor-bond, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS, § 39.

124. Minor children may be joined as plaintiffs, but are not necessary, in ejectment brought by their mother to recover a homestead: Showers v. Robinson, 43 M. 502.

III. DEFENDANTS.

(a) Who proper and who necessary parties defendant.

See EQUITY, IV, (c).

As to proper or necessary defendants in EJECTMENT, see that title, §§ 62-83.

125. An undisclosed agent may be sued for money paid to him without consideration, though he has paid it over to his principal: Smith v. Kelly, 43 M. 390.

126. An act wrongfully done by the joint agency or co-operation of several persons, or done contemporaneously by them without concert, renders them liable either jointly or severally: Cuddy v. Horn, 46 M. 596.

127. An agent, when liable for a fraud committed in a principal's behalf, may as well be sued separately as any joint wrong-doer sued alone in an action of tort: Weber v. Weber, 47 M. 569.

128. Under H. S. §§ 7714, 8959, the husband is no longer responsible, in person or property, for the torts of his wife, so that there seems to be no reason for joining him as a defendant; yet it is assumed, in these very statutes, that he is still a proper party, and whether necessary or not, he is not an improper party: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

129. A married woman, in suing a firm in which her husband is a partner, must implead him as defendant, if the partners are not severally liable, in order to maintain her action: Benson v. Morgan, 50 M. 77.

130. The statutory action of assumpsit for breaking a log-jam lies, if at all, against the owner of the logs and not against those whom he has hired to run them; it is the owner's duty to see that they do not obstruct the water-course: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 22.

131. A tenant for life who has parted with all his estate, and is out of possession, cannot be sued for waste committed by his assignee: Beers v. Beers, 21 M. 464.

132. An action for a labor debt under H. S. § 4110 cannot be maintained against stockholders without joining the corporation as a defendant: Thompson v. Jewell, 43 M. 240. See Milroy v. Spurr Mountain Iron Mining Co., 43 M. 231.

133. Judgment creditors who take part in execution proceedings under a void judgment may be made defendants in trover for the value of the property: Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 M. 208.

As to necessary defendants in condemnation proceedings, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 325-327; RAILROADS, III, (c), 3.

(b) Joinder of defendants.

See EQUITY, IV, (c), 2.

134. An obligation, joint and several, may at law be sued against any or all of the obligors: Dederick v. Barber, 44 M. 19.

135. A member of a mutual aid society who sues it in assumpsit to recover back money paid cannot join two members having no joint functions with the society as receivers of the money: Murphy v. Bidwell, 52 M. 487.

136. Parties who are severally and not jointly liable each for a portion of the purchase price of materials cannot be jointly sued for the whole: Larkin v. Butterfield, 29 M. 254.

137. An action cannot be maintained upon a joint debt against less than all the debtors: Post v. Shafer, 63 M. 85.

138. An action for goods sold and delivered under an express contract to two persons jointly must be brought against both: Searles v. Reed, 63 M. 485.

139. In an action upon an appeal bond jointly executed by husband and wife as principals, the wife must be joined as defendant: Post v. Shafer, 63 M. 85.

140. Individual stockholders cannot be made joint defendants with their corporation in an action upon a labor debt brought by an assignee thereof (H. S. § 4886), though they may be in an action brought by the original creditors: Connors v. Carp River Iron Co., 54 M. 168.

141. On a written agreement parties can only be sued in the manner in which they have made themselves liable: Lee v. Bolles, 20 M. 46.

142. A plaintiff who proceeds against two or more persons must show by his declaration that they are jointly liable: Ibid.

143. One who indorses on a note payable to order a guaranty of payment may be joined as a defendant in a suit on the note: Green v. Burrows, 47 M. 70.

144. Assumpsit was brought against certain persons jointly to recover back money which the plaintiff had deposited with one of them in reliance upon his false and fraudulent representations that he conducted a bank of which the others were directors. Held, that even though the others had allowed their names to be so used, the facts did not establish any joint liability against them and they were not estopped from denying it: Bennett v. Dean, 41 M. 472.

145. Parties who combine in a fraud can be sued jointly at law as well as in equity: Bay City Bridge Co. v. Van Etten, 36 M. 210.

146. It is not usually necessary to sue wrong-doers jointly in tort; and an agent may as well be sued separately as any other joint wrong-doer: Weber v. Weber, 47 M. 569.

147. One who is injured by the wrongful or negligent action of several persons can sue them jointly or severally as he pleases: Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 54 M. 91.

148. A passenger upon one vessel injured by its collision with another in consequence of the negligence of the officers of both may sue them jointly: Cuddy v. Horn, 46 M. 596.

149. A wife who has knowingly perpetrated a fraud in her husband's behalf, and as his agent, need not be joined with him in an action of tort therefor: Weber v. Weber, 47 M. 569.

IV. MISJOINDER OR DEFECT OF PARTIES, HOW TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF.

See EQUITY, IV, (d).

150. Objection for non-joinder of plaintiffs should be made by plea in abatement, and cannot be raised for the first time on error: Butterfield v. Gilchrist, 53 M. 22.

151. The non-joinder of a co-tenant in common as plaintiff in an action for rent can only be set up in abatement, and, unless so pleaded, goes merely to apportion the damages: Perrin v. Lepper, 84 M. 292.

152. So in an action for trespass; and the damages will, on error, be presumed, in the absence of objection, to have been apportioned: Achey v. Hull, 7 M. 428.

153. Non-joinder of the wife in an action by the husband for property of the wife, held in her own name or that of another, need not be pleaded in abatement, but is ground of non-suit: Brown v. Fifield, 4 M. 822.

154. Non-joinder of a co-contractor as defendant, unless the declaration discloses a joint liability, can only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement: People v. Dennis, 4 M. 609; Holdridge v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 16 M. 66; Bowen v. Culp, 36 M. 224.

155. Non-joinder of one of two obligors on a bond should be pleaded in abatement: Porter v. Leache, 56 M. 40.

156. The objection of non-joinder to a declaration upon an award must be pleaded in abatement where the declaration does not show a joint liability: Ballou v. Hill, 25 M. 204.

157. Non-joinder of a defendant cannot usually be pleaded except in abatement, where there is no statute or other fixed rule requiring parties to be joined as a condition of the action: Hinman v. Eakins, 26 M. 80.

158. Where no plea in abatement for want of parties is filed to a declaration on the common counts for the price of merchandise sold to a third person, the defendant will be held liable if the purchaser is shown to be either his agent or his partner: Campbell v. Sherman, 49 M. 584.

159. In a suit against a partner to recover a penalty for unlicensed sale of spirituous liquor by his firm, the objection of non-joinder of the other partner is not good, but if good must be made by plea in abatement: Smith v. Adrian, 1 M. 495.

160. Failure to plead in abatement for non-joinder does not enlarge the personal right of recovery of the party bringing suit: Ives v. Williams, 53 M. 636.

161. Non-joinder of proper co-defendants must be taken advantage of by plea in abatement and does not continue open to objection till the submission of the case: Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 M. 150.

162. Where the attorney for joint defendants has stipulated for a discontinuance as to some of them, the others, having practically acquiesced, cannot urge the non-joinder in bar of further proceedings: Callam v. Barnes, 44 M. 598.

163. The right of pleading in abatement the non-joinder of a co-defendant is an absolute and valuable one, and a defendant who has suffered default in an action on a joint contract cannot be deprived of it ex parte: Munn v. Haynes, 46 M. 140.

V. TRANSFERS PENDING SUIT; BRINGING IN NEW PARTIES; SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES.

See EQUITY, IV, (e).

164. Where, pending action upon a demand resting upon an implied assumpsit or an express contract, such demand is assigned, the suit may go on in the assignor's name: Peters v. Gallagher, 87 M. 407; Moon v. Harder, 38 M. 566.

165. The sale of negotiable paper pending suit thereon does not abate the suit or affect the issue: Newberry v. Trowbridge, 18 M. 263; Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 M. 456.

As to transfers by plaintiff pending ejectment, see EJECTMENT, §§ 99, 100, 193, 194.

As to effect of transfer by complainant in chancery, see EQUITY, §§ 992-995, 999.

166. A new party cannot be brought in by amending the declaration; but misnomer of a plaintiff which occurred through clerical mistake may be corrected: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218.

Further as to amendments as to names of parties, see PLEADINGS, §§ 589-600.

167. A city attorney cannot bring the corporation into court by filing a brief in a case in which the city is not impleaded: People v. Hatch, 60 M. 229.

168. A change of parties to the record in the principal case does not defeat garnishment process, if at the date of service the claim was garnishable, and if plaintiff in the principal case has recovered judgment: Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 M. 379.

169. Part owners of a vessel are entitled to intervene in proceedings in rem against her: Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 M. 150.

As to notice to covenantor or warrantor to defend suit, and as to effect of judgment where he has been notified or has assumed defence, see CONVEYANCES, §§ 356-360; JUDGMENTS, §§ 218-217.

170. On the death of a defendant in ejectment the action may be carried on against surviving defendants, and the personal representatives or heirs of the deceased defendant cannot be brought in: Hoffman v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 40 M. 351; Hoffman v. Harrington, 41 M. 223.

171. Upon the death of one defendant the cause of action, originally joint, survives against his co-defendant alone, and his administrator cannot be joined; and upon the death of the co-defendant the cause of action survives only against the latter's executors: Newberry v. Trowbridge, 18 M. 263.

172. Where a garnishee dies before disclosure made or default taken, his administrator cannot be brought in: White v. Ledyard, 48 M. 264.

173. The suggestion of plaintiff's death is not issuable: Larned v. Wilcox, 4 M. 333.

174. And notice need not be given to defendant. The proceedings for revivor after plaintiff's death are statutory and ex parte; but proof should be filed of the death and of the administrator's appointment: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50.

175. Omission to revive suit before taking out an execution after plaintiff's death may be cured by an order nunc pro tunc: Jenness v. Lapeer Circuit Judge, 42 M. 469.

176. Where plaintiff died after a referee had found in his favor, and judgment was rendered on the finding without reviving the cause, the supreme court, on affirming the judgment, remanded it for revivor: Botsford v. Sweet, 49 M. 120.

177. Where the cause of action survives, the fact of a plaintiff's death cannot enter into the merits, and evidence thereof may be excluded on the trial: Mason v. Finch, 28 M. 282.

178. Where a party's death has been suggested upon the record and is undisputed, the proceedings will be construed therewith without amending the declaration, but subsequent proceedings must be properly entitled: Stimpson v. Seventh Circuit Judge, 41 M. 3.

179. Where, after death of a joint defendant, suit was discontinued as to him, and judgment was rendered against the other defendant, who, in suing out a writ of error, entitled the case as if deceased were still a party, held, that the irregularity might be disregarded: Campau v. Brown, 48 M. 145.

As to substitution of new parties in chancery after death or assignment, see EQUITY, VII.

Discontinuance as to one or more parties, see ACTIONS, §§ 180-148; INFANTS, §§ 85-87.

VI. PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY.

See EQUITY, IV, (f).

180. In a suit under an infant's partnership contract upon a completed cause of action for the infant's benefit, he should be a plaintiff in his own name and not through another: Osburn v. Farr, 42 M. 184.

181. Where an infant and an adult are joint parties to a contract, the infant's father cannot sue as his substitute: Ibid.

182. An action of replevin brought by a father in his own name cannot proceed on the theory that he is suing in his child's behalf as guardian or next friend: Ash v. Mathes, 52 M. 615.

183. An infant partner cannot individually sue to recover a debt or property due the firm: Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 M. 379.

184. Minor children are not necessary parties to an action of ejectment brought by a widow, their mother, to recover the homestead, though it is proper to join them: Showers v. Robinson, 48 M. 503.

As to appointment of next friend for infant plaintiffs, see INFANTS, §§ 88-94.

185. An insane person under guardianship continues liable to suit: Ingersoll v. Harrison, 48 M. 234.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

II. PROCEEDINGS FOR PARTITION.

- (a) Jurisdiction.
- (b) Parties.
- (c) Pleadings.
- (d) Practice; decrees.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. H. S. § 7850, which provides that joint tenants or tenants in common may have partition, does not prevent parties holding lands jointly, or in common, from making such agreements as may modify or limit their rights to partition: Avery v. Paine, 12 M. 540.

2. The rule that a tenant in common of lands may have partition is not of universal application. A party may enter into such agreements with his co-tenant as to estop him from enforcing the right of partition: Eberts v. Fisher, 54 M. 294.

3. Where the owner of lands conveyed an undivided moiety to another, for a sum of money which was less than its value, to be paid from the proceeds of sales to be made of the lands, and which was secured by mortgage on the lands, and a part of the consideration consisted in the services of the purchaser in taking charge of and selling the joint property under a contract between them, and a principal part of the seller's security for the purchase price, and for the efficiency and fidelity of the purchaser in the management and sale of the property, consisted in the control he would have over the sales of the purchaser's interest, it was held that so long as the seller was not guilty of refusal to perform his part of the contract, or of any default which would relieve the purchaser from the obligation to perform, or prevent his performance, the latter was not entitled to partition: Avery v. Payne, 12 M. 540.

4. Mortgages executed by the seller on his own undivided half, not alleged or shown to have interfered with sales, or otherwise to have operated to the prejudice of the purchaser, will constitute no reason for partition: Ibid.

5. Where the interest of one of several heirs in certain city lots, constituting a portion of an inheritance, has been sold on execution, the fact that upon a voluntary partition among the heirs, to which the execution purchasers were not made parties, said city lots were set off to others of the heirs than him whose interest has been so sold, cannot prejudice the rights of such purchasers: Butler v. Roys, 25 M. 53.

6. Whether a partition among tenants in common, to which an execution purchaser of the undivided interest of one of them was not made a party, can affect such purchaser's rights, quere: Whiting v. Butler, 29 M. 122.

7. Upon a voluntary partition of lands any liens on the undivided interest of either tenant in common will be transferred, as between the parties thereto, to such portion of the premises as is set off to the tenant or the assignee of the tenant against whom the lien stood; and that portion will constitute the primary security for the lien: Webb v. Rowe, 35 M. 58.

8. If parol evidence is admissible at all to show that the obligation to pay off a mortgage given by one tenant in common had been assumed by the other on making partition, it must be very conclusive when there is no other consideration than the partition: Ibid.

9. Where an inheritance consists of separate city lots which have been platted, each lot is presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, to be a separate holding: Butler v. Roys, 25 M. 53.

10. When partition proceedings are directed against several distinct parcels of land, each is subject to partition by itself: Walsh v. Varney, 38 M. 73.

11. Partition in the probate court of lands devised by a will dividing real estate among heirs does not change the nature of the title to each share: Haddon v. Hemingway, 39 M. 615.

12. The possession of a tenant in common of any specific portion of the entire tract owned in common is subject to the incidents of partition: Tharp v. Allen, 46 M. 389.

13. Partition may be made by consent; but it is not an incident to a suit for a partnership accounting in which the partners usually have a right to have the assets disposed of. If land belonging to the firm is not disposed of, it must be left as a distinct tenancy in common so that the tenants may have it partitioned in a separate suit: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171.

14. In adopting, in 1846, the New York statute of partition, the legislature may be presumed to have adopted the construction thereof as settled in that state: Greiner v. Klein, 28 M. 12.

II. PROCEEDINGS FOR PARTITION.

As to costs of partition proceedings, see COSTS, § 187.

(a) Jurisdiction.

15. The register of probate had authority in 1817, under the act of January 9, 1811, to make partition of real estate among tenants in common; and the remedy for an heir whose interest was injured was by appeal under the statute: Willets v. Mandlebaum, 28 M. 521.

16. Equity has jurisdiction to make partition between joint owners of lands, notwithstanding a remedy is given by statute: Thayer v. Lane, H. 247.

17. Partition is a local proceeding, and can only be enforced in a court which has jurisdiction of the territory where the land is: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 172.

18. Courts of equity have exclusive jurisdiction of suits for the partition of personal property: Godfrey v. White, 60 M. 443.

19. Partition in the probate court is confined to such lands as have been assigned to the heirs or devisees after the payment of debts, etc.; but there is no such restriction in equity: Campau v. Campau, 19 M. 116.

20. Although an assignment of the residue of an intestate's estate to the person entitled after administration is a prerequisite to a partition of the lands in the probate court, a slight showing that such an assignment has been made will support a finding to that effect where it appears that the probate court has proceeded to partition the lands among the heirs: Dickison b. Reynolds, 48 M. 158.

21. "An estate in possession" within the meaning of the statute for partition (H. S. § 7852) means merely an estate in present enjoyment: Campau v. Campau, 19 M. 116; Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

22. Heirs may have partition among themselves although the estate has not been settled. Notwithstanding the right of the administrator to take possession for the purpose of collecting rents, etc., their heirs have such an estate in possession as will enable them to maintain a suit in equity for partition: Campau v. Campau, 19 M. 116.

23. Property exempt as a homestead is nevertheless subject to partition as between the heirs-at-law or their assignees: Robinson v. Baker, 47 M. 619; Patterson v. Patterson, 49 M. 176.

24. H. S. § 5933 does not forbid partition being made before a dower interest expires, but merely provides for making partition afterwards: Persinger v. Jubb, 52 M. 304.

25. The estate which husband and wife take under a deed to them as such is not subject to partition proceedings: Jacobs v. Miller, 50 M. 119.

26. Where a tenant in common of land in partition is also a lessee of the land, it saves circuity of action to consider all of his claims together; but the jurisdiction does not depend on so doing: Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

27. The special province of a bill for partition is to sever the joint possession, and not to try legal titles: Hoffman v. Beard, 22 M. 59.

28. The complainant must have an actual or constructive possession to entitle him to partition, where the title is a legal one: Hoffman v. Beard, 22 M. 59; Hemingway v. Griswold, 22 M. 77.

29. If the possession of lands of which partition is sought be vacant, it follows the title: Hoffman v. Beard, 22 M. 59.

30. The possession of other co-tenants, not holding adversely, inures to the benefit of a co-tenant seeking partition: Ibid.

31. If the title, though of a legal character, be undisputed, or, perhaps, though denied, if it appear to be so clear and incontestable as not to admit of a legal doubt, the bill will be maintained, as it will be where the title is an equitable one, or partly equitable and partly legal: Ibid.

32. A bill in equity for a partition was properly dismissed, where the whole title was purely legal and there was no obstacle to a trial in ejectment, and where, since the bill had been pending, there had been two trials in ejectment, in both of which the verdict had been against the complainant's title: Hemingway v. Griswold, 22 M. 77.

33. Where the case made by the bill contemplates as chief and eventual relief a severance of holdings, and where a decision as to whether, in any eventuality, there should be partition, depends upon the solution of questions, some of which are distinctly appropriate to equity, the circumstance that other questions in the case, if standing by themselves, might be regularly contested and settled in ejectment, is not enough to oust the jurisdiction of chancery: Wallace v. Harris, 32 M. 390.

34. On a bill filed for the foreclosure of a mortgage partition of the premises cannot be decreed though the proofs show it would be equitable: Payne v. Avery, 21 M. 524.

35. If the necessary facts are alleged and proved, and all the parties to be affected are before the court, partition between tenants in common may be decreed upon a bill filed to restore a destroyed deed of an undivided interest: Wallace v. Wallace, 68 M. 326.

36. The jurisdiction of courts of chancery over proceedings in partition as to non-residents is special and limited, and dependent entirely upon the statute. All the necessary facts to confer jurisdiction must therefore affirmatively appear upon the record: Platt v. Stewart, 10 M. 260.

37. No jurisdiction is acquired over non-resident defendants not appearing, where no affidavit of non-residence is filed, and without such affidavit an order of publication is void. The recital of an affidavit in the order is not evidence that one was made: Ibid.

(b) Parties.

38. The executors and devisees of a deceased tenant in common, not asking partition among themselves, may jointly file a bill to have their interests set off from that of the co-tenant: Page v. Webster, 8 M. 263.

39. Under the statute of partition a wife whose husband is seized of an interest in the lands to be divided may be made a party, and if she is not, her inchoate right of dower will not be affected. The court of chancery has power in partition proceedings to guard this inchoate right of dower, where the wife is made a party, without departing from its principles: Greiner v. Klein, 28 M. 12.

40. To a bill for partition brought by heirs of a deceased tenant in common, their mother, as entitled to dower in such tenant's estate, is a proper, and, it seems, a necessary party: Campau v. Campau, 19 M. 116.

41. Whether a purchaser from one of several tenants in common of an undivided interest in a part only of the property held in common acquires such a title as to make him a necessary party in a suit brought for partition by other tenants in common, quere: Ibid.

42. The holder of an inchoate lien for paying taxes, in the shape of a redeemable lease, need not, under H. S. § 7858, be made a party defendant to a bill for the partition of the property; it is proper, however, to make him so, and in case of non-redemption the lien may be made chargeable on the defendants, as the final form of relief may make suitable: Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

43. A partition bill that discloses that persons not made parties have like interests with those set up by the complainant is demurrable for want of parties: Taylor v. King, 82 M. 42.

(c) Pleadings.

44. A bill for partition by executors and devisees set forth that the undivided interest was devised to the latter in common, with the power, nevertheless, in the executor to sell and dispose of the same. Held, a sufficient statement of the respective interests of complainants, they asking no partition as between themselves: Page v. Webster, 8 Mich. 263.

45. A bill for partition averred that the land was devised to eleven heirs who were named; that seven had assigned to defendant, who holds seven-elevenths of the property, and that complainants, who represent four of the heirs, claim the rest. Held, that it sufficiently averred defendant's interest and would be good for a union of four-elevenths in complainants, if it did not, indeed, show that each held one-eleventh: Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

46. Allegations in a bill for partition, as to the rights and obligations of tenants of the defendant, could only be a ground of demurrer by the tenants themselves; and being only collateral to the regular issues in partition, there is no legal objection to averring or establishing any facts that would determine the relative interests of all parties. Any facts bearing upon the termination of the lease by forfeiture or otherwise are pertinent, as the object of the bill is not properly to enforce a forfeiture, but to determine the right to a partition and the extent of the property to be partitioned: Ibid.

47. A bill for partition showing that defendant is tenant in common with complainant, and that the latter also holds a mortgage on the former's interest, makes out a good case for partition, which cannot be affected by any further needless allegations of grievances if they are not inconsistent with the title set up: Hoffman v. Ross, 25 M. 175.

48. Allegations concerning receipt of rents and profits by defendant are not repugnant, and may, under some circumstances, become relevant upon the settlement of partition proceedings: Ibid.

49. Where defendants in partition desire to rely on a lease made by them they must include such averments in their answers as will enable them to maintain their interests, so that, whether the land is partitioned or sold, equities may be adjusted in it or in its proceeds: Eberts v. Fisher, 44 M. 551.

50. Where a bill for partition is held to make out no case for relief the supreme court will not consider questions of title involved in it: Walsh v. Varney, 86 M. 73.

51. Petition for partition filed by an administratrix is amendable so as to show that she had a dower interest and is guardian for minor heirs: Persinger v. Jubb, 52 M. 304.

(d) Practice; decree.

As to sufficiency of notice lis pendens in partition, see NOTICE, § 90.

52. Notice to defendants of meeting of commissioners is essential to the validity of their action: Simpson v. Simpson, 59 M. 71.

53. Want of venue to an affidavit of service of notice to the parties concerned in partition proceedings is not a fatal defect if the venue is indorsed on the notice and the affidavit is properly entitled and sworn to: Persinger v. Jubb, 52 M. 304.

54. Parties interested in partition proceedings may properly be heard by the commissioners, on notice to all concerned to appear before them at a specified time and place to prove, if they wish, the value of the lands: McLaughlin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 57 M. 85.

55. Commissioners in partition proceedings must apply to the court for any instructions they may need: and if interested parties take part in their deliberations or in the preparation of their report, the report will be set aside: Ibid.

56. It is not necessary that all the commissioners should sign or acknowledge the report, but their deliberations should be had together, and they must all meet when their final action is taken and the report is made and signed: Simpson v. Simpson, 59 M. 71.

57. A party to a partition is not at fault for assuming that the commissioners appointed to make it have acted impartially: Adair v. Cummin, 48 M. 375.

58. Where commissioners appointed to make partition divided the land equally, but so that one share was worth twice and a half as much as the other, and contained 200 acres of upland with 174 under cultivation and 30 acres of lowland and about 20 of swamp, while the other consisted of 60 acres upland with 9 acres cleared and about 180 acres of marsh and swamp, it was held that the inequality was so great as to amount to fraud, and the partition, though confirmed, might be set aside: Ibid.

59. Where an award of partition is so extravagantly one-sided as to shock the conscience and there is no pretence of justification, it must be held fraudulent in law whatever the purpose of the commissioners may have been in making it: Ibid.

60. The good faith of commissioners in making partition is a question that may be determined by circumstances; the evidence of legal fraud need not be specific: Ibid.

61. Where partition of lands in which an infant has an interest is prayed for, the facts must be inquired into as fully when the infant is complainant as when he is defendant: Claxton v. Claxton, 56 M. 557.

62. An infant's guardian filed a bill in his behalf for the partition of land in which he had an interest. Stipulated facts indicated that it would not be for his advantage, and on appeal it was held that as it could not be presumed a more favorable showing could be made by proof the decree should be reversed and the bill dismissed: Ibid.

63. The accounting for rents and profits is one of the important incidents of a partition in equity: Hoffman v. Ross, 25 M. 175.

64. It is only when a partnership relation exists between the parties as to the property sought to be partitioned, or there is some agreement, express or implied, between them, that an accounting shall be had before a division of the property can be made, that such accounting is a prerequisite to a suit for partition: Godfrey v. White, 60 M. 443.

65. Improvements will not be taken into account in a partition suit where, by reason of joint occupation, and the voluntary commingling of accounts for improvements, advances and services, it is impossible to ascertain the relative cost and value of what has been done by each: Campbell v. Campbell, 21 M. 438.

66. Whether a widow who for many years has carried on the farm which belonged to her deceased husband, and has brought up a family of children, during which time she has paid off a mortgage on the farm and has cancelled the notes, but afterwards has taken an assignment of it to herself, is strictly entitled to hold a lien on the land for the amount paid by her, quere. But when one of the children, after having arrived at maturity, files a bill for a partition of the premises, equity requires that, as between the widow and the complainant in partition, she should be compensated for her advances to pay off the mortgage; and that she should be allowed interest on the sums she has paid, except as to the proportion which her dower right should bear (as to that proportion, see INTEREST, § 45): Ibid.

67. Partition will be decreed according to the equitable rights of parties. But to enable the court to make such decree, their equitable rights should appear from the pleadings: Thayer v. Lane, W. 200.

68. Where a part of the heirs have attempted a voluntary partition among themselves, the court, on a bill filed by another, may respect this voluntary partition so far as it does not prejudice the right of complainant: Ibid.

69. In making partition between heirs at law or their assignees, where there is a homestead and also other lands, if there is a widow with a right of dower, she should have her dower and homestead right saved to her in the homestead land whenever it can be done consistently with justice: Robinson v. Baker, 47 M. 619.

70. When one of several heirs files a bill for partition of land in which his mother is entitled to dower, and the other heirs disclaim any rights in the land during the life of the mother, it is erroneous, after decreeing the setting off of complainant's interest, to go further and make partition among the mother and the other heirs: Campbell v. Campbell, 21 M. 438.

71. The fact that a partition suit is revived as against the administrators of an estate for purposes of an accounting merely does not affect the rights of the heirs at law in the subsequent partition of the inheritance over which the administrators would have no control: De Mill v. Port Huron Dry Dock Co., 30 M. 33.

72. A decree of partition cannot be opened to change results without also setting aside the titles obtained under it: Walsh v. Varney, 38 M. 73.

73. Where the grantees of partitioners hold separate and undivided interests and the partition proceedings were not defective as to the parties, they cannot have the proceedings revived for the purpose of barring of their rights persons who had not been made parties, so as to prevent them from asserting their legal rights by bringing ejectment: Ibid.

As to conclusiveness of decree, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, § 400.

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES; WHO DEEMED PARTNERS; PROOF OF PARTNERSHIP.

1. Partnership involves community of interest in some lawful commerce or business for the conduct of which the parties are mutually agents for each other, but with general powers within the scope of the business, which powers they can restrict by agreement to the extent of making one the sole agent of the rest and of the business: Beecher v. Bush, 45 M. 188.

2. A partnership must contain more than one person: Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 M. 449.

3. The test of partnership, as between the parties themselves, is their intent: Beecher v. Bush, 45 M. 188.

4. Whether persons are partners inter se is to be determined by the understanding and intention of the parties as between themselves; and they cannot be made such without the assent of every member, and his actual intention to become a member: Gray v. Gibson, 6 M. 300.

5. Where the question of partnership arises, not with third persons, but between the parties themselves, the agreement out of which the supposed partnership arises is to be construed as any other instrument between the same parties: Bird v. Hamilton, W. 361.

6. While copartnership articles cannot be controverted or varied by the parties thereto, third parties may show who are the real partners and owners of the business: Bishop v. Austin, 66 M. 515.

7. An agreement to enter into a partnership will not be specifically enforced if it is silent as to the time for which the partnership is to continue: Buck v. Smith, 29 M. 166.

8. A partnership agreement which contemplates action to be taken at once and continuously for the joint benefit creates a present partnership, and not merely one that is to begin in the future: Kerrick v. Stevens, 55 M. 167.

9. Where a party had failed to perform the preliminary conditions, upon a compliance with which a copartnership was to be formed, and the other party to the agreement, to enable him to perform, furnished his own capital, and for a short time carried on the business in the name of the proposed firm, it was held that this was no waiver, and could not entitle the defaulting party to the rights of a partner: Bird v. Hamilton, W. 361.

10. Articles of partnership purporting to be between the complainant on the one part, and the defendant and a minor brother on the other, but which were executed only by the two parties, held not to have made the minor brother a partner: McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 M. 476.

As to effect of infant's partnership agreement and ratification thereof, etc., see INFANTS, §§ 19, 37-39, 61, 62, 66, 67, 89-85.

11. Two persons arranged that one should furnish certain hay and the other transport it to a market to sell it; if the latter sold at not less than a given rate he was to receive a specified sum per ton and pay over the rest; if he sold at more than the minimum, the excess was to be equally divided; and if he failed to sell he was to store the hay for the other and wait till it should be sold for reimbursement for his freight charges; held, that this did not make the parties partners, and that in the absence of any authority to sell on credit, the one who received the hay was liable for all the hay he sold, and if he gave credit did so at his own risk: Morrison v. Cole, 30 M. 102.

12. Where one owning lands makes an arrangement with another to cut and run the cedar posts on the lands at his own expense on shares, the latter receiving half the posts and paying all the cutting expenses, these expenses cannot be regarded as partnership expenses, nor is the business such as to authorize any necessary inference of partnership: St. Denis v. Saunders, 36 M. 369.

13. Where persons associate themselves under articles, to purchase property and carry on a manufacturing business, and their organization is so defective as to come short of creating a corporation within the statute, they become, in legal effect, partners, and their rights as members of the company, to the property acquired by the company, will be recognized and protected: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

14. An association in which the conditions of membership are the payment of an entry fee and of pro rata assessments, but which does no business involving profit or loss, is not a partnership; and the members are not personally liable on contracts made by its officers: Burt v. Lathrop, 52 M. 106.

15. Where a body professing to be a corporation has been dealt with as such, one who has so dealt with it cannot question its corporate existence for the purpose of charging its members individually as if they were partners: Merchants', etc. Bank v. Stone, 38 M. 779.

16. For an unsuccessful attempt to uphold, on the basis of a partnership authority, notes issued in the corporate name by one of two sole stockholders of the company, who with his associate acted as president and treasurer, see New York Iron Mine v. Negaunes Bank, 39 M. 644.

17. When fraudulent associates assuming under an invalid statute to act as a corporation may be held as partners, see Cook v. Wheeler, H. 443; Wheeler v. Clinton Canal Bank, H. 449; State v. How, 1 M. 512.

18. An agreement which purports on its face to be a copartnership agreement and which provides that the parties thereto shall share equally in expenses, losses, and gains, cannot be treated as a mere contract of employment: Smith v. Walker, 57 M. 457.

19. An agreement between two persons to engage in the prosecution of a lawful continuing business, each to furnish a portion of the capital stock and to share in the profits and losses, constitutes them partners in such business: Kingsbury v. Tharp, 61 M. 216.

20. A. furnished timber, capital and all his time in the manufacture of shingles. He was to have interest and two-thirds of the net profits, and B. was to have one-third. Held, a partnership: Wells v. Babcock, 56 M. 276.

21. It seems that an agreement to carry on business and receive half the profits does not make one a partner: Wilcox v. Matthews, 44 M. 192.

22. An arrangement for sharing profits may be shown in proof of partnership, but is not conclusive evidence of it: Thayer v. Augustine, 55 M. 187.

23. Renting a saloon for half the profits of the business does not make the landlord a partner of the tenant: Ibid.

24. An arrangement by which one person is to share the profits of a business with another does not make him a general partner in any such sense as to deprive him of his right to certain additional specific compensation which has been agreed upon: Hamper's Appeal, 51 M. 71.

25. To constitute one a partner as to third persons he need not agree to share in the losses of the business; if he shares in the profits he thereby deprives creditors of part of the means of payment, and this is sufficient: Sager v. Tupper, 38 M. 258.

26. In an action against three persons for goods sold and delivered, in which it was sought to charge two of them as partners of the third, the trial court left the jury to determine, as matter of fact, whether by the understanding and agreement of all three the two were to share in the profits, and, if so, the jury were told they would be liable as partners. Held correct: Hinman v. Littell, 23 M. 484.

27. But merely sharing in profits, where third persons have not been legitimately led to believe there was a partnership, does not create one as to them, unless there was one in fact: Beecher v. Bush, 45 M. 188; Cohell v. Britton, 59 M. 350.

28. A joint and equal interest in an enterprise does not of itself make the holder a partner: Edson v. Gates, 44 M. 253.

29. A. agreed to buy a timber tract, cut and saw the timber, and ship it to B., who was to pay A. the cost of the timber and a certain price per thousand, sell it, and divide the net profits or losses with A. Held, that there was no partnership in unshipped lumber: Monroe v. Greenhoe, 54 M. 9.

30. A series of independent transactions wherein W. selects lands and B. supplies money and buys them, and they divide the profits on selling them again, do not in themselves establish a partnership. Nor would an accumulation of such purchases and the holding of the lands for suitable opportunities to sell or for lumbering: Wells v. Babcock, 56 M. 276.

31. H. made an agreement with E. whereby he was to look up desirable lands and bid them in at tax sales, E. furnishing the money to pay for them. Both were to control alike the subsequent disposition of the lands, and after E. had been repaid what he had advanced, they were to divide the profits equally. Their community of interest extended to both profit and loss. On a bill by H. to wind up the partnership, this arrangement was admitted by demurrer. Held, that it constituted a partnership, if the parties stood to each other in the relation of principals and not of master and servant; and that the fact that the title to the lands was taken in E.'s name was immaterial: Hunt v. Erikson, 57 M. 330.

32. An agreement binding one party to get out lumber for the other during a specified season, the latter receiving a fixed proportion of the net profits of the job above expenses, does not constitute the parties partners, if at all, except for the season specified, even though the agreement was made some time before: Hall v. Edson, 40 M. 651.

33. Several part-owners of a vessel are not regarded as partners unless it distinctly appears that they are such: Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 M. 150.

34. The existence of a partnership, as between the parties, is a question of fact for a jury. And it is negatived by a verdict permitting recovery if there could be no recovery otherwise: Densmore v. Mathews, 58 M. 616.

35. Persons who have never agreed to become partners in a firm, who have never held themselves out as such, or contributed to its capital or shared in its profits, cannot be considered as partners; and the facts that they held a mortgage upon the firm property, and that one of them, whose son-in-law was a member of the firm, indorsed its paper, do not tend to prove that they were partners: Hunt v. Oliver, 118 U. S. 211.

36. Persons who are not partners may, nevertheless, be held liable as such for goods furnished them at the request of either, if they have held themselves out as partners, and the bills incurred by one have been acquiesced in by the other: Kritzer v. Sweet, 57 M. 617.

37. A partnership cannot be implied, as matter of law, from a business relation, if the parties thereto have not made or intended to make a partnership contract and if they have done nothing to estop them from denying the existence of a partnership: Beecher v. Bush, 45 M. 188.

38. An arrangement by which one man "hires the use" of another's building from day to day and opens and keeps it as a hotel, paying the owner daily a sum "equal to one-third of the gross receipts and gross earnings," does not of itself constitute them partners: Ibid.

39. One may become liable as a partner to third persons, though it was not his intention to become a partner, and even though a partnership could not have been made: Cleveland Paper Co. v. Courier Co., 67 M. 152.

40. There can be no such thing as a partnership as to third persons when there is none as between the parties themselves, and third persons have not been misled by concealment of facts or by deceptive appearances: Beecher v. Bush, 45 M. 188.

41. When two persons authorize a third to hold himself out as a partner with them, and he does so accordingly, this is as much their holding themselves out as such partners as if the same representations had been made by them in person. See this case for charge as to the fact of partnership in the face of an understanding to the contrary: Hinman v. Littell, 28 M. 484.

42. A firm composed of two women put the husband of one in absolute charge of the business, and he thereafter made purchases on his own credit, and with his wife's knowledge and consent acted in all respects as if he, instead of his wife, was one of the partners. Held that, as to creditors who had no notice to the contrary, he was to be considered as a partner; that his statements to a creditor to that effect were admissible in defence to an action of trover for goods taken on attachment; and that, unless superior equities had arisen, a judgment against the firm concluded the other partner. Such equities could not arise from the purchase alone in favor of the partner whose responsibility did not appear: Parshall v. Fisher, 48 M. 529.

43. The testimony of those who had dealt with the firm, showing their understanding as to who composed it, and also the whole state of facts as to how the business was done, were admissible, as was also a conversation concerning the payment of a claim, carried on between the husband and the attorney of an attaching creditor, in the wife's absence, but in the presence of a transferee of the firm property, and before the latter had parted with any consideration: Ibid.

44. An agreement for the formation of a limited partnership, executed under the laws of another state, but not recorded so as to become effectual for the purpose designed, has no tendency to prove an actual general partnership between the persons named in it, in the absence of extrinsic evidence to show that they had actually entered into business as partners: Gray v. Gibson, 6 M. 300.

45. Where an attempt is made to hold A. responsible for the acts of B., claimed to be his partner, the partnership must be clearly shown: Campbell v. Sherman, 49 M. 534.

46. The unity of interests in plaintiffs claiming as copartners may be shown by circumstantial evidence: Hadden v. Shortridge, 27 M. 212.

47. In an action on an account stated, evidence that the defendants admitted that they were doing business as partners should be allowed to go to the jury, even if not specifically confined to the time within which the account accrued: Sager v. Tupper, 38 M. 258.

48. In an action in which it was sought to charge defendants as partners owning a mill, the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that one of them exercised authority about the mill. Held, that by way of rebutting the inference that he was interested as a copartner, it was proper to show that others gave like directions; but not to prove his statements disclaiming such interest: Ibid.

49. Partnership cannot be proved by general reputation: Ibid.

50. Evidence that an arrangement for carrying on business for a share of the profits was entered into under an advertisement for a partner is admissible as tending to show a partnership: Wilcox v. Matthews, 44 M. 192.

51. A lawyer proposed to a real estate agent that they should together buy land and subdivide it and that the agent should sell it. It was a question whether the agent should put in any money, and whether he should share profits or sell on commission. There was no common fund, and money was to be advanced as required for individual purchases. Held, that the evidence was too vague to prove a partnership and support a bill by the agent for an accounting as to a parcel of land purchased and taken in the name of a third person: Pulford v. Morton, 62 M. 25.

52. In an action to charge defendants as copartners with the indebtedness of a banking institution, it is error to hold the defendants estopped from showing that in fact they were not partners, by reason of their having silently allowed the proprietor of the bank to represent them in printed notices as directors; such representations could not reasonably have misled any one into believing defendants were partners, or into trusting the bank on that basis; the most any one could insist upon would be that he had a right to regard the representations as true, and, treating them as true, they do not suggest the existence of a partnership: Bennett v. Dean, 85 M. 306.

II. AUTHORITY OF PARTNER; HOW FAR MAY BIND FIRM.

53. As a general rule one partner cannot execute a specialty in the name of the firm, binding, as such, upon the firm: Fox v. Norton, 9 M. 207.

54. A bond was declared upon as the individual bond of two defendants. The bond offered in evidence was signed by one with the name of a copartnership composed of the two, but there was no evidence that it was executed by the one in the presence of the other, or that the other had previously assented to its execution, or subsequently recognized or ratified it as the act or obligation of the firm. It was held that the action could not be maintained: Ibid.

55. An action upon the covenants of a lease which purports to have been given by a firm will not lie against the partners if, after having been left with the lessees' attorney to be held until an absent partner has approved of it, such approval is not given: Simon v. Bewick, 52 M. 388.

56. A partner's bill of sale of partnership property to secure his individual debts does not affect a copartner's right unless sanctioned by him; the purchaser takes only the undivided share of the vendor, subject to all the rights of the other parties and to the account to be taken between them, and he cannot change the possession or make any specific division: Kingsbury v. Tharp, 61 M. 216.

57. A partner may give a chattel mortgage on the copartnership property, and if a seal be affixed it is a nullity and does not vitiate the mortgage: Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 M. 107.

58. Where one member of a copartnership gives a note in the firm name, the presumption is that it was given for partnership purposes; and the burden of proof is upon the copartnership to show the contrary: Littell v. Fitch, 11 M. 525; Carrier v. Cameron, 81 M. 373.

See BILLS AND NOTES, § 388.

59. A partner is not bound by an accommodation indorsement made in the name of his firm, but without his assent: Heffron v. Hanaford, 40 M. 305.

60. Where a person lends his name to a firm as maker or indorser of a note to raise money to carry on the firm business, either partner authorized to raise money for the purpose may make the terms upon which the accommodation is obtained, and may give such personal security to the maker or indorser as the firm may have to give: Hopkins v. Thomas, 61 M. 369.

61. Where persons are engaged as copartners in the business of running a vessel, paper indorsed by any of them in the firm name, if received in the regular course of their business and made payable to the order of the firm, will bind the other partners: First National Bank v. Freeman, 47 M. 408.

62. Joint relations as partners or otherwise will not give one any implied authority to authorize the use of another's name as maker or indorser where their apparent interests or legal obligations might be different: Stroh v. Hinchman, 37 M. 490.

63. Where a partnership involves but a single transaction, one partner in closing it up has no implied authority to take from the firm's debtor a note payable to himself individually for his own use, and extend the time of payment without interest, and the partnership can sue on the original debt before the extension expires: Lemiette v. Starr, 66 M. 539 (June 23, '87).

64. One partner cannot submit partnership matters to arbitration without a special authority for that purpose from his copartners: Buchoz v. Grandjean, 1 M. 367; Backus v. Coyne, 35 M. 5.

65. A submission being thus entered into without special authority, and an award made in pursuance of it in favor of the partnership, it was held that the other party might defeat a suit on the award by objecting such want of authority: Buchoz v. Grandjean, 1 M. 367.

66. It is beyond the power of one partner not specially authorized for that purpose to submit to a third person the adjustment of a general average claim, where the submission involves the examination of witnesses, imposes duties that are not merely clerical, and requires a decision that is to be conclusive between the parties: Backus v. Coyne, 35 M. 5.

67. A partner can bind his firm by a submission to arbitration if expressly authorized to do so, and no acknowledged power of attorney is necessary: Davis v. Berger, 54 M. 652.

68. A replevin in suit was begun by partners, and after the partnership was dissolved, but before the settlement, the matter in dispute was submitted to arbitration by one of the partners in the firm name. The other did not repudiate this action, but merely said that he was not to be held liable under it. Held, that this was not enough to release him in an action of trover based on the award: McArthur v. Oliver, 53 M. 299.

69. Joinder of partners, in suing out a writ of error to review the judgment on an award against the firm, has the effect of affirming the authority delegated to one partner to submit to arbitration: Davis v. Berger, 54 M. 652.

70. Partners have no implied authority to confess judgment for each other: Soper v. Fry, 37 M. 236.

71. One partner may transfer a portion of the assets for the purpose of paying or securing debts, or to raise means to carry on the concern; but the power of divesting entirely one partner of his interest, appointing a trustee for both, and breaking up the concern, is not one of the powers either contemplated or implied by the contract of partnership: Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

72. One partner cannot make a general assignment of the partnership effects to a trustee for the benefit of the creditors of the firm without the knowledge or consent of his copartner, especially when he is on the spot and may be consulted: Id., H. 172, 1 D. 477.

73. But it seems that a partner's power to make such an assignment may sometimes be implied from circumstances showing that it was intended to be conferred: Kirby v. Ingersoll, 1 D. 477.

74. Where an assignment of a partnership claim was made by an agent of the firm, with the consent of one of the partners, to apply on a demand against the agent and the consenting partner, it was held that the objection that the assignment was invalid for want of the assent of all the partners only went to the sufficiency of the consideration as between the partnership and the assignees, and could only be raised by the partners themselves: Kull v. Thompson, 38 M. 685.

75. One partner may bind his copartner in all matters within the scope of the copartnership; the implied authority of one partner to bind his copartner is generally limited to such acts as are in their nature essential to the general objects of the copartnership: Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

76. Each partner is the general agent of the others in all matters within the scope of the partnership business, and what is known to one is supposed to be known to all: Moran v. Palmer, 18 M. 367.

77. Every member of a partnership, in legal contemplation, without any special powers being conferred upon him by the articles of copartnership, is not only a principal, but a general agent of all the copartners in the transaction of the company business: Burgan v. Lyell, 2 M. 102.

78. But one partner cannot bind his copartner by any contract not within the immediate scope of the partnership, unless with such copartner's knowledge and consent: Barnard v. Lapeer & P. H. P. R. Co., 6 M. 274.

79. Such knowledge and assent must be established by evidence affirmatively showing it, or from which it may be clearly affirmed: Ibid.

80. That a plank road will be of incidental benefit to a copartnership engaged in the lumber business will not authorize one partner, without the assent of the other, to bind the firm by a subscription to the stock of a corporation organized for constructing such road: Ibid.

81. Where one partner subscribed the name of the firm to stock in a corporation, without the assent of a co-partner, it was held that the latter did not recognize his relation as stockholder in the corporation, and become liable to pay the subscription, by failing to express his dissent when demand of payment was made upon the firm: Ibid.

82. A partner binds his firm only on the theory of an implied agency for the purposes of the mutual adventure; and the agency does not extend beyond what may be fairly regarded as coming within its reach: Hotchin v. Kent, 8 M. 526.

83. It is within the authority of the managing partner of a business to authorize dealings with other business establishments, whereby each other's clerks or customers are furnished with goods which are charged to each other: and when so authorized such dealings bind until notice to the contrary: Cameron v. Blackman, 39 M. 108.

84. Where a third person does an act for the benefit of a partnership, a subsequent ratification of it, during the partnership, by one of its members, is a ratification by all: Lyell v. Sandbourn, 2 M. 109.

85. Where a member of a mining company, who was also one of the managers of the company, employed the plaintiff to work for the company, it was held immaterial whether his powers as manager were general, special or limited, if the plaintiff at the time had no notice of any abridgment of his powers by the articles of copartnership: Burgan v. Lyell, 2 M. 102.

86. What either partner does in the collection of a firm debt is presumptively done with the other's sanction: Harvey v. McAdams, 32 M. 472; Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 M. 208.

87. Where one member of a firm has taken a chattel mortgage on a stock of goods to secure a debt to the firm, he has authority, as partner, to take goods in payment of the debt and to create an agency for selling them by putting them in the mortgagor's charge, and if he thinks that keeping up the stock is the best way to sell the goods to advantage, slight evidence of his partner's assent is enough to make the firm responsible for the agent's acts in purchasing goods for that purpose: Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 M. 459.

88. The partnership name represents the constituents of the firm, and when it is rightly pledged the respective partners are jointly bound: Gates v. Fisk, 45 M. 522.

89. Neither an agent nor a partner has any implied power to apply partnership moneys on private debts; and one who deals with an agent cannot, without the principal's authority or acquiescence, apply money due to the principal upon a private account with the agent: Chase v. Buhl Iron Works, 55 M. 189.

90. A partner's consent to the cancellation of an insurance policy in which the firm is interested is conclusive on the firm; and a formal surrender of the policy is unimportant, except as evidence of the cancellation: Hillock v. Traders' Ins. Co., 54 M. 582.

91. An employment by one member of a firm of an attorney's legal services, in a matter not strictly within the firm's business, but in its interest, is ratified if the other partner pays the attorney money toward his expenses in that matter, with knowledge of its nature, and when so ratified both partners are made liable: Holmes v. Kortlander, 64 M. 591.

92. Whether an arrangement made in the firm interest by a member of a firm of liquor dealers, for legal services in prosecuting certain proceedings to secure, for a saloon to which the firm expects to sell stock, authority to sell liquors, is outside of the firm business, quere: Ibid.

93. Where two persons who have entered into a contract for a copartnership rescind it, one of them has no power afterwards to bind the other by ratifying a contract previously made by them, and which was void under the statute of frauds when made: Chamberlain v. Dow, 10 M. 319.

94. The refusal of one partner to deliver up, when demanded, property taken in execution under a void judgment for a firm debt, is sufficient to bind his copartner: Rolfe v. Dudley, 58 M. 208.

95. Where two persons are engaged as partners in keeping a place for selling liquors and in selling without a license, the selling by one is the act of both, and may be given in evidence against the other in an action against him for the penalty: Smith v. Adrian, 1 M. 495.

As to admissions by one partner, see EVIDENCE, §§ 482-487.

III. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES AS BETWEEN A FIRM OR PARTNERS AND THIRD PERSONS.

96. There is no legal presumption that a firm has any less power to rent its realty than any one else: Williams v. Shelden, 61 M. 311.

97. A dormant partner is a secret partner; one who becomes such by a secret arrangement while his associate is held out to the world as sole manager and proprietor of the business: Beecher v. Bush, 45 M. 188.

98. Whether a special partner becomes liable as a general partner by a change in the nature of the business without his knowledge, quere: Hinchman v. Barnes, 21 M. 556.

99. Under H. S. § 2350, requiring a notice of special partnership to be published in two newspapers published in the senatorial district in which the business shall be carried on, held, that the territory of a city, village or township—one part of it as much as another—is the place of publication within the meaning of the statute: Ibid.

100. A partner is not liable for bonds received without his knowledge by his copartner on special deposit, the receiving of special deposits being no part of the firm's business: Hatheway's Appeal, 52 M. 112.

101. Where H. was the general partner in a firm called H. & Co., an order drawn on H. as "general partner," and accepted in the firm name, is to be treated as an order on and acceptance of the firm, and not as an individual transaction: Carney v. Hotchkiss, 48 M. 276.

102. A. and B. constituted one firm, A., B. and C. another. Both firms had the same name, but the business of each was kept distinct. A. gave a note in the firm name, and a bank discounted it, relying wholly upon the credit of A. and B., for the use of which firm the discount was procured. Held, that the bank could not hold C. upon the note: Hastings Bank v. Hibbard, 48 M. 452.

103. Where several persons put up a building as partners, and one of them buys brick for the purpose without an express understanding with the vendor that it is an individual purchase, and the brick is actually used in the building, the partners are liable as such for its value: Stecker v. Smith, 46 M. 14.

104. As between the creditors of a previous firm the separate creditors of a partner who continued the business and was the sole visible owner of the property employed in trade, and where the separate creditors had given credit, relying on the property employed in trade for payment, such creditors should be preferred to the creditors of the firm: Topliff v. Vail, H. 340.

105. The creditors of a partnership have a right to payment out of the partnership effects, in preference to the creditors of an individual partner: Ibid.

106. A partner's individual creditors antedating the partnership are entitled to be paid out of his estate's share of the assets before the other partner is reimbursed for his payment of firm debts: Killefer v. McLain, 70 M. 508.

107. If one member of a copartnership enter into a transaction on his own behalf, which is within the scope of the partnership business, his copartners may insist that it is a fraud upon them, and claim the benefits resulting from it. But this is a right which the partners alone can assert, and is not available to third persons, for the purpose of fixing a liability upon the partnership when such claim has not been asserted: Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 M. 168.

108. One who has purchased of one of a firm property subject to partnership debts, and has agreed in writing to assume and pay such debts as part of the purchase price, thereby recognizes the equitable lien of the partnership creditors; and it is not necessary that such creditors should put their claims in judgment before filing a bill to compel such payment: Olson v. Morrison, 29 M. 395.

109. On the question of acquiescence and undue delay in exercising the right to rescind a contract, the firm must be conclusively held to have notice of every fact or thing material to the question, which any member of the firm knew; and any act of any member, or any letter written by one in their name, with reference to this business, must be treated as the act or letter of the firm: Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Bates, 31 M. 168.

110. Whatever is done by one member of a partnership in the course of the business is presumed to be known to the others; this presumption applies as strongly to the acts of a partner who is the husband of a creditor of the firm, in his dealings with his wife as such creditor, as to his dealings with any other creditor: Osborn v. Osborn, 26 M. 48.

111. Where the defence to a partnership note is that it was given in a transaction not within the line of the partnership, considerable latitude should be allowed in the proof of facts tending to show that all the defendants knew that their partnership name was being used in dealings with the plaintiff; the fact that the business and correspondence was carried on in the partnership name is admissible in connection with evidence from which the jury might infer that all the defendants knew that plaintiff understood that he was dealing with the firm: Mills v. Bunce, 29 M. 364.

112. Where a member of a mining copartnership assigns his stock in the company to a third person, he is still liable as a copartner for debts subsequently contracted by the company to a person who had no notice of his withdrawal: Burgan v. Lyell, 2 M. 102.

113. In suing an old firm upon dealings continued with its successors, it would be proper to admit in evidence a note payable to and indorsed by the new firm, if it related to the account with the old one: Botsford v. Kleinhans, 29 M. 332.

114. Where two firms have dealt with each other and each with the members of the other under a general understanding that the individual account of any partner should be treated as a matter of firm account against his firm, and dealings and settlements have, from time to time, been made on this basis, the balance found on such a settlement made in good faith was held, as between the parties, to be a legitimate demand on behalf of the creditor firm against the other, for which an action would lie: Davis v. Dodge, 30 M. 267.

115. An action will not lie against a firm upon a note given by one partner without the other's knowledge or assent, and without any consideration to the firm, and if it does not pertain to the firm business and was taken for the private debt of the partner who gave it: Roberts v. Pepple, 55 M. 367.

116. Plaintiffs sued as partners, and a witness on their behalf testified to admissions by defendants sufficient to make out their liability. The witness said nothing respecting the partnership of the plaintiffs, and was not cross-examined as to his knowledge of them. Defendants put in no evidence. Held, that a judgment for plaintiffs on this evidence should not be disturbed: Wattles v. Moss, 46 M. 52.

117. A partner's private means are not open to inquiry in an action against the firm, which can only be liable for partnership purposes or for such as are presumably so. And a partner cannot use partnership funds for private purposes: Roberts v. Pepple, 55 M. 367.

118. Suit on a promissory note was brought against certain persons named Spear, Wetmore and Freeman "as copartners doing business under the firm name of Propeller Ira Chaffee." The note was made payable to "Prop. Ira Chaffee," and was indorsed "Prop. Ira Chaffee, F. B. Spear, ma'g'r, F. B. Spear, W. L. Wetmore." Freeman alone defended, and he pleaded the general issue with an affidavit denying execution. There was evidence tending to show that he and the other defendants owned the propeller, and that the profits from it were shared in the ratio of their interests. Held, that in submitting the case the powers and duties of managing owner and the rights and liabilities of the owners were immaterial, but that the case should be left with the jury with proper instructions dependent on finding a copartnership in fact as the foundation of any right to recover: First National Bank v. Freeman, 47 M. 408.

119. In an action on partnership paper given mala fide but binding one partner, evidence is admissible to exonerate a copartner: Freeman v. Ellison, 37 M. 459.

120. Where plaintiffs bring suit as partners composing a certain firm, it is necessary for them to prove that they compose the firm before giving evidence of transactions between the firm and defendants: Lee v. Hardgrave, 3 M. 77.

121. Where plaintiffs sue as partners, not upon any contract made or dealings had with them as such, nor upon negotiable paper, and the partnership is put in issue, the real question to be submitted to the jury is whether the plaintiffs are partners as between themselves, and not whether they have, in any way, made themselves liable as partners to third persons. And it is erroneous for the court to charge the jury that, if the evidence shows the plaintiffs have made themselves partners as to third persons, they have in fact become general partners, and as such are entitled to maintain the action: Gray v. Gibson, 6 M. 300.

122. One who brings suit as against partners must show the existence of a joint contract or joint promise, express or implied: Sager v. Tupper, 38 M. 258.

123. A partner's authority to use the firm name in a particular case, and his partner's knowledge of or acquiescence in his doing so, are open to inquiry in an action against the firm based on his act; and direct questions as to his authority and such acquiescence may be asked, subject to full cross examination: Roberts v. Pepple, 55 M. 367.

124. A firm cannot be released from its debts by any agreement with a stranger firm to which it sells out, that the latter shall pay the debts, unless the creditors accept the subrogation: Hayes v. Knox, 41 M. 529.

125. A purchase of partnership assets and assumption of responsibility to outgoing partners does not bring the purchasers into contract relations with the firm's creditors so as to enable them to take advantage of a contract partly performed by it: Ayres v. Gallup, 44 M. 13.

126. Where dealings with outsiders pass from a firm to its successors, the liability of the old firm is not ended unless the outsiders have agreed to accept the liability of the new firm in its place: Botsford v. Kleinhans, 29 M. 832.

127. Those who continue dealing with a firm after its composition has been changed, the new firm assuming the rights and obligations of the old one, have a right to assume that the business of the two will be kept separate, and cannot be bound without their knowledge, consent or acquiescence, by the transfer of the old account to the books of the new firm, and by the continuance of the old accounts after the dissolution of the old firm; nor is it allowable in a suit by them against the old firm to inquire into their separate dealings with the new one: Ibid.

128. A partner's sale of his interest in the assets of the firm does not, it seems, assign his personal indebtedness thereto unless the instrument of transfer expressly includes it: Gardiner v. Fargo, 58 M. 72.

129. Where a firm is sued the partners cannot claim set-off of sums due them individually: Sager v. Tupper, 38 M. 258.

IV. RIGHTS, LIABILITIES AND REMEDIES AS BETWEEN PARTNERS; ACCOUNTING.

(a) In general.

130. Partners are presumed, in the absence of any showing of their respective interests, to be equal partners: Northrup v. McGill, 27 M. 234.

131. One partner has presumptively an equal interest with another in the partnership property and an equal right to share in it when the partnership is dissolved; it is not, however, an interest in specific articles, but in the surplus that remains after the firm debts are paid, and as he has no separate property in the assets of the firm, his share is not separable from that of his partner, and is subject to the final adjustment of accounts between the partners themselves, when it may amount to little or nothing: Hutchinson v. Dubois, 45 M. 148.

132. Partners do not hold as tenants in common or joint tenants. The firm property constitutes an identical and entire interest: Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 M. 254.

133. A partner is not merely part owner of the partnership property; he has an entire as well as a joint interest in the whole of it, and is in some sense a trustee of the partnership assets as a trust fund for the payment of creditors: Hutchinson v. Dubois, 45 M. 148.

134. In a case where the legal title was an equal tenancy in common the court established the rights of a deceased partner as amounting only to one third, instead of one half, and prevented an administrator's sale which would have misrepresented the real interest: Thayer v. Lane, W. 200.

135. Where a partner who sells out his interest in a firm to a third person takes securities for the price they form no part of the firm assets, but are his private property: Glynn v. Phetteplace, 26 M. 883.

136. Lands conveyed to the members of a partnership, in satisfaction of a partnership debt, are to be regarded for all purposes of arranging balances between the partners, paying debts and closing up the partnership business, as personal property: Moran v. Palmer, 13 M. 367.

137. In equity, as between partners themselves, real estate purchased by them with partnership effects is partnership property, and on the dissolution of the firm should be divided as such, each party taking the same share in it as in the personal property, unless at the time of the purchase it was understood not to be a partnership transaction: Thayer v. Lane, W. 200.

138. Lands that are part of a common partnership stock have in equity the character of personality; and the legal title thereto is subordinated to the incidents of partnership funds and accounting: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171.

139. Where one partner purchased property for the use of the firm, but in his own name, though with the money of another partner, and the property was actually used as firm assets, held, that the case did not fall within the principle of the statute prohibiting resulting trusts, but must be treated as partnership property: Way v. Stebbins, 47 M. 296.

140. Where partners owning land individually agree to put it into the firm, and where, to effect this, each conveys an undivided half to the other, such land becomes firm assets: Killefer v. McLain, 70 M. 508.

141. Land may belong to a partnership although held in the name of one partner: Williams v. Shelden, 61 M. 311.

142. Two out of three partners owned the lands which were occupied for partnership purposes, as tenants in common under the same deed. The partnership articles, which were on record, set forth that it was agreed that upon the fulfilment of certain terms by the third partner, including the payment by him of "one-third of the amount paid by them for the real estate purchased for the purposes of said business," they would convey to him an equal undivided one-third of said real estate. Held, that the partnership articles did not make the lands partnership property, and if it was meant they should become so on payment by the third partner, they would not come into the accounting, but would remain the property of the partners who held the title; one of the owners could therefore mortgage his interest in them, and in a suit for an accounting they could not be treated as partnership property as against the mortgagees: Gordon v. Gordon, 49 M. 501.

143. The rights of a firm under a mortgage held by it are not affected by the purchase of the equity of redemption by one of the partners for himself: Gordon v. Tyler, 58 M. 629.

144. Certain land belonging to an individual partner was included as assets in the partnership articles, and the firm gave a mortgage on it. The owner drew up a deed conveying an undivided half of it to his partner, but it was not recorded, and he afterwards destroyed the deed and took up the mortgage with partnership notes. When he went out of the firm he took a bond from his partner binding the latter to pay all partnership debts, and gave him clear title to the land which the partner bought with the other assets. Held, that by destroying the former deed he would have been estopped from enforcing payment of the notes but for the subsequent conveyance of clear title, after which the notes constituted a liability enforceable by suit on the bond: Mette v. Feldman, 45 M. 25.

145. Where property owned by two partners is subject to a mortgage, and, as between the two, it is the duty of one to discharge it, and the other pays the debt on condition that the mortgage shall inure to his benefit, the latter is entitled to reimbursement, with interest, through the mortgage: Laylin v. Knox, 41 M. 40.

146. Where it was the duty of one partner to furnish the money required to buy a tract of land for the firm business, the title to which was taken in his name, and for which he paid the purchase price, overlooking, however, a small sum due for interest, which his copartner without express request subsequently paid in order to release the land from encumbrance, it was held, in a suit for such interest money and for other advances, that an implied request to pay the interest might be inferred: Bates v. Lane, 62 M. 182.

147. In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, it is fair to presume that a retiring partner does not intend that the partnership property shall be used for the individual benefit of a partner who continues the business, leaving the debts of the firm unpaid; and this was held to be the presumption where the retiring partner transferred the partnership effects to a partner continuing the business, who agreed to pay the partnership debts, and gave bond to that effect: Topliff v. Vail, H. 340.

148. An indemnifying bond given by a firm to a retiring partner is intended to secure him against debts of the firm to third persons on which he might be held liable if the firm did not pay them. It would not be regarded as meant to cover a credit to the partner himself on the books of the firm, as that would be a debt to himself for which he was himself in part responsible as partner: Lambert v. Griffith, 50 M. 286.

149. Where on the dissolution of a copartnership one partner purchases the interest of his copartners, agreeing to pay all the partnership liabilities, the partner thus retiring may still be held liable by the creditors. But if he is compelled to pay he is entitled to indemnity from the other partner, and is therefore as to such other partner a surety merely upon the partnership obligation: Smith v. Shelden, 35 M. 42.

150. One member of a copartnership sold his interest to his copartner and a third party, who orally agreed "to see that all the debts of the old firm were paid, and that he, the retiring partner, should not be called upon for any of those debts." Held to be a mere contract of indemnity, upon which the party's remedy was at law. Held also, that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds, and the actual surrender of the party's interest in the firm was a sufficient consideration to support it: Bonebright v. Pease, 3 M. 318.

(b) Proceedings at law between partners.

151. The assignor of a partnership interest cannot be sued by his assignee and the remaining partners on a claim held by the original firm against him: Learned v. Ayres, 41 M. 677.

152. Neither a partner nor his assignee can maintain an action at law against the firm, even after its dissolution, for the amount of a note made by the firm to the partner and afterwards accidentally destroyed without ever having been indorsed: Davis v. Merrill, 51 M. 480.

153. The remedy of a partner, or of his assignee, against the firm upon a note given by it to the partner, must be in equity, if anywhere, after the dissolution of the partnership, without an accounting or settlement: Ibid.

154. One partner cannot at law sue another, after dissolution of the firm, for the amount which would have been due him on an accounting, unless defendant has expressly promised to pay it: Miner v. Lorman, 56 M. 212.

155. A partner after drawing checks upon the funds of the firm for his personal use, and charging them against himself, was succeeded by another partner, and sold out his interest to the new firm. Held, that the new firm could not sue him at law for the amount of the checks, nor use them as offset against an action brought by him against the firm; the mutual liabilities of the old firm should be settled by an accounting: Gardiner v. Fargo, 58 M. 72.

156. An obligation legal in form can be sued at law; and a note by one partner to another, even if made to him as a trustee for the firm's benefit, can be sued at law according to its terms, and the defence that it is a partnership matter must either be made at law or under proceedings brought by defendant in equity to establish it: Mitchell v. Wells, 54 M. 127.

157. Where no assets remain after payment of a firm's debts, the liability of one partner for money advanced to him by the other after dissolution beyond the latter's share of the debts is a simple money demand, which could be settled without any legal obstacle in an ordinary action at law: Wheeler v. Arnold, 30 M. 304.

158. Proof by a surviving partner that he had furnished more than his share of the capital, that the capital was all absorbed, leaving large debts and no assets, and that he had paid debts at the request of the deceased partner, would authorize a recovery against the latter's estate for contribution: Ibid.

159. Where a final statement of accounts is made between two partners, and one recognizes a balance as due the other, an action lies for such balance: Miner v. Lorman, 59 M. 480.

160. Where one of a firm containing more than two members dies, and there is nothing to show that all the rest stand as one partner only, a balance in the partnership affairs in decedent's favor cannot, in a court of law, be offset against a claim against his estate by the survivors: Elder's Appeal, 89 M. 474.

161. Money furnished by one partner to another to enable him to meet his obligations to the firm is a personal claim, and has nothing to do with a final partnership accounting, unless connected with it by some special dealing, and an action at law lies for its recovery: Bates v. Lane, 62 M. 132.

162. One who has sold stock and leased a store to a firm and has then taken a partnership interest in the business can offset the amount due him on such sale and lease in an action against him by the firm, and need not leave it to a partnership accounting already pending: Kinney v. Robison, 52 M. 389.

163. Where one partner has paid firm debts from his private funds at the other's request on the latter's promise to pay half the amount, he may, after dissolution of the firm, offset so much against an independent claim for which his former partner sued him at law; and this though a suit in equity was pending for a partnership accounting: Cilley v. Van Patten, 58 M. 404.

164. A claim of one partner in a suit against the other upon a contract not connected with the partnership affairs cannot be subjected to a set-off in favor of the other partner arising out of such affairs where there has been no accounting and no balance found due to the other after a final liquidation of the firm's indebtedness: Randall v. Baird, 66 M. 812.

(c) Accounting in chancery.

That delay by an excluded partner for more than six years in seeking an accounting is fatal unless the partnership articles are under seal and contain covenants, see EQUITY, § 601.

165. Proceedings between partners for an accounting are always for the principal purpose of reaching a statement of money balances and a division of assets as personalty. Lands may be involved, but the locality of the lands does not affect the jurisdiction of the court, which depends upon the residence of the parties: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171.

166. Where partnership articles provided that the partnership should expire by limitation, but the business was allowed to run on until a later date when a new firm was formed, leaving out one of the original partners, and bringing in another, it was held that the partner who was dropped had a right to an accounting from the members of the new firm: Near v. Lowe, 49 M. 482.

167. After a partner has sold out his interest in a firm his former copartner has the right, as against him, to have the concern wound up, but this can be done only by bringing in all parties concerned, and by seeking a distribution and an accounting. The purchasers from the retiring partner take such interest as he would have had and no more, and that would ordinarily be subject to the final settlement, and the purchasers therefore become parties: Glynn v. Phetteplace, 26 M. 883.

168. The fact that a partner has sold his interest to a third person and has agreed to receive from him a certain sum until he is fully paid does not deprive him of his right to file a bill against his copartner for dissolution and accounting: Russell v. White, 63 M. 409.

169. Probate proceedings for discovery do not bar an otherwise proper suit in equity for winding up the partnership concerns: Perrin v. Lepper, 49 M. 347.

170. Where the parties to a suit for a partnership accounting have agreed by their pleadings that their firm was dissolved before suit was brought, neither can afterward claim the contrary, especially if he has made no application to the court for leave to change his pleading but has given evidence in its support: Candler v. Stange, 53 M. 479.

171. Partnership lands cannot be distinguished from other assets for purposes of accounting and settlement: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171.

172. No allowance should be made in a partnership accounting for matters antedating the partnership, even though relevant as evidence: Wells v. Babcock, 56 M. 276.

173. Neither partner need submit to an overhauling of his business and accounts for a period not within the time fixed by their pleadings and consent decree: Candler v. Stange, 53 M. 479.

174. Any reasonable expense incurred by either member of a firm, with or without the consent of the rest, in the legitimate prosecution of the partnership business, and for the benefit of the parties, should be allowed upon a partnership accounting. So held of the expense of exploring premises leased to the firm for mining: Sweeney v. Neely, 53 M. 421.

175. Where one partner furnished timbered land to be lumbered by the firm, and also furnished tools and outfit for the work, and was to be paid interest upon his moneys invested, the agreed cost of the timber was properly taken as the cost of the land, less its value as stripped and returned to him, since the land itself was not to be used; and land from which no timber was taken should not be considered in an accounting, nor should the firm be charged with taxes on land for which he received credit. And it was proper to allow for outfit at the difference between its first cost and the value of what was left when the firm dissolved, the wear and tear being in some degree a consumption of it and consequent diminution of profits: Wells v. Babcock, 56 M. 276.

176. Where an agreement for a settlement of partnership accounts provided that sums found due to either party should be added to, or deducted from, an agreed sum to be paid to one of them, the party claiming the benefit of any such additions or reductions has the burden of proving that the amount has been received and not accounted for, or paid out and not credited: Lambert v. Griffith, 44 M. 65.

177. Where a credit to a partner appeared upon the books of the firm and was distinctly ascertained, it was regarded as having been included in the partnership settlement, which was evidently meant to leave nothing unprovided for: Lambert v. Griffith, 50 M. 286.

178. Where a partner had turned over to the firm certain securities to be used in paying for property purchased by them, and the firm credited him with them and guaranteed them to the party to whom they were given, and when a deficiency afterwards arose the partner who had been credited took back the title to a part of the mortgaged premises, it was to that extent proper to charge back the securities to him: Harrison v. Dewey, 46 M. 173.

179. Upon a bill for partnership accounting it appeared that no loss had occurred in the business, but that defendant had kept no such books as would enable full accounts to be stated. Held proper to require defendant to account for all the money put into the business by complainant: Robertson v. Gibb, 38 M. 165.

180. A partner must use his best efforts and judgment in promoting the firm business without further compensation than his share in the profits: Heath v. Waters, 40 M. 457.

181. The sickness of a partner is one of the risks incidental to partnership business, and does not give another partner any claim for personal services in conducting the entire business if the partnership articles do not provide for any: Ibid.

182. Failure in duty as a partner may be a ground for dissolving the partnership, but not a claim by diligent partners for compensation: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171.

183. Partners cannot ordinarily claim allowances for services exceeding those of their associates; but where those who do not expect to be personally charged with the business of the firm perform special services, it is proper to allow them compensation beyond their share of the profits if they had an understanding with the others that they were to be compensated for them: Ibid.

As to when interest is charged against one partner in favor of the other on advances, etc., see INTEREST, §§ 81-83, 50, 64.

184. Complainant, after a dissolution of partnership between himself and defendant, obtained a temporary injunction restraining defendant from disposing of the firm's assets, but afterwards the injunction was modified by requiring both parties to file a bond to account for the assets, and allowing either to dispose of the assets, but not below cost. Without filing bond complainant took possession of a large part of the firm property, and sold it for less than cost, without authority from defendant. Held, that on an accounting complainant was not entitled to an allowance in his favor of the losses on the assets that went into his hands, and that his irregular and unauthorized conduct precluded him from relief: Kinney v. Robinson, 66 M. 113.

185. Where, on division of partnership assets, one partner has taken certain accounts at their face, and been charged with them as moneys he could collect, it is not error, on a subsequent accounting in equity between the parties, to allow such partner for money received from debtors during the partnership by a representative of the other partner, and not credited on the books, these payments reducing the real amount of the accounts below what they had appeared to be: McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 M. 476.

186. In a suit in equity for an accounting an independent claim of one copartner against the firm cannot be applied on the amount found due him from the firm: Kinney v. Tabor, 62 M. 517.

187. A fair compromise deliberately made by partners in settling their accounts ought not to be disturbed on a bill for an accounting where no false charges or omissions of specific credits are shown: Harrison v. Dewey, 46 M. 178.

188. A settlement between partners which does not seem to have been unfair will not be disturbed at the instance of one who has not within a reasonable time repudiated its terms, nor taken any steps to rescind it: McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 M. 476.

189. The decree in a suit for accounting cannot provide for partition unless by consent. The partners have a right to have the assets disposed of, if they desire; and lands not sold are left as a distinct tenancy in common: Godfrey v. White, 43 M. 171.

190. A decree for the settlement of partnership accounts was affirmed on the facts: Wingarden v. Verhage, 68 M. 14.

As to costs on accounting, see COSTS, §§ 171, 250.

As to receivership in cases of partnership accounting, see RECEIVERS.

As to appeals in suits for accounting, see APPEAL, II, (b), 7, 8.

V. DISSOLUTION AND ITS EFFECT.

(a) What works dissolution; notice.

191. A partnership may be dissolved at the will of either party where the agreement is silent as to its duration: Buck v. Smith, 29 M. 166.

192. A firm is dissolved by the death of a partner unless the partnership articles provide for continuance: Roberts v. Kelsey, 38 M. 602; Jenness v. Carleton, 40 M. 343.

193. Partnership relations between a man and a woman are dissolved by their marriage; and the man's continued possession of property owned by the woman but used by the firm is by virtue of a license merely, which would cease at her death: Bassett v. Shepardson, 52 M. 8.

194. A partnership is dissolved unless equity can interfere when one of the firm takes exclusive possession and gives notice of dissolution to the others and the public: Solomon v. Kirkwood, 55 M. 256.

195. The bankruptcy of partners dissolves the partnership. And if, after the bankruptcy, the partners continue the same kind of business under the same partnership name, it is a new partnership: Atwood v. Gillett, 2 D. 206.

196. Whether, where the duration of a partnership is not fixed by the agreement therefor, either partner cannot dissolve it at pleasure, quere. Whether any condition or limitation as to its duration can be ingrafted on the partnership contract as an implication from its nature, quere: Walker v. Whipple, 58 M. 476.

197. Such notice of the dissolution of a partnership is sufficient as is likely to make the fact generally known in the locality concerned, and to those with whom business is done: Solomon v. Kirkwood, 55 M. 256.

198. Persons having no knowledge of a partnership are not entitled to notice of a dissolution: Chamberlain v. Dow, 10 M. 819.

(b) Powers and liabilities of partners after dissolution.

199. A dissolution of partners puts an end to the authority of one partner to bind the other by contracts. If the firm has been discharged from its debts in bankruptcy he cannot revive a debt afterwards by acknowledgment of it: Atwood v. Gillett, 2 D. 206.

200. Each member of a firm that has been dissolved has a right, unless otherwise provided to continue in the business in competition with the other, so long as neither can be held on the other's contracts: Smith v. Walker, 57 M. 457.

201. A surviving partner cannot bind co-survivors by signing the firm name without their express authority or ratification: Jenness v. Carleton, 40 M. 848.

202. On the dissolution of a copartnership the partner intrusted with the winding up of the business has no authority to give notes of the firm in settlement of partnership debts so as to bind the other partners to an extension of time of payment with an increased rate of interest. And this is so whatever may be the rule as to giving a mere acknowledgment of the amount due in the form of a due-bill or I. O. U.: Smith v. Shelden, 85 M. 42.

203. A surviving partner cannot, without express authority, bind co-survivors by a time note in the firm name, even for an indebtedness that occurred before the firm was dissolved by the death of one of its members: Matteson v. Nathanson, 38 M. 377.

204. A member of a firm that has been dissolved by the death of a partner cannot bind the survivors by indorsing a note in the firm name unless they ratify his act, even though the note may have been given for a debt of the firm: Carleton v. Jenness, 42 M. 110.

205. Where goods are ordered by one member of a firm, and the order has not been accepted nor the goods shipped until after notice of its dissolution, and the shipment varies from the terms of the order, the retiring partner will not be bound to it, nor will he be bound if the conditions of the order are waived after the dissolution by the remaining partner: Goodspeed v. Wiard Plow Co., 45 M. 322.

206. Upon the death of one partner a cause of action belonging to the firm survives in favor of the other: Teller v. Wetherell, 9 M. 464.

207. In an action against a surviving partner a debt which became due from himself separately, before or after his partner's death, may be included: Newberry v. Troubridge, 13 M. 263.

208. The right of action at law for any trespass on the property of a firm, a member of which has died, rests solely in the survivor: Pfeffer v. Steiner, 27 M. 537.

209. Surviving partners can recover in their own names for goods belonging to the firm, but sold by them, without joining the representatives of the deceased partner, or obtaining an assignment or organizing a new firm: Bassett v. Miller, 89 M. 133.

210. One cannot sue as surviving partner upon a cause of action that arose out of a transaction which did not take place until after the firm was dissolved by his copartner's death: Mead v. Raymond, 53 M. 14.

211. Where, after the death of a partner, one of his survivors has taken no part with the rest in carrying on partnership business, he is not bound by any implication that they constitute a new firm: Matteson v. Nathanson, 38 M. 377.

212. After the death of a member of a firm his son engaged actively in the business under the old style, without new partnership articles, and a promissory note in the firm name was given to a party in the regular course of business. Held, that the surviving partner and the son were liable on the note in the hands of a bona fide holder without notice, even though another person has meanwhile taken the place of the surviving partner in the business, and has given him a bond to indemnify him against claims against the old firm: Swift v. Mead, 62 M. 313.

213. A. and B. were partners in carrying on a hotel. Pending negotiations for a renewal of the lease under which they held the property A. became insane, and his death appeared imminent. B. negotiated for a lease to be taken by himself in case A. should die or should not recover his reason, and upon A.'s death, which soon occurred, B. took a lease. Held, that A.'s representatives had no interest therein, nor had they in the good-will of the business, for the reason that the good-will was incident to the use of the property; that they could claim no interest in the profits of the business after A.'s death and pending a settlement, because of B.'s use of the furniture in the hotel, they having objected to its use but enjoined its removal; that they could hold B. liable only for its deterioration while so used; and that they could not charge B. for losses to the business during alterations and improvements made before A.'s death, and which both A. and B. contemplated would be made up by increased profits under the new lease: Chittenden v. Witbeck, 50 M. 401; Witbeck v. Chittenden, 50 M. 426.

214. A partner after the firm's dissolution, whereof a creditor had not yet learned, sent him his individual note for the firm's debt, and afterwards sent him notice to the effect that he had bought out the business, and would make some turn to adjust the firm's liabilities and save the creditor from loss. Subsequently the latter extended the note, and, the maker dying insolvent, sued the surviving partner on open account. Held, that whether the notice to plaintiff charged him with knowledge that the maker assumed the firm's liabilities—in which case defendant stood as surety and was discharged by the extension—was for the jury: Johnson v. Emerrick, 70 M. 214.

215. A firm dissolved after ordering a lot of merchandise, but it was all forwarded before the consignors knew of the dissolution, and after they learned of it they took a note, made in the firm name by the remaining partner, for the amount due. They afterwards brought suit against both partners on the common counts, and on the note. Held, (1) that the retiring partner could not be held upon the note against his objection, as after the dissolution the other could not bind him; but (2) that an action on the common count for goods sold and delivered would lie against both for the debt: Goodspeed v. South Bend Plow Co., 45 M. 237.

216. The presentation to and allowance by commissioners on the estate of a deceased partner of a partnership debt does not make it necessary, in an action by the creditor against the surviving partners for the same debt, to show that he has exhausted his remedy against the estate of the deceased partner: Manning v. Williams, 2 M. 105.

217. Three days after the death of W., who, though without a partner, had been carrying on business under the name of W. & Co., defendant went to his store and bought goods, which were delivered to him, making payment by check at first drawn to W. &

Co., but afterwards changed by defendant, at the request of W.'s former clerk, so as to be payable to bearer, this being done on account of W.'s death. The check was cashed by W.'s clerk, who paid over the money to W.'s widow. She refused to pay over to W.'s administrator, who then brought trover against defendant for the goods. Defendant, who had previously had dealings with W., claimed that he supposed when he bought the goods that he was buying from a surviving partner of W., being misled by the name under which the business was done. Held, that defendant was liable: Brennan v. Pardridge, 67 M. 449 (Nov. 8, '87).

(c) Settlement by surviving partners.

218. A surviving partner is entitled to use the partnership real estate as firm assets so far as needed to settle the affairs of the firm, and the heirs of a deceased partner hold the legal estate as trustees for the equitable purposes of the firm: Merritt v. Dickey, 38 M. 41.

219. Partnership property vests in the surviving partner, subject to the firm debts, and the heirs of a deceased partner in whose name it was purchased cannot retain it until payment of such debts: Way v. Stebbins, 47 M. 296.

220. After dissolution by the death of a partner the settlement of partnership affairs is left to the survivor, who may, at a proper time, be required to account to decedent's personal representative: Roberts v. Kelsey, 38 M. 602.

221. The right and duty to wind up the business of a partnership after it has been dissolved by death is an incident of the partnership and rests with the survivor as a result of survivorship: Loomis v. Armstrong, 49 M. 521.

222. A surviving partner having the legal right to the possession of the partnership lands, a court of equity will not deprive him of that right, unless upon proof of mismanagement or danger to the partnership effects: Connor v. Allen, H. 871.

223. The surviving partner (or partners) holds the entire legal title to all the partnership assets: Barry v. Briggs, 22 M. 201; Bassett v. Miller, 39 M. 133; Blodgett v. Muskegon, 60 M. 580.

224. A sole surviving partner has a right, acting honestly and with reasonable discretion and diligence, to dispose of the assets as he pleases, to settle all debts against the concern, to make any compromise he may deem necessary, and to turn the assets into an available and distributable form: Barry v. Briggs, 22 M. 201.

225. A surviving partner is entitled to the proceeds of the sale of his deceased partner's interest in partnership lands disposed of by an administrator; and where he has bid off the interest himself without paying the price to the administrator, bondsmen of the latter cannot be held liable for the administrator's failure to collect the bid, the remedy of the estate being against the surviving partner, as such, to compel a faithful settlement of the firm business out of the assets, all of which he is entitled to control: Merritt v. Dickey, 38 M. 41.

226. The representatives of a deceased partner have no right of possession, and nothing but an equitable interest in the partnership property, until the business of the partnership has been settled and its debts paid; and though this equitable interest may, in equity, make them tenants in common with the surviving partner, subject to the debts of the firm and a final settlement, it does not constitute them tenants in common at law: Pfeffer v. Steiner, 27 M. 537.

227. A surviving partner who is closing up the firm business is bound to pay over to the decedent's estate, as fast as realized, its share of all money not needed to pay debts: Heath v. Waters, 40 M. 457.

228. A surviving partner, though legally vested with title to all firm assets, is also trustee to dispose of them for the best interests of decedent's estate; and is bound to keep its representative fully informed of their condition: Ibid.

229. A surviving partner procured from the executrix of the deceased the transference to him of a certain partnership claim, in compensation for his services in conducting the entire business during decedent's illness, and suppressed this claim from the inventory of the partnership estate. Held, that this transaction operated as a fraud in law: Ibid.

230. A surviving partner, by misrepresentations and fraudulent dealing, procured from the decedent's administratrix, who was also, as he knew, trustee for decedent's children, a conveyance of partnership interests belonging to decedent's estate for much less than their actual value. Held, that the use of the property thus wrongfully appropriated must be regarded as a continued use of the partnership assets never accounted for, which the survivor might properly be decreed to make good to the administratrix on a bill brought by her for an accounting: Ibid.

231. As against the heirs of a deceased partner a surviving partner cannot mortgage the decedent's interest in partnership lands for his own individual debts, or for any purpose except to close up the business and pay partnership debts, and such a mortgage cannot be enforced by one who took it under circumstances that put him on inquiry: Brown v. Watson, 66 M. 228.

232. A surviving partner cannot claim compensation from the estate of a deceased partner for his personal services in winding up the business after the partnership has been dissolved by the latter's death, unless it has been agreed that he shall be compensated: Loomis v. Armstrong, 49 M. 521, 63 M. 355.

233. A decree against surviving partners for an accounting for assets of which they had jointly taken possession should be against them jointly for the whole amount, and not severally for the sums into which they divided it between themselves: Bundy v. Youmans, 44 M. 376.

As to when surviving partner is charged with interest, see INTEREST, §§ 46-49.

PARTY WALLS.

1. A., having put up a brick building, sold to the adjoining owner, B., a half interest in a side wall to be used as a party wall in a building which B. was putting up. C. was also building next beyond B., and the new buildings went up together as one. Their foundation was laid before the sale of the wall was made. After the new buildings were finished A. sued C. for injuries resulting to A.'s building from alleged defects in the construction of C.'s. The trial judge charged that there could be no recovery if the defect was in this general foundation, nor unless it was in the foundation of a vault that was in C.'s building. The defence claimed that A.'s building was in the same condition before C.'s was erected as afterward. Verdict was for defendant. Held, (1) that the instruction was too broad, as A. and C. had no contract relations which would preclude A. from suing; and (2) that, as there was some evidence, though slight, that the injury was in part due to a defect in the foundation proper of C.'s building, the instruction could not be said to be harmless on the ground that the verdict covered all defects: Feige v. First National Bank, 58 M. 164.

PATENTS.

1. Re-issue of a patent is to cure defects, and cannot destroy vested rights; and under a re-issue to other persons than the original patentee, purchasers who have notice of previous equities are bound by them: Harrison v. Ingersoll, 56 M. 36.

2. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4898, requiring assignments of patents to be recorded, is only for the purpose of protecting innocent purchasers: Ibid.

3. A. agreed to sell to B. an interest in two inventions, for the former of which only a patent had been obtained. A deed was duly executed by A. conveying his interest in this patent. Subsequently A. obtained a patent for the second invention. Held, that the deed could not be construed so as to include A.'s interest in the second invention: Warren v. Cole, 15 M. 265.

4. The assignee of a patent-right agreed to pay the patentee a certain sum "for each and every one of said machines sold or caused to be sold by him." Held, that this covered any transfer by him of the mere right to use the machine, and any "settlements" made with persons who were using machines of the kind: Rodgers v. Torrant, 43 M. 113.

5. A machine may be sold independently of the patent-right; and if sold or taken on execution a purchaser does not acquire a right to use it under the patent: Ibid.

6. A contract to allow one to use a patented improvement is broken by suing out and serving an injunction to restrain him from doing so: Sullings v. Goodyear Co., 36 M. 814.

7. A license to use an improvement covered by a patent need not be in writing: Nichols v. Marsh, 61 M. 509.

8. Complainants under an oral arrangement were licensed to use a certain patented improvement. They executed the arrangement on their part; and as defendant's open denial of their rights had a tendency to prevent sales, it was held that defendant could be compelled to give them a written license: Ibid.

9. By written contract defendants were licensed to make and sell a patented article, the license to be terminable on notice by the licensor upon the licensees' failure to pay the agreed royalty; royalty due at the time of service of notice not to be discharged. Held, that the licensees could terminate the license by written notice, and were not liable—under the contract—for subsequent use of the invention: Garver v. Bement, 69 M. 149 (March 2, '89).

10. One who, in consideration of the transfer to him of an exclusive right in a patent improved cheese-safe, agrees to use all reasonable diligence in the manufacture and sale, and to pay a royalty on each of such safes sold, is not bound to use extra efforts to dispose of such safes, or to withhold other safes from competition: Fornbrook Manuf. Co. v. Barnum Wire Works, 63 M. 195.

11. One who agrees to pay royalties on sales of cheese-safes containing a patented wire-cloth curtain which accommodates itself by means of certain devices to the change of direction from upward to horizontal is not subject to such royalty for selling safes containing curtains of slats fastened to a cloth back, and occupying an analogous position and purpose to the wire-cloth curtains patented: Ibid.

12. Where one agrees to pay a royalty on each sale by him of a patented article, such royalties "to cease if the patent is declared void," he must pay the royalties, whether or not the patent is valid for what it distinctly claims, until it is declared invalid in the federal courts: Ibid.

As to jurisdiction of courts, see COURTS, §§ 139, 140.

As to estoppel to deny power to contract for sale of patented articles, or to deny validity of patent, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 133, 140, 141.

13. One peddling a patented article cannot complain that the demand of a license fee is an interference with his rights, under the United States statute, to vend a patented article: Coldwater v. Russell, 49 M. 617.

14. A state statute requiring notes given for patent-rights to show that fact, and making it a misdemeanor to take or transfer such notes otherwise, is invalid: Cranston v. Smith, 37 M. 809.

Further as to note given for purchase price of patent-right, see BILLS AND NOTES, § 183.

As to bids and contracts for laying patented pavement, see CITIES AND VILLAGES, §§ 185, 186, 192; CONTRACTS, §§ 419-421.

Further as to patents, see EVIDENCE, §§ 791, 1163; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, §§ 28, 58.

PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

I. PAYMENT.

(a) What constitutes.

1. In general.
2. What receivable in payment.
3. When bill or note considered payment.

(b) Proof of payment.

(c) Application of payments.

(d) Recovery back.

II. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

III. PART PAYMENT.

IV. SETTLEMENT; RELEASE; RECEIPT.

I. PAYMENT.

(a) What constitutes.

1. In general.

1. Payment implies a voluntary act of the debtor looking to the satisfaction, in whole or in part, of the demand against him: Detroit, H. & S. R. Co. v. Smith, 50 M. 112.

2. An unexplained offer, by the indorser of a note, of the sum due thereon in depreciated bank-bills, is, in legal effect, an offer of compromise, and not of payment, and if accepted operates as a compromise, by way rather of set-off or accord and satisfaction than of payment: Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 M. 263.

3. A deposit of money in a bank to one's own credit, with instructions to the bank officers to apply it on a certain note made payable there, does not place the money subject to the control of the holder of the note, and therefore does not operate as a payment. The bank is not the payee's agent to receive the money unless its officers accept the agency. Per contra, their refusal to make payment on demand of the holder is the refusal of the maker of the note: Pease v. Warren, 29 M. 9.

4. The maker of a note left money with his bankers, directing them to pay it, and therein making them his agents for that purpose; they gave him credit for it on their books, and sent for and received from the holder the note, indorsed to their order for collection; they did not remit the money, and they let the note remain uncanceled among their collection paper and meanwhile failed. Held, that the note was not paid. It had been sent to the bankers for a specific purpose, and no title to it ever passed to them on their own account. They did nothing as agents of the holder: Sutherland v. First National Bank, 31 M. 280.

5. Where the face of the note is cut down by way of recoupment the deduction is not to be regarded as a payment, but as so much taken from the face of the note, and a discount is not to be allowed thereon under an agreement for such discount upon sums paid before maturity: Russell v. Klink, 53 M. 161.

6. A debtor delivered a horse to his creditor to sell it and apply the proceeds in payment of the debt. The creditor exchanged the horse for other property, and the amount to be applied was disputed. Held that, notwithstanding the dispute, the transaction amounted to a payment instead of a mere basis of set-off against plaintiff's claim: Strong v. Kennedy, 40 M. 327.

7. Where an account is running between a lumberman and a logger to whom he has furnished teams which the latter is to pay for, the occasional occurrence of a balance in favor of the logger does not necessarily amount to a payment by him for the teams: Hood v. Olin, 68 M. 165.

8. Where the nominal payee to whom a subscription is payable is bound absolutely to pay it over to a third person, a payment by the subscriber directly to such third person is valid and will discharge him from further liability: Erwin v. Lapham, 27 M. 311.

9. Where mutual cash debtors settle fairly on the principle of compensation, each retaining what he owes the other in payment of what is due himself, these compensations are reciprocal payments: Connecticut Mutual Ins. Co. v. State Treasurer, 81 M. 6.

10. An agreement to apply money earned to the extinguishment of an obligation to the employer executes itself and does not require the formality of passing the money back and forth; but these compensations, when they fairly and properly occur, are reciprocal payments: Roberts v. Wilkinson, 84 M. 180.

11. A gave a receipt to B. as follows: "I have this day received of B. $500 in money, a note for $231, and also an assignment of his interest in a claim against the railroad company to secure the $269 agreeably to said instrument of assignment, which is in full of all claims and accounts against B. to date." The assignment referred to was a claim of $875, which by its terms was to be applied on the $269 when collected. Held, that the two instruments taken together did not amount to a payment of the $269: Dudgeon v. Haggart, 17 M. 273.

12. A wife dying, her husband (defendant) and her adult son by a former marriage went together to plaintiff, an undertaker, and gave orders for the funeral; nothing was said respecting payment or who was to be charged. The charge was, however, made to defendant, who refused to pay. Then plaintiff applied to the son, who also refused, but finally lent plaintiff the amount of the bill on the understanding that plaintiff should sue defendant and recover the amount for the lender's benefit. Held, that the arrangement was not a payment but was either a loan or a purchase of the demand, and that in either event plaintiff could sue: Sears v. Giddey, 41 M. 590.

13. Whether the rule that a party passing negotiable paper warrants its genuineness is applicable to payments made in coin or legal tender notes, quere: Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 M. 336.

14. Where property is given by a surety in consideration of his discharge from the debt, the principal is not entitled to be credited with the amount as so much paid on the debt: Peer v. Kean, 14 M. 354.

15. A vendor cannot dispute that he has received the assignment of a mortgage in payment where the facts are that he himself proposed to accept it as such, and has referred to it in the negotiations as payment, reserving only the right to satisfy himself as to the value of the security; has had a reasonable time and opportunity for making such examination; and has finally notified the purchaser that he must make up any deficiency: Bulen v. Burroughs, 53 M. 464.

16. On the question whether payment of notes was intended, the fact that payment would have discharged an indorser, such intent not being shown, is immaterial, because, if the transaction effected the discharge of the indorser, it would have that effect, without any specific intent: Lange v. Muskegon Booming Co., 63 M. 589.

17. Creditors who have received bonds in payment cannot retain them and question their validity or value at the same time; if they wish for a payment in cash they must give up the bonds: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Mellen, 44 M. 321.

18. A labor contract also bound the employer to rent certain premises to the employee, and provided for monthly settlements of wages and rent. Held that, in a suit for wages due, the amount of rent due might be proved as payment: Iron Cliffs Co. v. Gingrich, 42 M. 30.

19. Payment may always be proved as matter of direct defence: Olcott v. Hanson, 12 M. 452; Brennan v. Tietzort, 49 M. 397.

20. So payment by substitution is matter of defence and open to reply: Glover v. Dowagiac Universalist Parish, 49 M. 595.

21. Money paid into court belongs to the plaintiff absolutely; the defendant cannot reclaim it though paid by mistake. So much of the plaintiff's claim is considered as stricken out of the declaration, and he can only recover the balance, if able to prove any; if not, he will be liable to all costs in the further prosecution of the suit: Phelps v. Town, 14 M. 374.

Further as to payment into court, see JUS-TICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 179, 180.

As to when payment to agent is payment to principal, see AGENCY, §§ 52, 53, 63, 69.

2. What receivable in payment.

22. In the absence of special instructions a justice of the peace can receive nothing but the legal money of the United States in satisfaction of a judgment, nor can a sheriff or constable receive anything else on an execution in his hands for collection: Heald v. Bennett, 1 D. 513; Welch v. Frost, 1 M. 30.

23. The register of deeds cannot receive a check on a bank in redemption of mortgaged premises. Money alone is receivable: Woodbury v. Lewis, W. 256. See MORTGAGES, § 991.

24. A tax collector cannot receive drafts or orders in payment of taxes: Elliott v. Miller, 8 M. 132; Jones v. Wright, 34 M. 371.

25. The note of a liquor-dealer payable on time cannot be received in payment of a liquor-tax, and is void: Doran v. Phillips, 47 M. 228.

26. A certificate of deposit, by its terms made payable in "currency," is prima facie payable in what is current money by law or paper equivalent in value circulating in the business community at par; and it is not competent for a witness, without referring to any local custom or usage, to testify that it is payable in depreciated funds: Phelps v. Town, 14 M. 374.

27. Where the state land-office commissioner received a draft as money in payment for lands, individuals could not treat this as no payment, there being no showing that the draft was not as good as money: People v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 19 M. 470.

28. Where a bill holder presents at one time to a bank for redemption several bills of the denomination of $5, it is competent for the bank, under the act of congress of Feb. 23, 1853, entitled "An act amendatory of the existing laws relative to the half dollars," etc., to tender payment of the whole sum so presented in half dollars issued under said act: Strong v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 4 M. 350.

29. The legal tender act of congress was not designed to confer a personal privilege upon debtors, but was based upon reasons of state policy, which, in the opinion of the law-making power, imperatively demanded that treasury notes should be made equal in legal value to coin; and parties have no right to stipulate that their agreements shall not be governed by it. And therefore, upon a note for the payment of a certain number of dollars in gold, judgment cannot be rendered for a greater sum than the amount specified and interest thereon, notwithstanding it is shown that gold commands a premium in treasury notes: Buchegger v. Shultz, 13 M. 420.

That the legal tender act of congress is valid, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 379.

As to payment of costs in national bank notes, see EJECTMENT, § 216.

30. A contract provided that payment should be made in Canada currency or its equivalent in United States money. Held, that in an action on the contract there was no ground for an exception to the court's refusal to direct the jury to allow nothing for the difference in the currencies where there was, in fact, no difference between them: Holland v. Rea, 48 M. 218.

31. A purchaser who has promised to "settle" on delivery of the goods away from the place of sale, and has allowed the dealers to suppose him to be a cash customer, cannot oblige them to take payment in their own chattel notes payable in such goods deliverable at their place of business. Such notes are not cash and cannot be used as set-off unless their makers are put in default: Williams v. Jackson, 81 M. 485.

That agent cannot take anything but money in payment unless expressly authorized, see AGENCY, § 66.

3. When bill or note considered payment.

32. The giving of a promissory note or other security for goods sold is no payment unless it is specially agreed to be so taken: Gardner v. Gorham, 1 D. 507.

33. The taking of the debtor's acceptances does not operate as payment of the debt if there is no agreement that they shall be received in payment: Au Sable River Boom Co. v. Sanborn, 36 M. 358.

34. A note given for a debt is no payment unless so agreed; its date, therefore, does not necessarily fix that of the debt: Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 M. 217.

35. A note given by way of renewal is not a payment. Nor does it amount to a payment for the debtor to discount drafts made by him upon his creditor and accepted by the latter, and to take up outstanding notes with the proceeds if the drafts remain to be met by the drawee: McMorran v. Murphy, 68 M. 246 (Jan. 19, '88).

36. A bill or note or other security should be regarded as payment whenever it appears such was the intention of the parties; and that such was the understanding may be proved by their subsequent acts and conduct, as well as by direct proof of an express agreement: Hotchin v. Secor, 8 M. 494; Riverside Iron Works v. Hall, 64 M. 165.

37. Payment of a bequest may be made by giving a note if the parties agree that the note shall stand as cash: Van Middlesworth v. Van Middlesworth, 32 M. 183.

38. Where the vendor of lands takes the note or obligation of a third party for the purchase price, the presumption is that it is taken in payment and not merely as security: Sears v. Smith, 2 M. 243.

39. The giving of a note and mortgage for a previous debt does not, as matter of law, discharge the debt unless it is so agreed or understood. But where the evidences of the previous debt are surrendered when new securities are taken, this is prima facie evidence of satisfaction, but not conclusive: Brown v. Dunckel, 46 M. 29.

40. Where an insurance company takes the notes of some other person than the assured, when the premium falls due, it cannot, as against the assured, insist that they did not amount to payment: Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bowes, 42 M. 19.

41. The acceptance of a note for the payment of premiums due on an insurance policy and the giving of a renewal receipt by the company amount to a payment of the premium: Tabor v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co., 44 M. 324.

42. A note which two parties had indorsed for a third being overdue, the holder wrote the indorsers requesting a new note in renewal. They sent one accordingly, made and indorsed by the same parties, and requested the return of the old note. No notice was taken of this request, nor were any steps taken to fix the liability of the indorsers on the new note; but after it fell due suit was brought on the old note, and the new note tendered to the indorsers on the trial, who refused to receive it. Held, that plaintiff, by retaining the new note under the circumstances, had made it his own: Sage v. Walker, 12 M. 425.

43. Iron was purchased for a corporation, whose president gave his individual acceptance therefor, and received credit for the same on its books. When the draft became due he gave as a substitute for it the corporation's acceptance, due in sixty days, unindorsed by himself. Held that, prima facie, the acceptance of the corporation was received by the vendor as payment of the president's draft: Riverside Iron Works v. Hall, 64 M. 165.

44. Where goods were sold and securities, executed by third persons, were received for the purchase price, one of which the vendor collected, and the other offered to return, it was held, in an action brought by the vendor for goods sold, that whether the securities were received by him in payment for the goods sold was a question for the jury, and it was erroneous for the court to exclude evidence offered by the plaintiff from which it might be inferred that there was no such agreement: Gardner v. Gorham, 1 D. 507.

45. A. being indebted to B. gave him an order on C. for the amount of his debt. Three days later B. presented the order to C., who refused payment, and ten days after became insolvent. About four days after B. gave notice of the non-payment to A. Held, that B. might recover the debt of A., as there was no unreasonable delay or laches on his part, and no evidence of any injury to A.: Briggs v. Parsons, 30 M. 400.

46. Where a corporation gives its paper to a firm which holds orders issued by it, payable in goods, and there is no evidence that the paper was given or received in payment of the orders, the transfer of the paper must be held to be no payment: Beecher v. Dacey, 45 M. 92.

47. A man owed debts secured by two mortgages. Wishing to lift them he asked a friend for $2,000. The friend had let a banker have his money, and as the banker could not conveniently repay more than $1,000 then, the friend took a certificate of deposit for the other $1,000 and turned it over to the borrower. The certificate was to fall due when the last remaining mortgage had to be paid, and it was understood that it was to be applied to the payment of that mortgage. This arrangement was acquiesced in so that the lender might, as he required, have all his security in one first mortgage on the land. Before the certificate fell due the banker failed. The borrower then repaid the money actually advanced to him, and tendered the certificate to the lender and demanded the discharge of the mortgage. Held, that there had been nothing to show that the borrower had taken the certificate as payment to him of so much money, and he was entitled to the discharge. The loss would fall on the lender: Burrows v. Bangs, 34 M. 304.

48. In a proceeding against an estate to recover the amount of a note given by the decedent the fact that since the date of the note the payee has received from decedent checks enough to pay it does not of itself establish the payment of this particular note, nor does it even place upon the claimant the burden of showing that it was not paid: Smith's Appeal, 52 M. 415.

49. W. manufactured shingles for M. and agreed to take his pay in shingles or their proceeds. M. sold a quantity and received, besides some cash, a note made payable to W., to whom he turned it over, but refused to indorse it. W. took it on condition that he found the maker to be responsible, but while holding it the maker failed. Held, that W. could not recover the amount of the note from M., but could only claim his pro rata share of the cash and available paper received for the shingles: Mason v. Warner, 43 M. 439.

50. The note of two of several partners was taken for a partnership debt, and this note was afterwards paid in part, and notes on longer time taken for the balance. Suit being brought against the firm on the original debt, the court was asked by defendants to charge the jury that it was not absolutely necessary to show an express agreement on plaintiff's part to receive the note in payment, but that if the jury find, from all the circumstances of the case, and plaintiffs' subsequent acts in regard to the note, that they had acted and treated it as their own, and as received in payment of their claim, then the jury were authorized to take such facts into consideration, and find that it was received in payment if the evidence satisfied them that such was the fact. Held, that this request presented substantially a correct view of the law, and the court erred in declining to charge accordingly: Hotchin v. Secor, 8 M. 494.

51. Merchandise was ordered by the firm of S. & G. and was sent with drafts for acceptance by the purchasers. Meanwhile the firm dissolved, and G., who continued in business, stated the fact and asked for new drafts. The vendor replied that he wanted the acceptances of both, and asked an immediate return of the drafts, as he needed them. G. sent his own acceptance instead, and falsely stated that S. had gone east, but that if the drafts were not satisfactory he would obtain an indorser. The vendor replied that he needed the paper at once and retained it. S. knew of this correspondence and kept control of the merchandise until it was closed. Held, that as the paper of the only debtor supposed to be within reach was forced upon the vendor, and no offer was made to return the merchandise and there was no apparent means of enforcing any such acceptance as the contract called for, there was no implication from the correspondence of a discharge of the other debtor, and that if there was, it was made nugatory by the fraud of the purchasers: Case v. Seas, 44 M. 195.

52. Where a creditor of the firm of F. & S. had, after its dissolution, refused to accept the paper of S. and discharge F., his receiving and retaining what purported to be the paper of the late firm of F. & S., without knowing that it was signed by S. alone in the firm name without authority, is not such an acceptance and discharge, when he had not accepted any paper as payment, nor unduly delayed enforcing his claim: Adler v. Foster, 39 M. 87.

53. Where a firm agreed to settle for merchandise with a note, and after dissolution a partnership note is given by the remaining partner, the other can repudiate his liability thereon, and if he is released the vendor can treat the note as different from that agreed on, and it cannot then be regarded as payment: Goodspeed v. South Bend Chilled Plow Co., 45 M. 237.

54. A. bought out the interest of B., his partner, and gave a cashier security for the firm's indebtedness to the bank for certain discounts, with the private understanding that the cashier should indorse A.'s paper to a certain amount, the indorsed paper to be received in payment of the firm's paper as it matured. In an action by the bank on a note given by C. in renewal of notes made to C. by B. and A., and discounted by the bank, held, that no note could be discharged until, by the concurrent action of A. and the bank, the notes indorsed by the cashier were substituted for those of B. and A. to the same amount: Roberts v. Port Huron Bank, 41 M. 356.

55. Where the trustee of a vendor of land, while holding the purchaser's bond and mortgage, takes from said purchaser a promissory note for arrears of interest, and bearing higher interest than the bond and mortgage, and then takes a new promissory note for arrears of interest on the former note, and receipts that amount of interest upon the former note, afterwards putting the latter note in judgment, and where, after the mortgage all became due, the purchaser agreed in writing to pay upon the balance from that date a higher rate of interest than was borne by the mortgage, and the former note was accordingly credited as a payment, and the balance made out upon this basis as if the amount had been paid in cash, it was held that an intention was clearly indicated to treat the former note as payment, the effect of which would be to detach that amount from the lien of the mortgage: Burchard v. Frazer, 23 M. 224.

56. A corporation gave sundry notes to a firm, both supposing that the corporation was indebted to the firm. The firm indorsed the notes and negotiated them to strangers. The corporation made an assignment, and as it failed to pay the notes at maturity, the firm took them up. Held that, in an adjustment of accounts between the firm and corporation, these notes should have been credited to the firm leaving the accounts standing as if the notes had not been made. They were not proper charges against the firm until paid by the corporation: Blackmar v. Cornwell, 58 M. 400.

57. By accepting a draft as conditional payment the creditor accepts the duty of doing everything with respect thereto which is necessary to fix the liability of the parties. And the onus is upon him to show that he has performed the duty when he seeks to recover upon the original cause of action: Phoenix Insurance Co. v. Allen, 11 M. 501.

58. Where one transfers notes to another for property purchased on an agreement that if the notes are not collected the purchaser is to make up the deficiency, the purchaser only takes the notes as conditional payment; and if not paid at maturity he is under no obligation to bring suit upon them, but may immediately sue the purchaser for the amount. (By one justice, two other justices concurring in the result): Dodge v. Stanton, 12 M. 408.

58a. The effect of thus receiving notes as conditional payment is simply to postpone payment of the demand on which they are received until the securities fall due: Ibid.

59. As to the effect of transfer of funds by a public officer to his successor by means of certificates of deposit, see Lansing v. Wood, 57 M. 201.

(b) Proof of payment.

60. The burden of proof of payment is on the debtor: Adams v. Field, 25 M. 16; McCabe v. Shaver, 69 M. 25.

61. Where the payment of an admitted indebtedness is disputed, the burden of proof is on defendant to establish the payment; but where the payment is admitted, and suit is for the amount of it on the ground that it was made in spurious bills, the burden is on plaintiff to prove the character of the bills: Atwood v. Cornwall, 25 M. 142.

62. The burden of proving payment of a debt is upon the debtor when in an action to recover upon it the debt has been established by competent evidence: Smith's Appeal, 52 M. 415; Baldwin v. Clock, 68 M. 201 (Jan. 19, '88).

63. A debtor claimed to have paid a note and then destroyed it. His creditor said he destroyed it without paying. The judge thought the burden of proof, if any, was on the debtor, but charged the jury to determine the question of veracity in view of all the facts. This ruling was approved: Marvin v. Newman, 89 M. 114.

64. Proof of payment by defendant of orders drawn by plaintiffs upon him in favor of third persons for articles sold him is sufficient proof of payment to plaintiffs; such payment being in law a payment to plaintiffs: Webber v. Howe, 36 M. 150.

65. Presumption of payment can never arise from lapse of time alone, short of the period of limitation fixed by law: Adair v. Adair, 5 M. 204.

66. Payment of a demand note is not presumed from the neglect to present it until time enough has passed to outlaw it: Smith's Appeal, 52 M. 415.

67. In an action for money had and received upon a draft, evidence that defendant was present when another transferred the draft and received the money upon it was held to authorize the inference of payment of the amount to defendant by such other person: Bullard v. Hascall, 25 M. 182.

68. The payee in a check is not to be assumed to have received payment thereon if it is not shown to be indorsed; the fact of payment is for a jury: Smith's Appeal, 52 M. 415.

69. Indorsements upon notes, unexplained, prove payment, and, whether explained or not, prove an extinguishment and release of liability to their extent as between the parties, unless it be shown that they were not intended so to operate: Morris v. Morris, 5 M. 171.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 165.

70. Where the assignment of a partnership interest recites that "the party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $240, agrees to, and does hereby, sell, assign," etc., and the question is whether the price was not paid at the time of the transfer, it is error to charge that the writing is the only evidence to be considered, and that the law implies from it a promise to pay; the question is one for parol proof, and the writing, standing alone, is entitled to be construed rather as a recital of payment than a promise: McLouth v. Dibble, 31 M. 68.

71. The maker's possession of a note is not evidence of payment in an action by him to recover back money claimed to have been paid on it: Buckley v. Saxe, 10 M. 328.

72. Where, to prove that he had paid money on a bet, plaintiff produced a note he had given for the same bet, held, that this alone did not prove the payment of money on the bet: Ibid.

73. The law does not raise a presumption of non-payment, but of payment when due, unless the contrary is shown: Bailey v. Gould, W. 478; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 M. 70.

74. A written order directing the drawee to pay what money he has of the drawer's, without specifying any sum, is not of itself proof in the hands of the drawee of the payment of any sum, but only of authority to pay to the person named in the order: Beardslee v. Horton, 3 M. 560.

75. Payment of a bill should be shown by the person who paid it, or by some one who knew the fact, and not by testimony that the witness had caused it to be paid: Bulen v. Granger, 56 M. 207.

76. The fact of payment of money may always be proved by parol, whether a receipt was taken for it at the time or not; so of the payment of taxes: Hammond v. Hannin, 21 M. 374.

77. Execution was levied on an express package of money sent by the judgment debtor to an agent of his firm to repay advances made by the agent in the interest of principals. The agent brought replevin against the sheriff. Held, (1) that as between these parties the question of defendant's right to seize money in the hands of the express company was immaterial; (2) that, if the money was mutually meant as payment, plaintiff could recover, but if it was meant to be used by the agent in the principal's business he could not; (3) that defendant was not concluded by the concurrent testimony of the consignor and the consignee that it was a payment, but was at liberty to show the contrary if he could. Nor was the jury bound by plaintiff's version: Nicholson v. Dyer, 45 M. 610.

78. Where it is found that a payment was made on a mortgage it cannot be presumed, in the absence of any finding as to the date, that it was not made at or near the time when the mortgage fell due: Albright v. Cobb, 34 M. 316.

(c) Application of payments.

See, also, MORTGAGES, LX, (a), 2.

As to application of payments upon judgments, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 307-312.

79. A debtor, upon paying money to his creditor, has a right to say on which one of several demands the payment shall be applied: Thayer v. Denton, 4 M. 192.

80. A debtor when making a payment has the right to direct its application, and the creditor cannot refuse to apply it accordingly and credit it on some other account: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Mellen, 44 M. 321.

81. A payment expressly made on a particular assessment must be so applied by the collecting officer: Fuller v. Grand Rapids, 40 M. 395.

82. A payment made on undisputed items cannot be construed as applying to a disputed item in the same bill so as to prevent a recovery: Fish v. Adams, 37 M. 598.

83. A creditor cannot lawfully pay himself with the debtor's money without the debtor's consent, express or implied; and when the debtor delivers him money for a purpose which negatives the idea of payment, the creditor's control of it is limited to the purpose declared: Detroit, Hillsdale & Southwestern R. Co. v. Smith, 50 M. 112.

84. A discharged bankrupt having made occasional payments, both before and after his discharge, upon a running account with a creditor who had not had notice of the bankruptcy proceedings, and was not named as a creditor in the bankrupt's schedules, and having, furthermore, given no direction as to the application of the payments, of which those that were made while proceedings were pending and after the discharge exceeded the cost of the goods purchased during that time, it was held that the creditor might apply the payments to the items first due in the account: Hill v. Robbins, 22 M. 475.

85. A creditor having a secured and an unsecured debt may, in the absence of any direction by the debtor, apply a payment upon the unsecured debt: Wood v. Callaghan, 61 M. 402.

86. Where one has given an undertaking that, if the person to whom it is addressed will let the bearer have a bill of goods, he will see the amount paid in a reasonable length of time, and the goods are delivered accordingly, the first moneys afterward received by the creditor on the debtor's general account must be applied on the purchase under this guaranty: Gard v. Stevens, 12 M. 292.

87. A mortgagee is not bound to apply on the mortgage money received from the mortgager, if he has other occasions to use or apply it; nor would he have any right to apply it on the mortgage before its maturity: Richardson v. Coddington, 49 M. 1.

88. The proceeds of a chattel mortgage given to secure several notes held by one party may be applied exclusively to the payment of one of the notes, and need not be distributed: Wood v. Callaghan, 61 M. 402.

89. A man who was in debt handed money to his wife telling her to put it in the bank and saying that it would go towards paying the creditor. The wife deposited it, but afterwards withdrew and used it. Held, that the money had not been specifically appropriated to the payment of the debt in any such way as not to remain subject to the debtor's control; and that after his death the creditor could not recover the amount in an action against the wife: Ryan v. O'Neil, 49 M. 281.

90. Where the application has been once made upon a joint debt, it operates to extinguish so much of the debt, and the application cannot be subsequently changed by the concurrent act of the creditor and paying debtor, and the claim thus revived, without the consent of the co-debtor: Thayer v. Denton, 4 M. 192.

91. Where debits and credits have been made absolutely, both parties consenting, credits cannot afterward be shifted for the purpose of confining payments to unsecured liabilities: McMaster v. Merrick, 41 M. 505.

92. Where parties do not make a specific application of moneys paid, the law will apply it usually as the justice and equity of the case may require: Youmans v. Heartt, 34 M. 397.

93. A., having claims against two firms, of each of which B. was a member, took B.'s notes in part payment, indorsed by a third firm of which B. was also a member, and B. having afterwards died, H. presented his claim against the estate of B., crediting the amount of these notes as payment so as to balance one of the accounts, but at the same time submitting a written statement that in presenting his claim as he did he did not waive any rights against the survivors of either of the firms. Held, that considering the manner of submitting this claim against the estate in connection with such disclaimer, it is evident that H. had no intention of making, and did not thereby make, any application of the payment made by the notes: Ibid.

94. A trial court having so distributed a payment by notes upon an indebtedness of two firms respectively as resulted in: pro rata application upon each, it cannot be said that any error was thereby committed to the prejudice of the survivors of either of said firms: Ibid.

As to application of payments on chattel mortgage, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES, § 186.

(d) Recovery back.

95. One cannot ordinarily sue to recover back money voluntarily paid upon a debt: Brennan v. Tietzort, 49 M. 397.

96. A voluntary payment cannot be recovered back: Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 M. 485.

97. One who voluntarily pays usurious interest cannot recover it: Gardner v. Matteson, 38 M. 200.

98. An attorney fee paid under protest on redeeming from a statutory foreclosure may be recovered back: Vosburgh v. Lay, 45 M. 455.

99. A common council empowered to audit and allow accounts against the city cannot, having allowed a person more than he was entitled to, recover back the excess under a claim that it was ignorant, at the time, of facts which it should have investigated: Advertiser & Tribune Co. v. Detroit, 43 M. 116; Perry v. Cheboygan, 55 M. 250.

As to recovery back of taxes and assessments, see TAXES, VI, (d).

Further as to recovery back of payments, see ASSUMPSIT, §§ 91-114.

II. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

100. Where a settlement of an alleged case of fraud is admitted, the controversy being whether it was a full accord and satisfaction, or confined to so much of the property as plaintiff paid for with his own money, and there being no evidence that it was expressly agreed to leave some portion of the controversy outside the settlement, there is no error in charging that if there was a full accord and satisfaction of plaintiff's individual claim, and he released any claim or demand he had in his individual name, there could be no recovery: Alison v. Connor, 36 M. 283.

101. A railroad employee injured by a collision continued to accept payment at the usual rate while disabled from pursuing his regular employment. Held, that this did not of itself amount to an accord and satisfaction so as to estop him from suing the company for damages: Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

102. A man agreed with his daughter-in-law that certain property should be sold and that she should have what was left of the proceeds after certain deductions were made. When the property was sold he directed what should be done with the proceeds, and she received what he gave her. She afterwards brought a claim against his estate based on the agreement. Held, that it was not to be inferred from her receipt of the money paid her that she had agreed to take so much in satisfaction of her claim, or that she supposed she was accounting with her father-in-law as strangers would account with each other: Fraser v. Fraser's Estate, 42 M. 275.

103. The fact that, before the sale, he had sent her a statement of an account between themselves, containing items not covered by the agreement, would not bind her to the deduction of so much from the amount due her under it, in the absence of evidence that she had examined the account or consented to such deduction: Ibid.

104. When a plaintiff in making out a case is compelled to establish an accord which has to be disposed of, he must show at least prima facie that there has been no satisfaction: Browning v. Crouse, 43 M. 489; Harrison v. Gamble, 69 M. 96.

105. A defendant whose case involves proving an accord must follow it with evidence of satisfaction, or of some legal excuse for its absence: Ibid.

106. The next friend of an infant plaintiff cannot bind her by an accord and satisfaction in pursuance of which suit is discontinued, so as to prevent her from bringing another suit on the same cause of action: Burt v. McBain, 29 M. 260.

III. PART PAYMENT.

107. A mere agreement to accept a composition, or part of a debt in discharge of the whole, will not operate as a release of the debt if the composition is not duly paid: Harrison v. Gamble, 69 M. 96.

108. A debtor compromised with his creditors, but, as he paid the amount of the compromise irregularly, the creditors refused the last tender and sued for the whole debt. Defendant, having paid part and tendered the rest of the amount agreed on, recovered judgment. The tender, however, had not been kept good. Held, that the recovery was wrong, and that plaintiffs should have recovered the amount owing under the compromise agreement, with costs: Browning v. Crouse, 40 M. 339.

109. In an action on a promissory note the plaintiff had to show, in explaining certain memoranda on the note, that a compromise had been made, but he claimed that as it had been only partly fulfilled he was entitled to recover in full. Held, that as he did not show what the terms of the compromise were, or in what the default lay, he was only entitled to recover the amount remaining unpaid on the compromise sworn to: Browning v. Crouse, 43 M. 489.

110. Where a party received a note from his debtor, with collateral security, agreeing that, if paid when due, the original debt should be discharged, otherwise of force; and, after the compromise note became overdue, sold and transferred it, with the collaterals and the original debt, it was held that he thereby affirmed the compromise, and that the purchaser could not claim the amount of the original debt on the ground of forfeiture of the compromise agreement before he purchased: Hale v. Holmes, 8 M. 37.

111. And the collateral security being the note of the purchaser, which became due before the compromise note did, and was relied upon by the debtor to pay the compromise note, it was held that the purchase must be regarded as a payment of the compromise note by the note of the purchaser, and that the purchaser had no claim, at law or in equity, upon the original debt: Ibid.

112. A partial payment or tender of payment is inconsistent with a creditor's rights, and can only be operative when he consents to receive it: Coots v. McConnell, 89 M. 742.

113. Payment of a part of a debt actually due, without any bonus, is no consideration for an extension of the balance to the debtor: Briggs v. Norris, 67 M. 325.

114. A partial payment cannot give validity to a void contract to pay: Miner v. Lorman, 56 M. 212.

As to effect of part payment by indorser, see BILLS AND NOTES, §§ 120-123.

Part payments or indorsements as preventing outlawry, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, §§ 159-175.

IV. SETTLEMENT; RELEASE; RECEIPT.

As to consideration for compromise, see CONTRACTS, §§ 169-174.

115. One may lawfully settle for that for which he might lawfully recover: Kreiter v. Nichols, 28 M. 496.

116. Parties in fiduciary relationship may, if both are of lawful age and sound mind, make amicable settlements of their accounts. Settlements of fiduciary matters, though scrutinized more closely than others, are not void: Hooper v. Hooper, 26 M. 435.

117. A father's settlement with his son for services rendered after the latter had reached his majority, and the transfer of property made in satisfaction, will not be disturbed in favor of the father's administrator, when there is no proof of fraud or undue advantage. Such settlements are not to be discouraged: Boven v. Lockwood, 26 M. 441.

118. A fair settlement of conflicting claims is binding upon the parties, even though they may have yielded legal rights: Converse v. Blumrich, 14 M. 109.

119. A complainant on a bill for an accounting, having intelligently accepted a fair payment as a full settlement of all claims, ought not to be permitted to repudiate the settlement: Eccard v. Brush, 48 M. 3.

120. The courts will not go back of the deliberate compromise of an apparently bona fide claim to inquire into the reasonableness of the compromise or the merits of the disputed claim: Hull v. Swarthout, 29 M. 249.

121. The law will not look too closely into such arrangements as the parties themselves choose to consider satisfactory, but in the absence of fraud or mistake will encourage parties to settle their own contracts: Moore v. Detroit Locomotive Works, 14 M. 266.

122. Courts cannot disturb a compromise between parties unless on satisfactory evidence of mistake, fraud or unconscionable advantage: Prichard v. Sharp, 51 M. 432; Hart v. Gould, 62 M. 262.

123. Defendant charged complainant with intentionally burning his own mill, and claimed payment for wheat belonging to defendant which was destroyed with the mill, and complainant gave his note and mortgage for the value of the wheat. On bill filed by complainant to set aside these securities as obtained through threats, fear and duress, it is not necessary for the court either to find that complainant burned his mill or to grant the relief asked; for the settlement must stand if there was no fraud or undue advantage taken to bring it about, and defendant had reason to believe the charge, and did not manufacture it to frighten complainant into a settlement: Gates v. Shotts, 7 M. 127.

124. An agreement to settle an existing suit is sustainable without reference to the merits of the controversy, unless under very peculiar circumstances; and it has the same rule of consideration that applies to other contracts: Sanford v. Huxford, 32 M. 313.

125. Where parties have agreed to a settlement of an existing lawsuit, and put it in writing and signed it, such arrangement must stand until set aside for such frauds as should vitiate it, upon a rescission attempted as soon as practicable after the fraud is known, and with no lack of diligence in discovering it: Lewless v. Detroit, Grand Haven & M. R. Co., 65 M. 292.

126. In the absence of fraud, duress or oppression a client's settlement with an attorney for moneys collected and in the latter's hands subject to a lien for services is binding: Dowling v. Eggemann, 47 M. 171.

127. It is against public policy to permit a party to a written settlement to contest his liabilities thereunder on the ground that he had fraudulently contrived it for the purpose, merely, of screening his property from justice: Bassett v. Shepardson, 52 M. 3.

128. There can be no settlement, in the legal sense, where one of the parties surrenders a right that he claims, under protest, and with the understanding that he reserves his defence to any claim upon it: Jennison v. Stone, 33 M. 99.

129. Where the victim of a railroad accident, after settling her claim for damages, repudiated the settlement for fraud, and sued the company for the injury, a request to charge that an acquiescence in the settlement by using the money or any portion of it after the discovery of the alleged fraud would defeat the plaintiff's right of action was modified by adding the proviso "unless you find that she made a tender or returned the money, or offered to make a tender and was prevented from completing it by the acts of defendant or its agents;" held not error, the addition being necessary to prevent the inference to which the request was open, that a use of the money, although the defendant had refused to receive it back, would operate as a waiver of the fraud and an affirmation of the settlement: M. C. R. Co. v. Dunham, 90 M. 128.

130. Where the adverse party upon rescission of a settlement is only entitled to a refunding of money, and no action or right is otherwise involved, a delay of only three days, even with the fullest knowledge, would be immaterial as bearing on the question of acquiescence or of waiver of fraud: Ibid.

131. Where a mining company instituted a fund for the relief of injured workmen, to which fund plaintiff and the company contributed, and it was made a condition that an injured person receiving aid from such fund should sign a receipt releasing the company from all claims for damages on account of the injury, held, where plaintiff was injured through the company's negligence, that the release was no bar to a suit for damages, unless it appeared that he was fully informed or had knowledge of the fact of the company's negligence, and of its liability to him therefor, and fully understood that, by signing such agreement, he was thereby releasing the company from all liability to him arising from such negligence: O'Neil v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 63 M. 690.

132. An alleged compromise may be contested by showing that the party relying on it had acted unfairly or oppressively, and asserted claims which he knew to be wrongful, for the purpose of getting the terms which have been nominally assented to: Headley v. Hackley, 50 M. 48.

133. A settlement in a grossly inadequate sum for negligent injuries obtained by a railroad company through representations that plaintiff "would be disgraced if she appeared in court in such a matter, and would get nothing in the end," and at a time when she was in a sick and nervous state and in great need of money, held, having been repudiated the next day, no bar to an action for the injury: Stone v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 66 M. 76 (May 5, '87).

Compromise or settlement as affected by unfairness, oppression or duress, see CONTRACTS, §§ 122, 123, 125-127, 552, 553.

134. A settlement of previous accounts is not to be conclusively presumed from the giving of a note by one party to another. Whether it furnishes a prima facie presumption or is only a question for the jury, quere: Cotherman v. Cotherman, 58 M. 465.

135. A settlement of accounts between parties is prima facie a settlement of all accounts; but where there is evidence tending to show that a certain item was excluded in the settlement, it is a proper question for a jury to determine what was settled: Bourke v. James, 4 M. 386.

136. It is always competent to show, by any relevant testimony, what items enter into a settlement when an item sued for is claimed to be barred by the settlement: Hicks v. Leaton, 67 M. 371.

137. A receipt which states its purpose to be for a complete settlement, and which covers the whole period of dealing, is equivalent to an account stated; and though it is open to explanation as to errors or omissions, it cannot be treated as if it had not been meant to cover everything: Houghton v. Ross, 54 M. 335.

138. A settlement between parties by "jumping accounts," and receipting accordingly, does not, of itself, and without evidence that such was the intent, include items for money afterwards paid by one on account of claims against them jointly, notwithstanding such claims originally accrued before the settlement: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

139. W. having agreed to ship a quantity of pig iron for M., L. & M., together with some of his own, sent it all in his own name to a Cleveland firm and gave M., L. & M. a paper certifying that 884 tons was iron on which they had a first lien, and that all it brought over and above the amount due them, and the charges, was to go to pay his own lien. Nothing being received from the consignees, W. gave M., L. & M., at their request, an order on the firm for the iron, and notified the firm to settle with M., L. & M. without recourse to him. M., L. & M. then gave up the former certificate to W. They afterwards sued him in assumpsit for damages sustained from his failure to perform the agreement under which he had forwarded the iron for them, and the evidence was conflicting as to the nature of the arrangement under which the iron was received and shipped, and as to whether there was an absolute agreement for advances to be paid M., L. & M., and whether such advances as W. had received were on the whole mass of iron or in answer to drafts on specified lots of his own. Held, that a ruling that the reception by M., L. & M. of the order on the firm was a final settlement as between the parties, and left M., L. & M. to their remedy against the firm, could not be sustained, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the evidence submitted to the jury under proper instructions: Maas v. White, 37 M. 128.

140. It is the intention of the parties to an account that has not been paid in full which determines whether an alleged settlement was meant to dispose of the entire account: Widner v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 51 M. 292.

141. A debtor enclosed a check in a letter of transmittal which was merely a printed form with the blanks filled out in writing and containing the printed words "in settlement of account." The letter also enclosed a receipt in similar form and with the same printed words. The creditor refused to sign this receipt, but gave an ordinary receipt in place of it without objection from the debtor. Further payments were made before the completion of the contract, and the creditor frequently demanded full payment after the check was received, and at such times the debtor made no claim of a settlement. Held, that the words "in settlement of account" meant no more than "applied on the account:" Ibid.

142. An agreement reciting that "the parties hereto, being desirous of settling all matters of difference between them, of whatever name or nature, have agreed as follows," etc., "and it is further mutually agreed that the parties hereto shall meet . . . on Thursday to execute necessary papers to carry out and fulfil the terms of this agreement," is complete in itself and needs no explanation; and where it has been executed and performed, neither party can be heard to contend that it was only a partial settlement and did not include a matter in suit: Freeman v. Freeman, 68 M. 28.

143. Any item presumably covered by a settlement, though not specifically mentioned, is properly disallowed by a referee on accounting: Mason v. Peter, 58 M. 554.

144. If a vendor accepts, negotiates and cashes a check which purports on its face to be in full payment for the merchandise sold, he, in effect, receipts in full for the price: Peter v. Thickstun, 51 M. 590.

145. Passing receipts is not conclusive evidence of settlement: Vyne v. Glenn, 41 M. 112.

146. Receipts in full are not conclusive upon the parties to a settlement: Hicks v. Leaton, 67 M. 371.

147. A receipt or acknowledgment of payment is not conclusive evidence of the fact: McAllister v. Engle, 52 M. 56.

148. A receipt obtained by improper means and assuming to discharge any indebtedness not honestly in dispute between the parties, and known by the debtor to be owing, is to that extent without consideration and ineffectual: Hackley v. Headley, 45 M. 569.

149. A receipt signed in ignorance of the debtor's failure to account for certain moneys concerned does not prevent the signer from recovering them: Hart v. Gould, 62 M. 262.

150. Whether, in case of a railroad injury, a receipt "in full for all damages or injuries resulting from said accident to us or either of us," etc., attached to a statement of account in the form of a bill reciting the accident, and signed by the plaintiff and her husband, would be, in the absence of fraud, or of any facts impeaching its validity, an absolute bar to the plaintiff's right of action for the injury, quere: M. C. R. Co. v. Dunham, 30 M. 128.

151. A receipt given by the register of deeds is not conclusive evidence as against a purchaser of the payment of redemption money to him: Woodbury v. Lewis, W. 256.

That a written receipt may be contradicted by parol evidence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1289-1295.

152. An agreement by a creditor with his debtor to discharge his demand at a future day cannot be treated as an absolute discharge as against third persons whose rights intervene, where it appears that there was such a failure in the consideration for the agreement as would entitle the creditor to treat it as void: Stone v. Welling, 14 M. 514.

153. An agreement not to sue upon a particular demand operates as a release: Robinson v. Godfrey, 2 M. 408; Morgan v. Butterfield, 3 M. 615.

154. A debtor is not discharged by the fact that his creditor knows that a third person has engaged to pay the debt, unless the creditor has accepted such third person as debtor in his place: Blanchard v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 40 M. 566.

155. Assumption of debts by a third person does not discharge the debtor from liability to his creditor; Johnson v. Fowler, 68 M. 1 (Jan. 5, '88).

155. But payment made on behalf of a party by some one else may be adopted by the debtor, and an arrangement to accept the debtor's debtor may be valid if clearly made out, nor need it be in writing: Glover v. Dowagiac Universalist Parish, 48 M. 595.

157. S. owed C., and C. owed D. S. agreed to "become responsible" for C.'s debt to D., and obtained an extension of the time for payment. Held, that this arrangement did not discharge C., who was no surety, and who was in no way prevented from paying his debt at maturity: Dennis v. Sharer, 56 M. 235.

158. One who is jointly liable with the lessees for the payment of rent under a lease upon the lessees' default is not discharged by an agreement to which he is not a party, to reduce the rent, subsequently entered into by the lessors with the lessees: Preston v. Huntington, 67 M. 139.

I. GENERAL MATTERS.

That act 167 of 1883, regulating the practice of medicine, is valid, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 142, 582.

As to complaint under said act, see CRIMES, § 667.

1. Whether one is a practicing physician within the meaning of the exemption laws (see EXECUTIONS, § 65) is a question relating rather to the business in which he is engaged than to the degree of skill with which he exercises it; though some degree of skill is necessary: Sutton v. Facey, 1 M. 243.

2. Proof of plaintiff's having practiced as a physician is prima facie evidence of his professional character: Ibid.

3. And after such a prima facie case has been made out, a witness may be asked "was the plaintiff skilled in healing?" for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff had no knowledge of the healing art: Ibid.

4. That one has held himself out as a medical practitioner may be shown by evidence that he exhibited a sign as "Dr. —, Magnetic Healer," that he was called to visit sick persons and treated them, that he made a certificate of death and swore to a medical practitioner's statement, and by such certificate and statement and a report by him executed of infectious diseases: People v. Phippin, 70 M. 6.

5. Where a physician takes an unmarried layman with him to attend a case of confinement, and no real necessity exists for the latter's assistance, both are liable in damages; and it makes no difference that the patient or husband supposed at the time that the intruder was a medical man, and therefore submitted without objection to his presence: De May v. Roberts, 46 M. 160.

6. In such a case plaintiff may testify that she supposed the intruder was a physician or a medical student, and may show whatever was said at the time tending to support such supposition. And a competent witness may be asked as to the custom in regard to calling assistance in cases of confinement: Ibid.

As to tenure of city physician, see OFFICERS, § 44.

Libellous charge against city physician, see LIBEL, § 27.

As to evidence of medical standing, in action for libel, see LIBEL, § 85.

As to evidence of method of securing practice, see FALSE IMPRISONMENT, § 47.

As to agreements not to practice, see CONTRACTS, §§ 296, 407.

As to physicians' testimony as experts, see EVIDENCE, §§ 109, 585-593, 614-617, 628, 629, 634-654, 658, 667, 679, 681.

II. PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

7. A physician has no right to publish matters of professional confidence without the approbation of the person concerned: Sullings v. Shakespeare, 46 M. 409.

8. Physicians have no common-law privilege exempting them from testifying to facts learned in the confidence of their professional relation: Campau v. North, 39 M. 606.

9. It is not competent for a physician or surgeon to testify to facts which have been communicated to him for the purpose of enabling him to perform his professional duty, or which were in any way brought to his knowledge for that purpose: Briggs v. Briggs, 20 M. 34; Storrs v. Scougale, 48 M. 388.

10. The statutory rule of exclusion is for the patient's benefit and not the physician's, continues in force indefinitely, and can only be waived by the patient: Storrs v. Scougale, 48 M. 388.

11. A physician's testimony as to information acquired while attending a patient cannot be excluded unless it appears that he needed it to enable him to prescribe for the patient: Campau v. North, 89 M. 606.

12. Damages were claimed for a physical disability alleged to have been caused by defendant's violence. Held, that the testimony of plaintiff's physician that plaintiff had admitted to him that the disability had existed before the act of violence could not be excluded if it did not appear that the patient's disclosure was necessary to enable him to prescribe: Ibid.

13. Physicians' testimony as to the condition of sick persons is admissible where no confidential relations are violated in giving it: Scripps v. Foster, 41 M. 742.

14. A physician may properly testify, with his patient's consent, to the date of a visit made him by the patient and the subject of the consultation, details not being given, and the date being only material to fix the time of other events: Dalman v. Koning, 54 M. 821.

15. Deceased having stated in an application for an insurance policy that a certain doctor had treated her for typhoid fever, held, that in an action on the policy he was not precluded from answering defendant's question whether he had or had not done so: Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 65 M. 306 (April 14, '87).

16. The privilege does not extend to cases where no confidential relations exist: People v. Glover, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

17. So in a prosecution for raping a girl under the age of consent, where the state seeks to show that the girl thereby contracted a venereal disease, an examination of the accused made with his consent while he was in jail, by physicians, at the instance of the prosecuting attorney, may be testified to by such physicians: Ibid.

18. The statutory rule of exclusion is solely to enable persons to secure medical aid without betrayal of confidence; it only establishes a privilege which the patient may waive: G. R. & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 M. 667; Scripps v. Foster, 41 M. 742; Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

19. Those who represent the patient's interests after his death may waive the privilege, so that the proponents of a will may show the testator's competency by the testimony of his physician: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

III. DEGREE OF SKILL; MALPRACTICE.

20. A physician must exercise reasonable skill, taking into account the advancement of professional learning, but a charge that he must exercise such skill as is ordinarily exercised by educated physicians, without further defining it, is incorrect: Hitchcock v. Burgett, 88 M. 501.

21. That one has had the management of a farm owned by him, but has not personally been largely engaged in farming affairs, does not tend to show general incompetency to practice the profession of surgery: Mayo v. Wright, 63 M. 82.

22. The fact that a surgeon changes a course of treatment adopted by another does not in itself show that the former course of treatment was not proper at the time: Wood v. Barker, 49 M. 295.

23. A patient's failure to recover perfect soundness of limb is not in itself evidence of malpractice, nor is the fact that he survived, although he refused to allow a particular course of treatment, evidence that such course might not have been proper under the circumstances: Ibid.

24. The jury, in such a case, cannot find malpractice without testimony from persons qualified to give opinions on methods of treatment: Ibid.

25. The jury cannot be allowed to determine for itself the correctness of a physician's treatment of a fractured limb; and it was held proper to refuse to permit a defendant sued for medical services to exhibit the limb to the jury long after the injury had healed: Carstens v. Hanselman, 61 M. 426.

26. In an action for malpractice it was held that the evidence tended to show such a total want of skill, and such a degree of carelessness, on the part of defendant, a physician (who was employed to remove a tumor from a woman's uterus), as would in law make him guilty of manslaughter: Hyatt v. Adams, 16 M. 180.

27. If a family doctor or railway surgeon on leaving town recommends, in case of need, some other physician, who is not, however, in any sense in his employment, it does not make him liable for injuries resulting from the latter's want of skill in case he should be employed: Hitchcock v. Burgett, 88 M. 501.

28. Exemplary damages are not recoverable for malpractice where there was no evil motive in the defendant's conduct: Hyatt v. Adams, 16 M. 180.

See, also, as to damages, DAMAGES, §§ 82, 84, 845.

As to declaring for malpractice, see PLEADINGS, §§ 250-252.

As to evidence in cases of malpractice, see EVIDENCE, §§ 84, 190, 348, 351, 352, 355, 561, 652.

IV. COMPENSATION.

29. There is no presumption of law as to the value of a surgeon's services; a jury cannot ascertain the value without testimony from competent persons, nor can a jury reduce the compensation claimed for such services where undisputed testimony shows it to have been appropriate, on the ground, unsupported by evidence, that plaintiff's treatment was improper: Wood v. Barker, 49 M. 295.

30. A physician's average daily receipts do not measure the value of his services so as to exclude competent opinions as to such value: Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 M. 392.

31. Where, in a physician's suit for services, the defence is made that by a special agreement pay was to be contingent on a cure, and that there was no cure, defendant's financial condition is irrelevant in determining whether such a bargain was made: Hollywood v. Reed, 55 M. 308.

32. Under such an agreement the material questions would be whether a cure was effected by plaintiff; the nature of the disease is not material either under plaintiff's or defendant's theory; and the record of divorce proceedings between the defendant and his former wife is irrelevant: Hollywood v. Reed, 57 M. 284.

33. Where a doctor was employed by one who had been injured in a railroad accident to explain his injuries to the company's management, on the secret understanding that his services should be paid in proportion to the amount recovered, such bargain was held void as against public policy: Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 M. 392.

As to compensation of physician hired by BOARD OF HEALTH, see that title, § 6.

PLANK-ROADS.

I. IN GENERAL.

II. ERECTION AND REMOVAL OF TOLL-GATES.

III. RIGHT TO DEMAND TOLL; FORFEITURE.

IV. ILLEGALLY PASSING TOLL-GATES.

V. EXACTING EXCESSIVE TOLL.

VI. MORTGAGE AND SALE OF FRANCHISES.

VII. LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. The provision in § 50 of the general plank-road act of 1851 (H. S. § 3645) that any subsequent alteration or amendment of the act shall not operate as an alteration or amendment of the corporate rights of companies formed under it, unless specially named in the amendatory act, was inserted solely for the protection of the companies, and does not prevent the legislature, by general amendment, from removing any restriction, or releasing or diminishing any obligation or burden imposed upon such companies by the general act: People v. Grand B. & H. P. R. Co., 10 M. 400.

2. Therefore companies formed under said act may, as to the road subsequently constructed, claim the benefit of the act of 1859 (H. S. § 3623), which permits them to adopt a grade not exceeding one foot in ten, instead of one foot in twenty, as under the general act: Ibid.

3. In 1848 a plank-road company received a special charter which declared the general law of 1848 concerning such companies to form a part of it. The charter was made to continue sixty years, and could only be altered or amended after thirty years, unless it was made to appear to the legislature that the charter had been violated. In 1855 another act was passed relating to such companies which repealed certain provisions of forfeiture in the law of 1848, but made no other reference to it. Act 289 of 1875 (H. S. §§ 3649-3651) amended the act of 1855, prescribing new causes of forfeiture, and providing a new remedy in equity to enforce forfeiture. Held, that the act of 1875 was not applicable to the company in question, and that no amendment made earlier than 1878 could operate on its charter: Tripp v. Pontiac & L. P. R. Co., 66 M. 1.

4. Section 4 of the charter of the Detroit and Howell Plank-road Company (Laws 1848, p. 398), authorizing the company, when duly organized, to enter upon and take possession of so much of the Detroit and Grand River road, so called, as lies between the city of Detroit and Howell, was held to dispense with the necessity of a release or consent of the supervisors and commissioners of highways of the several townships, as required by § 27 of the general act of 1851 (H. S. §§ 3597-3647): Detroit & H. P. R. Co. v. Fisher, 4 M. 87.

5. The Detroit and Erin Plank-road Company, being specially authorized by its charter to take possession of so much of the Fort Gratiot road as lies between the city of Detroit and the township of Erin, and construct and maintain a plank road thereon, it was held that it might do so without any grant or release from the supervisor and commissioners of highways of the township through which the road would run, notwithstanding the general act of 1848 (H. S. § 3566 et seq.) was also made a part of the charter, and by that act, where a plank-road company might wish to use a public highway for their road, they were to obtain the right by procuring a grant for the purpose from the officers mentioned: Attorney-General v. Detroit & E. P. R. Co., 2 M. 138.

6. Independently of statute or charter it is the duty of a plank-road company having exclusive control of a highway to protect the public by railings or fences against dangerous embankments: Carver v. Detroit & S. P. R. Co., 61 M. 534; See S. C. 69 M. 616.

II. ERECTION AND REMOVAL OF TOLL-GATES.

7. A plank-road company has general power to change the location of its gates, and to erect new ones, unless specially restricted: Detroit v. Detroit & E. P. R. Co., 12 M. 383.

8. A plank-road company, occupying for its purposes a road leading from the city of Detroit, procured an amendment to its charter, by which it was "empowered to extend their road on Gratiot street to Randolph street in the city of Detroit; provided that no toll-gate shall be erected or maintained within the limits of said city by said company." Subsequently the city limits were extended by statute so as to embrace a portion of the original road upon which a gate had before been erected. It was held that the amendatory act did not restrict the original powers of the company to erect and maintain a gate on any portion of the road then outside the city limits, but only prohibited any gate upon the extension of the road which was authorized by the amendatory act: Ibid.

9. The charter of a plank-road company authorized it to erect toll-bridges at its discretion, provided none should be placed within the limits of the city of Detroit. Held, that the charter contemplated the then existing city limits, and that the later extension of the limits beyond a gate did not diminish the company's franchise nor make the gate a nuisance, or compel the company to remove the gate: Chope v. Detroit & Howell P. R. Co., 37 M. 195, 43 M. 140.

10. A charter to construct a plank-road from one city to another city or place does not authorize the company to erect its toll-gate and exact tolls upon one of the streets of the city; nor can user establish such a right: Pontiac & L. P. R. Co. v. Hilton, 69 M. 115 (March 2, '88).

That a statute requiring removal is invalid, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 57.

III. RIGHT TO DEMAND TOLL; FORFEITURE.

11. Under the provisions of section 17 of the general plank-road act of 1848, a company may exact toll whenever the road, or five consecutive miles thereof, are completed, notwithstanding the survey of the road is not recorded as directed by section 12 of said act: Detroit & H. P. R. Co. v. Fisher, 4 M. 38.

12. The company may demand toll of any person in advance of his actually travelling upon the road; and on his refusal to state how far he proposes to travel over the road may require payment of toll to the next gate: Ibid.

13. H. S. § 3649, providing a remedy by suit in chancery against a plank-road company attempting to collect toll while its road is defective or out of repair, was not repealed by H. S. § 1369, which imposes upon the highway commissioner the duty of seeing that all such companies maintain their roads in as good and safe condition as he is required to keep the public highways, and subjects such companies to a penalty of $50 for every failure to repair defects when ordered by him: People v. Grand Rapids & W. P. R. Co., 67 M. 5.

14. In a suit under H. S. § 3649, against a plank-road company, an injunction restraining the company from taking toll is properly refused where it appears that since the filing of the bill defendant has at great expense put its road in the condition required by law: Ibid.

15. Bill held to state a case for equitable relief, under H. S. § 3649, against a plank-road company whose road is out of repair: Ibid.

16. Under the plank-road act of 1848, on the completion of five consecutive miles of plank-road, the right to take tolls became vested; and whatever might be the length of the road required by the charter, the right to tolls on the part so completed could not be forfeited or affected by the failure to construct the balance of the road: People v. Jackson & M. P. R. Co., 9 M. 285.

17. The following question discussed but not decided—the court being divided in opinion: Where a part of the road actually completed is constructed in a manner not allowed by the said act of 1848, is this such a misuser as will forfeit the whole grant? Ibid.

18. Also, under said act of 1848, can the five consecutive miles of road first constructed be forfeited by a failure to keep any other portion of the road, when constructed, in repair? Ibid.

19. Also, what certainty of pleading is required in a proceeding to have a forfeiture declared for misuser? Ibid.

20. Also, what standard of perfection can be required as the standard of repairs, and when repairs must be made? Ibid.

21. Where a company's road is for six years out of repair in its whole length, and unsafe for vehicles, negligence may be presumed against the company, and the fact justifies a forfeiture of its corporate rights and franchises and a judgment of ouster: Coon v. Plymouth P. R. Co., 32 M. 248.

That forfeiture must be judicially declared, etc., and as to repeal or amendment of charter, see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 441-446.

IV. ILLEGALLY PASSING TOLL-GATES.

22. Where the traveller, without paying the legal toll, passes the gate against the express will or order of the gatekeeper, but without actual force, the gate being open and the keeper offering no resistance, such an act constitutes a forcible passing under H. S. § 3582: Detroit & H. P. R. Co. v. Fisher, 4 M. 88.

23. In an action by a plank-road company for the penalty provided by H. S. § 3582, for forcibly passing its toll-gate without paying, defendant cannot show that the company had agreed with an alderman to stop taking toll if the alderman would procure certain legislation which it wanted. And it is no defence that defendant thought the gate was illegal: Detroit & S. P. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 68 M. 265 (Jan. 19, '88).

24. An action to recover a penalty for illegally passing plaintiff's toll-gate involves neither the existence of plaintiff as a corporation nor the exercise of a corporate franchise: Pontiac & L. P. R. Co. v. Hilton, 69 M. 115 (March 2, '88).

25. Plaintiff suing to recover a penalty for illegally passing a toll-gate has the burden of proving the existence of such a state of facts as entitles him to enforce the penalty: Ibid.

V. EXACTING EXCESSIVE TOLL.

26. H. S. § 3636, imposing a penalty upon gate-keepers for exacting excessive toll, does not apply to a case where it is claimed that he is not entitled to take toll at all and where the question of his right to collect is purely legal: Van Buren v. Wylie, 56 M. 501.

27. A toll-gate keeper cannot be held liable under H. S. § 3636 for taking illegal toll, unless he took it knowing the number of miles travelled or to be travelled on the road by the person paying the toll: Fox v. Francher, 66 M. 536.

28. H. S. § 3636 does not apply to plank-road companies organized under the laws of 1848, but only to such companies as should be organized after the act of 1851, of which said § 3636 forms a part, became a law: Ibid.

VI. MORTGAGE AND SALE OF FRANCHISES.

29. A special statute (the act of April 3, 1851) authorizing a plank-road company to mortgage its road is not in conflict with the constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from authorizing the sale of any real estate of any person by private or special law, but is to be regarded as an amendment of the company's charter: Joy v. Jackson & M. P. R. Co., 11 M. 155.

30. An amendment to a charter of a plank-road company, authorizing it to mortgage its corporate property to raise money for the completion of its road, is an amendment which may be accepted by a majority of the stockholders: Ibid.

31. Under a special statute authorizing a plank-road company to "mortgage the road and other property of the company," the franchise of taking toll is to be understood as included with the road and its fixtures: Ibid.

32. But the company could not, under this power, mortgage any franchise essentially corporate in its character, and which could not be enjoyed by a natural person: Ibid.

33. Under an authority to mortgage the whole road the company might give a valid mortgage on any specific portion of it upon which separate tolls can lawfully be collected: Ibid.

34. Whether a plank-road company has power, irrespective of statute, to mortgage its corporate property and franchises, quere: Ibid.

35. The authority to sell the franchise of a plank-road corporation on execution is derived entirely from the statute; and the sale can be made in no other mode than that pointed out by the statute. That mode is a sale of the franchise to such person as will satisfy the execution, with the legal fees, and take the franchise for the shortest period of time: James v. Pontiac & G. P. R. Co., 8 M. 91.

36. A sale of the franchise for a certain period, in part payment of the execution, is unauthorized and void: Ibid.

37. The acquiescence of the stockholders in the purchaser taking possession under such a sale, their payment to him of tolls for passing over the road, and the expenditure by him of moneys in repairing the road, with their knowledge, will not confirm and render valid such a sale: Ibid.

VII. LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

38. The signing of the articles of association and subscription for stock of a plank-road company, under the act of 1851 (H. S. § 8627) imported a promise to the company to pay the amount of such subscription when called in, although the instrument contains no express promise to that effect: Dexter & M. P. R. Co. v. Millerd, 8 M. 91.

39. The notice that directors of plank-road companies give under H. S. § 8627, that payment is required for stock subscribed for, must specify the place where the payment should be made: Ibid.

40. Stockholders in a plank-road company organized under the general plank-road act of 1851 are severally liable for demands against the company (not for labor done) to the amount of the stock held by each when the debt accrued, and not merely for the amounts which remain unpaid on their stock: Pettibone v. McGraw, 6 M. 441.

PLATS.

- I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.
- II. ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND RECORD.
- III. VACATION OF PLATS.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. No plat can be made except by the proprietor: Lee v. Lake, 14 M. 12; Lothrop v. Board of Public Works, 41 M. 724.

2. An administrator cannot make a public plat of his intestate's lands under a probate license to sell them: Lothrop v. Board of Public Works, 41 M. 724.

3. The proprietor of lands bordering on a meandered stream may extend his plat to the channel bank: Twogood v. Hoyt, 42 M. 609.

4. Where lands are platted into lots, with shore boundaries marked, conveyances with reference thereto carry the submerged land to the center of the stream: Watson v. Peters, 26 M. 508; Fletcher v. Thunder Bay, etc. Boom Co., 51 M. 277.

And see WATERS, VI, (a).

5. The owner's certificate, appended to a plat, and explaining dimensions, courses and distances not otherwise made clear, is a proper part of the plat and should be read with it. This being done, a square intended to be dedicated to the public was held sufficiently identified: Baker v. Johnston, 21 M. 819.

6. Where in platting a village it turns out that by mistake the blocks are not so long as the plat represents, the deficiency must be apportioned between the lots of the block according to their apparent size as shown by the map: Quinnin v. Reimers, 46 M. 605.

6a. And this rule will be applied notwithstanding the explanations upon the plat state that all lots are of full size except those made fractional by a named street; it appearing that according to the plat such street made certain lots fractional, and such last-mentioned lots evidently being all the explanations intended to except: Ibid.

7. The healing effect of H. S. § 1487 is confined to imperfect acknowledgments; plats made by persons not owning the land are not made effectual by it: Lee v. Lake, 14 M. 12; Detroit v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 23 M. 173.

8. Whether a plat of ground for public uses, made under the act of 1839 (H. S. §§ 1478-1482), is to be regarded as a grant, or as an offer to dedicate, or partakes of the nature of both, some action by competent public authority by way of acceptance is necessary before it can have the intended effect of making public highways of the streets laid out upon it: Wayne v. Miller, 81 M. 447. And see DEDICATION.

As to rights of purchasers buying with reference to plats, see ESTOPPEL, §§ 25-32.

As to effect of record of plat ignoring highway, see HIGHWAYS, § 22.

II. ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND RECORD.

9. Conveyances by deeds duly acknowledged and recorded, of lots laid down on the plan,—the deeds describing the lots according to the plat, and referring to it as of record,—will not, for purposes of dedication, supply the want of acknowledgment of the plat: People v. Beaubien, 2 D. 256.

10. Where the statute (H. S. § 1474) required the acknowledgment of plats to be under the officer's seal, the record of such plat is unauthorized, and is not evidence of the plat's execution and validity so as to prove the existence of a highway by dedication: Grand Rapids v. Hastings, 36 M. 122.

11. Whether an acknowledgment of a plat not under seal of the justice taking it, as required by an act in force at the time (Laws of 1838, p. 581, § 2; 2 Terr. Laws, p. 577, § 2), might be cured by H. S. § 1487 for the time which elapsed after that act took effect, quere: Detroit v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 23 M. 173.

12. The acknowledgment of a plat is the essential act of dedication, and without it a plat has no force in itself for any purpose: Burton v. Martz, 88 M. 761.

13. A plat of lands belonging to a woman was acknowledged by her husband as owner, and so recorded. The wife afterwards formally acknowledged the plat and the record was altered conformably. Held, that it did not entitle purchasers to hold the woman as having conveyed to her husband, or in any responsible way recognized title in him: Ibid.

14. Omission to acknowledge or record a plat does not invalidate a conveyance which refers to it in describing the premises: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232; Wiley v. Lovely, 46 M. 88.

15. Where both parties to a suit respecting lands trace title through conveyances made with reference to a recorded plat, it is immaterial that the plat was never properly acknowledged or recorded: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232; Quinnin v. Reimers, 46 M. 605.

16. The failure to record a plat offering to dedicate a square for public buildings is important only as it concerns the naked legal title which the record would have vested in the county in trust for the purpose intended: Cass Supervisors v. Banks, 44 M. 467.

17. A plat actually, though not legally, recorded may be used to identify the land described in the deeds referring to it: Johnstone v. Scott, 11 M. 232.

18. The sale of lands by duly acknowledged deeds referring to a plat as duly recorded by the grantor is a recognition of the validity of the plat even if that had not been duly acknowledged (H. S. § 1487): White v. Smith, 37 M. 291.

19. The validity of the acknowledgment and record of a plat held to be admitted by the course of pleading in chancery: Ibid.

III. VACATION OF PLATS.

20. The power given by a municipal charter [of Three Rivers] to the village authorities to open and vacate alleys does not exclude the exercise by the circuit courts of their statutory power (H. S. §§ 1476-78) to alter or vacate town plats: Case v. Frey, 24 M. 251.

21. The petition by which proceedings are instituted under H. S. §§ 1476-78 need not be verified by oath or signed by all the persons interested. The statute was intended to authorize any owner to make the application and any other owner to oppose it: Ibid.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

(a) General principles; rules of construction.

As to principles specially applicable to pleadings in actions for LIBEL or SLANDER, and of COVENANT, EJECTMENT, REPLEVIN, TRESPASS, TRESPASS ON THE CASE and TROVER, see those titles.

1. The object of pleading is to apprise the opposite party and the court of the grounds of the pleader's claim or defence: Hurtford v. Holmes, 8 M. 460; People v. Miller, 15 M. 354; Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184; Merkle v. Bennington, 68 M. 183 (Jan. 12, '88).

2. And a pleading is generally sufficient when it fully accomplishes this purpose: People v. Miller, 15 M. 354.

3. Such facts must be averred as will, if admitted, lead to a necessary legal conclusion of liability or guilt: Enders v. People, 20 M. 233, 240.

4. A pleading need not allege more than is sufficient, prima facie, to constitute a good cause of action or defence: Attorney-General v. Michigan State Bank, 2 D. 359; Farmers' etc. Bank v. Kingsley, 2 D. 379, 386.

5. The pleader is not bound to anticipate, nor need he notice and remove, every possible exception, answer or objection that may exist, and with which the adversary may intend to oppose him: Ibid.

6. Nor need a party deny allegations before they are made: Brown v. Thompson, 29 M. 72.

7. It is not necessary to allege implications of fact or presumptions of law: Farmers', etc. Bank v. Kingsley, 2 D. 379, 387.

8. A pleading should contain allegations of facts and not of evidence: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68.

9. The wording of pleadings should be precise: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

10. But extreme niceties and technical exactness in form in the requirements of pleadings are not favored: Coon v. Plymouth P. R. Co., 81 M. 178.

11. A pleading is double if a single issue cannot be made to controvert it by denying any one material fact: People v. River Raisin & L. E. R. Co., 12 M. 389.

12. S. L. 1849, § 26, regulating pleadings in the county court, required but a brief statement of plaintiff's claims or demands, without regard to previous forms; and it seems it was enough for plaintiff to set forth, in some manner, sufficient to apprise defendant of what he had to meet: Mills v. Spencer, 3 M. 127.

13. The statute abolishing special pleadings does not make special pleading void where the parties have voluntarily adopted it, joined issue, and proceeded to trial and judgment: Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276.

14. No plea is necessary to bring to the notice of the court facts which the judges must judicially know: People v. Mahaney, 18 M. 481.

15. If the allegations in a pleading conflict with a public statute they must be disregarded: People v. River Raisin & L. E. R. Co., 12 M. 389.

16. Parties cannot be allowed to stipulate or to admit by pleading that a statute was not properly or constitutionally passed: Attorney-General v. Rice, 64 M. 385.

17. In pleading every implication will be taken most strongly against the pleader: Bush v. Dunham, 4 M. 339.

18. An ambiguous allegation is construed most favorably for the party against whom it is made: Browne v. Moore, 32 M. 254.

19. The construction and interpretation of a pleading in the record is matter of law for the court, and a declaration cannot be changed because the finding of facts imputes to it something that it does not imply: Earle v. Westchester F. Ins. Co., 29 M. 414.

20. Repleader is never awarded in favor of the party beginning the mispleading and to whose error the subsequent mispleading is traceable: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 578.

21. Arbitrators are not held to the niceties of pleading and evidence that govern the action of courts: Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 M. 186.

22. It is presumed that pleadings are not put in for sham purposes or in bad faith, and that they cannot be attacked except upon averments to the contrary: Sanford v. Huxford, 83 M. 813.

(b) Superfluous or immaterial matter.

23. Addition of superfluous words which cannot mislead in the caption of an unsworn pleading is immaterial: e. g., calling the court in which a demurrer is filed "the superior court of the city of Grand Rapids," when the court's legal title is "the superior court of Grand Rapids:" Comstock v. McEvoy, 52 M. 324.

24. Except in describing a written instrument which bears a written date, allegations of time are not, in general, material in a declaration: Howland v. Davis, 40 M. 545.

25. An averment as to the source of title is immaterial where the fact of ownership is the material question: Monaghan v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co., 53 M. 238.

26. In a pleading, all beyond what is necessary to constitute, prima facie, a sufficient cause of action or defence, is surplusage: Attorney-General v. Michigan State Bank, 2 D. 359.

27. But no allegations descriptive of that which is legally essential to the claim or charge can be rejected as immaterial: Harrington v. Worden, 1 M. 487.

28. Anything outside of the facts necessary to state a cause of action is surplusage; the necessary facts, however, must be stated: Smith v. Holmes, 54 M. 105.

29. When a contract is set forth at length in the declaration, any allegation in respect to its description or effect, in a matter which must appear on its face as set forth, is superfluous and should be treated as surplusage: Regents v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 12 M. 188.

30. As, where the contract of corporations was alleged to be "sealed with the seals of the respective parties," but upon its face it appeared to be executed by agents who had only affixed their own seals: Ibid.

31. An erroneous allegation in a declaration that a release unnecessarily referred to in the declaration was executed under a certain statute is to be treated as surplusage: Holdridge v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 16 M. 66.

32. Where a contract as set forth in the declaration is for the payment at the end of the month for stone delivered during the month, a further averment that it is to be paid for according to a certain other contract not set forth will be regarded as surplusage: Stange v. Clemens, 17 M. 402.

33. A charge of conspiracy is mere surplusage in an action for malicious prosecution: Hamilton v. Smith, 39 M. 222.

34. The introduction of the words "falsely and fraudulently" as well as the words "carelessly and negligently" is surplusage in a count the gravamen of which is expressed to be negligence merely: Smith v. Holmes, 54 M. 105.

35. The fact that a declaration for damages for misrepresenting the value of land sold to plaintiff charges fraudulent and deceitful purposes on defendant's part does not necessitate proof of such purposes: Holcomb v. Noble, 69 M. 396.

36. The recital, in a declaration for seduction, of authorization to plaintiff (the victim's mother) to bring suit, cannot be treated as surplusage, but shows that the action is the statutory one for the injury to the daughter: Ryan v. Fralick, 50 M. 488.

37. Where of two pleas — non assumpsit and not guilty — filed to the whole of a declaration, the former meets the whole, the latter may be treated as superfluous and a nullity: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

II. THE DECLARATION.

As to declarations in EJECTMENT, see that title, §§ 106-116.

As to declarations in justices' courts, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, III, (d), 2.

As to declarations in probate appeals, see APPEAL, §§ 375-379.

As to time for filing declaration, see DEFAULT, §§ 1-4.

As to filing and serving declaration as commencement of suit, see PROCESS.

(a) In general.

38. In non-bailable actions a variance between the declaration and the writ of summons as to the form of action is entirely immaterial, and in bailable actions it would operate only to discharge the bail and not to nullify the declaration: Smith v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 M. 87.

39. Where suit is begun by summons in assumpsit, and declaration in debt is filed, if defendant appears and pleads that the cause of action did not accrue in ten years he cannot complain of the variance: Brewer v. Boynton, 71 M. — (July 11, '88).

40. The subject-matter of the declaration, not the name it gives to the action, is what determines the form of action used: United States Manuf. Co. v. Stevens, 52 M. 331.

As to the form of action shown by certain declarations, see ACTIONS, §§ 55-63; DEBT, § 5.

41. A declaration is not demurrable for omitting venue (H. S. § 7777): Danaher v. Hitchcock, 84 M. 516.

42. In garnishment proceedings an objection to the judgment against the principal debtor, that in the copy of the declaration served the name of the county was omitted in the entitling, was held to be of no force: Allen v. Hazen, 26 M. 142.

43. In all courts the declaration must be signed by some one, and this signature is usually the test to determine who appears: Benallick v. People, 31 M. 200.

44. A declaration that sets up no sufficient cause of action is fatally defective, and supports no proofs: Parker v. Armstrong, 55 M. 176.

45. A special count that states no cause of action supports no proof: Mitchell v. Scott, 41 M. 108.

(b) The counts; joinder; election.

1. In general; duplicity.

46. Every special count in a declaration must be regarded as setting up a separate claim: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68; Rose v. Jackson, 40 M. 29.

47. And a declaration containing several counts is not defective because one count claims damages below the jurisdiction of the court: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68.

48. A single count can cover but one cause of action: Ives v. Williams, 58 M. 636.

49. A count in a declaration must be construed as an entirety in ascertaining what its gravamen is: Smith v. Holmes, 54 M. 105.

50. A cause of action under a special contract cannot be so divided that recovery can be had partly on a general count and partly on a special: Beecher v. Pettee, 40 M. 181.

51. It is not necessary that special counts in assumpsit should be harmonious, even when the same instrument is set out in each as the foundation of an action. And the court cannot refuse to receive evidence under the declaration on any such ground as that what would support one count would defeat another: Barton v. Gray, 48 M. 164.

52. Defendant who has asked no bill of particulars must be prepared to meet any case that would be admissible under the common counts as if there had been no special count, and recovery will not therefore be limited by the terms of a special count where the common counts are also relied on: Hall v. Woodin, 35 M. 87.

53. A plaintiff has a right to abandon a special count and seek to recover on the common counts which he has annexed thereto: Wyman v. Crowley, 33 M. 84.

54. Where the allegations made in the common and special counts of a declaration are inconsistent with each other, and the plaintiff has introduced his evidence in reliance on the special count, he cannot then abandon it and recover under the common counts: Wetmore v. McDougall, 82 M. 276.

55. Pleading a special count in assumpsit does not estop the plaintiff from recovering under the common counts if he abandons the special count at the outset and all his evidence is consistent with the common counts: Berringer v. Cobb, 56 M. 557.

56. A count is demurrable for duplicity if it combines a cause of action for a monthly allowance, payable under particular regulations, with a distinct cause of action for a round sum due under different regulations: Portage Lake, etc. Society v. Phillips, 36 M. 22.

57. A declaration for seduction examined and held not objectionable for duplicity as combining in any one count a cause of action in case and also in trespass: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

58. A count for damages for the unlawful sale of liquor cannot include a claim for the recovery of the money paid: Friend v. Dunks, 87 M. 25.

59. Misjoinder in a single count of two incompatible causes of action, such as tort and assumpsit, is, it seems, cured by judgment if no demurrer or other objection is interposed: Schafer v. Boyce, 41 M. 256.

60. Adding a single ad damnum clause "for the damages as aforesaid suffered" will not cure the misjoinder of causes of action in assumpsit and case: Friend v. Dunks, 89 M. 738.

2. Joinder; misjoinder.

61. Plaintiff may join all his causes of action in one declaration if in separate suits he could recover on each in the same form of action and on the same proofs: Tregent v. Maybee, 54 M. 226.

62. A declaration in trespass on the case for damages from the unlawful foreclosure of a mortgage may include a count in trover for the excess of the proceeds of sale retained by the mortgagee beyond his debt: Bearss v. Preston, 66 M. 11.

63. A count of which the gist is that the parties agreed to buy lands jointly, each paying half, and that defendant made the purchase for $1,500, but represented to plaintiff that it was for $2,000, whereby he induced plaintiff to pay him $1,000 instead of $750, and that plaintiff sues him for the excess, with interest, may be joined with the common counts: Young v. Taylor, 36 M. 25.

64. One who had contracted to deliver all his lumber sold part of it to third persons. Held, that recovery might be sought against him under common and special counts in the same declaration. The special count would lie for breach of contract or wrongful conversion, or both, and the common counts for the conversion: Hart v. Summers, 38 M. 399.

65. When it is one of the terms of a contract that an engine is good, and if not found so on trial shall be made good, the right to return it in case of failure is in pursuance and not in avoidance of the contract; and a count for breach of warranty is not inconsistent with one averring return, or with the common count for money had and received: Kimball & A. Manuf. Co. v. Vroman, 35 M. 310.

66. It seems that, since the enactment of H. S. § 7778, allowing assumpsit to be brought upon judgments, the common counts may be joined with special counts upon judgments, a count for use and occupation, a count upon a special contract to pay rent, and a special contract to purchase a house and lot: Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 M. 351.

67. Where there are three counts in a declaration in trespass to recover damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff from the dogs of defendants, two of which counts are founded on the common-law liability for such injury, and the other based upon a special statute, it cannot be said as a legal proposition that they are all for the same cause of action, so as to render a verdict against the defendants on the second count inconsistent with one in their favor on the first and third, and thus entitling them to judgment on the whole record: Swift v. Applebone, 23 M. 353.

68. The rules with regard to the joinder or misjoinder of counts in a common-law declaration apply to a complaint under the boat and vessel law: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

69. Counts in a complaint under the boat and vessel law of 1869 examined, and held to be in assumpsit and properly joined: Ibid.

70. The objection of misjoinder of counts should be disposed of at the outset of the trial and the plaintiff made to elect between them instead of being allowed to go over the whole range of testimony without doing so: Ives v. Williams, 53 M. 636.

71. Joinder of repugnant counts in the same declaration does not preclude recovery on one of them; they do not nullify each other: Berringer v. Cobb, 58 M. 557.

3. Election.

72. It is not a matter of right to have plaintiff compelled to elect between the counts of the declaration where there is no misjoinder. The union of different statements is allowable: Cook v. Perry, 43 M. 623.

73. Election between counts need not be required where, in assumpsit for money obtained by defendant through fraud, the common counts are joined to a special count waiving the tort: Tregent v. Maybee, 54 M. 226.

74. A declaration in case contained two counts, one of which alleged the wrongful expulsion of plaintiff from premises occupied, and the other an assault and battery. Held, that as no inconsistency between these counts was pointed out, there was no error in refusing to require an election between them: Taylor v. Adams, 58 M. 187.

75. It seems that a motion to require plaintiff to elect between common and special counts in his declaration ought to be granted where the grounds for recovery thereunder may be inconsistent with each other; or else the trial judge should restrict recovery under the special counts to items which fall within the precise terms of the agreement on which the count is based: McLennan v. McDermid, 50 M. 879.

76. The objection that on a former trial plaintiff elected to go to trial upon a different count is waived if not raised until after the verdict: Barten v. Gray, 57 M. 623.

77. Whether it is not an abuse of judicial discretion to allow a plaintiff who has elected to proceed under special counts to change his election and ask for judgment on the common counts, quere. But where, in either case, the plaintiff must rely on the same facts and the defence is the same, the error is unimportant: McLennan v. McDermid, 52 M. 468.

78. Mistrial does not occur where plaintiff elects to rely on a particular count after evidence has been submitted, if the proofs received are relevant to the count chosen, and if the others are not so inconsistent with it that the jury can be substantially misled by their averments and render a general verdict. Such a verdict may be applied to the count elected, and, if desired, the record may be amended accordingly: Barton v. Gray, 57 M. 623.

79. A party who has been compelled to elect between the common and special counts of his declaration is at liberty, on a new trial, to proceed upon the other counts: Gott v. Superior Court Judge, 42 M. 635.

80. A ruling requiring a party to elect between the counts of his declaration, and the practice thereon, would not bind the court upon a new trial of the case if brought to trial in the same shape as before: Ibid.

(c) When the common counts may be used.

1. Generally.

81. A judgment must be declared on specially, and cannot be sued on the common counts: Gooding v. Hingston, 20 M. 439.

82. Where one sues for not being suffered to complete an express contract, he must declare specially and cannot rely on the common counts: Beecher v. Pettee, 40 M. 181; Hamilton v. Frothingham, 59 M. 253.

83. Vendors who have not fully completed their contract cannot recover upon that, and, if prevented from completing it by the action of the vendee, can sue only upon the special contract for damages on this ground, and not upon the common counts: Wilson v. Wagar, 26 M. 452.

84. Where an article was ordered of a manufacturer at a specified price, and work was done and materials used towards its construction, but before it was completed the order was countermanded, and the materials remained in the manufacturer's hands, it was held that the manufacturer could not recover on the common counts the value of such labor and materials, but should sue on the special contract for being prevented from performing it: Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 M. 294.

85. There can be no recovery on a count for work and labor where the only showing is that defendant employed plaintiff to work for him and then refused to allow him to do so. The plaintiff in such case should count specially on the contract: Moore v. Nason, 48 M. 300.

86. Where an agreement for the sale of saw-logs contemplates the measurement by scaling as precedent to the vesting of title, the vendor cannot recover under the general count as upon a complete contract, if that has not been done: Begole v. McKenzie, 26 M. 470.

87. An action on the common counts will not lie where proof of the breach of a contract is necessary to recovery: Phippen v. Morehouse, 50 M. 537.

88. Stipulated damages for the breach of an express contract cannot be recovered under the common counts: Butterfield v. Seligman, 17 M. 95.

89. The common counts are not adapted to a recovery upon a promise to pay a given sum in consideration of the plaintiff's deeding to defendants certain land, to be by them deeded to a third person for land the latter was to convey to a railroad company for depot grounds: Mace v. Page, 33 M. 38.

90. Where mortgaged land has been deeded with a covenant against encumbrances, and the grantee has voluntarily paid the mortgage, he should, in suing to recover the money from his grantor, make his declaration so far special as to exhibit the claim as founded on the covenant: Carney v. O'Neil, 27 M. 495.

91. Where one has promised the maker of a promissory note, for a consideration proceeding from the latter alone, to pay the note when due, the holder of the note cannot recover upon such promise on the common counts in assumpsit, but, if entitled to recover at all, must declare specially: Halsted v. Francis, 81 M. 113.

92. Where parties have agreed to run their logs in a common mass and to supply each his share of the expense thereof for the joint benefit, and one of them fails to do so and the other supplies the deficiency, the latter may perhaps have a right of action against him for damages, of which the cost of the extra labor supplied by him may be the criterion; but he has no right of action against him on the common counts so long as there was no agreement that he should make good the deficiency and so long as the cost of the extra labor remains unliquidated: Toga Manuf. Co. v. Stimson, 48 M. 213.

93. Where a contract for work to be done by plaintiff calls for payment in notes, a claim that defendant never gave the notes called for by the contract requires that the contract should be sued on, and cannot be considered in a suit for the value of the work: Whitaker v. Kilroy, 70 M. 635.

94. Where a contract has been fully performed a party may, in general, recover under the common counts: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

95. Recovery under the common counts cannot be had on a special contract performed on plaintiff's part, except for money due: Pierson v. Spaulding, 61 M. 90.

96. Where the contract between two parties has been executed by plaintiff, and nothing remains but payment to be made by defendant, the former may sue upon the common counts and need not declare specially: Bush v. Brooks, 70 M. 446.

97. Where goods are sold on credit to be paid for in a note, if the note is not given, the vendor, if he sues before the time of credit expires, must declare on the contract; but after the expiration of the time of credit he may sue on the common counts: Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 M. 292.

98. A declaration on the common counts alone is insufficient in an action by an individual for the price of goods purporting to be sold by a firm in which he was a partner, if there is no showing of any assignment of the claim by the firm to the plaintiff, or of any notice to defendant of the firm's dissolution: Hatzenbuehler v. Lewis, 51 M. 585.

99. Money actually due under an express contract is recoverable under the common counts: Thomas v. Caulkett, 57 M. 392.

100. The common counts are proper in suing for a debt which defendant has assumed by novation, where defendant has retained, for the purpose of paying it, the money originally due to the person whose debt is thus assumed, and where, also, the amount to be paid under the novation agreement is a sum certain. The count for money had and received covers the first case, and indebitatus assumpsit the other: Mulcrone v. American Lumber Co., 55 M. 622.

101. The common counts in assumpsit sustain recovery for the value of the share of a crop of wheat belonging to a tenant in common of the wheat under a valid agreement: McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 M. 219.

102. The general counts in assumpsit will not suffice in an action under H. S. §§ 3423-3425 against a railroad company for a labor debt: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

103. Where a contract within the statute of frauds has been executed by one party, and the other has received the consideration and its benefit, the former can maintain an action against the latter for the benefit thus conferred, accepted and appropriated, bringing suit on the appropriate common counts in assumpsit: Whipple v. Parker, 29 M. 369.

104. A certificate of deposit may be sued under the common counts with copy appended: Cate v. Patterson, 25 M. 191.

105. It has always been competent to sue the makers of notes, negotiable or otherwise, on the common counts: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Potter, 55 M. 637.

106. The payee of a conditional railroad aid note may, after condition performed, sue the note under the common counts: Ibid.

107. A non-negotiable note not purporting to be for value received may be given in evidence under the common counts: Rickey v. Morrison, 69 M. 139.

108. A declaration on the common counts with copy of a negotiable instrument appended is equivalent to an assertion that plaintiff is entitled to sue upon it in manner and form as set out: Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 M. 355.

109. A county may be sued by a declaration on the common counts: Cicotte v. Wayne County, 44 M. 178.

110. Plaintiff in an action on the common counts is confined, on appeal from justice's court, to the particulars of his claim as stated in the justice's return: Button v. Russell, 55 M. 478.

2. For money paid or expended; money had and received.

See, also, ASSUMPSIT, IV, V.

111. Where there is a special contract between the parties, one cannot recover upon a general count for money paid to the other's use, except where he could have recovered without any special contract: Carney v. O'Neil, 27 M. 495.

112. The count for money had and received includes any dealings whereby money due to plaintiff came into defendant's hands as factor from sales on commission: Freehling v. Ketchum, 39 M. 299.

113. The common count for money had and received sustains recovery of money paid on an express contract by mistake and in ignorance of material facts: Lane v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 63.

114. The common money counts in assumpsit lie against an agent for moneys received in making collections on a mortgage belonging to his principal, and for moneys advanced to be used in foreclosure: Schmemann v. Rothfuss, 46 M. 453.

115. A declaration against a justice and his sureties for money received by him as justice must set forth the grounds of the specific liability in a special count; and the general counts added thereto are surplusage: Dane v. Holmes, 41 M. 661.

116. A general count for money paid is sufficient in an action by a bondsman to recover back money paid for the benefit of his principal; and if the action is brought on both general and special counts, any objections based on the latter are immaterial: Mitchell v. Chambers, 48 M. 150.

117. The common counts lie to recover the amount of a tax paid by plaintiff for defendant's use, though defendant's duty to pay the tax arose on his sealed contract to sell the land to plaintiff: Curtis v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 32 M. 291.

118. Where one had promised to pay for certain repairs which another was to have made and had refused to pay for them after they were made, it was held that in an action to recover the money the latter would be at liberty to declare upon the common counts without setting up special circumstances or stating the consideration, that being matter of evidence: Crane v. Grassman, 37 M. 448.

119. Under the count for money paid to defendant's use plaintiff can put in evidence a note given by defendant and secured by chattel mortgage upon horses which plaintiff afterward purchased of him, and to save which plaintiff paid the note, taking an assignment of the debt and security. Such note is also admissible under the count for money had and received: Brown v. McHugh, 35 M. 50.

120. The common counts are sufficient for recovering the amount collected and wrongfully retained by defendant on securities which plaintiff had put up to indemnify defendant for going on a bond, the condition of which plaintiff has performed: Blackwood v. Brown, 34 M. 4.

121. The equitable owner of land, title to which was in a third party, caused it to be conveyed, to secure a debt, by deed absolute in form, to a person to whom he subsequently agreed, orally, to sell the land, and to whom he then surrendered possession, receiving from him part of the purchase money. Held, that the common counts would lie for the balance due: Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 M. 91.

122. Assumpsit for money had and received will lie without a special count at the suit of an insurance company to recover back the amount paid on a loss where the policy had been made void by fraudulent representations as to the extent of the loss: Johnson v. Continental Ins. Co., 39 M. 33.

123. Assumpsit on the common counts, as for money had and received, lies where plaintiff sues for the excess paid under a written contract for timber, where the estimated quantity falls short and the vendor is bound to refund an amount corresponding to the shortage and reckoned according to a fixed basis of calculation. And under the common counts testimony is admissible to show the amount due for shortage: Phippen v. Morehouse, 50 M. 537.

124. Assumpsit on the common counts lies at the suit of a county treasurer against his official predecessor for the amount of county moneys which the plaintiff has accounted for to the county as received from defendant, but which in fact has not been so received: Van Ness v. Hadsell, 54 M. 560.

3. For labor and services; materials furnished.

125. Recovery can be had under the common counts upon an agreement to pay for services in forwarding the sale of one's land: Fletcher v. Bradford, 45 M. 349.

126. An attorney's retainer is recoverable under the common counts, and there need not have been an express promise to pay it: Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 M. 14.

127. A party is entitled under the common counts to recover for services performed by him outside of his contract: Burroughs v. Morse, 48 M. 520.

128. Where plaintiff had performed for defendant services shown to be worth more than plaintiff had received for them, and for which no bargain was made as to price, except one which defendant shortly after repudiated and refused to regard, it was error to rule that no recovery could be had on the common counts, and that the action should have been brought on the contract: McQueen v. Gamble, 33 M. 344.

129. An action lies on the common counts for services in driving defendant's logs under a written contract fully performed by plaintiff: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

130. Where, under a non-apportionable contract, a party has done anything from which the other party has received substantial benefit, and which he has appropriated, a recovery may be had on the quantum meruit, based on that benefit: Allen v. McKibbin, 5 M. 449.

131. The count in indebitatus assumpsit is appropriate to recover the value of work done and materials furnished in erecting a building under contract, where the terms of the contract have not been strictly complied with but the defaults have been waived: Andre v. Hardin, 32 M. 324.

132. One who by his contract has agreed to receive payment in something else than money cannot, where he has broken the contract, recover on the quantum meruit the value of his labor performed under the contract: Roberts v. Wilkinson, 34 M. 129.

133. Suit on quantum meruit lies where the mode of performing an unapportionable contract is so changed that the contract price for what has been done cannot be determined. So held where a person was employed to cut and skid logs and put them into Muskegon river at three dollars a thousand, and after cutting and skidding a quantity his employer directed him to cut no more and to put such as had been cut into Cedar creek, and there was nothing to show what relation the cutting and skidding bore to the whole work: Boyce v. Martin, 46 M. 239.

134. Recovery may be had under the common counts for whatever plaintiff has done under a new agreement modifying the contract set forth in the special count: Moon v. Harder, 38 M. 566.

135. An action will lie on the common counts for wages fairly earned by past services already rendered under an express agreement of which defendant has prevented full performance: Mitchell v. Scott, 41 M. 108. See Butterfield v. Seligman, 17 M. 95, 98.

136. An action lies upon the common counts for work and labor done and materials furnished which plaintiff was induced to do and furnish by reason of a contract made between the parties, but not binding upon plaintiff because of the frauds and mistakes of defendant: Bush v. Brooks, 70 M. 446.

137. Where plaintiff is at liberty to treat the contract as at an end, though only partly performed, or where he has not performed in the manner or time agreed upon in the contract, but what he did was beneficial to defendant and was accepted by him, plaintiff may declare on the common counts: Ibid.

138. Quantum meruit does not lie for sheriff's or constable's fees: Peck v. Grand Rapids Nat. Bank, 51 M. 353; Andrews v. Wilcoxson, 66 M. 553.

139. An action upon the quantum meruit may lie against a city where the charter does not prohibit it: Detroit v. Michigan Paving Co., 36 M. 335.

140. In an action by a father to recover on the quantum meruit for his minor son's services to defendant, evidence is admissible to show that in the course of the service the son embezzled from defendant more than the worth of such service: Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 M. 310.

4. For lands or goods sold.

141. The indebitatus count includes a count for real property sold, and may be used to recover the price or value of an estate sold by plaintiff to defendant: Nugent v. Teachout, 67 M. 571.

142. The price of cattle may be recovered under the common count for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered: Weston v. McDowell, 20 M. 353.

143. Where plaintiff sold goods and received securities for the purchase price, one of which he collected and the other offered to return, and he afterwards brought suit to recover the balance, it was held not necessary that he should declare specially: Gardner v. Gorham, 1 D. 507.

144. Where a contract for the sale and delivery of goods has been completely performed, the price may be recovered under the common counts in assumpsit: McGraw v. Sturgeon, 29 M. 426; Richards v. Burroughs, 62 M. 117.

145. The amount of a fully executed contract for the sale and delivery of goods may be recovered either under a general count for goods sold and delivered or under a special count upon the contract. The basis of the action under the general count is an undertaking which the law imputes to the defendant as a consequence of the full execution of the special agreement by the plaintiff: Begole v. McKenzie, 26 M. 470.

146. The common counts will lie for the price of articles sold, on the vendee's refusal to give an order which the plaintiff had agreed to take in payment, and which was to be drawn on a third person and be payable in labor: Stone v. Nichols, 43 M. 16.

147. The count for goods sold and delivered lies for the value of such articles delivered in part performance of an entire contract of sale as have been retained by the vendee: Clark v. Moore, 3 M. 55.

148. The count for goods sold and delivered lies where a vendee has actually received and appropriated articles delivered in partial performance of a special contract that the vendor has not fully carried out: Begole v. McKenzie, 26 M. 470.

149. Subject to recoupment of damages for incomplete performance the common counts lie to recover the value (as fixed by the contract) of articles delivered and accepted in part performance of a contract where plaintiff has defaulted as to the rest: Gage v. Meyers, 59 M. 300.

150. Where personal property has been sold or exchanged and there has been a breach of the implied warranty of title, the count for goods sold and delivered — if maintainable — is based upon the ground that the contract of sale or exchange is rescinded, wherefore the law implies a promise to pay the price or what the goods are reasonably worth; it cannot lie while the original contract is in force: Hunt v. Sackett, 31 M. 18.

151. The common count for goods sold and delivered lies against partners after dissolution of the firm for goods ordered before the dissolution and forwarded before the vendors knew of it: Goodspeed v. South Bend Chilled Plow Co., 45 M. 237.

152. The count for goods sold and delivered does not lie where the goods were sold as part of a bill to a third person and never went into defendant's hands, and the conditions proposed by defendant in his offer to buy were not observed: Carpenter v. Butterfield, 34 M. 97.

5. For use and occupation.

153. Use and occupation may be sued for generally or specially without reference to the form of the lease: Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 M. 680.

154. Where the count for use and occupation is omitted, the common counts for goods sold and delivered, work and materials, money lent, money paid, money had and received, and money found due on an accounting will not sustain recovery for the use of land demised at a specified yearly rental: Heyerman v. Kanter, 36 M. 816.

Further as to recovery for use and occupation, see ASSUMPSIT, III.

6. Upon account stated.

155. The count on an account stated with an administrator is bad in a suit against the estate: Fish v. Morse, 8 M. 34.

Further as to account stated, see ASSUMPSIT, §§ 115-143.

(d) Subject-matter; certainty; necessary averments.

1. Generally.

As to averments such as to sustain proof of special damage, see DAMAGES, §§ 60-72; FALSE IMPRISONMENT, §§ 27-30.

156. Certainty to a common intent is all that is required in the declaration: Truesdale v. Hazzard, 2 M. 344; Merkle v. Bennington, 68 M. 138.

157. The rule of certainty does not require the declaration to negative every possible counter-implication: Weiss v. Whittemore, 28 M. 366.

158. The declaration need not negative a defence against the existence of which there is a general presumption of law: Carrier v. Cameron, 31 M. 373.

159. Declarations are construed with reasonable intendments, and their terms are read and applied in the natural and usual sense and without supposing qualifications which, though possible, are not fairly indicated: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

160. But no presumption can be raised in favor of a plaintiff against his own express allegations: Raymond v. Hinkson, 15 M. 113.

161. Where the declaration employs a term which, standing by itself, has a technical meaning, such term is nevertheless to be read so as to make sensible the whole clause in which it stands; so, the phrase "acquitted and discharged," in a declaration for malicious prosecution, was held, because of its connection, to refer to a nolle prosequi: Stanton v. Hart, 27 M. 539.

162. A general expression superadded to specific words in the charging part of a declaration is construed as a term of the same class as the rest: Macumber v. White River Log, etc. Co., 52 M. 195.

163. It is enough in giving the residence of parties in a declaration to describe them as "of the city of Detroit," or otherwise: Elliott v. Farwell, 44 M. 186.

164. It is sufficient to allege the undertaking in a written instrument according to its legal effect: Jerome v. Hopkins, 2 M. 96.

165. A defective description of a paper in pleading is cured by referring to the record of the paper, especially if the pleading also sets it forth in full: Botsford v. Botsford, 49 M. 29.

166. In a declaration filed by a corporation the general allegation that it is a corporation under the laws of this state is a sufficient averment of corporate existence: Palmeter v. Pere Marquette Lumber Co., 31 M. 183.

167. Where recovery is sought from a consolidated railroad company for a cause of action that arose originally against one of its constituents, the declaration must show against what company it arose, and aver such facts as will subject the new company to liability upon it: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 M. 251.

168. A declaration charging defendants as corporations "owning, occupying and doing business on and over" a certain named railroad "under the laws of the state of Michigan" was held, under plea of the general issue, sufficiently to allege defendants to be corporations and competent to be sued: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

169. In declaring against a common carrier of passengers for a refusal to carry it is necessary to aver that the plaintiff offered, or was ready and willing, to pay the fare: Day v. Owen, 5 M. 520.

170. It is sufficient in pleading a carrier's rule or regulation to state the rule or regulation, that plaintiff comes within it, and aver its reasonableness. The facts upon which the party relies to establish its reasonableness need not be spread upon the record: Ibid.

171. Admitting it to be one of the duties of a common carrier to transport without unreasonable delay, the neglect of that duty could not be a ground of recovery against him without an averment in the declaration charging the duty and averring a breach of it: Buckley v. Great Western R. Co., 18 M. 121.

172. On appeal from a justice's judgment a statement of the cause of action is sufficient if it would have sustained a recovery before a justice: Soper v. Mills, 50 M. 75.

2. In actions ex contractu.

173. Demand of payment of a promissory note at the time and place of payment specified therein need not, in an action against the maker, be averred or proved: Reeve v. Pack, 6 M. 240.

174. A declaration upon a promissory note absolute on its face, and in the ordinary form, need not notice a contemporaneous agreement in writing varying the terms of the note contained in a separate paper: Smalley v. Bristol, 1 M. 153.

175. In declaring by copy on a note the copy served need not contain a receipt that has been written upon the note for a part of the amount, nor a memorandum of protest for non-payment: Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 M. 44.

176. An indorsee's count upon a promissory note against copartnership makers need not specially allege the firm's capacity to make notes or set forth facts wherefrom such capacity may be implied: Carrier v. Cameron, 31 M. 373.

177. Where a declaration on the common counts against two defendants has a promissory note appended, purporting to be signed in a firm name, it is not demurrable for a failure to aver that defendants are partners: Danaher v. Hitchcock, 34 M. 516.

178. A declaration on a guaranty within the purview of the statute of frauds need not aver that the guaranty was in writing, or that the undertaking guarantied was made with the formalities required by the statute: Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 31.

179. A declaration on a guaranty of the collection of a note is demurrable if it does not state that legal proceedings have been taken to enforce collection without effect: Bosman v. Akeley, 39 M. 710.

180. A covenant should be pleaded according to its form in the deed, leaving its effect to be determined afterwards: Peck v. Hough-taling, 35 M. 127.

181. Where one declares upon a covenant alleged to be contained in a replevin bond he need not set forth the penal part of the bond; only so much of an instrument need be set forth as constitutes the foundation of the action: Prentiss v. Spalding, 2 D. 84.

182. A declaration on a replevin bond need not aver the issue and return of execution in the replevin suit: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

183. A declaration on a coroner's official bond for taking an insufficient replevin bond sufficiently alleges a breach if it alleges that defendant did not well and faithfully perform his duty in the premises as coroner, and under this allegation makes the necessary specifications: Fletcher v. Lee, 65 M. 557.

184. A declaration on a county treasurer's official bond properly enough describes as moneys of the county liquor-tax moneys which the county collects as trustee for the townships and villages: Marquette County v. Ward, 50 M. 174.

185. In declaring on an agreement as a demise, it must either be stated by its legal effect or be set forth in such a manner that its legal character can be seen: Tillman v. Fuller, 13 M. 113.

186. The declaration in an action for rent on a parol lease must allege the time the term commenced: Pendill v. Neuberger, 64 M. 220.

187. A new promise need not be specially counted on in declaring upon a claim otherwise barred by bankruptcy discharge, but may be proved when defendant sets up the discharge: Craig v. Seitz, 63 M. 727.

188. A declaration by an assignee upon a conditional note not negotiable need not aver any formal assignment, but is sufficient if it avers plaintiff to be the owner and holder: Draper v. Fletcher, 26 M. 154.

189. H. S. § 1590 dispenses with the necessity, in an assignee's declaration upon a note indorsed with a guaranty, of those allegations concerning the assignment that are necessary in the case of non-negotiable paper: Waldron v. Harring, 28 M. 493.

190. Where an assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action sues in his own name he must allege the assignment in his declaration: Blackwood v. Brown, 33 M. 104; Altman v. Fowler, 70 M. 57.

191. The right to sue upon a contract as assignee must be positively averred, and an allegation of the assignment in the consolidated common counts will not support a recovery upon a special count in which it is not averred. Nor would a mere additional allusion to the assignment in the special count be sufficient: Rose v. Jackson, 40 M. 30.

192. Evidence of the mutual assignment of interests among several plaintiffs for the purpose of bringing joint suit is inadmissible in an action on the common counts, such assignment not being averred in the declaration: Cilley v. Van Patten, 58 M. 404.

193. A bill of particulars under a declaration on the common counts renders unnecessary a special averment of an assignment in the declaration: Kelly v. Waters, 31 M. 404; Snell v. Gregory, 37 M. 500.

194. A declaration by members of a joint-stock association, one of whom holds by assignment from one of the original associates, need not mention the assignment in suing one who holds money for the association, but may count as upon an original promise to all the plaintiffs: Willson v. Owen, 30 M. 474.

195. A special count upon a contract is bad on its face if it omits an essential part of the contract: Rose v. Jackson, 40 M. 80.

196. A plaintiff declaring specially upon an express contract between third persons alone must aver his title and then make out by evidence the same contract as that set forth in his declaration, and his right and title as alleged: Ibid.

197. In assumpsit a promise to be recovered on must be set out in the declaration: Beecher v. Pettee, 40 M. 181.

198. Great accuracy is required in the statement of the consideration which, in an action of assumpsit, forms the basis of the contract; and if any error is made in the description of it the whole contract is misdescribed: Harrington v. Worden, 1 M. 487.

199. In declaring upon a simple contract, unless it is one which imports a consideration, the whole consideration should be set forth, so as to show distinctly in what it consists, that the court may judge of its sufficiency to sustain the promise alleged: Kean v. Mitchell, 18 M. 207.

200. In a declaration on a contract for the purchase of goods an allegation that the defendant agreed to deliver the goods, "for a good and valuable consideration paid by the plaintiff to the defendant," is not a sufficient statement of the consideration to support the declaration on demurrer: Ibid.

201. Where the consideration for a promise sued upon consists of an agreement to do several distinct things the stipulation as to all must be set out, as the whole consideration must be truly stated: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165.

202. A railroad company promised to move a man's barn and sheds from certain premises and put the barn in good repair, in consideration of his conveying to them the right of way for their railroad track across the premises; held, that a declaration on said promise averring performance of the consideration and breach of the promise was good on general demurrer; also, that a general objection to the admission of any evidence under such a declaration, for the reason that it disclosed no cause of action, was not maintainable: Ibid.

203. A special count in assumpsit averring that defendants promised to perform an agreement made by a third party with plaintiffs, the consideration for defendants' promise being stated as moving from a third party to them, and there being no averment of any promise to plaintiffs, is demurrable: Pipp v. Reynolds, 20 M. 88.

204. A declaration upon the common counts in assumpsit need not set forth the consideration for an alleged promise, and its omission to do so is no ground for excluding evidence of the consideration: Crane v. Grassman, 27 M. 443.

205. A declaration against steamboat proprietors by a passenger to recover for the contents of a lost trunk must aver a consideration paid, or agreed to be paid, for the transportation of the trunk and its contents; and the averment must be supported by proof: Wright v. Caldwell, 8 M. 51.

206. A declaration in assumpsit on the common counts with copy of note attached, which, after stating the several causes of action, omits to allege an express promise, though bad on special demurrer is cured by judgment: Hoard v. Little, 7 M. 463.

207. A breach of contract is sufficiently alleged, in a declaration thereon, by alleging the non-payment of interest, where, under the contract, such interest is due at a fixed time and without any condition. No special demand need be alleged: Regents v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 12 M. 138.

208. Where building contractors had agreed to pay a certain sum to plaintiff when they got the payment on their contract, it was held that, if the agreement implied an obligation on defendant's part to take active measures to collect the money, the failure to do so must be averred: Smith v. Ross, 51 M. 116.

209. In a declaration on an alternative undertaking by the defendant to collect and pay over the money on certain notes by a day specified, or thereafter to pay the sum from his own means, an averment of non-payment after the specified day is a sufficient assignment of breach if not demurred to: Seiber v. Price, 26 M. 518.

210. Where a declaration for breach of a contract to deliver all lumber owned by defendants avers that they have sold and delivered part to a third person, and avers plaintiff's readiness at all times to comply with the contract, it need not aver payment, as that could not have been demanded without delivery or readiness to deliver: Hart v. Summers, 38 M. 399.

211. Where a defendant's undertaking was to do several separate and independent things, and the declaration thereon only complained of his failure to do part of them, the stipulations as to the others need not be set out: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165.

212. Where a contract purported to be executed by agents of the respective parties, and it was set forth at length in the declaration, and alleged to be the contract of the parties, the declaration was held sufficient without showing how the agency was constituted: Regents v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 12 M. 138.

213. On demurrer to a declaration upon a contract it was held that the averment in the declaration that "the said plaintiff and the said defendant entered into their certain contract in writing, which said contract, sealed by the said plaintiff and by the said defendant, by its agents and servants, the president and trustees of the village of Kalamazoo, executing the same, and having full power and authority so to do and to bind the defendant thereby, is in the words and figures following" (setting it forth verbatim), was sufficient to embrace whatever was essential to confer upon the president and trustees the proper authority to make the contract on behalf of the village: Gale v. Kalamazoo, 23 M. 844.

214. A special count alleging that defendants are indebted to plaintiff $3,000 for damages sustained by him because of their failure to deliver certain described goods then before bought of them cannot sustain a cause of action: Thomas v. Greenwood, 69 M. 215 (April 6, '88).

215. A count in assumpsit, waiving a tort on which it rests, may properly state the facts that constitute the tort, as they will have to be proved: Tregent v. Maybee, 54 M. 226.

216. And a declaration in assumpsit for a conversion need not allege that plaintiff has waived the tort: McDonald v. McDonald, 67 M. 122.

217. A declaration against a stockholder upon a labor claim against the corporation must show the nature of the work and when it was done to establish defendant's liability: Peterson v. Tilden, 44 M. 168.

218. A declaration by the creditor of an estate against an administrator for plaintiff's distributive share of the assets must allege facts showing that defendant has been acting as administrator and has thus become liable: Basom v. Taylor, 39 M. 682.

219. A declaration upon a voluntary subscription to the building of a railroad must allege that it was accepted and acted upon: Northern Central M. R. Co. v. Eslow, 40 M. 222.

220. A declaration on an assessment upon a subscription to stock in a railway company is sufficient on general demurrer though it does not expressly aver payment of five per cent., but sets it forth by way of recital; so, also, it is good on special demurrer aimed only at other defects: Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 M. 130.

221. Declarations on justices' judgments require no further allegations as to jurisdiction than would be necessary in declaring on judgments of courts of record: Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 M. 874.

222. As to the proper form and contents of the declaration in an action by a township treasurer against an individual for an unpaid tax, see Putman v. Fife Lake, 45 M. 125.

223. In a particular case the declaration on a recognizance of special bail was held not to depart from the affidavit to hold to bail: Wilkinson v. Nichols, 48 M. 354.

And as to declarations against bail, see BAIL, §§ 36-40.

As to declarations in actions on policies, see INSURANCE, §§ 298-302, 305.

As to averment of permission to sue on residuary legatee's bond, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, § 260.

3. In actions ex delicto.

As to declarations for libel, see LIBEL, §§ 54-58.

As to declarations for slander, see SLANDER, §§ 16-24.

As to declarations in trespass, see TRESPASS, §§ 60-71.

224. In an action for misconduct as a constable in returning unsatisfied an execution for costs, a declaration that does not specifically describe the execution as of some date and return day, so that it could be identified and the time of return clearly ascertained from the declaration, is bad on demurrer: Clark v. Gleason, 30 M. 158.

225. In an action for interference with rights counts are demurrable that do not show the extent of plaintiff's rights and how they have been impaired; and though in the absence of a demurrer they are not considered fatally defective, their effect must be confined to what it would have been if they had been properly framed. This applies to actions on the case as well as to those upon the contract: Ives v. Williams, 58 M. 636.

226. One who bought the goods and good-will of a business afterwards sued the vendor for fraudulent representations. Held necessary to the ascertainment of damages that he aver in his declaration and show in his proofs what part of the consideration was paid for the good-will: Collins v. Jackson, 54 M. 186.

227. When A. sues B. for fraudulently misrepresenting the value of a note made by C. but used by B. in paying A., a declaration in tort which does not describe the note nor sufficiently identify it, nor allege that the representations were not true when made or were untrue afterwards, is insufficient: Stoflet v. Marker, 84 M. 813.

228. A declaration in a case for false warranty may be sustained without allegations that defendant "falsely and fraudulently warranted" and "falsely and fraudulently deceived" the plaintiff, if the substantial averments show the false warranty and the fraudulent sale, and deception of the purchaser: Hopkins v. O'Neil, 46 M. 403.

229. A declaration for false pretences must show (1) what they were; (2) that defendants made or authorized them; (3) that they were material; (4) that they were false and fraudulent and deceived plaintiff; (5) what defendants obtained by them. Nothing outside of this belongs to the issue, whatever force it may have as circumstantial evidence: Parker v. Armstrong, 55 M. 176.

230. A declaration alleging in effect that one of the defendants, claiming to be and acting as an agent, received money from plaintiff which was due his pretended principal for property sold to the plaintiff, and, upon paying it over to such principal, falsely represented that the property had not been paid for, and that he, defendant, owned it, and requested and thereby fraudulently procured a deed of such property to be made to his co-defendant, and that all this was done falsely and with intent to wrong, cheat and defraud the plaintiff, and with full knowledge and connivance of all the defendants, is held sufficient to authorize the plaintiff to recover upon proof of the facts alleged: Whitman v. Johnston, 85 M. 406.

231. A declaration for assault and battery need set forth no more specific description of the resulting injuries than a statement charging sickness and bodily pain to have been among the sufferings caused by the assault: Johnson v. McKee, 27 M. 471.

232. Where the injury alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff from defendant's negligence is internal and invisible, the declaration in describing it should not be held to any technicality of description: Laughlin v. Grand Rapids Street R. Co., 62 M. 220.

233. A declaration for negligent injury must set forth the duty which has been neglected, and aver the neglect, and the case fails if such neglect is not proved: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Stark, 38 M. 714.

234. A declaration for negligent injury must aver the fact and the manner of negligence; and plaintiff should be confined to what is set forth in his declaration: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 M. 483.

235. A party suing for negligent injury is bound to set forth in his declaration the material facts relied on as his cause of action, and to prove the same combination of circumstances: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

236. In suing for damages from negligence plaintiff must count on the negligence relied on; but when this is properly averred he need not set out the facts which go to establish it. When defendant is notified with what negligence he is charged, he is thereby informed that the circumstances which tend to show whether he was wanting in due care in that particular will be in issue: Lucas v. Wattles, 49 M. 880.

237. A declaration in case for a fatal railway injury is demurrable if it does not so state the cause of action that defendant can, with reasonable certainty, ascertain in what respect it is charged with negligence, or if it does not count specifically upon some particular duty and breach thereof as causing the injury; it is not enough to refer to matters in an uncertain and ambiguous manner: Addison v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 48 M. 155.

238. In actions on the case for negligent injury the plaintiff must allege in his declaration and prove on the trial that the injury complained of was occasioned by defendant's negligence, particularly specifying the duty and the breach thereof which constituted negligence, and averring also that plaintiff himself was in the exercise of ordinary care, and did not by his own negligence contribute to the injury: Thompson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 57 M. 300.

239. In a declaration for a negligent injury the only negligence that need be alleged is that which caused the mischief complained of; and redundant charges, if allowed to be proved, may confuse the real issues: Thorsen v. Babcock, 68 M. 523.

240. Where the facts stated in a declaration for negligence clearly imply the defendant's duty, it need not be expressly averred: Geveke v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 589.

241. A declaration in an action of trespass on the case for negligence is sufficiently certain when the neglect of duty relied on and the resultant injury are described with substantial accuracy: Merkle v. Bennington, 68 M. 183.

242. A declaration against a railway company for negligent injury states a good cause of action in alleging that defendant, in placing its cars so as to obstruct a highway crossing and in leaving them there, has so negligently conducted itself as to cause the injury: Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 M. 431.

243. In a declaration for a railway injury, an averment that defendant negligently and carelessly drove a certain locomotive upon the railroad up to, upon and across a certain public highway at the crossing of the same and the said railroad, without giving the necessary statutory signals, viz., ringing a bell or sounding a whistle, was a sufficiently specific averment of defendant's negligence when taken in connection with the averment of consequential injury, and it entitled plaintiff to support it by evidence, under defendant's plea to the general issue: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 M. 532.

244. A declaration for an injury caused by the insufficiency of a cattle-guard should state in what particulars it was insufficient; and if it does not do so it is demurrable: Smead v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 58 M. 300.

245. A declaration against a railway company for the killing of animals that had got upon the track through the company's neglect to keep the side fencing in repair averred that defendant "so carelessly and negligently ran, conducted and directed the locomotive and train" that they struck and killed the animals "so being on the railroad as aforesaid by and through the neglect of the defendant to keep in repair the fences as aforesaid, and through the gross neglect and reckless conduct of the servants and employees of defendant on said locomotive in running down said animals," etc. Held, that as it was not claimed on the trial that the averment was so general that no evidence could be received in support of it, the jury was entitled to consider any evidence that was admitted without objection, and tended to prove the main allegation; and if sending out a train without enough brakemen to keep it under control had any such tendency, this fact could be relied on as well as reckless conduct in the conductor or engineer at the time of the injury: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 51 M. 628.

246. A declaration for negligent injury is not demurrable for failing to state that the injured person did not know of the danger, if it does aver that he was without fault: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 835.

247. While a railway track was being raised at a highway crossing a man led his horse across the rails. A hind wheel of his buggy scraped the second rail and the horse became frightened, ran away and injured him. He sued the company and showed that although, in anticipation of danger, he slowly led the horse across the first rail to prevent the wheel from sliding, it did not occur to him to check the horse in crossing the second. Held, that the averment in his declaration that he "took the horse by the bits and attempted to lead him gently and carefully over said railroad at said crossing" is not a sufficient averment that he was in the exercise of ordinary care and free from negligence contributing to the injury; held, also, that by his own showing his negligence was such as to contribute to the injury, and the case should have been taken from the jury and a verdict ordered for defendant: Thompson v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 57 M. 300.

248. In an action for an injury caused by obstructions which in the first instance are lawfully in the street, but which defendant is bound to remove as speedily as possible, it is not necessary to allege that they were left there for an unreasonable time; the offence of leaving them there relates back so that it becomes unlawful from the beginning, and the time necessary for their removal is matter of justification and defence: Bowen v. Detroit City R. Co., 54 M. 496.

249. A declaration against superintendents of the poor for injuries from their negligence in managing farms which they are empowered by statute to keep up, sustained: Rowland v. Kalamazoo Poor Superintendents, 49 M. 553.

250. A declaration for malpractice by a surgeon in setting a broken limb, held, on demurrer, to set forth sufficiently the facts and circumstances necessary to show a cause of action; the negligence, omission and improper treatment by defendant being stated as facts, thus notifying him with what misconduct in his profession he is charged: Hanselman v. Carstens, 60 M. 187.

251. A declaration in an action for negligence in setting a broken leg sufficiently states the duty defendant owed to plaintiff when it avers that defendant was a physician and surgeon, and as such was employed by plaintiff to set her broken leg: Ibid.

252. Where a physician is sued for malpractice it is improper for plaintiff's counsel to urge to the jury defendant's general incompetency as a ground of recovery, unless such incompetency has been alleged in the declaration and evidence given tending to show it; and a refusal to charge against recovery on that ground in such case is error: Mayo v. Wright, 68 M. 32.

253. Where a declaration against an assignee in bankruptcy set forth facts constituting a breach of duty, and alleged that plaintiffs as creditors of the bankrupt were thereby deprived of their claim against his estate, and that by means thereof the estate had been exhausted and the plaintiffs wholly deprived of their rights therein, the allegation of damage was held to be sufficiently specific to admit evidence showing whether the entire claim, and, if not, what part of it, was lost because of the facts of which complaint was made: Russell v. Phelps, 42 M. 377.

Further as to allegations of damage, and when damages must be averred specially, see DAMAGES, §§ 60-72; FALSE IMPRISONMENT, §§ 27-30.

254. In an action against a manufacturer of an elevator for an injury received from it while still in his possession, it was objected that the declaration did not sufficiently show that it was in defendant's possession. It did aver, however, that plaintiff went upon it "by command and at the request of said defendant," and the pleading was considered sufficient: Necker v. Harvey, 49 M. 517.

255. In a declaration in case for flowing land the averment that plaintiff was lawfully seized in fee and possession of the land flowed was held material to be proved as stated: Lull v. Davis, 1 M. 77.

256. A declaration for malicious prosecution must aver that the suit has in some manner been terminated: Sutton v. Van Akin, 51 M. 463.

A certain count held to charge malicious prosecution, not illegal arrest and false imprisonment: See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, § 40.

257. An allegation that plaintiff "was lawfully possessed of one certain gray mare, and was lawfully possessed as aforesaid of two yearling colts," sufficiently avers the ownership of the property: Husceig v. Tripp, 20 M. 216.

258. Where a surety who has paid his principal's debt sues in replevin for an article to a lien upon which he has been subrogated his declaration need not allege an assignment: Myres v. Yapple, 60 M. 339.

259. A declaration in replevin for exempt property need not specifically set out the character of the property so as to show the exemption; it need only follow the form of declaring prescribed by H. S. § 8337, which is applicable to all courts: Elliott v. Whitmore, 5 M. 532.

260. But a declaration in trover against an officer for levying upon exempt property should set forth the facts showing that the property is exempt: McCoy v. Brennan, 61 M. 362.

Further as to declarations in trover, see TROVER, II, (a).

4. Declaring upon statute.

261. In declaring on a statute, where there is an exception in the enacting clause, the pleader must negative the exception; but where there is no exception in the enacting clause, but an exemption in a proviso to the enacting clause, or in a subsequent section of the act, it is matter of defence, and must be shown by defendant: Attorney-General v. Oakland County Bank, W. 90; Myers v. Carr, 12 M. 63; Lynch v. People, 16 M. 472; People v. Phippin, 70 M. 6.

262. The rule that one who relies on a statutory exception not shown by the enacting clause of the statute must bring himself within the exception by his pleadings is not always a rule of pleading, but is sometimes one of evidence; and it only requires the party who relies on the exception to present the facts in such form as the case demands: Osburn v. Lovell, 36 M. 246.

263. A common-law declaration upon a statute is bad if it does not in the same count state the circumstances necessary to support the action, and expressly refer to the provision counted on: Howser v. Melcher, 40 M. 185.

264. Pleading the statute is stating the facts which bring the case within it, and counting on it is making express reference to it by apt terms to show the source of right relied on: Ibid.

265. Where plaintiff's title to sue is statutory and the right of action depends on a special construction of facts defined in the statute, the declaration must aver the existence of such facts: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Sturgis, 44 M. 538.

266. Where a thing is originally authorized by statute which could not be done at common law, then, in pleading, everything must be averred which the statute requires to bring the act within it; but where a statute makes a writing necessary, in a case where it was not so at common law, then such an averment in pleading is not necessary: Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 81.

267. There is a distinction, however, in this respect between a declaration and a plea; the latter must show that the contract was such as would sustain an action: Ibid.

268. Where the liability of a party results from the violation of a foreign statute, a party relying upon it in an action for damages on such liability must set out the statute and the facts showing a case within its provisions: Great Western R. Co. v. Miller, 19 M. 805.

269. More particularity is required in a declaration to recover a statutory penalty than in some other common-law actions in which general counts are allowed; and in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, it must set out, with substantial certainty, the facts to bring defendant within the terms of the statute, neither leaving out nor misstating any element of liability, and it must aver the obligation to have arisen under a statute: Benalleck v. People, 31 M. 200.

270. A declaration in a statutory action referred to the chapter of the statute by the wrong number, but otherwise cited it correctly, and was not demurred to. Held sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff: Achey v. Hull, 7 M. 423.

271. A declaration under C. L. 1871, § 2148, to recover a penalty for a violation of the prohibitory liquor law, is insufficient on demurrer if it only refers generally to the statute, and not specifically to the section for a violation of which the action is brought; it ought, perhaps, to be so held, even on an objection taken on that ground to the admission of any evidence under it on the trial: Benalleck v. People, 31 M. 200.

272. An action was brought before a justice for the penalty of $50 alleged to have accrued under "section 3640 of the Compiled Laws of 1882," this being the only reference to the statute. On appeal an amended declaration was filed, merely referring to the statute by section and chapter, and also by the compilers' section, which, however, did not correspond with the statute's section and chapter, nor with the section declared on in justice's court. Held, that as the prosecuting attorney, under H. S. § 8482, was only authorized to plead an indebtedness in this general way by referring to the section and chapter of the statute violated, the variance was fatal:

People v. Grand Rapids & W. P. R. Co., 64 M. 618.

273. The statute allowing general pleading upon statutes in certain cases does not apply to the action under H. S. § 8806 for treble damages where one has obtained restitution in forcible entry proceedings: Howser v. Melcher, 40 M. 185.

274. A declaration in an action under H. S. § 2119 for an injury caused by a dog must aver that it was so caused and must set it forth under the statute: Monroe v. Rose, 38 M. 347.

275. A declaration for damages arising from the neglect of a duty imposed by a general statute — e. g., that requiring railroads to be fenced — need not be specially framed upon the statute or refer to it: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

276. As the statute prohibiting sales of liquor to husbands, children, etc., in certain cases provides no form of remedy, a common-law declaration by the person injured is good: Friend v. Dunks, 37 M. 25; Kehrig v. Peters, 41 M. 475.

(e) Profert and oyer.

277. Of a sealed instrument set out in full in the declaration no further profert is necessary: Regents v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 12 M. 138.

278. In declaring upon a contract executed by agents on behalf of a corporation, they signing their own names and affixing their own seals, which contract is therefore to be regarded as the simple contract of the corporation, no profert need be made: Ibid.

279. In a suit by a school teacher on a contract of hire, the plaintiff is not bound to make profert of her certificate of qualification, and it is not error to allow her to give parol proof that she has one: Manistee School District v. Cook, 47 M. 112.

280. When a suit is brought in the first instance by an administrator the practice requires him to make profert of his letters by his declaration: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50.

281. A suggestion of plaintiff's death entered of record does not, where the action is revived by his administrator, supply the want of profert, nor enable defendant to demand oyer: Ibid.

III. PLEAS.

In justices' courts, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, III, (d), 3.

As to rule to plead, see COURTS, §§ 175, 178.

As to entry and notice of rule to plead when suit is begun by declaration, see PROCESS, §§ 19-23, 26.

As to default for want of plea, see DEFAULT.

As to pleas in QUO WARRANTO, see that title, §§ 86-46, 51, 56, 57.

(a) In general.

282. Except where certain defects or defences are waived if not specially pleaded, a plea must set up matters not apparent from the declaration: Hinman v. Eakins, 26 M. 80.

283. The purpose of a plea is to tender an issue upon some fact not already in the case that proof may be taken in respect to it if the issue is accepted. But if the fact is in the case, and especially if it is so conclusively established by the record that no contrary averment would be admissible, a plea setting up the fact would be idle, and, instead of demurring to it, a motion should be made to strike it from the files: People v. Harding, 53 M. 481.

284. Declaration in an action on a judgment was served on one of two joint defendants and he appeared and pleaded. The other was not served, but at the term when the case was to be tried, and before trial, though after some depositions had been taken, he appeared and pleaded also. On plaintiff's motion his plea was stricken from the files. Held error: Ralston v. Chapin, 49 M. 274.

285. An affidavit that joint defendants have no joint property within the state is insufficient to sustain a motion to strike from the files a plea entered by one of them who has not been served with the declaration, as it does not negative the possibility that they may have such property when judgment is rendered: Ibid.

286. It seems that where counsel appear in the name of a party by whom they have not been retained, and put in a plea different from one that is afterward entered by counsel duly authorized, the opposite party is entitled to have the plea stricken from the files: Arno v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 M. 362.

287. If a plea in abatement was bad defendant is not prejudiced by overruling the objection that it ought to have been disposed of before going into the merits: East v. Cain, 49 M. 478.

(b) Pleas in abatement.

1. When allowable; what may or should be thus pleaded.

See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 163, 164.

288. A plea in abatement, if admissible at all in a proceeding for bastardy, is not allowable after respondent has recognized to appear in the circuit: Pangborn v. Smith, 65 M. 1.

289. If a general demurrer has been filed, a plea to the jurisdiction presents an immaterial issue and should be stricken from the files: Thompson v. Mich. Mut. Benefit Assoc., 52 M. 522.

290. The ordinary office of a plea in abatement in respect to a former suit pending is not to deny or put in issue the cause of action, but to object that it is already in course of litigation: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500.

291. Garnishment proceedings may be pleaded in abatement of an action brought by the principal defendant against the garnishee, but they are not an absolute bar unless judgment has been obtained against the garnishee: Grosslight v. Crisup, 58 M. 531.

292. Defendant in cross-replevin can plead the first writ in abatement: Fisher v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 58 M. 450.

293. As a general rule, the pendency of another suit, if good at all by way of plea, should be pleaded in abatement and not in bar: Near v. Mitchell, 28 M. 382; Sullings v. Goodyear Co., 36 M. 818.

294. And this rule applies where such other suit is a garnishment proceeding: Near v. Mitchell, 28 M. 382.

295. Or where it is a suit pending in another state: Wilcox v. Kassick, 2 M. 165.

296. Pendency of a prior suit in which there could be no recovery because it was prematurely brought cannot be pleaded in abatement: Blackwood v. Brown, 84 M. 4.

297. Where a civil and a criminal action both lie, neither can be pleaded in abatement of the other: Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 M. 49.

298. The pendency of a foreclosure suit in equity is not pleadable in abatement to a suit at law on the debt: Joslin v. Millsbaugh, 27 M. 517; Goodrich v. White, 39 M. 489. And see ACTIONS, § 106.

299. It seems that objections to the title of a party suing as administrator should be raised by plea in abatement: Bassett v. Shepardson, 57 M. 428.

300. Matter that is merely in denial of the right of action is never pleadable in abatement, but must be pleaded in bar: Morgan v. Butterfield, 3 M. 615.

301. An objection to the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction must be taken advantage of by plea in abatement: Webb v. Mann, 3 M. 189.

302. Misnomer in naming a corporation defendant should be pleaded in abatement: Lake Superior Building Co. v. Thompson, 32 M. 293; Johr v. St. Clair Supervisors, 38 M. 533.

As to when non-joinder of parties should or may be pleaded in abatement, see PARTIES, §§ 150-161.

2. Requisites.

303. A plea in abatement in a criminal case must be certain to every intent and be pleaded without any repugnancy; it should also have a proper conclusion and pray judgment of the indictment: Findley v. People, 1 M. 234.

304. Pleas in abatement are not favored, and certainty to every intent is required: Wales v. Jones, 1 M. 254; Heyman v. Covell, 36 M. 157.

305. A plea in abatement must have the highest degree of certainty and precision. Every allegation necessary to make out the case covered by it must be distinctly, and not inferentially, set forth: Belden v. Laing, 8 M. 500.

306. A plea in abatement must expressly state every fact necessary to support it, and exclude everything that would defeat it if alleged on the other side: Dubois v. Hutchinson, 40 M. 263.

307. A plea in abatement must in general set up matter not apparent from the declaration: Hinman v. Eakins, 26 M. 80.

308. A plea in abatement that does not give the plaintiff a better writ is bad: Heyman v. Covell, 36 M. 157; East v. Cain, 49 M. 473.

309. A plea in abatement to the jurisdiction must always show another forum where the rights involved have already become subject to judicial authority: Heyman v. Covell, 36 M. 157. See Carew v. Matthews, 41 M. 576.

310. In a suit commenced by attachment a plea in abatement was interposed that at the time of the commencement of the suit another suit was pending between the same parties for the same cause of action. Held, that the plea was bad for not stating that the former suit was still pending: Wales v. Jones, 1 M. 254; Peir v. Yoare, 12 M. 16.

311. When a plea in abatement averred that another suit was commenced at the same time, upon and for the not performing the same identical promises and undertakings, without adding in the said declaration in this present suit mentioned, or other equivalent words, it was held bad on that account: Wales v. Jones, 1 M. 254.

312. A plea in abatement to an action of trespass brought in the name of one plaintiff is bad in merely stating that said plaintiff, "before and at the time of the commencement of the suit," was part owner of the premises with another person specified. It should show that some one besides plaintiff had an interest at the time of the trespass: East v. Cain, 49 M. 473.

(c) Pleas in bar.

1. Generally.

313. A plea in bar is allowable in the court's discretion after a plea in abatement is overruled: McOmber v. Holmes, 41 M. 417.

314. Special pleas in bar are forbidden by the revision of 1846: Cresinger v. Reed, 25 M. 450.

315. The plea ne unques executor is properly a plea in bar: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50.

316. A former judgment must be pleaded in bar: Briggs v. Milburn, 40 M. 512; Porter v. Leache, 56 M. 40.

317. A mere agreement to arbitrate cannot be pleaded in bar: McGunn v. Hanlin, 29 M. 476.

318. The plea of non damnificatus is not the proper plea to a declaration upon a covenant to indemnify, etc.: Wheelock v. Rice, 1 D. 267.

319. Where to a declaration in assumpsit the defendant pleaded non assumpsit and also not guilty, and a jury trial had been had, it was held that the plea of not guilty might be treated as a nullity and stricken from the record: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

320. A plea in bar that the cause of action did not accrue within six years before filing amended declaration is void: Wilcox v. Kasick, 2 M. 165.

That the defence of the statute of limitations is available without framing an issue on the trial of an appeal from the allowance of a claim against a decedent's estate, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, § 201.

2. The general issue; what defences admissible thereunder.

As to what is admitted or waived by pleading the general issue instead of demurring, see infra, IX, (c).

321. The general issue could not be pleaded in a cause in the county court, or in the circuit court, under the act to regulate and define the jurisdiction of those courts (S. L. 1848, p. 286). The pleadings in both courts must conform to the provisions of R. S. 1846, ch. 92: Porter v. Kimball, 1 M. 239.

322. The general issue, under H. S. §§ 7361, 7362, in all civil actions traverses every material averment in the plaintiff's declaration which must be proved, whatever the nature or form of the action may be: Kinnie v. Owen, 1 M. 249.

323. The statutory plea of the general issue is a complete denial of the plaintiff's cause of action, and calls upon him to prove it: Ingalls v. Eaton, 25 M. 32.

324. The statutory general issue, like the plea of not guilty, is a denial of all the material allegations in the declaration, and is sufficient to enable defendant to contest all such allegations, and to put the plaintiff upon the proof of all or any of them: Rawson v. Finley, 27 M. 268.

325. Under the general issue defendant may deny whatever the plaintiff is obliged to prove as an essential part of his case: Edwards v. Chandler, 14 M. 471.

326. The statutory general issue is as broad as at the common law, where it put at issue everything that plaintiff had to show to make out his case: Osburn v. Lovell, 86 M. 250.

327. Plea of the general issue is proper where the claim made is not well founded in fact; and after a verdict of no cause of action for want of authority in plaintiff to bring the suit, defendant is not estopped from insisting upon such want of authority as a defence: Denver v. White River Log & B. Co., 51 M. 472.

328. Former judgment cannot be shown under the general issue alone: Briggs v. Milburn, 40 M. 512; Porter v. Leache, 56 M. 40.

329. A defence in the nature of a former recovery cannot be set up under the general issue alone: Tabor v. Van Vranken, 39 M. 793.

330. In an action upon an appeal bond the satisfaction of the judgment after joinder of issue cannot be shown unless specially pleaded: Souvais v. Leavitt, 53 M. 577.

331. The pendency of garnishment proceedings cannot be proved under the general issue: Near v. Mitchell, 23 M. 382.

332. On appeal from the probate of a will a special plea is unnecessary to put in issue the testator's sanity: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 309.

333. The general issue in assumpsit, as a general rule, denies and puts in issue every fact and combination of facts essential to the plaintiff's cause of action as set up in the declaration: Wilson v. Wagar, 26 M. 452.

334. Plea of the general issue to an implied assumpsit denies the cause of action altogether, and leaves the plaintiff to prove not only performance, but the understanding on which it was based. It would be different if only payment or other discharge were pleaded: Berringer v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 41 M. 805.

335. Under the general issue in assumpsit the defence of payment can always be made: Olcott v. Hanson, 12 M. 452; Burt v. Olcott, 33 M. 178; Huntoon v. Russell, 41 M. 316; Brennan v. Tietzort, 49 M. 397.

336. Defences to an action of assumpsit going to the existence of any promise having legal force are admissible under the general issue: Snyder v. Willey, 33 M. 483.

337. Under the general issue in an action for price, defendant may prove that the article delivered was not the article he purchased: Grieb v. Cole, 60 M. 897.

338. In an action upon the common counts for use and occupation the tenant can, under the general issue, set up a new agreement: Conkling v. Tuttle, 52 M. 630.

339. In assumpsit for the sale of chattels, evidence that they were sold in violation of the United States revenue laws is admissible under the general issue: Dean v. Chapin, 23 M. 275.

340. In pleading the statutory general issue to a declaration upon the money counts on an accepted order, it is proper to show, without giving special notice of such a defence, that the instrument sued on was never valid, as, by evidence that the sole consideration for it was the sale of spirituous liquors, contrary to the prohibitory law: Hill v. Callaghan, 31 M. 424.

341. Where a written contract is sued upon, a variance in name may be taken advantage of under the general issue, and the misnomer need not be pleaded in abatement: Gilbert v. Hanford, 13 M. 40.

342. The defence that the one who sues a negotiable promissory note did not obtain the title or the right to sue before suit brought is admissible under the general issue: Hovey v. Sebring, 24 M. 232; Reynolds v. Kent, 38 M. 246.

343. In an action on a promissory note against two joint makers, one cannot show under the general issue without notice that he signed as surety only, and was released by an unauthorized extension of time to the principal debtor: Rawlings v. Cole, 67 M. 431 (Nov. 3, '87).

344. Where the execution of a promissory note is denied on oath, the general issue in an action thereon will admit evidence tending to show that defendant made no such contract as was counted upon, and that he was fraudulently got to sign the note when he thought he was signing something else: Soper v. Peck, 51 M. 563.

345. A defence arising out of fraud or misrepresentation cannot be shown under the general issue without notice: Miller v. Finley, 26 M. 249.

346. Where action is brought on a note given for an interest in a patent issued by the United States, evidence of the pecuniary worthlessness of the patent is not admissible under the general issue: Ibid.

347. Testimony of misrepresentation and fraud in procuring the note sued on is inadmissible under a plea of the general issue with notice merely that no consideration was given for the note: McCabe v. Caner, 68 M. 183 (Jan. 12, '88).

348. Unless notice is filed with the plea, the defence is inadmissible that plaintiff, an attorney, bought for prosecution, contrary to H. S. § 7185, the demand sued on (H. S. § 7189): Randall v. Baird, 66 M. 312.

349. In an action on an insurance policy such a defence as that plaintiff (the assured) burned his own property must be specially averred: Residence F. Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 M. 103.

350. Where a travelling salesman sues for his salary, defendant cannot, under the general issue, show representations made by plaintiff as to his ability to sell goods, and show what other agents of defendants had done: Champlain v. Detroit Stamping Co., 68 M. 288.

351. Under the general issue in covenant defendant may show that the deed is not his by proving a lack of power in the agent who executed it in his behalf: State Prison Agent v. Lathrop, 1 M. 438.

352. In actions of tort, everything which may properly be considered by the jury in mitigation of damages may be given in evidence under the general issue: Deleuran v. Bates, 1 M. 97; Osburn v. Lovell, 36 M. 246.

353. The nature of a personal injury, in respect to being permanent or temporary, may be shown under the general issue in an action of case therefor: Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 M. 413.

354. In an action of attachment under the log-lien law for services performed by plaintiff in driving defendant's logs, an unliquidated claim made by a third person who had logs in the river above plaintiff's drive, and who, in consequence of plaintiff's not putting on a sufficient force to keep the river unobstructed, put men upon plaintiff's drive, cannot be shown under the general issue without notice: Shaw v. Bradley, 59 M. 199.

355. In ejectment the plea of the general issue without notice is sufficient to admit the defence of title by adverse possession: Miller v. Beck, 68 M. 76.

356. On appeal from a justice in an action of replevin the general issue will allow defendant to show that he defends in official character as special administrator (H. S. § 8839): Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 380.

As to what is covered by general issue in replevin, trespass or trover, see REPLEVIN, §§ 250-254; TRESPASS, §§ 72-81; TROVER, II, (b).

As to what may be shown under the general issue in actions for libel or slander, see LIBEL, § 103; SLANDER, §§ 39, 40, 54, 55, 59-63.

3. Notice of special defence.

As to notice of recoupment or of set-off, see DAMAGES, X, (b); SET-OFF, V.

As to notice of special defence in action on policy, see INSURANCE, §§ 309-315.

357. Special pleas, though abolished by H. S. § 7361, may properly be allowed to stand in place of the notice of defence, where notice is necessary (§ 7363): Benedict v. Smith, 48 M. 593.

See as to special pleadings, supra, § 13.

358. Notice must be given under the statutory general issue of any defence required at common law to be specially pleaded: Rawlings v. Cole, 67 M. 431.

359. A notice of special matter to be given in evidence must contain all the substantial requisites necessary to constitute a special plea which would be good on general demurrer: Thompson v. Bowers, 1 D. 321. (This, however, was under the former system of pleading. See following cases.)

360. Notice of special matter of defence to be annexed to the plea of the general issue need not contain the substance of a special plea, but is sufficient if it briefly state the precise nature of the matter of defence: Cresinger v. Reed, 25 M. 450.

361. Notice of special defence attached to a plea of the general issue is not required to be as precise as special pleading: Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Crampton, 43 M. 421.

362. A notice that apprises the plaintiff with reasonable certainty of the matter of defence, so that he may not be taken by surprise on the trial, is sufficient under the statute: Rosenbury v. Angell, 6 M. 508; M'Hardy v. Wadsworth, 8 M. 349. And see Porter v. Kimball, 1 M. 239.

363. The defence of fraudulent misrepresentations is as available under a notice of special defence, stating the falsity of the representations and that the plaintiff thereby deceived the defendant in the purchase, as under a notice stating in addition precisely and technically that the plaintiff knew the representations to be false when he made them; an allegation of a scienter is unnecessary: Broune v. Moore, 32 M. 254.

364. A notice that "three several writs of attachment were issued out of the circuit court for the county of L., and under the seal thereof in due form of law," giving the names of the parties and dates and command of the writs, and the taking of the property by virtue thereof, is sufficient without alleging the making of the affidavits which authorized the attachments; and the affidavits as well as the writs may be given in evidence: Rosenbury v. Angell, 6 M. 508.

365. Title and license are properly set up in the notice under the general issue in trespass: Druse v. Wheeler, 22 M. 439; Walters v. Tefft, 57 M. 390.

366. The office of a notice attached to a plea is to present tangible issues, and not to introduce matters that form no part of the issue. It cannot make them relevant or material: Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 M. 41.

367. Where a special notice is attached to the plea of the general issue, and the proof offered thereunder is sufficient to establish a defence, the defendant is limited to such matters as may be introduced under the plea itself: Waldo v. Waldo, 52 M. 94.

As to notice of justification in actions for libel or slander, see LIBEL, §§ 59, 60, 105-107; SLANDER, §§ 25, 26, 39, 43, 53.

As to amendment of notice, see infra, §§ 609-613.

(d) Pleas puis darrein continuance.

368. A plea puis darrein, when proper at all, may serve in place of notice of defence: Snyder v. Quarton, 47 M. 211.

369. A plea of estoppel puis darrein continuance, however defective in frame and substance, must be entertained if defendant rests his case entirely upon it: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 573.

370. A plea of estoppel must be properly framed as such, especially in opening and closing, and it must set forth a claim that the plaintiff should not be admitted to make use of what the estoppel would exclude. The matter of estoppel alleged must be material and traversable, and if a judicial decision is relied on therefor, it must be so averred; and the decision must have been in a matter coram judice: Ibid.

371. A plea of estoppel based on a judicial act which it does not aver as matter of estoppel in itself, but merely introduces as evidence and by way of argument and as a basis for a deduction, presents an issue which is a matter of legal inference only, and not traversable: Ibid.

372. After a joint plea to the merits by two defendants, it was held that one of them might plead severally, puis darrein continuance, his discharge in bankruptcy subsequently obtained. But such plea would be an abandonment by him of the former joint plea, which would thereafter stand as the several plea of the other defendant: Wheelock v. Rice, 1 D. 267.

373. At common law a plea puis darrein destroyed the issue previously formed and required the forming of a new one by replication or otherwise: Johnson v. Kibbee, 36 M. 269.

374. H. S. § 7361, in abolishing special pleas, was not meant to deprive defendant of the right to make a special defence of matters arising after the filing of the plea of the general issue; and § 7363, in requiring notice of special matters of defence to be annexed to the plea of the general issue, does not require notice to be given of matters which, if specially pleaded, would be inconsistent with the general issue; it does not therefore apply to pleas puis darrein continuance: Ibid.

375. A plea puis darrein continuance supersedes a previous plea to the general issue with notice of set-off, and places the issue entirely upon the new plea: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 573.

376. Matter in abatement arising after the suit has been commenced should be pleaded puis darrein: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

377. A plea puis darrein continuance that plaintiff has assigned his claim since the filing of the referee's report thereon is held to present an immaterial issue and to be properly disregarded: Moon v. Harder, 38 M. 566.

378. A plea of payment of a judgment in garnishment puis darrein continuance was held good where a former plea, alleging that defendant had been garnished, had been withdrawn by leave of the court and the plea of payment on a judgment in the same proceeding in garnishment had been made in lieu of it: White v. Kent Circuit Judge, 47 M. 645.

379. A plea puis darrein continuance is either in abatement or in bar; and when such a plea interposes the special defence that defendant has been garnished as plaintiff's debtor since the beginning of suit, it is a plea in abatement: Grosslight v. Crisup, 58 M. 531.

380. Where defendant in a pending action is garnished in a suit brought by a third person against the plaintiff, he should as soon as possible plead the garnishment proceedings in abatement of the first suit by plea puis darrein or by filing notice of the proceeding as a special defence under circuit court rule 106: Ibid.

381. Where a plaintiff suing for the purchase price of lumber attached the lumber, and, having indemnified the sheriff, sold it, held, that defendant's notice of recoupment should have the same effect as a plea puis darrein continuance, and that the value of the lumber at the time plaintiff converted it must be treated as a payment upon his claim: Jenkinson v. Monroe, 61 M. 454.

382. Where, in an action of trover, a plea puis darrein that the property has been taken from defendants on an attachment against the plaintiff does not aver that the attachment suit has been disposed of or the property applied to plaintiff's use, it will not sustain the introduction of the attachment proceedings in evidence: Erie Preserving Co. v. Witherspoon, 49 M. 377.

383. Tax-deeds obtained by defendant in ejectment after issue joined cannot; if admissible at all, be introduced without something on the record in the nature of a plea puis darrein: Hurd v. Raymond, 50 M. 369.

384. A conveyance of the premises by plaintiff in ejectment to a third party pending suit is not admissible in evidence for the defence without a special notice in the nature of a plea puis darrein: Jenney v. Potts, 41 M. 52.

385. Where the plaintiff introduces a contract as a necessary part of his case, the defendant can show when and how it was performed, even though performance had not been pleaded puis darrein continuance: Haven v. Beidler Manuf. Co., 40 M. 286.

386. Where plaintiff dies and his administrator is substituted, defendant need not plead puis darrein so as to put the representative capacity specially in issue: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50.

387. The discretion of the trial court in excluding a plea puis darrein will not be reviewed unless it has been abused; and such abuse does not appear where there was a long delay in filing the plea and until a trial and submission thereon of plaintiff's case: Souvais v. Leavitt, 53 M. 577.

388. Where plaintiff in replevin is made defendant in cross-replevin by the defendant in the former suit, he need not plead puis darrein a judgment on certiorari reversing the judgment rendered against him in the former suit: Clark v. West, 23 M. 242.

IV. REPLICATIONS.

In chancery, see EQUITY, V, (h).

In QUO WARRANTO, see that title, §§ 47-52.

389. New matter stated as inducement to a traverse in a replication must appear to be sufficient in substance to defeat the other party's allegation, and if a defective title be shown the inducement will be bad: Kinzie v. Farmers', etc. Bank, 2 D. 105.

390. What certainty required in, and other requisites of a traverse: Ibid.

391. Replication to a notice of defence under the old rules was not necessary where the matters set out in the notice were admissible in evidence under the general issue: Craig v. Grant, 6 M. 447.

392. There can be no replication to the notice annexed to the plea of the general issue, but plaintiff goes to trial upon the declaration, plea and notice: McFarlane v. Ray, 14 M. 465.

393. And, therefore, a plaintiff in trespass quare clausum, who has declared generally, cannot have the benefit that a new assignment in a replication would give him, but he must amend his declaration: Ibid.

394. Where suit was brought for a debt, defendant pleaded that the judge in bankruptcy had given him a certificate that it had been adjudged that he had performed a composition with his creditors and was entitled to a discharge. Held, that a replication which merely traversed the effect of the adjudication and discharge tendered an issue that was immaterial and not triable by a jury, and that if plaintiff thought actual performance of the composition was necessary to a defence, he should have demurred to the plea. But where he made such replication instead, defendant, if he relied on the certificate to defeat the action, should have demurred to it instead of going to trial on the issue: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 573.

395. That which in a replication would not be a departure in pleading may be given in evidence in reply to a defence under the general issue: Caldwell v. Gale, 11 M. 77.

V. DEMURRERS.

In chancery, see EQUITY, V, (d).

In QUO WARRANTO, see that title, §§ 53-57.

As to what is admitted by demurrer, see infra, IX, (b).

396. Oral demurrers in the circuit court are unauthorized: Jenks v. Brown, 38 M. 651.

397. An objection of form and not substance should be specially demurred to: Mayor v. Park Commissioners, 44 M. 602.

398. A ground of demurrer should be so stated as to apprise the court of the real objection, and if it is not, the party demurring can claim nothing under it: Kellogg v. Hamilton, 48 M. 289.

399. H. S. § 7858, and circuit court rule 84, require every objection, either of form or matter of substance, to be specified in the demurrer. If this is not done, and the declaration sets forth a cause of action, the demurrer will be overruled: Adrian Water Works v. Adrian, 64 M. 584.

400. A demurrer and a plea to the general issue are inconsistent, as the first admits what the last denies; demurrer should be taken before going to issue on the fact: Cicotte v. Wayne County, 44 M. 173.

401. A plea to the merits excludes the right to demur and must be withdrawn if the defendant wishes to demur to the same counts; there cannot be issues of fact and of law on the same counts: Ibid.

402. A plea to the merits filed after demurrer waives, supersedes or overrules it: Ibid.

403. A demurrer on technical grounds does not affect the sufficiency of a declaration in matters of substance: Enright v. Hartsig, 46 M. 469.

404. Where the pleading is correct, but an error occurs in the copy served, a demurrer will not be sustained if it appears from the circumstances that the party demurring was aware of the error, and therefore was not misled by it: People v. Miller, 15 M. 354.

405. Action against a common carrier of passengers by steamboat for refusing plaintiff a cabin passage. Notice of defence that, by the regulations and established course of business of the boat, persons of plaintiff's race are not allowed the use of the cabin as passengers; which regulation and course of business are averred to be reasonable. Demurrer to the notice. Held, that the reasonableness of such a regulation was a mixed question of law and fact, to be found by the jury on the trial, under the instructions of the court; and could not be determined on demurrer: Day v. Owen, 5 M. 520.

406. Whether the question of plaintiff's right to use a particular name in bringing suit can be raised by demurrer, quere: Watson v. Watson, 49 M. 540.

407. On demurrer to the replication a formal defect in the plea will not be noticed: People v. Jackson & M. P. R. Co., 9 M. 285.

408. A motion to strike from the files is the proper proceeding for getting rid of a defective demurrer; it is not good practice to move that it be not heard: Comstock v. McEvoy, 52 M. 324.

As to judgment on demurrer, see JUDGMENTS, §§ 6-9a.

VI. AFFIDAVITS; BILLS OF PARTICULARS.

As to AFFIDAVITS generally, see that title.

As to affidavit to prevent inquest, see DAMAGES, §§ 479, 480.

(a) Affidavit of amount due.

409. The affidavit of amount due with copy of account annexed, which, under H. S. § 7525, constitutes prima facie evidence of indebtedness if served with copy of the declaration or other process commencing suit, was, prior to the amendment to said § 7525, allowing it to be made within ten days next preceding the filing of declaration, etc., of no avail, unless made substantially at the time of commencing suit: McHugh v. Butler, 39 M. 185; Locke v. Farley, 41 M. 405.

410. Said affidavit is not evidence unless the return shows it was served at the same time with the declaration or process by which suit was commenced; and there is no presumption that because it was served the same day it was served at the same time: Gordon v. Sibley, 59 M. 250.

411. It seems that an affidavit that the "annexed account is just, due and unpaid" substantially complies with H. S. § 7525, requiring the affidavit to set out that the account "is justly owing and due": Lamb v. McGowan, 66 M. 615.

412. If plaintiff rests his case on an ineffectual affidavit he cannot, after the defence has rested, go back and prove his demand in the ordinary way as matter of right: McHugh v. Butler, 39 M. 185.

413. But where defendant, without being misled, allows an irregular affidavit to be introduced without objection, he cannot, after the proofs are closed, object for the first time that it proves nothing: Locke v. Farley, 41 M. 405.

(b) Affidavits of non-execution.

414. A recognizance of special bail is not such a "written instrument" as is intended by circuit court rule 79, which provides that in any action brought upon a written instrument the plaintiff shall not be put to the proof of its execution, or the handwriting of the defendant, unless its execution be denied by affidavit: Elliott v. Green, 10 M. 113.

415. H. S. §§ 6875, 6928, in regard to the proof of execution of written instruments declared upon or set off in justices' courts, do not apply to cases which originate in the circuit court: Spicer v. Smith, 28 M. 96.

416. Circuit court rule 79 does not apply where no opportunity has been given to deny execution; as, where an action on a note had been begun before a justice by declaring on the common counts only, and on being appealed to the circuit a new declaration was filed with a copy of the note attached, but without giving the defendant an opportunity to plead anew: McMillen v. Beach, 38 M. 397.

417. Said rule does not apply on an appeal from justice's court where the pleadings are the same as before the justice, and where no new issue has been framed in the circuit: Bauer v. Wasson, 60 M. 194.

418. The object of said rule is to enable plaintiff to make out a prima facie case, not a conclusive one: Freeman v. Ellison, 87 M. 459.

419. The "execution" of a note in the meaning of said rule 79 includes only its actual making and delivery: Ibid.

420. Denial by affidavit of the execution of an instrument cannot be required if the instrument is not set up in the declaration: Montross v. Roger Williams Ins. Co., 49 M. 477.

421. Therefore, plea of the general issue is sufficient where a declaration upon an insurance policy alleges renewal but does not purport to set up a written one: Ibid.

422. An affidavit of the non-execution of an instrument sued upon should not be construed technically, but should be held sufficient if evidently intended in good faith to meet the plaintiff's case: McCormick v. Bay City, 23 M. 457; Haight v. Arnold, 48 M. 512.

423. In a suit upon municipal bonds issued under a statute requiring that they shall be issued within sixty days after the vote authorizing them, an affidavit filed with the plea of the general issue denying that the bonds were issued within the sixty days puts in issue the question of their validity if they were issued after that time: Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 663.

424. Where a written instrument is sued upon, a failure to deny its execution by affidavit operates, under rule 79, as an admission of the delivery thereof, as the execution includes delivery: People v. Johr, 22 M. 461.

425. Under a declaration counting expressly upon a replevin bond, its execution is admitted under rule 79, unless denied by affidavit: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

426. In an action on a contract that is set out verbatim in the declaration, and alleged to have been jointly executed, the plea of the general issue, without any affidavit, admits the execution of the contract in manner and form as alleged: Curran v. Rogers, 35 M. 231.

427. Where a declaration counts on a policy of insurance, and no affidavit is filed denying its execution, the execution of the policy is thereby, under rule 79, admitted, and no evidence need be introduced to prove it: Clay F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt Co., 31 M. 346.

428. The averment in a declaration on an insurance policy that it was made and issued to plaintiff as described is admitted if not denied by affidavit filed with the plea: Simon v. Home Ins. Co., 58 M. 278.

429. Where no affidavit of non-execution has been filed, defendant in an action on an insurance policy that had been renewed cannot show that plaintiff, who was defendant's agent, had fraudulently renewed the policy after the loss; the policy and renewal constituted the contract whereon the action was brought: Peoria Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 M. 880.

430. Under rule 79, if one who is sued for rent omits to deny on oath the execution of the lease, he cannot make any defence inconsistent with its execution: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

431. In suit upon an indemnity bond no proof is necessary of its execution when not denied by affidavit: Lee v. Wisner, 38 M. 82.

432. A plea of the general issue without affidavit would not admit the execution of an unsealed obligation when a sealed one is declared on: McCormick v. Bay City, 23 M. 457.

433. Failure to file an affidavit denying the execution of a written instrument does not prevent the showing that such instrument, though dated Jan. 2, was in fact made Sunday, Jan. 1: Ames v. Quimby, 106 U. S. 842.

434. The want of an affidavit denying the execution of a written instrument which was executed in duplicate and upon which a claim of set-off is based does not preclude plaintiff from showing that his duplicate differs in its contents from the one retained by defendant: Ibid.

435. The court has discretion to allow, or refuse to allow, the filing of an affidavit of non-execution after the proper time, and may impose conditions upon such permission: Tupper v. Kilduff, 26 M. 394; Polhemus v. Ann Arbor Savings Bank, 27 M. 44.

436. Refusal of leave to deny execution of note on affidavit, after appeal from justice's court, is discretionary: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Edson, 41 M. 673.

437. The filing of an affidavit of non-execution ought to be allowed at any stage of a cause if injustice will result from excluding it: Freeman v. Ellison, 37 M. 459.

Further as to denial and effect of failure to deny on oath execution of written instrument, see BILLS AND NOTES, §§ 274-298; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 213, 214.

(c) Bills of particulars.

Excluding bill of particulars of set-off, when an abuse of discretion, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, § 172.

438. A bill of particulars cannot be required in an action on the case for consequential injuries: Everett v. Marquette Circuit Judge, 39 M. 437; Kehrig v. Peters, 41 M. 475.

439. Nonsuit cannot be ordered for failure to file a bill of particulars in an action for slander, if the action was begun by affidavits to hold to bail, in which the facts were fully set out; no more can be done than to limit the plaintiff to the cases set out in the affidavits: Gibbs v. Superior Court Judge, 53 M. 496.

440. A bill of particulars is not demandable of right by a garnishee: Strong v. Hollon, 39 M. 411.

441. Granting an order for a bill of particulars in a criminal prosecution for embezzlement is usually discretionary and refusal is not assignable as error: People v. McKinney, 10 M. 54.

442. Omission to file a bill of particulars is unimportant if defendant, by demanding one, could preclude any surprise, and if plaintiff's case proceeded throughout upon the theory on which he recovered: Berringer v. Cobb, 58 M. 557.

443. A bill of particulars that has been properly demanded is not waived by pleading or noticing the case for trial: Peterson v. Tilden, 44 M. 168.

444. Where a plaintiff refuses to comply with a proper demand for a bill of particulars, an objection to his evidence is properly sustained: Ibid.

445. Where a bill of particulars in an action on the common counts states the dates and amounts of the several sales and deliveries to the defendant of merchandise to be sold on commission, it is sufficient to indicate the transactions from which arose the claim for money had and received; the claim on account stated, if growing out of these dealings, is governed by the same rule: Freehling v. Ketchum, 39 M. 299.

446. In an action on the common counts a bill of particulars as full as the accounts customarily rendered among merchants when they have previously sent invoices is sufficient if not objected to, or if no further bill is called for: Ibid.

447. The office of a bill of particulars is to prevent surprise by informing the opposite party of the causes of action to be relied on upon the trial which are not specially set out in the declaration: Davis v. Freeman, 10 M. 188; Mason v. Scio School District, 34 M. 228; Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 580.

448. A bill of particulars is not part of the declaration, though it may have the effect of a pleading in so far as it restricts the proof; its purpose is to secure such information as will enable the parties to make intelligent preparation for trial: Cicotte v. Wayne County, 44 M. 173.

449. A declaration on the common counts is not made demurrable by the bill of particulars: Ibid.

450. Pleadings are not amended by service of a bill of particulars, nor is the issue changed by amending the bill; and a plea or demurrer to it would be anomalous: Ibid.

451. A bill of particulars, in an action for wages on a labor contract, cannot cover money returned by plaintiff to defendant, as a loan, after receiving it as payment: Judd v. Burton, 51 M. 74.

452. Where the bill in an action for a balance remaining in the hands of an officer enumerates sundry items as received by defendant, and adds that the specific demand sought is a specified balance with interest, there is no error in permitting inquiry as to sums which defendant has received but which vary from those specified in the bill: Mason v. Scio School District, 34 M. 228.

453. There can be no recovery for items not in the bill of particulars, nor for more than it alleges: Bennett v. Smith, 40 M. 211.

454. But payments on plaintiff's demand may be shown though not embraced in the bill of particulars of defendant's set-off: Olcott v. Hanson, 12 M. 452.

455. Where suit is brought for the value of labor, and a bill of particulars, filed under a notice of set-off and recoupment, gives no intimation of damages for breach of the contract of hire, evidence of such damages is inadmissible: Ritter v. Daniels, 47 M. 617.

456. A bill of particulars filed under a declaration in assumpsit on the common count for money had and received pointed out that plaintiff sought to recover back money paid without consideration. Held, that evidence was admissible on plaintiff's part to show that a contract was void which was not alleged to be so in the bill of particulars. Such bill is for the purpose of avoiding surprise at the trial, and such evidence could not surprise defendant: Wright v. Dickinson, 67 M. 580 (Nov. 10, '87).

457. A notice of recoupment is not in the nature of a bill of particulars and does not restrict a notice of set-off contemporaneously filed: Ferguson v. Millikin, 42 M. 441.

That a bill of particulars may suffice as an allegation of an assignment, see supra, § 193.

As to amendment of bill, see infra, §§ 614, 615.

VII. VARIANCE BETWEEN ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF; WHAT PROVABLE UNDER PARTICULAR ALLEGATIONS.

(a) In general.

As to what defences are admissible under the general issue, see supra, §§ 324-356.

As to when plea puis darrein is needed to sustain proof of matters since last continuance, see supra, §§ 383-388.

458. The evidence offered must correspond with and support the material and necessary averments in the declaration or plea: Lull v. Davis, 1 M. 77.

459. Where, in pleading, a writ is alleged to have issued, or a written instrument to have been made, on a certain day, and the writ or instrument, when offered in evidence, bears date a different day, this is no variance: Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 M. 436.

460. It is not a material variance from a judgment noticed as special matter of defence that the record of judgment offered in defence varied slightly in the amount, and had been so amended as to strike out the name of one of the parties against whom it was rendered, he having been an indorser and not served with the declaration: Arnold v. Nye, 23 M. 286.

461. Where a claim against an estate is for a special deposit of a quantity of government and state bonds with a firm of which decedent was a member, testimony is fatally defective which, while tending to show the deposit of bonds, does not identify their character: Hatheway's Appeal, 52 M. 112.

462. The plaintiffs, by their declaration, claimed the premises as trustees "to sell the said premises, and apply the moneys which they should obtain to the payment of certain debts" of one B. The declaration of trust put in evidence on the trial, and signed by B., provided for the payment of certain notes signed by another person and to which B. was not a party. Held, that it was fairly to be inferred that B. was in some way bound for the payment of these notes; and if not, that his providing for their payment rendered them so far his debts as to satisfy the averment in the declaration: Ives v. Kimball, 1 M. 308.

463. Documentary evidence of the existence of a corporation under the name of "The West River National Bank of Jamaica," described as located in the town of Jamaica, county of Windham and state of Vermont, is admissible, under the general issue, to prove the corporate existence of the plaintiff styled in the declaration "The West River National Bank of Jamaica, Vermont:" Thatcher v. West River National Bank, 19 M. 196.

464. The testimony produced in support of a case must be considered together, and, if not inconsistent, the fact that one witness knows nothing of details shown by other evidence is no reason for rejecting such details in order to make the testimony support the declaration: Kroll v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 48 M. 230.

465. Testimony that is not within the averments of the pleading is objectionable: Parker v. Armstrong, 55 M. 176.

466. Recovery cannot be grounded upon a fact not counted upon as a ground of recovery in the declaration: Williamson v. Haskell, 50 M. 364.

467. When a declaration sets forth separate causes of action, one of which is statutory, and the other at common law, neither can be established except by facts proper to it: Bottomley v. P. H. & N. W. R. Co., 44 M. 542.

468. Where, in an action for damages for breach of contract, the breach relied on consisted in suing out an injunction, the decree in the injunction suit would not be admissible in bar of the action if it had not been set up or relied on in the pleadings: Sullings v. Good-year Co., 36 M. 313.

469. In an action against a sheriff for failure to execute a capias ad respondendum, evidence as to a prosecution of the defendant in the arrest proceedings is not admissible, when the pleadings do not present the issue: Hatch v. Saunders, 66 M. 181.

470. If a declaration on a contract is on the common counts and there is no bill of particulars, plaintiff has a right to go to the jury on any contract that will sustain a right of recovery, and is not confined to a particular contract as sworn to by himself, if that varies from the one he actually performed: Engle v. Campbell, 42 M. 565.

471. Under a declaration on the common counts in assumpsit by a subcontractor who has fully performed his part of a written contract between himself and a contractor for the grading of a road-bed, he may prove fraud on the contractor's part in obtaining the contract, and fraud and collusion between such contractor and the engineers in charge in estimating the amount of plaintiff's work: Bush v. Brooks, 70 M. 446.

(b) In actions ex contractu.

472. A declaration on one contract cannot be made out by proof of another, however closely the two may have been connected: Pennsylvania Mining Co. v. Brady, 14 M. 260.

473. One cannot recover under a special count upon a promise which it does not count on: Beecher v. Pettee, 40 M. 181.

474. The breach of an express contract will not sustain an action on an implied assumpsit: Thorp v. Bateman, 37 M. 68.

475. One cannot recover as upon an implied contract where the facts show an express contract. But if, while relying upon an express agreement, he also claims that if that should not be shown the facts will imply an understanding and that he will rely on that, he may recover on whichever contract is made out: Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 50 M. 1.

476. Where no special counts are needed in an action on a contract, in which both special and common counts are used, the objection that the contract as proved differs from that set forth in the special count is unimportant. Even if the contract were void recovery might be had upon the common counts: Fulmer v. Rice, 52 M. 435.

477. A declaration on the common counts will not support a claim to recover for six months' services at $125, upon evidence of an express agreement for two years' employment at $1,500 a year, if satisfactory to the employer: Kalamazoo Novelty Manuf. Co. v. Macalister, 40 M. 84.

478. A declaration based upon an assignment of choses in action alleged to have been made by certain specified persons as co-owners does not support a claim of title based on a finding that the assignment was made by one of them in the name of a firm composed of both, after the other had withdrawn from the partnership: Seeley v. Albrecht, 41 M. 525.

479. In an action upon a special agreement against two persons plaintiff cannot recover unless he avers and proves a joint undertaking; and in such action evidence of an original contract, signed by one of the defendants, together with an agreement signed by the other to "become security for the performance of the foregoing contract," although alleged to have been simultaneously executed, was held inadmissible to prove a joint contract: Lee v. Bolles, 20 M. 46.

480. An action of assumpsit against parties jointly fails if there is no evidence of a joint liability or undertaking on their part: Thompson v. Richards, 14 M. 172; Mace v. Page, 33 M. 88.

481. A joint action, brought on a several obligation, sustains a verdict for the defendants as not jointly liable: Larkin v. Butterfield, 29 M. 254.

482. A joint action on an official bond fails if it appears that any one of the defendants is not liable: Detroit v. Houghton, 42 M. 459.

483. A declaration setting up a joint obligation will not sustain recovery unless a joint debt is proved, and failure to prove the claim as against one defendant is as fatal as not to prove it against any: Munn v. Haynes, 46 M. 140.

484. Where suit is brought on a joint obligation there can be no recovery on any other basis, nor for any period during which the joint arrangement was not in force: Smith v. Detroit, H. & S. R. Co., 56 M. 529.

485. An action for a separate liability against a single defendant precludes evidence that he was liable as principal debtor jointly with another: Ingersoll v. Baker, 41 M. 48.

486. Where a declaration counts upon a single contract, and the evidence shows that there were two, and there is nothing to show that one superseded the other, or that they were merged in one, there is a substantial variance, especially if they differed in their terms: Martin v. Boyce, 49 M. 122.

487. Suit was brought on what purported to be a joint contract signed on one side by representatives of two railroad companies. It did not appear that the companies had any joint interests or that their representatives had authority to bind them jointly by any such obligation. It seems that testimony of preliminary oral agreements was admissible, though inconsistent with the written contract, as bearing on the power to make it. So also, if no limitation of time was fixed and nothing to show that either party could not terminate the contract, would evidence be admissible of a subsequent understanding and course of business making the obligation separate instead of joint: Smith v. Detroit, H. & S. R. Co., 56 M. 529.

488. A corporate obligation will not sustain an action against an individual: Hart v. Brockway, 57 M. 189.

489. Where the evidence in support of a claim based on a contract discloses a condition which does not appear in the claim as stated, and the fulfilment of which is prerequisite to payment, and there is no evidence that it has been fulfilled, there is a radical variance and the claim is properly rejected: Kroll v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 48 M. 230.

490. It is not a fatal variance between a declaration and the proofs that the declaration avers that the plaintiff performed a continuous contract for a long space of time, to wit, five years, and the evidence shows he performed for three years only: Barton v. Gray, 48 M. 164.

491. Under a declaration for breach of promise averring a promise to marry plaintiff (1) on request; (2) within a reasonable time; and (3) generally, held, that evidence was admissible to prove a promise to marry when certain buggies were finished: Bennett v. Beam, 42 M. 346.

492. A declaration upon a promise to pay presently is consistent with the defendant's having been at liberty to take a year's time or more on giving his note if he did not do so: Allen v. Duffie, 43 M. 1.

493. Where the consideration for a promise is stated as consisting of two parts, each of which is material and pertinent, proof of but one is a variance fatal to plaintiff's recovery, notwithstanding either would have been sufficient by itself to sustain the promise if alleged as the sole consideration: Tillman v. Fuller, 18 M. 113.

494. In an action on a warranty of a span of horses the declaration stated the consideration to be a yoke of oxen and a note for twenty dollars, and on the trial it appeared the note was for ten dollars only. The variance was held to be fatal: Harrington v. Worden, 1 M. 487.

495. Declaration against one who had subscribed with others for the erection of a college building at Hillsdale, for the use of the Michigan Central College incorporated at Spring Arbor. The declaration averred that this college decided not to use the building when completed, and the subscribers afterwards renewed their subscriptions, and indebtedness was incurred and the building completed in reliance thereon. It was shown in evidence that the renewal of the subscriptions and the erection of the buildings were for the benefit of a new college to be established at Hillsdale. This fact not being averred in the declaration, which only showed a subscription for a college not located at Hillsdale, it was held that no recovery could be had thereon: Underwood v. Waldron, 12 M. 73.

496. Goods were shipped with instructions to the consignees to sell on their judgment of the market, unless otherwise advised, but some time afterwards they were ordered to sell immediately. They did not do so, and the shippers sued for damages resulting from delay, and in the declaration averred shipment, delivery and orders to sell immediately as of the day and year aforesaid. Held, that the variance as to the time of the order was not material: Howland v. Davis, 40 M. 545.

497. Where the plaintiff in assumpsit relies upon the liability of the defendant which the law implies from facts and circumstances, it is just as essential to a recovery to prove all the facts and circumstances which create the liability alleged in the declaration as it is where a special contract is declared on to prove the contract as alleged: Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co. v. McDonough, 21 M. 165.

498. So, if plaintiff in assumpsit counts upon the common-law liability of common carriers to carry safely, he must prove all the circumstances necessary to create the liability; and if he fail to show that the property was delivered to, and accepted by, the company under circumstances which made it their duty to assume the care and custody of the property in its reception, transportation and delivery, he fails to prove the contract alleged: Ibid.

499. Under a declaration of two counts, one upon a promise to move a barn and sheds thereto attached and put the barn in good repair, and the other upon a promise to move the barn and sheds in as good repair as they then were, the inquiry as to how much it would cost to move the sheds and put them in repair is not admissible against objection in the absence of any allegation of a promise to move both barn and sheds and put them both in repair: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165.

500. Under an allegation stating the consideration of a promise sued upon to be an agreement by the plaintiff to convey to the defendants the right of way for their railroad track, held, that proof of a conveyance of a fee of the land as performance of this agreement is not objectionable as a variance; proof of performance of more than the consideration, so long as it includes the agreed consideration, is not open to complaint on the part of the defendant: Ibid.

501. A man bringing suit in his own name put in evidence a contract under which he and his wife were to work for defendant. Held, that there was no material variance: Harrington v. Gies, 45 M. 374.

502. Where by a contract inspection of lumber was to be made by a person named, held competent to show that by consent of parties the inspection was made by another. This did not constitute such a change in the contract as required to be set forth in the declaration: Savercool v. Farwell, 17 M. 308.

503. A charge for money lent, in a bill of particulars, will not warrant evidence of the loan of a United States bond, but only of coin, bank-bills or some well known circulating medium popularly designated as money: Waterman v. Waterman, 34 M. 490.

504. A declaration charging a defendant with receiving lumber as plaintiff's agent to sell, and with collecting and not paying over the proceeds, cannot be supported by proof of a sale of the lumber to defendant, and the partial non-payment of the price by him as original purchaser: Peppler v. Ratz, 38 M. 96.

505. Where the bill of particulars in an action for the price of merchandise relies on an actual sale for a specific sum and contains nothing which would justify recovery on a quantum valebat for its conversion, there is no ground of action against defendants for the unauthorized taking of goods belonging to plaintiff but taken away and shipped in defendant's name and with his privity: Campbell v. Sherman, 49 M. 534.

506. The variance is fatal between an averment of an undertaking to become co-signer of a note and pay it at maturity, and proof of nothing more than an agreement to provide for the note at an indefinite time out of a future loan to be secured by mortgage given by the party for whose benefit defendant was to advance the money borrowed on the note; there is a serious difference between an agreement to pay a note when due, and one to provide for it in a specific way or out of a certain fund at a definite or indefinite time in the future: Potter v. Brown, 35 M. 274.

507. The introduction of a note in evidence under the common counts without objection will not preclude raising the objection that it varies from a special count: Freeman v. Ellison, 37 M. 459.

508. "Trobridge" for "Trowbridge" is not a material variance in naming a defendant in a declaration on a promissory note: Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 M. 44.

509. Where a variance between the declaration and the proof as to the middle initial of the maker of a draft could not have prejudiced any one, it will not be noticed: McDonough v. Heyman, 38 M. 334.

510. One cannot recover under a declaration in which he claims as indorsee of a note bearing ten per cent. interest, if the interest clause in the note sued on is invalid, for the note sued on would be different from the one indorsed to him: Nelson v. Dutton, 51 M. 416.

511. Where the declaration treats the paper sued upon as a promissory note, but it is shown not to be such, the variance is fatal where the declaration is not adapted to the case of any other special contract: Mattison v. Marks, 31 M. 421.

512. Where a bill of particulars gives the dates of charges, a due-bill of a later date and for a less amount than the aggregate of items should not be rejected for variance if it tends to prove an indebtedness existing at its date: Collins v. Beecher, 45 M. 436.

513. In an action by Isaac N. Gage upon a guaranty of collection by one Reed of certain promissory notes made by one Cole, it was held competent to admit in evidence the proceedings and judgment against Cole to enforce collection of the notes, though those proceedings were taken in the name of Newton Gage as plaintiff, where it is shown that plaintiff's name is Isaac Newton Gage, and that he is the same person named as Newton Gage in the proceedings against Cole: Reed v. Gage, 38 M. 179.

514. Where a declaration upon a guaranty of collection is framed on the basis of a diligent and unsuccessful prosecution of all the principal debtors to judgment and execution, the record of an action against such principal debtors, which, as to two of them, shows no more than the institution of a suit which was afterward stayed, is insufficient to establish a right of recovery: Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 M. 350.

515. Where the first two counts of a declaration allege guaranty of payment of a note, etc., and the third count is a common count in assumpsit, with copy of the note annexed, and an alleged indorsement on the back by defendant without guaranty over it, refusal to exclude the note under the third count as variance between declaration and proof is unimportant, as it was admissible under the other counts: Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 M. 566 (June 8, '88).

516. An allegation that defendants acknowledged themselves held and firmly bound unto "the board of supervisors of the county of St. Joseph" is not sustained by a bond to "the supervisors of the county of St. Joseph," the declaration not alleging that the bond was made to the plaintiffs by the name mentioned in the bond: St. Joseph Supervisors v. Coffenburg, 1 M. 355.

517. A declaration on a sealed bond will not permit evidence of one without seal, and an amendment would be necessary to avoid the effect of the variance: McCormick v. Bay City, 23 M. 457.

518. Where a bequest was "to the corporation of the village of A., and the order of the probate court giving permission to sue on the executor's bond, for its non-payment, was "to the common council of the village of A.," and the declaration on the bond was "for the use and benefit of the village of A.," it was held that there was no variance that would prevent the admission of the order in evidence. The common council of the village is, for the purpose of the suit, identical with the village or the corporation of the village: Hatheway v. Sackett, 32 M. 97.

As to variance in actions on insurance policies, see INSURANCE, §§ 306, 307.

Variance in actions for breach of covenant, see COVENANT, §§ 11, 12, 16, 17.

(c) In actions ex delicto.

519. Under a declaration in case against a company for violating the duties of a common carrier in its transportation of live-stock, and charging the company as a common carrier only, proof is essential that the company has the character of a common carrier of such stock: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Perkins, 25 M. 329.

520. In an action for enticing away his wife, plaintiff cannot show defendant's acts of adultery with her, not having complained of such in his declaration: Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 M. 529.

521. In an action by a tenant against his landlord for interference with the former's possession, a count which rests the whole ground of complaint on a continuous right of possession as lessee, and enumerates various acts inconsistent therewith, calls for a showing of such a continuous leasehold right as alleged, as such right is material; the absence of such showing is fatal, and excludes from the case everything that depends on the count: Ives v. Williams, 53 M. 636.

522. A declaration averring damages from an obstruction to the natural flow of a stream will not support a claim for damages arising from so building an authorized dam as to exceed the authority and make the obstruction greater than it should have been. The injury complained of should have been averred as arising from the excess or insufficiency of the dam: Wood v. Rice, 24 M. 423.

523. Damages as for positive malfeasance charged in the declaration cannot be recovered upon evidence of non-feasance only; and defendant is not required to meet such a showing: Macumber v. White River Log, etc. Co., 52 M. 195.

524. Under a declaration charging a boom company with damming up water by gates, booms, timber, chains, ropes, piers, poles, logs and other appliances, and thereby flooding plaintiff's land, evidence cannot be given of the company's failure to perform with diligence its duty to float the logs cast into the river by others, and to run them properly so as to prevent injury to plaintiff's land by back-water: Ibid.

525. There is no material variance between an allegation of the obstruction of a highway in a specified township and proof that a street in a certain village was obstructed, if it appears that the village was in the township: Patterson v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 56 M. 178.

526. The appropriation of plaintiff's land in the bed of a stream to support the pier of a bridge is not an injury for which recovery can be had under a declaration complaining of the bridge only as a hindrance to the profitable use of plaintiff's dock and warehouse: Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 M. 454.

527. Under a count for fraud against the plaintiff alone in a sale made by his agent, it is error to allow a recovery for the interest of the plaintiff's brother, from whom plaintiff has simply an assignment of the proceeds of sales by such agent: Weeks v. Downing, 30 M. 4.

528. Where a declaration for obtaining money on false pretences is so amended as to describe the fraudulent representations differently, and add to them, as by differently stating localities and amounts of payments made by the plaintiffs, the variance is material: Fish v. Barbour, 43 M. 19.

529. Under a count for a false and fraudulent representation of the value of an article sold by defendant, plaintiff may prove false statements made by defendant at the time, as to the value of particular parts of the article, notwithstanding such statements are not detailed in the declaration: Picard v. McCormick, 11 M. 68.

530. A declaration in case charging defendant with having procured plaintiff to sell and deliver goods to him by making false representations as to his own credit is not supported by evidence that defendant, by making false representations of solvency and prompt payment, had obtained an extension of time on a debt already matured: Jones v. Kemp, 49 M. 9.

531. In an action brought by a purchaser for fraudulent representations by the vendor, proof that the consideration for the sale was paid for the goods and the good-will of the business is fatally variant from a declaration which only states that it was for the goods: Collins v. Jackson, 54 M. 186.

532. In an action for damages resulting to the purchaser of a stock of goods from the fraudulent representations of the vendor, evidence that the purchaser in settling his affairs had been compelled to dispose of his wife's house and lot is inadmissible, if not counted on in the declaration, and if the fraud complained of was not the proximate cause of the loss of the house and lot: Ibid.

533. Under a declaration alleging that land sold to plaintiff was represented by defendant to be of a certain value, representations that it was of that value for farming may be shown: Holcomb v. Noble, 69 M. 396 (April 20, '89).

534. Under a declaration charging in one count that defendant has defrauded plaintiff of a horse, and in another that he has wrongfully converted it, testimony of fraudulent purchase and conversion is available for both counts: Dayton v. Monroe, 47 M. 193.

535. Where a surviving partner declares in tort upon a false warranty to his firm, and proves a cause of action that did not arise until after the firm was dissolved by his copartner's death, the variance is fatal: Mead v. Raymond, 53 M. 14.

536. A declaration in an action against a street railway company for an injury resulting from its neglect to properly clean the snow from its tracks, in consequence of which a horse harnessed to a double bobsled was thrown down, described the ridges of snow as "along and very near to said street railway track, and between the double tracks thereof," and stated that as the sleigh struck the ridge between the tracks the horse stopped on the steep and slippery bank piled "along and near said" track. Held, that this distinguished between the two places; and as a like distinction was kept up in further recitals, there was no variance arising out of the question whether it was one ridge or the other that caused the injury: Wallace v. Detroit City R. Co., 58 M. 231.

537. A declaration for negligent injury to a brakeman while uncoupling cars set forth that it was occasioned by a deep hole between the rails. The evidence was that it was between the rails of a side track. Held, that the declaration would naturally be construed to refer to the main track, and that the variance was material, especially when taken in connection with other variances as to the nature of the hole and the extent of the injury: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

538. A declaration for causing the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged that the planks in the bridge where the accident occurred were loose, and the stringers uneven, so that the planks were liable to slip off and turn over, and thereby to trip horses, and that decedent's horses became entangled in the loose planks and thereby tripped. The evidence showed that there was a broken plank and a hole in consequence thereof, and that one of the horses driven by decedent had stepped into the hole, whereby the team became frightened, resulting in the injury complained of. Held no variance: Merkle v. Bennington, 68 M. 183.

539. Where a declaration claimed damages against a railroad company for the killing, through its neglect to repair its fences, of one cow and one sow, and the proofs showed that the animals killed were a cow and a shoat or pig about three months old, held, that there was no variance: Jebb v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 67 M. 160.

540. A declaration for a negligent injury caused by the caving-in of the surface over a mine will cover a case in which the caving-in was due in part to the insufficiency of lateral supports, and need not be confined to one in which the surface fell in because of the removal of that on which it rested: James v. Emmet Mining Co., 55 M. 335.

541. In an action for injuries caused by a defect in a bridge, when the declaration states that plaintiff's horse, while alarmed at a hole in the bridge, backed against the railing, which giving way the vehicle and its contents were precipitated below, it is immaterial to the recovery whether the proof shows that plaintiff was precipitated from the bridge itself or from the embankment adjoining the bridge: Smith v. Sherwood, 62 M. 159.

542. In an action for an injury caused by defendant's negligence in setting plaintiff, a boy thirteen years old, at work upon a dangerous machine without proper appliances, evidence that working at the machine made the boy dizzy is not admissible, no such complaint being set forth in the declaration, and it not being suggested that such effect upon plaintiff led in any way to the accident: Steiler v. Hart, 65 M. 644.

543. Under a general allegation of injury caused by defendant's negligence, plaintiff can introduce proof of injury in his special calling or occupation: Joslin v. Grand Rapids Ice Co., 50 M. 516.

544. In an action for the negligent destruction of plaintiff's buildings by fires lighted by defendant or not properly cared for by him, the plaintiff can give evidence of the presence of combustible material upon defendant's premises even though the fact is not counted on in the declaration: Lucas v. Wattles, 49 M. 380.

545. In case for a boom company's negligence causing damage to plaintiff's land, described in the declaration as lot one, a deed to a part of lot one is admissible in evidence. Plaintiff may prove that he owns a part of the premises described, and if his recovery is confined to the damages to that part to which he proves title, defendant is not prejudiced: Anderson v. Thunder Bay River Boom Co., 61 M. 489.

546. A declaration as for injury to plaintiff in being wrongfully put off the train at a place remote from the railway station will not support a recovery where the proof shows that the injuries suffered, which were very great, were mainly due to the passenger's being carried by but finally landed near the station so late that the carriage which had called for him had gone again, the driver supposing that he had not come, and when all places of shelter were closed, and all conveyances gone, it being after midnight, so that he was obliged, while suffering from fever, to walk home three-quarters of a mile in a freezing rain: Harding v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 56 M. 628.

547. In an action for assault and battery the plaintiff averred that by reason of the battery he was greatly hindered and prevented from doing and performing his work and business and looking after and attending his necessary affairs and avocations. Held, that this allegation did not justify the reception of evidence that plaintiff, being a farmer, and having hay ungathered at the time of the injury, was troubled in getting help to save it, and in consequence was seriously injured: Heiser v. Loomis, 47 M. 16.

548. Under a declaration in trespass, counting upon an injury as done March 1, 1886, evidence that it was done March 2, 1886, is competent: Conlon v. McGraw, 66 M. 194 (June 9, '87).

549. Where replevin was brought for the unlawful detention of property at Hampton, in Saginaw county, and defendants justified under attachments issued out of the circuit court for that county, held, that plaintiffs were not estopped by this issue from showing that the taking of the property under the attachments was at Hampton, in Bay county: Craig v. Grant, 6 M. 447.

550. In replevin for impounded cattle defendant gave notice that he would show they were running at large on the highway. On the trial he offered to show that they were part of a large herd that were on and off the highway at pleasure, and with only a thirteen-year-old boy to look after them, but he declined to assume the burden of showing that these particular cattle were actually in the highway themselves. Held proper to exclude the evidence offered and to order a verdict for plaintiff: Blanc v. Hirth, 56 M. 330.

As to variance in actions for libel or slander, see LIBEL, §§ 105-111; SLANDER, §§ 80-83, 66, 67.

(d) When disregarded or deemed waived.

551. A variance between the declaration and the proof should be disregarded at the trial, when the instrument is otherwise sufficiently described in the declaration, so that defendant cannot be surprised or misled by the evidence: Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 M. 436.

552. A variance in the description of a written instrument in the pleadings will be disregarded where the party could not have been misled, and has allowed the instrument to be received in evidence without objection: Rorubacher v. Lee, 16 M. 169.

553. Objection to variance between evidence and the pleading under which it is offered must be held to be waived where the evidence is received and submitted to the consideration of the jury without the objection being taken: MHardy v. Wadsworth, 8 M. 349.

554. Where all the evidence relating to a transaction has been given by the parties to the suit themselves, and there is a variance between the plaintiff's declaration and his proofs, by which the defendant is neither misled nor injured, and to which he raises no objection till the case has been summed up, and then for the first time requests a charge upon it, the objection will not be sustained. The case is within the statute of amendments (H. S. § 7635): Stone v. Covell, 29 M. 359.

555. The objection that the declaration does not admit proof of certain facts comes too late after such proof has been admitted: McCoy v. Brennan, 61 M. 362.

556. Where testimony is introduced, and the party relying upon variance makes no objection on that ground until his request to charge, and then brings it to the court's attention for the first time, the objection must be deemed waived: Merkle v. Bennington, 68 M. 183.

557. A declaration on a contract averred performance for five years and defendant's refusal at the end of that time to permit further work. The proofs showed performance for three years and then a postponement at defendant's request, after which defendant discharged the plaintiff. Held, that the question of variance could not be raised for the first time after all the evidence had been submitted and the jury instructed on the basis of it: Barton v. Gray, 57 M. 622.

558. Where evidence is objected to solely for a formal variance from the bill of particulars, it is better to permit an amendment of the bill than reject the evidence, unless there is reason to believe defendant will be prejudiced: Collins v. Beecher, 45 M. 436.

559. The objection of variance must be raised in the trial court: Stanton v. Hart, 27 M. 539; Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165; Slater v. Chapman, 67 M. 523 (Nov. 10, '87).

VIII. AMENDMENTS.

As to amendments in justices' courts, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, III, (d), 5.

As to amendments on appeals from justices' courts, see APPEAL, §§ 509-517.

As to amendments in chancery, see EQUITY, V, (j).

(a) In general.

560. No amendment should be permitted the effect of which would be to destroy or diminish the rights of third persons who are interested in the result of the issue: Moore v. Graham, 58 M. 25.

561. Where a party seeks to amend his pleadings upon a given point, and his affidavit shows that the plea would not accord with the facts, his motion must be denied: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 320.

562. Where a plaintiff suffers the time to elapse within which, by the rules, he may amend of course, the right becomes extinguished. Held, therefore, that after a trial of the issue, verdict for the plaintiff, verdict set aside, a new trial granted, leave given to the parties, by special order of the court, "to file new pleadings under the general rules," an amended declaration filed under this order, and demurrer thereto, the plaintiff had no right to file a second amended declaration without special leave granted by the court: People v. Washtenaw Circuit Judges, 1 D. 434.

563. While just and reasonable terms may be imposed as a condition precedent to the granting of an amendment, yet the judicial discretion cannot be exercised to impose conditions upon litigants by way of punishment, or because the party or his attorney should have proceeded in some other way at the outset of his case or in making his defence: Beecher v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 70 M. 863 (May 18, '88).

564. And where the circuit judge had ordered defendant in an action of libel, as a condition of amending his plea of the general issue with notice of claim of privilege by adding a notice of justification, to pay $1,000 as costs of motion, and to allow plaintiff to amend the ad damnum clause of his declaration so as to claim larger damages, such conditions were held unreasonable and an abuse of discretion, notwithstanding there had already been great expense and several months' delay in the case; and a mandamus was issued directing the successor of the judge to hear the motion to amend on its merits and to set aside the order: Ibid.

565. Under an order allowing a declaration to be amended the amendment must be actually made, and cannot be presumed, unless the record furnishes the data for applying the order so as to show what the precise effect of the amendment will be: Ballou v. Hill, 23 M. 60.

566. The neglect of a formal amendment of the declaration so as to show a discontinuance for which leave was given by the court is unimportant: Cook v. Perry, 43 M. 623.

567. In an action for breach of a written warranty of title to chattels sold it appeared that the warranty was given after the sale and dated back, and evidence was also given of an oral warranty. Held, that an amendment of the declaration to allege an oral warranty made at the time of sale materially changed the issue, and entitled defendant to a continuance, if he desired, with costs for the term: Jennings v. Sheldon, 53 M. 431.

568. Where, at the opening of a trial in the circuit, an amendment had been allowed as to a matter in the declaration that could not have misled defendant, it was held proper to refuse time to plead as if to an original declaration: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165.

(b) Of the declaration.

As to amendment of declaration in EJECTMENT, see that title, §§ 107-111.

569. Where all the facts have been examined, and there is no reason to suppose defendant has been misled concerning the issue, great liberality is exercised in allowing amendments to the declaration: Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 M. 91.

570. An averment in a declaration can be amended even after verdict, where it is mere matter of surplusage: Monaghan v. Agricultural F. Ins. Co., 53 M. 238.

571. A declaration may be amended by adding new counts, so as to lay the contract or wrong in a different manner; but a new cause of action cannot be introduced by amendment: People v. Washtenaw Circuit Judges, 1 D. 434.

572. The circuit court has no power to allow a declaration to be so amended as to change the form of action; e. g., from trover to assumpsit: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 13 M. 206.

573. Counts in debt to recover the penalty for usury, under the statute, could not be amended by substituting counts for money had and received: People v. Washtenaw Circuit Judges, 1 D. 434.

574. A declaration upon the common counts cannot be so amended as to set forth a new and distinct cause of action upon a special contract which has become barred by the statute of limitations since the original declaration was filed; this would be to permit the fiction of relation to nullify an act of the legislature: Gorman v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 27 M. 138.

575. Where a declaration upon the common counts in assumpsit is so amended as to be a declaration upon a special contract and to show only a distinct cause of action from that set forth in the original declaration, and one that could not by any evidence be brought within the common counts, the new declaration is for a new and separate cause of action. The fact that with their plea to the original declaration the defence set up notice of this special contract does not tend to show that the cause of action was the same in both declarations, or that the amendment should have been allowed, but the contrary: Ibid.

576. A declaration charging a railroad company as common carrier, for loss of goods shipped over its line and destroyed by fire while in its depot awaiting delivery to a subsequent carrier, cannot be amended, after the cause of action has become barred by the statute of limitations, so as to charge the company for negligence as warehousemen: M. C. R. Co. v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 35 M. 227.

577. An amendment to a declaration for false imprisonment by adding a count for malicious prosecution can be allowed any time before the right of action is barred by the statute of limitations, such new count being for the same cause of action as that originally set up: Long v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 27 M. 164.

578. A declaration on the bond of a residuary legatee alleging the failure to pay a claim is amendable by adding a count alleging the failure to pay a note which constituted the claim, even though the note itself was outlawed; no new cause of action is added by such an amendment: Abbott v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 55 M. 410.

579. An issue joined in an action of trespass for obstructing a highway upon the southwest quarter of a section presents a different issue from a claim for trespass for obstructing a highway on the southeast quarter of the section; and the proceedings being penal in their nature, and the statute providing that the case shall be tried on appeal on the issues joined in the justice's court, an amendment cannot be permitted in the circuit court: Graham v. Langston, 65 M. 45.

580. A declaration on the common counts can be amended on a new trial by the insertion of special counts: Chapman v. Colby, 47 M. 46.

581. Where a declaration for fraudulently procuring plaintiff to loan money on worthless land combined in one count three related transactions, claiming a gross sum as damages, it was held proper but not necessary to add three counts in which the three transactions were stated separately and separate damages claimed for each. They did not add any new cause of action: Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 M. 401.

582. The statute of amendments does not permit substantial defects of description to be aided: Benalleck v. People, 31 M. 200.

583. Where, at the opening of trial in the circuit, it was objected to a declaration that it disclosed no cause of action, it was held that the allowance of an amendment by changing the statement of the consideration for the alleged promise on which the action was based, so that it would read that plaintiff "would convey" instead of "had conveyed," could not mislead or surprise the defendant, and was not error: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165.

584. Where all the evidence in a case disclosed only one contract, the subsequent allowance of an amendment to the declaration thereon, merely to avoid a variance as to some circumstances connected with the cause of action, and when it cannot defeat the purposes of justice or operate as a real hardship or surprise upon the defendant, is within the discretion of the court: Ibid.

585. In an action against a railroad company for damages caused by its neglect to fence its road where it crossed the plaintiff's land, the want of venue in the declaration was held cured by H. S. § 7635, subd. 11, where the injury complained of was located territorially upon land in the county where the suit was brought. Trials by the court stand in the same equity as trials by jury in this regard: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

586. In an action on the common counts to recover the price of articles sold and delivered by plaintiff's assignor, an amendment to cure the want of an averment of an assignment is matter of course: Kelly v. Waters, 31 M. 404.

587. Where in an action for negligent injury both sides have without objection introduced such testimony as fully explains all facts bearing on the manner and cause of the injury, an amendment of the declaration should be allowed as a matter of course, if objected to for variance, so long as it is plain that no one could have been surprised by the testimony: Wallace v. Detroit City Ry Co., 58 M. 231.

588. In a declaration for maliciously suing out an attachment the failure to allege the conclusion of the attachment suit is a formal defect merely, and plaintiff is entitled to an amendment even at the trial: Sutton v. Van Akin, 51 M. 463.

589. The court has power in a proper case to allow an amendment to correct the name of the plaintiff in the pleadings and proceedings which by mistake was erroneously given in the writ: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218.

590. An amendment to a declaration on a promissory note so as to show the full name of defendant instead of the initial by which he had signed the note should be allowed at any time if there is no question of identity: Webber v. Bolte, 51 M. 113.

591. An amendment to a declaration whereby the plaintiff's name was changed from Dilks to Wilks was properly allowed on due showing, after personal service and default made absolute, and before judgment: McLaughlin v. Wilks, 42 M. 553.

592. Judgment in replevin was given by a justice in a suit brought against a defendant designated as D. T. Baldwin instead of David T. Baldwin, but no misnomer was pleaded, and the judgment was appealed by Baldwin under his full name after pleading to the merits. Held, that the informality, if any, could be amended by reference to the records and was no longer material: Baldwin v. Talbot, 43 M. 11.

593. Garnishment proceedings cannot be amended by making the name of the principal defendant "Jonathan C. Davis" instead of "John C. Davis" where such amendment would injure an intervenor: Moore v. Graham, 58 M. 25.

594. The statute of amendments cures the defect, if any, of declaring in the name of the board of supervisors instead of in that of the county; and the court may make the necessary correction: Johr v. St. Clair Supervisors, 38 M. 532.

595. Misnaming the president and trustees of a village as the common council where they should sue in their name of office as highway commissioners may be cured by amendment: Merrill v. Kalamazoo, 35 M. 211.

596. Pleading in the name of a public office without adding the name of the officer, if a defect, is amendable: Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 M. 79.

597. A declaration in the name of a guardian was amended after plea by making the ward the plaintiff, suing by her next friend, who was the guardian aforesaid. The issue was in no way changed, however. Held, that the amendment was allowable; and it was not material that no opportunity was given to plead anew if leave was not asked or reason apparent therefor: Morford v. Dieffenbacker, 54 M. 593.

598. Striking out the name of a co-plaintiff is within H. S. § 7636, if it appears to be improperly in the declaration: Hudson v. Feige, 58 M. 148.

599. Where a declaration against a company named its president for the time being as defendant on its behalf (which would have been proper if it had been a joint-stock company, unincorporated and organized under a particular statute), it was held right to allow an amendment striking out his name and thus leaving the case to stand against the company by name as a corporation, service on the president having been proper under any of the statutes, and the object of the declaration being to enforce a company liability: Kimball & A. Manuf. Co. v. Vroman, 35 M. 310.

600. An action to collect a debt due a firm was brought in the name of three partners, one of whom, unknown to the attorneys, was dead. Held, that under H. S. § 7635, subd. 9, the process and pleadings could be amended so as to show a suit by the surviving partners: Cragin v. Gardner, 64 M. 399.

601. An amendment is not objectionable for changing the date of a transaction so as to make it cover a longer time than was at first averred in the declaration, if it does not in any way change the obligation sued on: Niemarck v. Schwartz, 51 M. 466.

602. A declaration in an action for the amount of an order may be amended in the discretion of the trial court so as to admit testimony that the person giving the order acted as agent, and that it amounted to a novation of the indebtedness: Finan v. Babcock, 58 M. 301.

603. Whether a declaration on a joint award made under a joint submission can be amended so as to show the award to have been a sole obligation, quere: Ballou v. Hill, 23 M. 60.

604. The omission of the words "use of" in the common count for money paid to defendant's use is a mere clerical misprision that ought to be corrected on the trial: Brown v. McHugh, 35 M. 50.

605. A judgment for more than the ad damnum clause of the declaration cannot be supported by a subsequent amendment increasing the damages claimed. The plaintiff should have been allowed either to remit the excess or to make the amendment on condition that a new trial be had: Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 M. 326.

606. Where, during the argument to the jury, and without imposing any terms, an amendment to the ad damnum clause of a declaration was granted to cure a clerical error, and when it could not have prejudiced the defendant on the merits, this was a fair exercise of judicial discretion which would not be reviewed on error: Borden v. Clark, 26 M. 410.

607. Where the verdict is right the court may allow the ad damnum clause to be increased to cover it: Cicotte v. Wayne, 59 M. 509.

608. That a general ad damnum clause may by amendment be applied to a count before that which it immediately follows, see Sheldon v. Sullivan, 45 M. 324.

(c) Of other pleadings, etc.

609. It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow an amendment to be made to the notice of special defence attached to the plea of the general issue: Browne v. Moore, 32 M. 254.

610. In trespass for digging a ditch on plaintiff's land it is proper to allow defendants, after justifying as drain commissioner and contractors, to amend the notice attached to their plea by stating that they dug under a license from the plaintiff: Hopkins v. Briggs, 41 M. 175.

611. Under the statute of amendments a notice of defence can be so amended as to make the pleadings conform to the referee's finding in the case; and such an amendment can bring in an item which the referee has disallowed and which would have been wiped out if there had been notice of ceroupmment: Mason v. Peter, 58 M. 554.

612. It is discretionary to refuse leave on the trial to defendant to amend his notice filed with his plea by adding that the due-bill sued on had been bought by plaintiff, an attorney, contrary to H. S. § 7185; and the refusal is certainly not an abuse of discretion where plaintiff admits that he does not claim to be a purchaser except subject to equities: Randall v. Baird, 66 M. 312.

613. Leave should not be granted on the trial to amend the notice of defence by adding a new issue which plaintiff cannot be expected to meet, where the application is not made on anything appearing on the trial and where no showing is made to support it: Deline v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co., 70 M. 435.

That refusal of leave to amend so as to interpose the statute of limitations is not reviewable, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, §§ 205, 206.

614. A plaintiff may properly be allowed to amend his bill of particulars where the evidence does not tend to prove a demand set forth therein: Cummin v. Wilcox, 47 M. 501.

615. On a second trial the plaintiff's bill of particulars should not be allowed to be amended so as to add another credit of later date than the last debit item, thus avoiding the bar of the statute of limitations: Hollywood v. Reed, 57 M. 234.

616. Where an affidavit of merits is apparently made in good faith, but is wanting in some respects, the proper practice is to permit an amendment: Wells v. Booth, 35 M. 424.

IX. ADMISSIONS; WAIVERS.

(a) In general.

617. A plea of estoppel admits the cause of action, and if the estoppel fails judgment follows in due course against the defendant: Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 M. 573.

618. Where an action of trespass begun before a justice of the peace has been certified to the circuit under H. S. § 6895, because the plaintiff's evidence showed that a question of title to land was involved, the defendant's failure to give notice with his plea that title would come in question does not, on the trial in the circuit, operate as an admission of plaintiff's title so as to exclude evidence of title in defendant; the case stands in the circuit subject to the same rules of proof and disproof as though it had been originally begun there: Rawson v. Finlay, 27 M. 268.

619. There can be no waiver that can make it proper to allow a case to be decided on issues not authorized by the pleadings: Pennsylvania Mining Co. v. Brady, 14 M. 260.

620. Objections to the sufficiency of the allegations in a plea of abatement should be raised by demurrer, and, if not made until after judgment, are too late to be considered: Fisher v. Busch, 64 M. 180.

(b) What admitted by demurrer.

621. A demurrer to special counts would not admit facts stated only in the consolidated common counts: Rose v. Jackson, 40 M. 80.

622. Inferences of the pleader are not admitted by demurrer: Dubois v. Hutchinson, 40 M. 262.

623. A demurrer admits only what is well pleaded: United States v. Van Auken, 96 U. S. 366.

624. A demurrer to a declaration alleging plaintiff's title to land admits such title: Stout v. Keyes, 2 D. 184.

625. A general demurrer admits jurisdiction of the person: Thompson v. Michigan Mut. Ben. Assoc., 52 M. 522.

(c) Admissions and waivers by pleading the general issue and going to trial.

As to effect of failing to deny execution, see supra, VI, (b).

626. The plea of the general issue in forcible entry proceedings waives irregularity in summons and venire: Falkner v. Beers, 2 D. 117.

627. Pleading to the merits in replevin waives mere clerical defects in the affidavit: Baker v. Dubois, 32 M. 92.

As to waiver of jurisdictional defects and objections by pleading to the merits, see JURISDICTION, §§ 44-54, 56-59, 61-63, 68.

628. The plea of the general issue admits plaintiff's representative character as administrator or executor: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50; Bachelder v. Brown, 47 M. 366.

629. But not where suit was not originally brought by him, but was revived in his favor, after general issue pleaded, upon suggestion of the original plaintiff's death: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50.

630. If one who is individually sued pleads the general issue as administrator, he cannot deny the jurisdiction: Singer Manuf. Co. v. Benjamin, 55 M. 330.

631. The plea of the general issue only in an action brought by a domestic corporation is an admission of the plaintiff's corporate existence: Smith v. Adrian, 1 M. 495; Wilson S. M. Co. v. Spears, 50 M. 534.

632. In an action by a national bank organized in this state the plea of the general issue admits its corporate existence: Garlon v. Union City Bank, 34 M. 279.

633. The objection that a county should have sued in its own name upon its treasurer's bond, given to the board of supervisors, is waived if not pleaded in abatement: Johr v. St. Clair Supervisors, 38 M. 532.

634. By pleading the general issue a defendant sued in a corporate name admits that it is sued in the right name: Lake Superior Building Co. v. Thompson, 32 M. 293. See supra, § 168.

635. The plea of the general issue is not an admission of facts subsequently occurring: Vickery v. Beir, 16 M. 50.

636. Pleading the general issue in an action for slander admits the falsity of the words charged: Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 M. 292.

637. When a demurrer is overruled and the party pleads over, the right of objection is thereby waived, and he cannot afterwards object, on error, that it was erroneously overruled (sed, quere): Wales v. Lyon, 2 M. 276.

638. Pleading and going to trial precludes parties from setting up merely technical defects where the declaration contains a good case otherwise: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

639. When, to a declaration alleging "a good and valuable consideration," defendant pleads the general issue, he thereby waives his right to a more specific allegation, and consents that evidence of the consideration may be introduced: Kean v. Mitchell, 13 M. 207.

640. Formal defects in the declaration should be taken advantage of by demurrer: Hatheway v. Sackett, 32 M. 97; Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 M. 350.

641. If a declaration alleges a substantial grievance any objections for mere inartificiality must be raised by demurrer: Briggs v. Milburn, 40 M. 512.

642. Mere clerical omissions in a declaration can be reached, if at all, only by demurrer: Brown v. McHugh, 35 M. 50.

643. Defects in a declaration are not noticed if, being amendable, they have not been demurred to: Norton v. Colgrove, 41 M. 544.

644. A declaration that sets forth facts intelligibly cannot be objected to in the supreme court for lack of technical accuracy if it has not been demurred to: Burke v. Wilber, 42 M. 327.

645. A party who has chosen not to demur, and has taken the chance of a trial of fact, cannot obtain a reversal upon an objection that is one of form rather than of substance: Seiber v. Price, 26 M. 518.

646. An objection to a declaration for not being full enough should be taken before going on with the trial: Pettibone v. Maclem, 45 M. 381.

647. Defendant waives formal defects in a declaration by putting in testimony: Jenks v. Brown, 38 M. 651.

648. Objections to the form of pleadings raised by way of objections to the admission of evidence are not favored: Van Middlesworth v. Van Middlesworth, 32 M. 183.

649. When issue has been joined on the facts without demurrer the declaration cannot be held fatally defective unless inconsistent with any reasonable ground of action: Jackson v. Collins, 39 M. 557.

650. Failure to demur concedes the sufficiency of the declaration unless the defects are such as cannot by any intentment be supplied or overlooked: Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 M. 534.

651. Objections to the sufficiency of a declaration should be raised early in the proceedings, so that parties may be saved the expense and delay of preparation for trial: Gay v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co., 51 M. 246.

652. While the plea of the general issue waives technical and formal objections to the declaration, it does not waive the essential allegations of a cause of action: Stoflet v. Marker, 34 M. 313.

653. The objection that the declaration fails to state a cause of action may be raised by objecting to the introduction of any evidence: Ibid.

654. If a defendant proposes to object to the introduction of any evidence under the declaration on the ground that no right of action exists, and that if there were any the allegations of the declaration do not show him to be properly impleaded, he should demur to the declaration instead of pleading the general issue and then objecting, unless his objection goes to the whole merits of the case or cause of action, and is so clear that the declaration would not sustain a judgment even if the plaintiff should recover on the merits: Rowland v. Kalamazoo Poor Superintendents, 49 M. 553.

655. A declaration is not open to objection for defects after pleading to the merits unless the defects are fatal, and even then objection should be taken before the parties are put to the expense of preparing for trial: Bauman v. Bean, 57 M. 1.

656. If a declaration does not state a cause of action it should be demurred to, instead of waiting to object to the introduction of evidence under it: Geveke v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 589.

657. Fatal objections to a declaration should be taken by demurrer. If the defendant delays to take them until the trial, all intentments should be against him, and if it is possible to sustain the case by amendments they should be permitted: Barton v. Gray, 48 M. 164.

658. A defendant who claims that a declaration is defective on its face, but omits to demur, and seeks to raise the question for the first time by a general objection on the trial to the admission of any evidence, will be held to strict rules and required to be very precise, at least where it is not made to appear that the real justice of the case has been overreached: Jennison v. Haire, 29 M. 207.

659. Formal defects in pleadings, even if not amendable, should be brought to the court's attention at the earliest reasonable opportunity, if the opposite party means to rely on them. And if the defect is one that would be cured by verdict, the trial judge should either disregard it or direct amendment to be made and the trial to proceed, and if this takes defendant by surprise he can continue the case on a proper showing: Sutton v. Van Akin, 51 M. 463.

X. AIDER BY VERDICT OR JUDGMENT.

660. A verdict on the merits cures a formal defect in a declaration: Sutton v. Van Akin, 51 M. 463.

661. Want of venue in the margin of a declaration which located the injury complained of upon land in the county where suit was brought held cured by H. S. § 7635 after trial by the court: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

662. H. S. § 7635, subd. 8,—curing the omission of allegations of matter without proving which such verdict should not have been rendered,—was intended to adopt the common-law rule: Kean v. Mitchell, 18 M. 207; Delashman v. Berry, 21 M. 516.

663. If the pleadings put in issue a mere nudum pactum, no consideration can be presumed to have been proved, because none appears to have been claimed to exist; and a verdict will not cure the defect: Ibid.

664. A verdict cures a defective statement of a title or cause of action, but not the statement of a defective title or cause of action: Lincoln v. Cambria Iron Co., 108 U. S. 412.

665. A fact necessary to be proved to justify a recovery, not averred in the declaration, if it be plainly inferable from any fact stated in, or by the case made by, the declaration, will, after verdict, be presumed to have been proved: Delashman v. Berry, 21 M. 516.

666. Where to infer a fact omitted to be alleged, but necessary to be proved, would be to go outside of the declaration and to depart from the theory of the action presented by it, the omission is not cured by verdict: Ibid.

667. A defective statement of the consideration cannot be taken advantage of on the trial of an issue of fact by objection to the admission of evidence to establish the plaintiff's case; and after verdict for the plaintiff the allegation will be sufficient to sustain it: Kean v. Mitchell, 13 M. 207.

668. A defective allegation of consideration will be cured by verdict when, from the issue as actually made, it can fairly be presumed that the evidence necessary to establish a case was given under it: Ibid.

669. A statement of a consideration in a declaration in assumpsit, so defective as to be demurrable, will nevertheless be held good after verdict if the consideration referred to can possibly be valid: Dickinson v. Dustin, 21 M. 561.

670. An averment in a declaration in an action of debt upon a bond given on appeal from a judgment of a circuit court commissioner to the circuit court, in a proceeding to obtain restitution of premises under H. S. § 8807, that the defendant "did not forthwith pay the rent due or to become due," is not equivalent to an averment that any rent was actually due; and for that reason the declaration would be demurrable; yet it contains, nevertheless, such an argumentative statement that some rent was due, or was at least claimed to be due, that, after verdict, proof of this fact may be presumed, and the judgment entered thereon sustained: Delashman v. Berry, 21 M. 516.

671. But where, on such a declaration, the plaintiff's right to recover depends upon the fact that he has obtained restitution of the premises, an averment that the circuit court "adjudged that the said complainant in said suit have restitution of the premises," and the breach assigned being that the complainant had "obtained restitution of the same as aforesaid," would not only be demurrable, but the defect would not be cured by a verdict; because the pleader does not base his right to recover upon the actual restitution of the premises — which was an essential fact in the condition of the bond — but upon his having obtained a judgment of restitution; thus claiming that the judgment itself constituted restitution. Upon such a theory there can be no inference of actual restitution; and a judgment founded upon it would be erroneous: Ibid.

672. The use in a declaration of the word "fraudulently," in reference to the course of the defendant, implies a scienter, and is an argumentative allegation of the defendant's knowledge, which, if not demurred to, is cured by the verdict: Beebe v. Knapp, 28 M. 53.

673. Where the action chosen is foreign to any right claimed, there is no necessity for a demurrer or plea in abatement; the court has no right to give a judgment for plaintiff: Grand Rapids v. Whittlesey, 33 M. 109.

674. The statute of amendments protects a judgment after verdict where, although an averment in the declaration was dropped by the abandonment of the counts containing it, both sides went fully into proofs relating to it, without objection, and it was apparent that the defence was not misled: Barton v. Gray, 57 M. 624.

675. Where not demurred to, a declaration for negligent injury must be held sufficient, after verdict, if it stated a cause of action though it did not specify the negligence, and especially if it counted upon other negligence which it did set forth. So held where a workman sued his employer for an injury suffered from the use of defective machinery and did not point out the defect, but also averred as negligence that he had been set at work that was outside the scope of his employment: Broderick v. Detroit Union Depot Co., 56 M. 261.

676. A declaration in assumpsit on the common counts, which, after stating the several causes of action, omits to allege an express promise, though bad on special demurrer, is cured by judgment: Hoard v. Little, 7 M. 468.

677. Where a declaration contains in substance a cause of action, and the general issue is pleaded, the court will, after judgment, presume that all inaccuracies and defects in the plaintiff's statement of his cause of action were supplied by proof upon the trial: Stange v. Clemens, 17 M. 402.

678. Where a declaration based upon a promise, though framed on the theory that the action should be one on the case, sufficiently sets forth the contract and the breach, and shows how plaintiff was damaged by being compelled to pay the demand himself under legal compulsion, it is held sufficient after judgment if the note to which the promise related was a joint and several one: Potter v. Brown, 35 M. 274.

679. A judgment on default is not affected by a defective statement in the declaration of the residence of parties, the defect being cured by H. S. § 7635, subd. 4: Elliott v. Farwell, 44 M. 186.

680. Where, to the whole of a declaration containing several counts, defendant pleaded non assumpsit and also not guilty, and the jury passed upon but one issue, it was held that either plea was good after verdict, and that, as the plea of non assumpsit met the whole declaration, the other plea might be stricken off, even after error brought: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

PLEDGE.

1. A pledge merely passes the possession, or at most a special property, to the pledgee, with a right of retainer until the debt is paid or the other engagement is fulfilled: Tannahill v. Tuttle, 3 M. 104.

Further as to pledge, see BAILMENT, IV.

POOR.

As to appointment and removal of superintendents of the poor, see OFFICERS, §§ 20, 21, 29-33.

1. In their statutory capacity as owners and managers of farm property superintendents of the poor are liable for injuries to adjoining owners from their negligent management: Rowland v. Kalamazoo Poor Superintendents, 49 M. 553.

2. Under H. S. § 1757, two of the three county superintendents of the poor possess the power of the board whenever they unite in action; it is within their power, without an authorization from the board at a formal meeting, to contract for the purchase of a mowing and reaping machine for use on the county farm: Osborne v. Macomb Poor Superintendents, 26 M. 66.

3. When application is made by a pauper to a county superintendent of the poor under C. L. 1857, § 1439 (see H. S. § 1762), the superintendent has full power to provide such temporary relief as he may deem proper, without any of the restrictions or qualifications imposed upon directors of the poor on similar applications by §§ 1443 and 1444. And in granting temporary relief, and in determining who are proper subjects for temporary and permanent relief, a single member possesses the whole power of the board: Hewitt v. Macomb Poor Superintendents, 5 M. 166.

4. Township directors of the poor cannot incur liability on behalf of their townships by employing physicians to perform surgical operations upon paupers: Barber v. Saginaw, 34 M. 52.

See CITIES AND VILLAGES, § 111.

5. An affidavit to recover a penalty for bringing a pauper from another state into a county in this state, with intent to make such pauper a charge to said county, must, to give the court jurisdiction, state the facts positively or give the circumstances upon which affiant has good reasons to believe they exist: Luton v. Palmer, 70 M. 152.

6. A father may be compelled to support his adult children if they become a public charge: Stilson v. Gibbs, 53 M. 280.

7. But to make their father so liable adult children must be "poor persons" within the meaning of H. S. § 1741: Clinton v. Laning, 61 M. 355.

8. The proceeding, under H. S. ch. 41, to compel the support of poor persons by their relatives, are summary in character, and are not according to the course of the common law: Smith v. Lapeer Poor Superintendents, 34 M. 58.

9. And the order, under H. S. § 1743, in such proceedings is not a judgment, and cannot be reviewed on writ of error. It is to be enforced by attachment: Ibid.

10. The notice required by H. S. § 1742 to be given to the relatives of an insane child is essential to give the circuit court jurisdiction of proceedings by superintendents of the poor to charge such relatives with his support: North v. Joslin, 59 M. 624.

11. A petition for discharge as an insolvent which only professes to set forth in the schedule such property as is not exempt from execution, and the affidavit verifying which omits the clause required by the statute to be contained therein, "that I have in no instance created or acknowledged a debt for a greater sum than I honestly owed," is so defective as to give the officer to whom it is presented no jurisdiction: Young v. Stephens, 9 M. 500.

POWERS.

1. Where several persons are empowered by law to execute a public trust or power, and, in the execution thereof, all are present to deliberate, the act of a majority will be valid: Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 1 D. 119.

2. They will all be presumed to have been present, and to have deliberated upon the act, unless the contrary expressly appears: Ibid.

3. Where the donee of a power to be executed by conveyance to another attaches unauthorized conditions, such conditions are void and the deed good. But only the grantee and those in privity with him are entitled to question the act: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

4. Where a power is conferred, a resort to the usual means in its execution must be understood as intended, unless others are indicated: Grover v. Huckins, 26 M. 476.

IV. MOTIONS, NOTICES AND ORDERS.

I. NOTICE OF TRIAL; TIME.

(a) Notice of trial.

1. R. S. § 1846, p. 463, § 4 (H. S. § 7551), requiring written notice of trial of issues in the circuit court, was not repealed by the act of April 3, 1848, entitled "An act to regulate and define the jurisdiction of the circuit and county courts:" Storey v. Child, 2 M. 107.

2. At least fourteen full days must elapse between the day of service of notice of trial and the first day of the next term: Arnold v. Nye, 23 M. 286, 293.

3. Parties stand on the same footing, under the rules for serving notice of trial, as attorneys, if they employ no attorneys: Greenwood School District v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 41 M. 549.

4. Service of notice of trial by mail is sufficient if made on an attorney or on a party who appears in person in an appeal case at the circuit: Ibid.

5. An action based in part on a charge of conspiracy was noticed for trial without bringing in a portion of the defendants. A defendant who had pleaded asked that the case be set down for trial on a day certain, and at the day fixed objected that the others had not been brought in. On motion the plaintiff was allowed to discontinue as to those who had not been brought in. Held, that the right to object to the irregularity in noticing the case for trial was cut off by consenting to go to trial and by the order of discontinuance, and that it was of no consequence that the discontinuance was not entered on the record, and that there was no formal amendment of the declaration: Cook v. Perry, 43 M. 628.

6. Where a notice of trial is required to be posted "in some conspicuous place" in a certain office, the affidavit should state that it was put in a conspicuous place, and should mention the place: People v. Bacon, 18 M. 247.

7. A judgment rendered on issue joined without notice of trial or appearance at the trial should be set aside on motion. And if no proof of notice appears on the files the defendant is entitled to have judgment set aside unless the plaintiff proves notice: Ibid.

As to notices of trial in cases appealed from justices, see APPEAL, §§ 521-523.

As to notice of trial of probate appeal, see APPEAL, §§ 396-398.

(b) Continuances.

As to continuances in criminal cases, see CRIMES, IV, (c), 1.

As to adjournments in justices' courts, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, IV, (a).

8. The right to continue is incident to the power to hear and determine causes: Caswell v. Ward, 2 D. 374.

9. Adjournments of the circuit court from day to day during the same term are not continuances which require to be stated in the record: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

10. An amendment, at the trial, of the declaration, materially changing the issue, entitles defendant to a continuance with costs for the term: Jennings v. Sheldon, 53 M. 431.

11. Where a cause has been noticed for inquest under circuit court rule 99, though no affidavit of merits be filed, the defendant may produce witnesses on the inquest,—not, of course, to make out any substantial defence to the cause of action, but to show the correct amount due or quantum of recovery; and he may therefore move for a continuance of the cause: Begole v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 32 M. 61.

12. The probate court cannot direct a continuance in condemnation proceedings pending before a commissioner appointed by it: M. C. R. Co. v. Tuscola Probate Judge, 48 M. 638.

13. A void proceeding cannot be adjourned into validity: White v. Spaulding, 50 M. 22.

14. Execution does not lie to enforce an order imposing costs as a condition to a continuance, when the continuance has been waived: Henderson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 40 M. 244.

Refusal to grant continuance in QUO WARRANTO, when not ground for new trial, see that title, § 83.

II. FORM AND METHOD OF TRIAL.

(a) Trial in general.

15. It seems that a plaintiff cannot be debarred from trying issues not met by the plea merely because he is in default for not replying to a defence which covers a part of the issues only: Snyder v. Quarton, 47 M. 211.

16. After a trial has begun, the defence cannot be excluded for defendant's refusal to pay his proportion of the stenographer's fees: Wheaton v. Atlantic Powder Co., 41 M. 718.

17. It is a mistrial where parties submit a case upon a partial showing in connection with an agreed statement of facts, and stipulate that the court shall submit the case upon certain questions only, and that a particular verdict should be taken if he shall be of a certain specified opinion and shall so charge the jury: Watts v. Tittabawassee Boom Co., 47 M. 540.

18. When a stipulation consenting to a discontinuance has been made by competent persons, and a subsequent motion to strike it from the files has been denied, the court cannot proceed with the case so long as the stipulation has not been in some way impeached or the interests of counsel or of third persons involved: Kittridge v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 53 M. 354.

(b) Jury trial.

19. The right to trial by jury is waived in civil cases by neglecting to demand it, and if the judge orders one for his own satisfaction it does not concern the parties. But where neither party has demanded a jury, the assignment of the case for a particular day in term is a plain intimation that no jury will be called: Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 81.

20. When the trial of an appeal in probate matter involves questions of fact, a party is entitled, under H. S. § 6783, to a jury if he insists upon it: Grovier v. Hall, 28 M. 7; Wissner v. Mabley's Estate, 70 M. 271.

21. And if the jury disagree, the court should call another jury if either party requests it: Grovier v. Hall, 28 M. 7.

22. Said § 6783 does not prevent a trial by the court without a jury if neither party demands one: Baptist Missionary Union v. Peck, 9 M. 445.

23. A previous reference and trial thereon had before a referee under a stipulation will not cut off the right to a jury trial where a new trial has been ordered on reversal by the supreme court: Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 M. 243.

As to right of jury trial and the waiver thereof, see CONSTITUTIONS, III, (c).

As to waiver of jury trial on bill to annul marriage, see EQUITY, § 1143.

(c) Trial by court; findings.

As to findings in EJECTMENT, see that title, §§ 168-175.

24. A case made before trial under H. S. § 6469 must be signed by the parties or their attorneys, and filed with the clerk: Farrand v. Bentley, 6 M. 281.

25. Such a case is not a mere stipulation concerning evidence, from which inferences of fact are to be drawn; but it is equivalent to a finding of facts by a court, or the special verdict of a jury, in which every fact necessary to a recovery must be expressly found: Goodrich v. Detroit, 12 M. 279.

26. Where, therefore, a contractor claimed to recover of the city of Detroit the contract price of a certain public work, on the ground of negligence on the part of the city in collecting the assessment therefor, and a case was agreed upon and submitted to the court, which only set forth the steps which the city had taken for the collection, it was held that the court had no right, upon such a case, to find the fact of negligence from the facts agreed upon and set forth: Ibid.

27. A stipulation of facts for purposes of judgment must be treated as a special verdict; and if it does not unequivocally show a liability the case must fail, as the burden of proof is on the plaintiff: Gillett v. Detroit Board of Trade, 46 M. 809.

28. H. S. § 6485, providing for trials by the court unless a jury is demanded, applies to a case where a claim is filed under H. S. § 7836 by a defendant in ejectment for the value of improvements on the premises: Rawson v. Parsons, 6 M. 401.

29. The credibility of testimony and its sufficiency to support a finding are to be determined by the trial judge when he sits without a jury: Edwards v. Nelson, 51 M. 121.

30. In a case tried by a judge without a jury it is for the trial judge himself, and not for the supreme court, to decide what conclusions the evidence will warrant: Butts v. Davis, 50 M. 310.

31. In an action tried without a jury it is for the trial judge, and not for the supreme court, to hear argument as to the force of the evidence, and as to inferences and presumptions, and to draw therefrom and state the necessary conclusions of fact: Berrien County Treasurer v. Bunbury, 45 M. 79.

32. H. S. § 6486, which requires the circuit judge who tries a case without a jury to give his decision on or before the first day of the term succeeding that in which the cause was submitted, is directory merely: Rawson v. Parsons, 6 M. 401; Stansell v. Corning, 21 M. 242, 245.

33. Whether, in ordinary cases tried by the court without a jury under H. S. § 6486, the "decision" must be written and filed with the clerk, quere; but a special finding or verdict by the court acting in the place of a jury — e. g., in ejectment, where there is a claim for improvements — must be written and filed before judgment can be rendered upon it: Rawson v. Parsons, 6 M. 401.

34. In all cases where the cause is tried before the court without a jury, the decision of the court is required to be in writing and filed with the clerk: Delashman v. Berry, 20 M. 292.

35. By a long practical construction the signing of the judgment by the judge is equivalent to a finding of facts, except in those cases where a special finding is needed; but such a practice will not be extended beyond cases where the finding is general, and made in term by the judge who tried the cause: Cleveland v. Stein, 14 M. 338.

36. No written request for a finding by the circuit judge is necessary, except where a party desires a detailed finding on the facts in the case as well as on the law points: People v. Littlejohn, 11 M. 60.

37. A finding of facts should be obtained as well as the conclusions of law dependent thereon, if a party to an action at law tried without a jury desires the supreme court to review the whole case: Butts v. Davis, 50 M. 310.

38. Requests for findings must be made before judgment: Brown v. Haak, 48 M. 229.

39. A special finding made by the court without special request will have the same effect as if made with it: Delashman v. Berry, 20 M. 292.

Special finding presumed to have been made on request, see ERROR, § 679.

40. The omission to find the facts and law before giving judgment is not an error of which the party who did not request it can complain: Cook v. Wiles, 43 M. 439.

41. It is not necessary to respond to every special request to find propositions, either of law or facts, so long as the refusal does not prejudice: Babcock v. Beaver Creek, 65 M. 479.

As to effect of incomplete or defective findings, or of failure to make findings, or to pass upon propositions submitted, see ERROR, §§ 227-231, 413, 467, 471, 475, 496, 497, 504, 693, 700, 703, 704.

42. A finding of facts made and filed after the judge who tried the cause has resigned is a nullity: Ells v. Rector, 32 M. 379.

43. A special finding by the court on a trial without a jury comes in place of a special verdict and serves all its purposes: Delashman v. Berry, 20 M. 292.

44. Where a court tries a cause without a jury and finds the facts specially, the proceeding is analogous to that for special verdict of a jury; and these findings are, under the statute, substantially a special verdict, and all the material facts established should appear therein: Adams v. Champion, 31 M. 233.

45. Special findings of fact are to be considered as in the nature of a special verdict, and construed by the same rules. Nothing can be inferred, supplied or added: Burk v. Webb, 32 M. 173; Shelden v. Dutcher, 35 M. 10.

46. The findings or any material part of them must be supported by evidence: Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Bates, 31 M. 158.

47. A finding may be construed in connection with the pleadings if these contain sufficient data to support it: Edwards v. Nelson, 51 M. 121.

48. A statement in a finding of facts that the declaration averred the defendant to be a foreign corporation has no legal importance, and an exception to it as untrue raises no question of law; the pleading cannot be changed by thus imputing to it something it has not: Earle v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 29 M. 414.

49. Every finding is the responsible act of the judge, and it is not very important by what name it is called; if his mind has reached conclusions which involve questions of fact, they must prevail, even though mixed with legal inquiries, unless illegally reached: Gillam v. Boynton, 36 M. 236.

50. An inference of fact drawn from evidence cannot be made matter of law by setting it up as such in a finding: Hogelskamp v. Weeks, 37 M. 422.

51. Where individual findings of fact are complete in themselves and stand in lieu of special verdicts, all that are evidently intended as findings of fact will be so treated even if they are classed by mistake with conclusions of law: Taylor v. Gladwin, 40 M. 232.

52. Conclusions of law are not findings of fact, although so called: Breitung v. Lindauer, 37 M. 217.

53. A conclusion of law cannot be held unwarranted by the general finding, where no special finding is asked for, if it does not distinctly appear that all the evidence is given in the record; and this is so though the probability is that all the evidence is given: Gass v. Van Wagner, 63 M. 610.

54. A judge's finding of facts under circuit court rule 87 must be taken together as a whole; and where it states something which the other facts found show he could not have found literally as a fact, the supreme court will so construe it, if possible, as to make the finding consistent as a whole: First National Bank v. Crowley, 24 M. 492.

55. A finding should afford the means for its own interpretation and for fixing its own sense, and should be sufficiently distinct and definite to enable the court to decide upon the proper judgment; any clause that is equally open to two meanings, one of which imports lawful and the other unlawful action, should be received in the former sense: Brown v. McHugh, 36 M. 433.

56. Where, as a conclusion of law from a finding of facts, the judge holds the plaintiff entitled to recover, the finding must contain all the facts and circumstances necessary to make out a cause of action: Wood v. La Rue, 9 M. 153.

57. A judgment on a finding must rest on the actual state of facts as obtained and reported, and cannot be aided by facts not embodied in the finding. Nor can facts of equivocal import be made certain by conjecture, nor can grounds of illegality be presumed: Brown v. McHugh, 36 M. 433.

58. The finding of facts must set forth the facts found, and not merely the evidence tending to prove them: Trudo v. Anderson, 10 M. 357; Thomas v. Sprague, 13 M. 120.

59. A finding of facts should state conclusions of fact, and not merely evidence: Yelverton v. Steele, 40 M. 538.

60. A special finding by a trial judge must consist of something more than an informal statement made up of facts, items of evidence, offers of proof, rulings on objections and an opinion on the result. Such a document cannot be made the basis of a judgment: Steele v. Matteson, 50 M. 313.

61. It is not good practice, though it is not error, to include in the finding a statement of evidence or of the reasons for the court's conclusions: Tower v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 34 M. 328.

62. Conclusions from findings of fact must be drawn by the trial court and not left to the supreme court: Mills v. Van Camp, 41 M. 645.

63. In making a finding of facts a court may not only state all facts directly proved, but may include such as it may establish to its satisfaction by necessary inference: Neumann v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 57 M. 97.

64. A finding that does not decide everything submitted for decision cannot stand: Danaher v. Ward's Estate, 40 M. 300.

65. The sufficiency of a finding in the absence of a request for one more complete is determined by its consistency with the judgment: Sawyer v. Van Housen, 39 M. 89.

66. A finding is incomplete that does not state a distinct conclusion, or at least set forth sufficient facts to lead to one by inevitable inference: Danaher v. Ward's Estate, 40 M. 300.

67. A finding of facts which is not in express terms one of duress is not in legal effect equivalent thereto, unless the facts set forth are such that a conclusion of duress must inevitably follow; it is not enough that they lead to a strong inference of duress: Feller v. Green, 26 M. 70.

68. A finding that the condition of a contract in suit was performed "as the parties should be understood to have intended," and that the condition "ought to be held performed," is equivalent to a finding that it was performed according to the intent of the parties, or according to its legal effect: Tower v. D., L. & L. M. R. Co., 34 M. 328.

69. In an action on a promissory note a finding of facts that deals almost exclusively with a defence set up, and fails to find either that defendant gave the note in suit or that plaintiffs were holders of it, is fatally defective: Shelden v. Dutcher, 35 M. 10.

70. A special finding that plaintiff did not have unlimited authority to pay orders drawn by a third person upon defendant does not conflict with the fact shown by the testimony in the case that he had limited authority: Brennan v. Busch, 67 M. 670.

71. Where the finding of facts in a suit against two defendants fails to show any joint undertaking or liability of both, but rather shows a separate liability of one defendant only, it will not support a judgment against both defendants: Ives v. O'Brien, 38 M. 175.

72. Where a compromise is set up in defence, and is met with the claim of fraud in the compromise, there should be an explicit finding that fraud was committed against the plaintiffs, and not merely a recital of the facts relied upon as tending to prove it: Shelden v. Dutcher, 35 M. 10.

73. Where the execution of a paper is admitted for the purposes of the case by omitting to deny it on oath, a special finding that it had been executed would be surplusage, and a finding that it had not been would be struck out as outside the issue: Jacobson v. Miller, 41 M. 90.

74. A circuit judge may amend his finding of facts, and his action in so doing is not subject to review: Sweetzer v. Mead, 5 M. 33.

As to conclusiveness of findings, see ERROR, §§ 318-345, 469, 470.

As to presumptions in regard to findings, see ERROR, §§ 671-673, 675-681, 688.

As to effect of incorrect findings, rulings or conclusions, see ERROR, §§ 480, 481, 483, 484, 498, 499, 504, 505.

Necessity of exceptions to secure review of conclusions, see ERROR, §§ 296, 418-422.

As to assignment of error upon findings, see ERROR, §§ 163, 165, 166.

Further as to review of cases tried by court, see ERROR, §§ 261, 280, 281, 296, 299, 303, 304, 451, 505, 556, 606, 700-704; CASE MADE.

III. THE TRIAL.

(a) Impanelling jury.

75. Where the clerk fails to record the impanelling of the jury and proceeding to trial, but enough appears to show that they took place, the omission is to be disregarded: Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 M. 326.

(b) Right to open and close.

76. The right to open and close the argument belongs to the party entitled to open and close the proofs: Taff v. Hosmer, 14 M. 309.

(c) Conduct of trial.

1. Generally.

77. Parties should so manage their cases in the trial courts as to fully develop their merits in order that the verdict and judgment may be final; and in will cases this is particularly important: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

78. Circuit court rule No. 63, providing that on the trial of issues of fact "one counsel only on each side shall examine and cross-examine witnesses," does not prescribe that the counsel who is conducting the examination shall alone make objections or motions and argue them: Baumier v. Antiau, 65 M. 31.

79. A trial judge must repress needless scandal and gratuitous attacks on the character of parties: Rickabus v. Gott, 51 M. 227.

80. A trial judge ought not to sanction such an abuse of cross-examination as lies in seeking to entrap witnesses into making inadvertent statements which the examiners may use unfairly: Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 M. 355.

81. It is unfairness to a litigant warranting reversal for the trial judge to permit one party in testifying to make scandalous and irrelevant remarks without rebuke, while he sharply reprimands the adverse party for similar remarks, and strikes out his testimony on his own motion: Bulen v. Granger, 56 M. 207.

82. It is not error for the court to stop a witness who is proceeding, after objection by counsel on the other side, to testify as to advice of counsel which appears from the record to be mere hearsay: Kenyon v. Woodruff, 33 M. 810.

83. Where defendant is sued as principal upon a contract made by his alleged agent, and the question of authority is raised, plaintiff and his witnesses should not be allowed to mislead the jury by references to defendant as the party dealing or dealt with: Bond v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co., 62 M. 643.

84. Judges must take great care to say nothing in the hearing of jurors while a case is progressing which can possibly be construed to the prejudice of either party: Cronkhite v. Dickerson, 51 M. 178.

85. In an action for fraud in selling a second mortgage for a first, it was objected that testimony was too remote which showed that defendant, in giving the mortgage, had said he wanted it to trade, and could not do so if there was anything to show a prior mortgage. Defendant's counsel said the testimony was that the buyer of the mortgage had sought defendant, and not defendant him. Held prejudicial to defendant for the court to add in the hearing of the jury: "Yes, but he might have been lying in wait. If it had contained a covenant against encumbrances, and was a true statement of the situation of the property, it would itself have given the lie to the statement he is claimed to have made." Ibid.

86. It is improper for a trial judge to volunteer his notion of the purpose of a question when competent counsel, in asking it, have not seen fit to explain it; it is also improper for him to reflect, before the jury, upon the capacity and memory of counsel to whom clients have entrusted their interests; and it is positive error for him to state as a fact, when there is any question about it, that a witness has sworn to a particular statement: Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 M. 356.

87. It is not error for a court to speak of a paper as prima facie evidence if it is so, unless the remark is given further force, and allowed to exclude evidence against its conclusiveness: Bulen v. Granger, 56 M. 207.

88. A trial judge should not intimate his view of testimony on admitting it; nor should he reflect on the veracity of the witness by such a remark as that he will probably swear so-and-so anyway: People v. Hare, 57 M. 506.

89. Counsel should not be allowed to interrupt the court during a charge and hold a discussion with him upon the law and facts: Novock v. M. C. R. Co., 63 M. 121.

2. Opening case; arguments.

90. An opening to the jury should state the facts which it is expected to prove, but should not set forth evidence in detail: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 371.

91. Plaintiff's counsel in an action for libel was allowed, under objection, to read in his opening to the jury various articles which had appeared at different times in the paper that had published the alleged libel, the purpose being to introduce them as tending to show malice. Some of these, being afterward so introduced, were excluded from evidence; others were not offered at all. The judge charged that counsel had, "in his opening, read several articles which at the trial were finally excluded. These should also be withdrawn from your consideration." Held, that the charge was insufficient, as, in saying nothing of the articles which had been read, but not afterward offered in evidence, the jury were left to give them such weight as they chose; and, as extrinsic matters not properly before them, they vitiated the verdict: Ibid.

92. A. devised part of his farm to B., an adopted daughter, and died leaving a widow who became administratrix, the will not being produced. The widow married again, and died without being discharged as administratrix. She left all her property to her husband. B. married, had a son, lost her husband, and married again. Held that, in proceedings by her to establish the missing will, contestant's counsel had no right, in opening to the jury, to relate dealings between the second husband of A.'s widow and the proponent's son on one side, and the contestant on the other, in regard to the possession of the testator's farm, nor to narrate legal proceedings for its possession brought by proponent and the second husband against contestant. These matters were foreign to the issue. And it was improper to suggest that B.'s son was born too soon after her marriage, and hearsay for a witness to state what he had heard Mrs. A. say on the subject. It was also improper to show by a physician how soon birth happened, as this had no legal connection with the issue: Rickabus v. Gott, 51 M. 237.

93. In trover against the assignee of a chattel mortgage for property seized thereunder, plaintiff's counsel claimed, in his opening to the jury, that plaintiff owned the property and had never sold it; that defendant had never paid anything for the mortgage, and that before defendant took the mortgage it had been much more than paid in full. Held, that the opening was sufficient to notify the defence that plaintiff meant to go into a full investigation of the dealings which he had had with the mortgagee before giving the mortgage, and that under such an opening, although he had not used the word "usury," he could show that the mortgage did not represent any actual indebtedness: Canning v. Harlan, 50 M. 320.

94. Allowing an improper opening of a case may be such an abuse of discretion as to warrant reversal: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 371.

95. Offers of evidence made within the hearing of the jury may be such, even if rejected, as to require a reversal of the judgment: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 10.

96. An opening to the jury may be so unfair in its statement of irrelevant facts, and so well calculated to prejudice the jury improperly, as to justify setting aside a verdict obtained by the party making it. But the supreme court will not reverse a judgment for an unfair opening except in a very plain case: Porter v. Throop, 47 M. 313.

97. Defendant's counsel has a right to comment to the jury upon the plaintiff's omission to produce important witnesses who are within reach: Gavigan v. Scott, 51 M. 373.

98. Everything tending to influence a jury but not legally admissible should be kept from their knowledge during the trial: Scripps v. Reilly, 38 M. 10.

99. It is error to permit the charge and verdict in an action of trover to be read in the hearing of the jury on the trial of an action of replevin between the same parties as bearing on the subject-matter: Corning v. Woodin, 46 M. 44.

100. Permitting counsel to read authorities to the court and to argue thereon, after his opening argument to the jury, is discretionary with the court: Davis v. Gerber, 69 M. 246 (April 6, '88).

101. Counsel should not be permitted to read to the jury and comment upon cases found in the books of reports, upon the question, submitted to them as one of fact, whether a draft was presented for payment in a reasonable time: Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Allen, 11 M. 501.

102. Contestants in a will case offered in their opening to read to the jury a passage from a work on mental diseases, enumerating certain causes of insanity. Held, that the court properly refused to allow it: Fraser v. Jennison, 42 M. 206.

103. In an action for a negligent injury counsel may, it seems, in his opening to the jury, explain the evidence he intends to introduce by showing a diagram of the premises: Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 M. 494.

104. In an action for assault and battery counsel, in his argument to the jury, should not be allowed to use a map of the premises where the assault occurred, there being no proof of its correctness other than its adoption by the city council: Zube v. Weber, 67 M. 52.

105. A model may properly be exhibited to the jury in a case involving questions of construction, if there is testimony that it correctly represents distances and dimensions; its correctness, if disputed, is a question for the jury: Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 M. 413.

106. In an employee's action to recover for injuries sustained by being caught in his employer's machinery it is not error for the court to allow counsel, in addressing the jury, to state his understanding of the law and what he regards as defects therein: Kean v. Detroit Copper Mills, 66 M. 277.

107. The only facts which counsel are properly permitted to comment upon before a jury are such as have been legally elicited upon the trial of the cause: Carne v. Litchfield, 2 M. 340.

108. Counsel, in his argument to the jury, may state such inferences of fact as he in good faith draws from all the circumstances of the case, and what would be likely to follow if such inferences should turn out to be correct: Hart Manuf. Co. v. Mann's Boudoir Car Co., 65 M. 564.

109. Counsel have no right to comment upon papers that have not been put in evidence, or on the conduct of the parties in connection with them: Donovan v. Richmond, 61 M. 467.

110. Counsel in summing up a case must not go outside of the proper issue for the jury: Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 60 M. 267.

111. A trial judge must restrain counsel from commenting on testimony that has been excluded, if objection is made to such comments: Hollywood v. Reed, 57 M. 235.

112. A witness for defendant having testified that plaintiff requested him to get defendant drunk at his expense, defendant failed to connect such testimony with the case and allowed it to be stricken out. Held, that it was error to permit him to comment afterwards upon it, against objection, in his argument to the jury: Hitchcock v. Moore, 70 M. 113 (April 27, '88).

113. Counsel have no right to put before the jury, by way of argument, what they know of the case, outside of the testimony: Amperse v. Fleckenstein, 67 M. 247 (Oct. 13, '87).

114. Counsel must not state in the jury's presence what took place or what rulings were made on a former trial: Bulen v. Granger, 58 M. 274.

115. It is improper for counsel to state in the jury's hearing what occurred upon a former trial; and judgment will be reversed for such cause if it appears that the remarks were likely to prejudice the jury: Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 M. 514.

116. Where counsel, in summing up, appeal to a jury's prejudice against non-residents and make injurious remarks not justified by evidence, and exception is taken to this conduct, it is error if the trial judge omits to stop it and counteract its effect. So held where counsel said that attaching creditors adversely interested were hogs, and wanted to gobble up all the property: Bedford v. Penny, 58 M. 424.

117. A verdict will not be disturbed for extravagances of counsel in summoning up and urging inferences from facts in evidence, unless the trial court has plainly allowed them to mislead the jury: Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 240.

118. Extravagant or irrelevant remarks of counsel in the heat of argument to the jury, which are not apt to mislead or prejudice the jury — e. g., statements in a railroad negligence case in regard to the compensation received by defendant's attorneys, and alluding to Vanderbilt and Gould — are not ground of reversal: Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 M. 514.

119. Remarks of counsel in his closing argument before the jury, though referring to facts not in evidence, and commenting upon defendant's plea of the statute of limitations, and his failure to introduce certain evidence, were held not to justify a reversal, having evidently been made in answer to remarks of opposing counsel: Miner v. Lorman, 66 M. 530 (June 23, '87).

120. Improper remarks of counsel on the argument below are not necessarily ground for reversal unless they are clearly prejudicial: Donovan v. Richmond, 61 M. 467.

121. There is no absolute right on the part of counsel for defendants to cut off further argument to the jury by plaintiffs' counsel by declining to reply to the opening argument on plaintiffs' behalf, at least where other counsel for plaintiffs desire to be heard; but this matter comes within those discretionary rules which must, unless in extreme cases, leave the trial judge to determine the course of the procedure. It is the duty of the judge, however, to so regulate this matter as to give a fair opportunity for counsel to thoroughly present the whole case to the jury: Barden v. Briscoe, 36 M. 255.

122. Under circuit court rule 63 as amended in 1885, providing that counsel shall be allowed no less than one hour, if desired, to sum up the case, and not more than two hours, unless the court shall otherwise order, it is error for the court to limit the argument on each side to one hour in a criminal case in which two counsel are engaged for the defence who request longer time: People v. Labadie, 66 M. 702.

3. Conduct of jury.

123. Juries must be absolutely free from the influence or counsel of any party on whose affairs they are to act: Paul v. Detroit, 82 M. 103.

124. A jury, when sworn, is part of the court, and cannot be put beyond its supervision: Stowell v. Jackson Supervisors, 57 M. 81.

125. It is discretionary with a judge in an action for sidewalk injury to order the jury to inspect the place where the injury occurred; and it was held no abuse of discretion to allow them to do so six months after the injury took place: Williams v. Grand Rapids, 58 M. 271.

126. It is within a court's discretion to refuse to allow a jury to visit the premises where a job of building was done, the value of which is contested: Richmond v. Atkinson, 58 M. 413.

127. Where it does not appear from the record that the jury retired to consult, it will be presumed that they found their verdict without leaving their seats, so that no officer was necessary: The Milwaukee v. Hale, 1 D. 306.

128. That the jury were put in charge of an officer who had entered the complaint whereon respondent was being tried, and who had also testified in behalf of the people, is no ground for new trial: People v. Coughlin, 65 M. 704.

129. The jury have no right to take with them into their room papers and books that have been given in evidence; but if they do so, though it may be misbehavior in them, it will not set aside the verdict: Findley v. People, 1 M. 234.

130. A jury in a circuit court has no concern with the appeal papers in a case brought up from before a justice: Richardson v. McGoldrick, 43 M. 476.

131. Jurors cannot ordinarily take books, papers and depositions with them to the jury-room. But the irregularity of permitting it is waived by failing to object thereto: Chadwick v. Chadwick, 52 M. 545.

132. The objection that the jury took to their room a memorandum made by counsel cannot be raised for the first time in the supreme court: Robinson v. Walsh, 54 M. 506.

133. It is discretionary with the trial judge whether he will grant or refuse the request of a party that the jury be allowed to take a written exhibit to the jury-room: Canning v. Harlan, 50 M. 320.

134. Where the genuineness of a document is in dispute the jury should not be permitted to take it to their room for the purpose of comparing the handwriting of the body thereof with that of the signature to aid them in determining whether it is a forgery: Foster's Will, 34 M. 21.

135. Where a will is in litigation there is no error in refusing to require the jury to take photographic copies of it to the jury-room, or, indeed, to take the original will itself, if the jury does not ask for it and a party objects. On the other hand, there may be no error in permitting the use of photographic copies if their identity and correctness are secured: Ibid.

136. It is sometimes proper to allow the jury to take to the jury-room documents which have been admitted in evidence; but it should not be allowed except in cases where the propriety of it is very obvious, and in general not when either party objects: Kalamazoo Novelty Manuf. Co. v. McAlister, 36 M. 327.

137. Permitting the jury, against objection, to take with them to their room a book of which only three pages had been introduced in evidence, with no other safeguard against their examining and giving consideration to those parts of the book which had not been made evidence, except a direction to them to look only on a specified page, is error. And whether the rest of the book should be sealed up, quere: Ibid.

138. It is not error, and is in accord with established practice, to permit a jury to take to the jury-room a computation made by the plaintiff's attorney showing the amount claimed to be due; it is not evidence, and the jury are not bound thereby. (But see infra, § 143): Millar v. Cuddy, 43 M. 273.

139. Statements of account by both parties to an action for the breach of a contract of sale may properly be allowed to be taken to the jury-room, if the jury desires, subject to objection: Wonderly v. Holmes Lumber Co., 56 M. 412.

140. Where the articles shown to have been in a garnishee's possession at the time of the service of the writ are too numerous for the jury to remember them without a written memorandum, they may take a list of such articles to their room: Bethel v. Linn, 63 M. 464.

141. A paper can be taken to the jury-room by the judge's permission, if there is no question as to its authenticity, but only as to its contents. But such permission is reviewable in the light of results: Bulen v. Granger, 63 M. 311.

142. The jury should not be allowed to take into the jury-room the instructions marked by the court as "given;" nor, unless by consent of the parties, any paper used in the cause, unless it may be items of an account: Hewitt v. F. & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61 (Oct. 6, '87).

143. Memoranda or statements made by counsel shall not, unless by consent of the opposing party, be given to the jury to be used by them in the jury-room. (Overruling Millar v. Cuddy, 43 M. 274): Harroun v. C. & W. M. R. Co., 68 M. 208.

144. Permitting the jury to take to their room a memorandum of plaintiff's counsel containing the highest estimates made by his witnesses as to the value of animals negligently killed by defendant, held harmless error, under the circumstances of the case: Ibid.

145. The only exception to the rule forbidding the jury to take with them to their room memoranda or statements of counsel exists in cases involving the investigation of long accounts, where numerous items are to be passed upon, and where there are no bills of particulars; the trial judge may, in his discretion, permit such taking in such cases: Ibid.

146. After the jury have gone out further instructions should not be given them, except in open court in the presence of the parties: Snyder v. Wilson, 65 M. 336.

147. In forcible entry proceedings the jury, after retiring, asked instructions as to their verdict, and the commissioner who tried the case told them it should be in form either guilty or not guilty. It did not appear that the parties complaining of this action were absent, and the commissioner did not know whether their counsel were present. Held, that there was no error apparent, and that a complaint of unauthorized communication with the jury would not be sustained: Knapp v. Gamsby, 47 M. 375.

148. In an action involving the measurement of logs sold, the jury were charged that if the parties agreed that a certain scale should be followed unless the purchaser was notified to the contrary, that scale must govern; but if they did not so agree, and the vendor told the purchaser to notify him if he wanted the logs rescaled, and the purchaser said nothing, it would not be an assent. Afterwards the court sent for the jury and told them, in the absence of the vendor's counsel, that he did not mean to charge them that they could not find an assent from the purchaser's silence, and that they might draw their own inferences from the conduct of the parties. Held, that the original charge would not have been erroneous unless the notice to the purchaser was given before the contract was closed and the logs paid for, and that the absence of the vendor's counsel did not prejudice him when the possible false impression was corrected: Smith v. Kelly, 43 M. 390.

149. A jury, after being discharged, were called back to answer some special questions that had been submitted to them but were not answered when they gave their general verdict. Some of the jurors had reached the street. The answers were consistent with the general verdict and made no change in the judgment. Held that, in the absence of any objection to the general verdict, there was no prejudicial error: Dailey v. Douglass, 40 M. 557.

150. The officer having the jury in charge may not remain in their room during their deliberations, and if he does so it is ground for a new trial: People v. Knapp, 42 M. 267.

151. A circuit judge may be compelled by mandamus to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial because of the jury's communicating and drinking with outside persons after being sent out to consider their verdict: Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 M. 586.

152. New trial need not be granted on the ground that the jury were not kept in a private place until they rendered their verdict, if they were not permitted to leave their room until after they had agreed upon the verdict: People v. Francis, 52 M. 575.

Further as to communications with jury, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 206-210.

(d) Special questions and answers; failure to answer.

153. Special questions to the jury are to enable the court to learn what view they take of the material issues, and to correct wrong inferences from the facts which they find to exist: Cole v. Boyd, 47 M. 98.

154. The purpose of having special findings is to know what the rights of the parties are, and to have them spread upon the records: Probate Judge v. Abbott, 50 M. 479.

155. It was right in an action of ejectment to refuse to submit to the jury as a separate question, under H. S. § 7606, an inquiry so general as "By what acts did defendant's ancestor claim to hold possession adversely to plaintiff?" Questions submitted under this statute must be particular questions of fact, and such as involve legal consequences and have some controlling force in reaching a conclusion: Dubois v. Campau, 28 M. 804.

156. As parties have the right to test the correctness of a general verdict by submitting special interrogatories upon particular questions of fact involving legal consequences that would have controlling force in reaching a conclusion, a court cannot refuse to submit such questions: Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 83 M. 241.

157. Special questions can only be submitted to a jury in cases where their verdict is conclusive upon the facts found; not, for example, upon items of an administrator's account: Loomis v. Armstrong, 68 M. 355.

158. It is not error to decline to put to the jury special questions that either have no evidence to warrant them, or relate to undisputed points or inconclusive facts. Such questions should be few and simple, pertinent and material to the issue, and such as the evidence would oblige the jury to pass on: Fowler v. Hoffman, 81 M. 215.

159. The jury cannot be required to find specially upon any question the answer to which would in no way affect a general verdict: Sheahan v. Barry, 27 M. 217.

160. Special questions the answers to which would be inconclusive and powerless to control a general verdict should be withheld: Frankenberg v. First National Bank, 38 M. 46; Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 83 M. 241; Michigan Paneling Co. v. Parsell, 38 M. 475; Swift v. Plesmer, 39 M. 178; Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 M. 459; Dickerson v. Dickerson, 50 M. 37; Power v. Harlow, 57 M. 107.

161. Special questions that are immaterial to the issue are properly withheld: Hart Manuf. Co. v. Mann's Boudoir Car Co., 65 M. 564; Miner v. Vedder, 66 M. 101 (May 5, '87).

162. An admission by a party to a suit does not relieve the judge from the duty of submitting to the jury a special question as to the admitted fact when the latter affects a further essential question in settling the case: Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 83 M. 241.

163. Requests for special findings cannot be refused on the ground that the parties had agreed on the facts in the presence of the jury; the facts must be set forth on the record, and until they are they cannot be regarded as settled: Probate Judge v. Abbott, 50 M. 479.

164. In an action for negligence, special questions should not be submitted requiring the jury to specify what defendant did or omitted; if the jury is satisfied from all the circumstances that he was wanting in due care, plaintiff is entitled to a general verdict: Peer v. Ryan, 54 M. 224.

165. Special questions may properly be submitted to the jury in a libel suit, if the case is a proper one for the jury, to determine whether defendant acted in good faith and with due care: Peoples v. Detroit P. & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

166. It is not error to refuse to submit special questions upon immaterial, inconclusive or admitted matters: Pigott v. Engle, 60 M. 221.

167. Refusal to submit a question for specific findings is not error when it involves facts from which no legal conclusion can be drawn: People v. White, 58 M. 538.

168. It is not error to refuse to submit a specific question to the jury when another is submitted that is better adapted to the case: Chilson v. Wilson, 38 M. 267.

169. It is not error to withhold a special question where it involves law rather than fact and is covered by instructions: Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 M. 459.

170. Refusal to submit special questions that cannot control the result is not error: Castner v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co., 50 M. 273.

171. Where special questions to the jury do not meet the whole case the defect must be pointed out when they are submitted, and if it is not, the special findings are not open to minute criticism: Dupont v. Starring, 42 M. 492.

172. In a case of a contested boundary between two city lots the jury were asked to find specially how long the old line fence had stood and been regarded as the boundary line. Held, that as the establishment of a line by adverse claim and acquiescence was a subject of dispute, it was to be presumed that the jury supposed the questions contemplated such a state of things, and not merely a case in which no question as to the correctness of the line had ever arisen: Ibid.

173. It is error to instruct a jury that if they are of opinion that there is not sufficient evidence to satisfy their minds as to a special question proposed to them under H. S. § 7606, they may so state, and are not obliged to answer it absolutely. No question should be put to them which is not material to the inquiry, and upon every material question one party or the other holds the affirmative, and if he fails to make out his case upon it by the evidence, the finding should be against him: Crane v. Reeder, 25 M. 303.

174. A prima facie showing in a civil case, if not disproved, entitles the party holding the affirmative to a verdict, even though the showing may not be such as fully to satisfy the mind. A special question to a jury in the form, "Are you satisfied that," etc., is therefore likely to be unfair to the side against whose showing it is directed, and should be rejected, being also inadmissible under the common law, where verdicts always find either the facts or the legal conclusions from them: Ibid.

175. It is not a valid charge of error that the questions to the jury were put and answered in the court room. It is never necessary to require the jury to withdraw unless they desire it: Bottomley v. Goldsmith, 36 M. 28.

176. Failure to answer special questions submitted to the jury cannot affect the verdict against the party asking them where answers in his favor would not affect the general result: Johnson v. Continental Ins. Co., 39 M. 33.

177. A general verdict need not be excluded for the failure of the jury to answer special questions that are of no legal consequence: Pettibone v. Maclem, 45 M. 381.

178. It is no ground for reversal that the jury returned no answers to special questions as to facts that were purely collateral and were not involved in the real issues: Toulman v. Swain, 47 M. 82.

179. Where one who sues on a promissory note claims to be a bona fide holder of it, and the defence is that it was given for intoxicating liquors, it is not a material or proper question for the jury whether the plaintiff, knowing the business of the payees, did not purposely avoid inquiring into the consideration of the note; and their omission to answer this as a special question is therefore of no consequence: Bottomley v. Goldsmith, 36 M. 27.

180. Juries cannot be compelled to answer special interrogatories, but their failure to answer or find any affirmative fact necessary to sustain their verdict nullifies the verdict, and the result is a mistrial: Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 33 M. 241.

181. The findings actually made in response to specific questions do not cure the errors committed on the trial, where some proper questions are not answered at all, and others are so answered that the responses are in law no findings at all and cannot be made the basis for any conclusion. So far as relevant questions properly put to the jury remain unanswered there is a mistrial: Crane v. Reeder, 25 M. 303.

182. Mistrial occurs where the jury say that they do not know, in answer to special questions that, under the charge and evidence, are material to the issue: Wilson v. Pontiac, O. & P. Austin R. Co., 57 M. 155.

183. Where a jury answered a special question by saying they had no means of knowing, and that they did not know from the evidence, and afterwards answered simply that they did not know, and court and counsel treated the answer as a negative, it was so treated in the supreme court: Maclean v. Scripps, 52 M. 215.

184. A general verdict was given for the plaintiff in a libel suit based on the republication of statements already published in Canada, and affecting the reputation of plaintiff, who was a professor in the University of Michigan. The jury were then asked specially whether the publication had been made because the charges had been published generally in Canadian papers, injuriously affecting, in plaintiff's opinion, the best interests of the university, and for the purpose of calling attention thereto as a matter of public duty, and in order that there might be a public investigation by the regents of the university. The jury answered, as to previous publication, "We say not generally to his knowledge, the evidence only going to show he had seen the two Tilsonburg papers;" and as to the purpose of the republication they answered negatively. They afterwards answered the whole question in the negative. Held, that the answers were legally identical: Ibid.

185. Special questions were submitted to a jury bearing upon the liability of defendants as partners. If answered in one way such a liability could not be established. They gave a general verdict for the plaintiffs, but returned that they were not able to agree upon any one of the special questions. H. S. § 7606 makes the special findings control the general verdict. Held, that a direction by the court that, having found a general verdict, they were bound to answer the special questions in harmony with it, and instructing them how to frame such replies, was error, as its effect was that the court, and not the jury, decided the material issues: Cole v. Boyd, 47 M. 98.

186. Where a special question to the jury as to whether they found a machine was sold with a recommendation or a warranty that it would do good work was answered yes, it was held that the answer did not determine whether they found a warranty or a mere recommendation: Worth v. McConnell, 42 M. 473.

(e) The verdict.

As to verdicts in justices' courts, see JUDGES OF THE PEACE, §§ 223-229.

As to the verdict and findings in criminal cases, see CRIMES, §§ 966-982.

As to aid by verdict of defects in pleadings, etc., see PLEADINGS, X.

1. Upon what based; consistency with pleadings or special findings.

187. A general verdict is bad if a single count in the declaration is fatally erroneous: Stange v. Clemens, 17 M. 403.

188. Where action is brought against defendants jointly on a several obligation there should be a verdict for defendants: Larkin v. Buttersfeld, 29 M. 254.

189. A verdict must be based upon evidence; the jury cannot assume facts in default of evidence: Hutchinson v. Dubois, 45 M. 148; Marquette v. Ward, 50 M. 174.

190. A jury should not be allowed to assume the existence of fraud or oppression where there is no proof thereof: Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 M. 274.

191. The jury, in an action for the value of surgical services, has no right to find malpractice without testimony from persons who are qualified to give opinions on the methods of treatment: Wood v. Barker, 49 M. 295.

192. A jury has no right to ignore testimony that has not been discredited, and form independent conclusions, without testimony, on matters that require proof beyond their conjectures or opinions: Ibid.

193. Suspicion will not justify a verdict in the absence of proof: Campbell v. Sherman, 49 M. 534.

194. A verdict based on one juror's statements of fact, not made upon the witness-stand, is illegal and in violation of the juror's oath: Foster's Will, 34 M. 21.

195. The answer of a jury to a special question is of no account if based on testimony improperly received: Peoples v. Detroit Post & T. Co., 54 M. 457.

196. The finding of the jury, in answer to a special question that a party acted in good faith in purchasing land, is not binding where the record shows that the jury did not apply the proper legal standard to test the good faith of the purchase under the facts and circumstances of the case: Oliver v. Sanborn, 60 M. 346.

197. Unless the jury abuse its discretion a verdict is not to be set aside merely because it does not appear exactly how it was made up: Swift v. Plessner, 39 M. 178.

198. No greater preponderance of proof is required to authorize a verdict in one civil action than in another: Elliott v. Van Buren, 33 M. 49.

And see EVIDENCE, §§ 1450-1462.

199. A verdict must always be read in the light of the pleadings, and when it refers to documents annexed to it they must be regarded as incorporated in it; and, if not annexed, the verdict may be aided by the judge's notes, where they will suffice for that purpose: Keeler v. Robertson, 27 M. 116.

200. The general verdict of a jury is controlled by its special finding when the latter is so inconsistent with the verdict as to fail in some essential particulars to support it: Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 83 M. 241.

201. A verdict should not be sustained where, on the whole special finding, it is reasonably certain that it ought not to be: Dupont v. Starring, 42 M. 492.

202. The whole verdict of a jury must be construed together; and general findings, or conclusions inconsistent with special findings, will be disregarded as wrong conclusions upon facts found: Keeler v. Robertson, 27 M. 116.

203. Where two special findings are inconsistent with each other, but only one of them is inconsistent with the general verdict, they neutralize each other and leave the general verdict to stand: Foster v. Gaffield, 84 M. 856.

204. The finding of a jury is contradictory and inconclusive where the question submitted involves matter of law as well as of fact, and the findings upon matters of fact show that there was no basis for the conclusion which they reached upon the whole question: Loomis v. Rogers Township Board, 58 M. 135.

2. Form; amendment.

As to certainty and other requisites of verdicts in EJECTMENT, see that title, §§ 177-179.

As to verdict where double or treble damages are claimed, see DAMAGES, §§ 411, 484, 435, 438-440, 443.

205. Leave to find a sealed verdict should be granted where there is likely to be prolonged delay after agreement before the verdict can be received: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

206. The statute authorizing special questions to be submitted to the jury contemplates their aiding or explaining a general verdict, but does not take away the power to find special verdicts: Hendrickson v. Walker, 32 M. 68.

207. The jury may find a special verdict, but the court cannot compel them to do so, or to give reasons for a general finding: Peck v. Snyder, 13 M. 21.

208. A jury cannot be required to report the testimony on which they have found: Turner v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 55 M. 236.

209. Where there are two issues,—the general issue and an issue on a special plea,—and the jury find a verdict for the plaintiff on the general issue, but render no verdict on the other issue, the judgment will not be reversed if the verdict on the general issue negatives the special plea of defendant on which the other issue was joined, and the jury could not have found for the plaintiff had defendant established the truth of his special plea: Brooks v. Delrhyple, 1 M. 145.

210. A general verdict in a case submitted to the jury on more than one point does not show how they determined either question considered alone: Dewey v. Alpena School District, 48 M. 480.

211. Defendant in a libel suit is entitled to have the jury say upon what count or counts they found against him, if the structure of the declaration and the state of the facts leave it doubtful: Scripps v. Reilly, 35 M. 372.

212. The jury, in rendering a special verdict, should confine themselves to the facts, and leave the court to render such judgment upon the facts so found as the law warrants: Erwin v. Clark, 13 M. 10.

213. In the case of a special verdict, no facts can be assumed not therein stated, nor can any be inferred from those found; but the finding must be taken as made, subject, however, to the allegations in the pleadings: Buckley v. Great Western R. Co., 18 M. 121.

214. The statute authorizing special findings and a judgment thereon instead of on the general verdict, on the ground that the verdict and findings are inconsistent, contemplates that the trial court will have knowledge of the facts developed on the trial to aid it in determining the consistency of the general verdict with the special findings; as a general verdict does not set forth the elementary facts required for its production, the determination involves a consideration of something beyond a mere comparison of the language of the verdict and the findings: Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 M. 400.

215. Though the verdict may not conclude formally or punctually in the words of the issue, yet if the point in issue can be concluded out of the finding the court will work it into form according to the justice of the case: Lamberton v. Foote, 1 D. 102; Lockwood v. Drake, 1 M. 14.

216. The want of the technical conclusion, commonly inserted with an alternative finding according to the court's determination on the law, does not affect the force or validity of a special verdict; where the jury find the facts, they find for the party who should prevail on those facts, and he is entitled to judgment: Hendrickson v. Walker, 32 M. 63.

217. A verdict in assumpsit, the plea being the general issue, "that the defendant is guilty, in manner and form as alleged in the declaration," is a mere clerical error, properly amendable, and judgment may be rendered thereon for the damages thereby assessed: Lincoln v. Cambria Iron Co., 108 U. S. 412.

218. Juries rarely give very formal verdicts; and inquiries of the jurors in court, and amendments for the purpose of putting in due form what the jury mean by their finding, are unobjectionable: Sleight v. Henning, 13 M. 371.

219. A jury brought in a sealed verdict, "We find for the plaintiff the full amount claimed by him on the note." It seems that it is not objectionable to permit the plaintiff's counsel to state to the jury what the amount was, and for them to return a verdict for that amount in due form: Olcott v. Hanson, 12 M. 452.

220. Where a purchaser of goods has left them with the vendor and the latter recovers judgment for their value, the force of the verdict is not destroyed by the additional direction that plaintiff deliver them to defendant. This merely states the legal consequence of the judgment, and may be rejected as surplusage: Rawson v. McElvaine, 49 M. 194.

As to certainty of verdict in ejectment, see EJECTMENT, §§ 177, 178.

As to amendment of verdict before trebling damages, see DAMAGES, § 435.

3. What covers; conclusiveness.

221. In trover for goods which plaintiff had sold in reliance on false representations, and defendant had seized upon a chattel mortgage given him for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff, a general verdict in plaintiff's favor covers the questions of defendant's participation in or knowledge of the fraud, if those questions were submitted to the jury: Robinson v. Walsh, 54 M. 506.

222. Where the issue submitted was whether an alleged will was the decedent's last will, and whether at the time of executing it he was of sound disposing mind and not under the influence of the devisee named therein, a verdict that the will was decedent's last will, etc., and that at the time of executing it he was of sound disposing mind and memory and capable of disposing of his property by will, was held to cover the whole issue and to negative all undue influence: White v. Bailey, 10 M. 155.

223. The terms of the verdict control as to what damages shall be trebled in trespass after a forcible entry or detainer: Houser v. Melcher, 40 M. 185.

224. The conclusion of a jury upon a question of fact fairly submitted to it is final: Filer v. Jenks, 38 M. 585.

225. Where there was evidence tending to show a promise made by an authorized agent of defendant to pay plaintiff a given sum for his services, and the facts have been properly submitted to the jury, who have found for plaintiff, their verdict is final: Wyman v. Crowley, 33 M. 84.

226. A verdict is conclusive as to the facts necessary to be found in order to support the plaintiff's claim: Boglarsky v. Singer Manuf. Co., 65 M. 510.

227. Where special damages are claimed, and the case is submitted under such instructions as would require the jury to return a verdict therefor if there were any, a verdict for defendant determines that none were suffered: Clark v. Wiles, 54 M. 824.

228. Facts cannot be considered established by the finding of a jury, if the finding was based on improper testimony and an erroneous charge: Fairbanks v. Bennett, 52 M. 61.

229. Where a case is left to the jury on the question of damages only, the verdict must stand unless a sufficient justification appears from defendant's showing: Davis v. Burgess, 54 M. 514.

230. One who submits a special question to the jury is bound by an adverse finding: Stevens v. Rose, 69 M. 259.

231. A verdict is no precedent, and settles nothing but the immediate controversy to which it relates: McGinnis v. Canada Southern Bridge Co., 49 M. 466.

As to conclusiveness of verdict, see ERROR, §§ 303-316.

As to effect of verdict out of chancery, see EQUITY, § 1289.

4. Directing verdict; duress.

232. The power to direct a verdict for defendant on counsel's presentation of plaintiff's case must be cautiously exercised; and if the case as stated is sufficient except on some particular point, the judge should always direct attention to the defect, so the omission may be supplied if accidental: Spicer v. Bonker, 45 M. 630.

233. It is not good practice to decide, upon the opening of counsel, that there is no cause of action, and the cases are exceptional where it can safely be done: Leonard v. Beaudry, 68 M. 312.

234. Where, in any view that can be taken of the testimony, a party is entitled to a verdict, he has a right to a charge accordingly: Pennsylvania Mining Co. v. Brady, 16 M. 332.

235. A trial judge can direct a verdict for defendant when plaintiff offers no evidence to establish a necessary part of his case: Spicer v. Bonker, 45 M. 630.

236. Where there is a total defect of evidence as to any fact essential to plaintiff's case, the case should be taken from the jury: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 64 M. 98.

237. Where all the material facts are undisputed, and plaintiff has failed to make out a case, the court should direct a verdict for defendant: McGrath v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co., 57 M. 555; Dondero v. Frumveller, 61 M. 440.

238. Where the plaintiff on the stand as a witness states his case so as to show he has no cause of action, and there is no attempt at a qualifying explanation by other witnesses, he has no ground of complaint if the court charge the jury that no recovery is justifiable: Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 20 M. 105.

239. An instruction to find for defendant is not ground for complaint where the evidence on any point essential to recovery is open to only one meaning and that is plainly adverse to plaintiff: Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 M. 255.

240. A case must be absolutely free from conflict before it can be taken from the jury: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

241. A case can be taken from the jury on the facts only when it is susceptible of but one just opinion: Teipel v. Hilsendegen, 44 M. 461.

242. A trial judge should never take a case from the jury on the evidence unless it is very clear; and when he does so he should specify the particular ground or grounds of his ruling: Demill v. Moffat, 45 M. 410.

243. It is only where there is no evidence upon some material point in plaintiff's case that the court can take the case from the jury: Goodale v. Portage Lake Bridge Co., 55 M. 418; People v. Eaton, 59 M. 559; Carver v. Detroit & S. P. R. Co., 61 M. 584.

244. A case cannot be taken from the jury unless it is plain, upon the strongest showing made by any of the witnesses, that there is no cause of action: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

245. Where there is any evidence to sustain plaintiff's case the case should not be taken from the jury: Stockham v. Cheney, 62 M. 10.

246. Where the evidence has a legal tendency to make out a proper case in all its parts, its weight and sufficiency, however slight, is a question for the jury alone: Conely v. McDonald, 40 M. 150.

247. A verdict should not be directed for defendant where the main question is one of fact and plaintiff has introduced evidence tending to maintain his side: Hart Manuf. Co. v. Mann's Boudoir Car Co., 65 M. 564.

248. Where there is some evidence tending to sustain plaintiff's theory the case is one for the jury: Charon v. Roby Lumber Co., 66 M. 68.

249. Where there is evidence, though contradicted, from which a promise on defendant's part to pay for services rendered him can be implied, the question is for the jury: Strong v. Saunders, 15 M. 339.

250. A case ought not to be taken from the jury where, if the testimony that makes for plaintiff is to be believed, defendant is liable: Alexander v. Big Rapids, 70 M. 224 (May 11, '88).

251. A verdict should not be directed for defendant unless all the testimony in plaintiff's favor, from his own or defendant's witnesses, bearing upon the issues, if accepted as true and given the most favorable construction, fails to make out a prima facie case: Gibbons v. Farwell, 63 M. 344.

252. Where there is some testimony in a case from which inferences may be drawn proper to charge defendant, the court should not direct a verdict for him: Weyburn v. Kipp's Estate, 63 M. 79.

253. In determining whether a case has been properly taken from the jury, such evidence as has been disregarded must be assumed to be true: Scandinavian Society v. Eggan, 59 M. 65.

254. In determining whether the evidence has any tendency to support plaintiff's case, the testimony given by him must be taken as true: Sheldon v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 59 M. 173.

255. In deciding whether a case should go to the jury, plaintiff has a right to have his own side of the controversy assumed to be true, and it cannot be affected by the counterproofs: Strand v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 M. 216.

256. If plaintiff's testimony establishes a case, it cannot be taken from the jury by reason of testimony introduced for the defence: Doyle v. Mizner, 40 M. 161.

257. The testimony given on defendant's part cannot be considered in determining whether plaintiff is entitled to go to the jury upon the case made by him: Guggenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 150 (June 9, '87).

258. A mere scintilla of evidence does not give the case to the jury: Conely v. McDonald, 40 M. 150; Rosie v. Willard, 44 M. 383.

259. An action for causing worthless paper to be sold to plaintiff should not be taken from the jury if there is evidence that defendant suggested and was concerned in getting up the paper; that he purposed using it to get money; that he let the person who made the sale have it, without consideration, in order to trade it off, and that he expected part of the proceeds: Adams v. Bowman, 51 M. 189.

260. A charge to the jury in an ejectment suit "that the plaintiffs cannot recover in the action because the evidence does not show any right to recover the possession of any share, interest or portion of the premises, at the commencement of the suit," takes the whole case away from the jury, and can only be sustained where there is no evidence whatever tending to make out a case for plaintiffs: Dubois v. Campau, 24 M. 360.

261. A man sued another for the value of a beer-wagon, which plaintiff claimed to own, but which defendant had bought from plaintiff's step-father. The evidence tended to show that the seller was the original owner, but that the plaintiff had authorized his mother to use his money in buying it from a man who had bought it on a foreclosure against the step-father. The purchaser had also been garnished by a creditor of the step-father and compelled to pay him all that remained of the purchase price. Held, that the case was for the jury, and that plaintiff was entitled to have their judgment on his presentation: Bider v. Kern, 46 M. 455.

262. Where the elements of an alleged estoppel relied upon as a defence in trover are neither admitted nor conclusively ascertained, and there is evidence tending to show plaintiff's ownership, the case is one for the jury under proper instruction, and should not be taken from them: Ashman v. Epsteine, 50 M. 360.

263. It is not open to a defendant to claim that a point essential to the case against him was not made out where he himself supplied the omission in making his defence: Green v. Gill, 47 M. 86.

264. Conflicting evidence must go to the jury where a finding upon it is possible in law: Maas v. White, 37 M. 126.

265. It is error for the court to direct a verdict upon a point where the testimony conflicts: Buhl Iron Works v. Teuton, 67 M. 623 (Jan. 5, '88).

266. Where the vendee in a land contract sued to recover back the purchase money paid to his vendor, who had conveyed the lands to another, a conflict of evidence arose as to whether this conveyance was by the consent of such vendee. Held error to take the question away from the jury and to direct them to find for the defendant: Atkinson v. Scott, 36 M. 19.

267. A trial judge cannot deprive the jury of its right of judgment, even though the evidence submitted is positive and in part contradicted. But if the jury returns a perverse verdict he may set it aside and order a new trial: Woodin v. Durfee, 46 M. 424.

268. A jury are properly instructed to find for plaintiff if his claim is supported by undisputed testimony which they believe: Rasch v. Bissell, 52 M. 456.

269. In an action for an assault, an instruction that, if the jury believed plaintiff's statements after considering defendant's denial and all other evidence, verdict should be for plaintiff, is not objectionable as taking from the jury the consideration of all other questions except the truth of plaintiff's statements; especially where the court, in immediate connection with such instruction, called attention to the entire evidence: Schenk v. Dunkelow, 70 M. 89.

270. A trial judge has a right to direct the jury's attention to any essential point in the case which he thinks the plaintiff has given no evidence fairly tending to prove; and he may advise them to render verdict accordingly: Demill v. Moffat, 45 M. 410.

271. In a case proper for the jury, the court offered to direct a verdict for defendant, but the offer was not accepted, and the case went to the jury, who found for defendant; the court's offer was held error: Wright v. Towle, 67 M. 255.

272. A jury, after being out for one day, sent word to the judge that they could not agree. The judge sent back word that he did not believe it yet, and added the suggestion that they had better agree that night, as he was going away and should not be back until the second day after, and they might not get discharged until he returned. The verdict was returned within an hour afterwards. Held, that it must be set aside as obtained by duress: Pierce v. Pierce, 38 M. 412.

273. After the jury had retired they returned into court and informed the judge that they had not agreed, but "stood eleven to one, and divided on $200." He thereupon told them, "If that is the only difference, it would be better for the county and the parties on both sides that one or both sides yield so as to come together. It would be unfortunate for all to have a disagreement when the difference is so small." Held to be error: Goodsell v. Seeley, 46 M. 623.

274. A jury, after being out five hours, reported that they could not agree upon a verdict. Held, that instructions on their duty to reconcile their views and reach a verdict if consistent with their consciences, rather than that the parties should be put to the trouble and expense of trying the case again, were not erroneous if nothing was said to the prejudice of either party: Pierce v. Rehfsuss, 85 M. 54.

(f) Nonsuit.

275. The court cannot compel a plaintiff to become nonsuit. He has always a right, if he chooses, to go to the jury with his case: Cahill v. Kalamazoo Mut. Ins. Co., 2 D. 124.

276. A defendant asking for judgment in case of nonsuit must make out a complete case within the reason on which his application rests and in strict conformity to the rules and practice of the court: Hill v. Webber, 50 M. 142.

277. A motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit is a special motion, and must be founded upon affidavit showing the facts necessary to entitle the party to it: Storey v. Child, 2 M. 107.

278. A motion for judgment as in case of nonsuit on plaintiff's neglect to bring on the cause at either of the first two terms following joinder of issue is premature if made before the second term has opened: Hill v. Webber, 50 M. 142.

279. Nonsuit cannot be ordered for failure to file a bill of particulars in an action for slander where the affidavits holding defendant to bail fully set out the facts: Gibbs v. Superior Court Judge, 53 M. 496.

280. Whether nonsuit can be taken after set-off has been pleaded and defendant has claimed judgment for a balance, quere. Order permitting it affirmed by equal division: Canada Merchants' Bank v. Schulenberg, 54 M. 49. (Act 123 of 1885 now forbids such nonsuit unless defendant consents.)

281. Where, on motion to set aside a nonsuit, an order has been granted that the nonsuit be set aside on payment of costs, and the defendants, before the costs had been paid, noticed the cause for trial, this would operate as a waiver of the nonsuit and authorize the plaintiff to proceed to trial on such notice; but if plaintiff was in doubt concerning the waiver and disputed the right to have the case placed on the trial docket, knowing it was placed there, he should have moved to strike it off, and, failing in this, the court was justified in considering the case as standing regularly for trial and in ordering a second nonsuit: Wine-man v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 35 M. 498.

282. A vacated nonsuit leaves the entire case open for hearing: Johnson v. Shepard, 85 M. 115.

283. A reinstated cause standing for trial is subject to the same rules as any other; and where the failure to have the party in the court when called arose out of a misapprehension, a motion to open a nonsuit should not be disallowed on grounds relating rather to public convenience than to the mutual rights of the parties: Lindsay v. Wayne Circuit Judges, 63 M. 735.

284. Setting aside a nonsuit is discretionary with the court: Hoffman v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 37 M. 131.

285. A nonsuit was set aside on condition of payment of costs by the plaintiff. Afterwards defendants stipulated in writing, unconditionally, to try the cause on a certain day. Held to be a waiver of the prior payment of costs: Higley v. Lant, 3 M. 612.

(g) New trial.

In ejectment, see EJECTMENT, IX.

When ordered on reversal, see ERROR, §§ 702-717; CRIMES, §§ 1284-1289.

When new trial in actions at law granted by chancery, see EQUITY, §§ 520-522.

286. H. S. § 7613, allowing the successor of a trial judge to settle a bill of exceptions on the stenographer's minutes, did not deprive a party of the right to a new trial which had become fixed by the judge's death before exception could be settled: People v. Superior Court Judge, 40 M. 680; Stebbins v. Field, 41 M. 373.

287. Courts of record are vested with general discretionary power on the subject of granting new trials; which power is judicial, and not arbitrary: Loree v. Reeves, 2 M. 133.

288. The circuit court has discretion to grant or refuse a new trial; and this discretion is not, usually, reviewable: Dibble v. Rogers, 2 M. 404; Bourke v. James, 4 M. 336; Cuddy v. Major, 12 M. 368; Sleight v. Henning, 12 M. 371; Penn. Mining Co. v. Brady, 14 M. 260; People v. Branch Circuit Judge, 17 M. 67; Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218; People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 20 M. 220; Johr v. People, 26 M. 427; Jones v. Hobson, 37 M. 36; Stork v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 5; Alderman v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 41 M. 550; Mahoney v. People, 43 M. 39; Toulman v. Swain, 47 M. 82; Hake v. Buell, 50 M. 89; People v. Francis, 52 M. 575; Nelson v. Lumbermen's Mining Co., 65 M. 288; Graham v. Myers, 67 M. 277.

289. A motion for a new trial on the ground that one of the jurors had served upon a former trial of the same cause, being a question addressed to the discretion of the trial court, a denial of such motion is not reviewable on error: Bourke v. James, 4 M. 336.

290. A motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence presents a question of fact alone; and such a motion, based on the ground that the verdict is against evidence, for the reason that the facts proved, or to prove which evidence was given, did not make out the crime charged, embraces both law and fact; and neither of such questions could be reserved for the opinion of the supreme court: People v. Edwards, 5 M. 22.

Further as to new trials in criminal cases, see CRIMES, §§ 963, 964, 983, 984, 1263-1266, 1275-1289.

291. A new trial should be granted whenever it becomes necessary for the protection of a party in his just rights, where such party clearly has merits, and has not legally waived his rights or lost them by some improper or unjustifiable laches: Loree v. Reeves, 2 M. 133.

292. An order by a trial judge vacating a judgment and ordering a new trial on the ground that he had, as he supposed, discovered that he had a personal interest in the case, is proper, and will not be reviewed: Alderman v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 41 M. 550.

293. If a trial court thinks that a verdict is not in accordance with the evidence it can correct the jury's error by granting a new trial: People v. Henssler, 48 M. 49.

294. A trial judge is incompetent to decide that a verdict was not affected by outside influences to which the jury had been exposed; and if he refuses to set it aside on the ground that it was just, he usurps the functions of the jury. The presumption that the jurors were honest will not save the verdict: Churchill v. Alpena Circuit Judge, 56 M. 536.

295. A verdict is incurably vitiated if evidence of the public sentiment as to the case is allowed to reach the jury: Ibid.

296. A new trial should not be granted upon the ground of newly discovered evidence unless such evidence is very clear and satisfactory, and likely to seriously affect the result if admitted: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 320.

297. To entitle a party to a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence he must show diligence: Gray v. Barton, 62 M. 186.

298. Whether a new trial may be granted in reference as in other cases, without exceptions, upon affidavits of extrinsic matter, quere: Smith v. Warner, 14 M. 152.

299. It seems that a circuit judge has power to order a new trial after a reference, in case of new evidence, fraud or misconduct independent of the mode of trial: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 18 M. 483.

300. But the circuit court cannot order a new trial before a referee on the ground that the referee's conclusion is against the weight of evidence: Ibid.

301. Circuit court rule 81, requiring motions for new trial to be made in two days, was not intended to interfere with the common-law discretion of the court to entertain motions for new trials. Whether it applies to motions for new trials based on newly discovered evidence, quere: People v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 20 M. 220.

302. Motion for new trial in quo warranto should be made at the term at which the report is filed where there is ample time to make it before the close of the term: Coon v. Plymouth P. R. Co., 32 M. 248.

303. A new trial may be granted after a trial on quo warranto upon the same grounds and on the same showing as in civil cases generally: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 243.

304. Where a new trial is not a matter of right, the judge in granting it may properly impose such a condition as that the parties must waive any supposed right of removal and try the case at the following term: Mabley v. Superior Court Judge, 41 M. 81.

305. A client has a right to waive the right to move for a new trial, and will be bound by such waiver unless it is invalid for some cause relating to him; no one else can set it aside: Hackley v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 58 M. 454.

306. Upon each new trial the case must be tried just as if it had never been tried before. The burden of proof remains the same: Donahue v. Klassner, 23 M. 252.

307. A new trial is a rehearing of the cause before another jury, but with as little prejudice to either party as if it had never been heard before; and rulings made on a former trial are not binding: Gott v. Superior Court Judge, 42 M. 625.

308. An equitable remedy against a judgment is not lost by moving for a new trial at law: Wright v. Hake, 38 M. 525.

(h) Arrest of judgment.

309. On a motion in arrest of judgment only errors in substance will be considered; and such only can prevail as are not cured by verdict: Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 81.

See GUARANTY, § 61.

310. The rule allowing two days after verdict within which to move in arrest of judgment does not apply to criminal cases: Cole v. People, 37 M. 544.

IV. MOTIONS, NOTICES AND ORDERS.

311. If any part of the ground of a motion consists of facts not apparent on the face of the proceedings, an affidavit or other competent evidence of its existence must be presented: Storey v. Child, 2 M. 107.

312. A motion cannot properly be overruled because the grounds on which it is based are not stated, when they sufficiently appear from the record: Shaw v. Hoffman, 21 M. 151.

313. A court cannot dismiss a case on motion, on the ground of a former suit pending for the same cause, when a plea of such suit pending has been replied to and the issue thereon remains undisposed of: Gruler v. McRoberts, 48 M. 816.

314. It was error to dismiss a writ of replevin on motion based upon affidavits, on the grounds that the defendant was a deputy sheriff and the writ was directed to the sheriff and served by another deputy; that the writ was issued without authority of law, and that the service was unlawful and irregular and gave the court no jurisdiction; the questions sought to be determined were not properly triable on affidavits, but should have been in some way brought to trial on evidence upon an issue of fact. Whether they could have been tried under the general issue, or would more properly be the subject of a plea in abatement, quere: Jewell v. Lamoreaux, 30 M. 155.

315. Legal claims cannot be finally determined on motion and affidavit: Lyon v. Smith, 66 M. 676.

316. Generally, no matter can properly be tried upon mere affidavit, except such as depends upon the discretion of the court; and the supreme court cannot control such discretion. When an alleged compromise and payment are contested, a question is raised upon the rights of the parties which cannot properly be tried upon affidavits: Parker v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 24 M. 408.

317. If the validity of a stipulation to settle a case is disputed, even though money has been paid thereunder, it should be brought into the case by plea and not by motion: Leavitt v. Detroit Superior Court Judge, 52 M. 595.

318. A capias ad respondendum cannot be set aside on a motion based on defendant's affidavit that the name by which the suit was begun was not the plaintiff's true name; the objection, if raised at all, must be raised by plea: Watson v. Watson, 47 M. 427.

319. As a foreign corporation having an agent here may be held for a cause of action arising here, a motion to quash the declaration where service has been had on such an agent, and where the declaration does not negative such a cause of action, is not the proper remedy: Maxwell v. Speed, 60 M. 36.

320. Jurisdiction of transitory actions may be questioned and decided on motion based upon affidavits, if the facts are not of record or within judicial notice; a plea is not essential, and the party asserting the jurisdiction can waive a formal issue on the motion: Haywood v. Johnson, 41 M. 598; Stringer v. Dean, 61 M. 196.

321. A special motion to quash a writ of attachment was noticed Sept. 14 for hearing on Sept. 18. Held sufficient, unless the motion had to be heard upon an issue framed: Stringer v. Dean, 61 M. 196.

322. A motion to quash a writ of attachment was overruled by a justice, and defendants went to trial on the merits and suffered judgment. On appeal the circuit court reversed this judgment for matters that fell within the motion to quash, and without trying the case on the merits. Held error; the court should have tried the case on the issue of fact: Manhard v. Schott, 37 M. 234.

323. A motion to strike from the files is the proper proceeding to get rid of a defective demurrer; it is not good practice to move that it be not heard: Comstock v. McEvoy, 52 M. 324.

324. Proof of service of a motion, as for leave to appeal, must be made by copy sworn to or officially certified; an affidavit of service showing the substance or purport of the notice is insufficient: McCaslin v. Camp, 26 M. 390.

325. All notices in legal proceedings must be written: Mason v. Kellogg, 38 M. 132.

326. Notices and other papers in legal proceedings (not affidavits) are sufficiently entitled if they do not mislead: Whipple v. Williams, 1 M. 115.

327. An order upon motion was presumed to have been made in and not out of court, although not entered on the daily journal, where the judge appended to the motion in the motion book the certificate "Granted, B. F. G., Circuit Judge:" Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 M. 78.

As to justices' process, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, III, (a), (b).

As to process in chancery, see EQUITY, VIII.

I. REGULATION, FORM, ISSUE, ETC.

As to protection by process, see OFFICERS, §§ 160-193.

1. The federal government has authority to regulate and control the execution of process issuing from its own courts, irrespective of the process acts of the states: Chamberlain v. Lyell, 3 M. 448.

2. The act of congress of May 19, 1828 (adopting for the process of the United States courts the laws of the several states on the subject), having been made applicable to the states subsequently admitted by the act of Aug. 1, 1842, is to be construed as adopting such laws of said states on the subject as were in force at the last-mentioned date: Gorham v. Wing, 10 M. 486.

3. Said acts of 1828 and 1842 operate to prohibit the issue of writs of capias ad respondendum by the courts of the United States, except in cases where the statutes of Michigan allow imprisonment for debt: Ward v. Cozens, 3 M. 252.

4. As to the authority of a court to control its own process and to prevent an abuse of the same, upon motion, see Blair v. Compton, 83 M. 414.

5. Where the process of the court has caused an abuse, and no innocent party has obtained rights under it, the court, in setting it aside, may restore what has been wrongly seized: Campau v. Coates, 17 M. 235.

6. When defendant pleads to the merits the character of the process used to commence the action becomes immaterial: Miller v. Rosier, 81 M. 475.

7. Const., art. 6, § 85, providing that "the style of all process shall be 'In the name of the people of the state of Michigan,'" applies only to process issued by courts or judicial officers: Tweed v. Metcalf, 4 M. 579; Wisner v. Davenport, 5 M. 501.

8. An objection to a writ that it is not tested in the name of the people of the state of Michigan is not sufficient to allow the party to make the point that the style of the writ is not in the name of the people, etc. And, as the objection is purely technical, an amendment should not be allowed to rectify it to the overthrow of substantial justice: Johnson v. Provincial Ins. Co., 12 M. 216.

9. Where the governor has designated the judge of one circuit to fill a vacancy in another, and has notified the clerk thereof, process should be tested in the name of the judge designated, and no acceptance by him is necessary: Howter v. Kelly, 23 M. 337.

10. Under R. S. 1888 a deputy county clerk was not required to sign a writ in the clerk's name. A summons signed "W. M., deputy clerk, and in the absence of the clerk," held sufficient: Calender v. Olcott, 1 M. 344.

11. If in a summons there is a mistake in naming the day of the week, but the day of the month is named correctly, that part of the summons may be rejected as surplusage, and the summons still be good unless the defendant has been misled by it: Ingersoll v. Kirby, W. 27.

12. Where a writ was tested and issued on the 7th day of February, 1867, but made returnable on Tuesday, the 2d day of April, without expressing the year, held, that it must be understood as referring to April of the then current year: Nash v. Mallory, 17 M. 232. s. p., Vinton v. Mead, 17 M. 388.

13. Where the summons described plaintiff as "Absalem Baxter" instead of "Absalom Backus," an amendment correcting the error was sustained: Final v. Backus, 18 M. 218.

14. The omission of plaintiffs' Christian names in a summons is not such a defect as to destroy the process; but it is open to amendment: Barber v. Smith, 41 M. 188.

15. The power to cure errors and irregularities by amendment is a useful one, and when no provision to the contrary is made it applies as well to attachment suits as to others: Ibid.; Drew v. Dequindre, 2 D. 98.

16. Original writs in the circuit court may be indorsed nunc pro tunc, either as security for the costs or by the attorney when either indorsement has been omitted before service: Parks v. Goodwin, 1 D. 56.

17. Where two writs of summons were simultaneously issued in the same case by different officers, the plaintiff in error, in a record that exhibits them only as allied proceedings in one case, cannot claim that they began two distinct suits, if only one was practically instituted. And the defect in procedure is within the statute of amendments (H. S. § 7685, subd. 1): Bogue v. Prentiss, 47 M. 124.

18. An alias summons may be treated as a new writ for a new suit if the first suit has gone down; it is not void merely because the return to the original summons did not furnish a proper basis for it: Axtell v. Gibbs, 52 M. 639.

19. Although the commencement of a suit by filing declaration, entering rule to plead and serving copy with notice is statutory, and must conform to the statute, yet it stands on no different footing from other process: Granger v. Superior Court Judge, 44 M. 384.

20. In suits by declaration against joint defendants the rule to plead must be entered against all; and the filing of declaration, entry of rule to plead and service on any defendant puts the case on the footing of an issue of any other joint process served on a defendant: Ralston v. Chapin, 49 M. 274.

21. Entry by clerical error of a ten-day rule to [plead held corrected by a notice indorsed on the declaration of a twenty-day rule: Howe v. Maltz, 35 M. 500.

22. Service of declaration being a substitute for process, service before filing is void, and the proceedings cannot be amended so as to save the jurisdiction: Ellis v. Fletcher, 40 M. 321; South Bend Chilled Plow Co. v. Manahan, 62 M. 143.

23. The rule to plead should be entered before service of a copy of the declaration, but when both acts are done on the same day and within a short time, and the defendant is not misled by the omission to enter the rule until after service, he has no right to have the declaration stricken from the files: Blanck v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 44 M. 98.

II. SERVICE.

(a) Time and manner.

24. Where a statute requires that process shall be served a certain number of days before the return day, both the day of service and the day of return must be excluded in computing the time: Dousman v. O'Malley, 1 D. 450.

25. Jurisdiction of a personal action begun by summons against an absent defendant cannot rest upon a service made only by copy at defendant's last place of residence several days before the return day or an adjourned day: Iron Cliffs Co. v. Lahais, 52 M. 394.

26. The omission to serve notice of rule to plead with the declaration is an irregularity for which the proceedings will be set aside at any time. The defendant waives no rights by failing to notice the defect within any specific time, for he has no notice of the purpose for which the declaration is served: Turrill v. Walker, 4 M. 177.

27. Where distinct portions of the same building are used for a store and dwelling, the rule that an officer, in serving process, must not force the outer door of respondent's dwelling applies only to the outer door of that part of the building which is occupied by the family for domestic purposes; and if the building has a common entrance, it applies to the inside door which separates the dwelling from the rest of the interior: Stearns v. Vincent, 50 M. 209.

28. A householder waives his right to close the outer door against an officer serving process, by allowing him to enter; and if the officer once gains entrance through the outer door without force or fraud the privilege is gone, and he can force any other door open if necessary to make complete service of his process: Ibid.

29. Service of process by merely laying it on the body of a man too sick to understand it is invalid: Midler v. Superior Court Judge, 38 M. 810.

As to what is sufficient service to sustain charge of abuse of process, see ATTACHMENT, § 241.

(b) Place of service.

30. Service of process from the circuit court can only be made in the county in which the court is held, except in cases where the statute otherwise prescribes: Turrill v. Walker, 4 M. 177.

31. Process from the superior court of Detroit cannot be served outside of the county: Dewey v. Central Car & Manuf. Co., 48 M. 399.

32. Prior to the amendment of 1873 to H. S. § 7316, all persons authorized by law to be joined as defendants—e. g., the maker and indorsers of a note—were joint defendants within the meaning of that section, and service having been made against one in the county where suit was begun, the others could be served in another county: Hosie v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 22 M. 498.

33. Service cannot be made upon a joint defendant out of the county, under H. S. § 7316, until service has been made and proved on one or more of the defendants within the county: Denison v. Smith, 38 M. 155; Clark v. Lichtenberg, 38 M. 307.

34. Service on a joint defendant beyond the jurisdiction was held valid where the return showed that service on the other defendants was made earlier and that the service beyond the jurisdiction was made on the date of the return: Munn v. Haynes, 46 M. 140.

35. Where service on defendants within the jurisdiction must be proved before service is made on a joint defendant outside of it, but is not shown by the return, an amended return not filed until after all have been served, but showing that service was made on resident defendants first, is not important: Ibid.

36. Writs of scire facias under H. S. § 7786 cannot be issued to other counties than that in which the court sits; H. S. § 7316, for serving original process in other counties, does not apply: Burt v. Jackson Circuit Judge, 85 M. 238.

37. Process under the water-craft law can be served outside of the county but not away from the water outside: Baker v. Casey, 19 M. 230.

(c) Who can make service.

38. Service of declaration beginning suit may be made by the sheriff: Norvell v. McHenry, 1 M. 227.

39. A constable did not acquire authority to execute writs directed to the sheriff in consequence of being in attendance upon a session of the circuit court in the discharge of his duties under H. S. § 766: People v. Moore, 2 D. 1.

40. Service of a declaration beyond the jurisdiction may be made by private persons: Munn v. Haynes, 46 M. 140.

41. A party to a suit cannot serve the summons therein himself: Bush v. Meacham, 58 M. 574.

42. Service of summons in garnishment should be made by an officer authorized to serve process or by some person deputed to make the particular service: Johnson v. Delbridge, 85 M. 487.

As to who may serve justice's summons, see JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, §§ 86-92.

(d) Who may be served; exemptions.

43. Summons may be served personally upon an insane person under guardianship: Ingersoll v. Harrison, 48 M. 284.

44. There is no general exemption from the service of process without arrest merely because the party is attending court awaiting the trial of a cause: Case v. Rorabacher, 15 M. 537.

45. Privilege from arrest while going to or from court exists in the case of all proceedings of a judicial nature whether in court or not, and protects a person going to or from a place of confinement under a former arrest: Watson v. Superior Court Judge, 40 M. 729.

46. A person arrested on the civil process of a federal court was taken to the place of holding court, and being thus brought within the jurisdiction of a local court was arrested on civil process issuing therefrom, after he had been released from the first arrest, but before he could leave the place. Held, that he was entitled to be discharged: Ibid.

47. When a defendant is arrested on criminal warrant in one county and taken into another where he gives bail, he cannot there be arrested on a civil warrant for the same matter at the suit of the prosecutor: Baldwin v. Branch Circuit Judge, 48 M. 525.

48. Service of summons upon one who at the time is within the jurisdiction for the sole purpose of attending as a necessary witness in other cases may be set aside: Mitchell v. Huron Circuit Judge, 53 M. 541.

III. SERVICE ON CORPORATIONS.

(a) Domestic corporations.

49. Where a charter does not require an officer to reside in the county where the corporate business is done, and does require him to reside in the state, an affidavit that none of the officers named in the statute, on whom service could be made, reside in the county, will not be sufficient, without further proofs to justify the inference that they cannot be found in the state. It should appear that inquiries had been made in such a way as to be likely to elicit the truth. H. S. § 8187 contemplates some diligence in searching for the persons to be served, after, and not before, suit is brought: Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 M. 78.

50. Where the affidavit of service upon an officer, as representing a corporation, simply says that the person named was formerly the acting president, "and the only president thereof, to the knowledge or belief of this deponent," and it does not appear what means of knowledge the deponent had, there is no sufficient proof of regular service. Where an officer makes a return he assumes the responsibility of identifying the party served: Ibid.

51. In an action against a private domestic corporation there can be no substituted service under H. S. § 8137 for want of finding the officers designated by statute, except in the county where the corporation's business office is situated: Detroit F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 28 M. 492.

52. Under H. S. § 4021 service of process on a manufacturing corporation cannot be made outside of the county where its business office is fixed: Dewey v. Central Car & Manuf. Co., 42 M. 899.

53. Act 207 of 1885, amending H. S. § 8147, provides that process, etc., against any railroad company may be served "upon any station agent or ticket agent at any station," etc. Held, that service upon a "commercial agent" is bad: Detroit v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 68 M. 712.

54. Service on the attorney of a railroad company in proceedings to open a street across its premises is not authorized: Detroit, M. & T. R. Co. v. Detroit, 49 M. 47.

55. The "general or special agent" of a corporation upon whom a summons in garnishment may be served is an agent having a general or special controlling authority, either generally or in respect to some particular department of business: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hunt, 39 M. 469.

56. Justices' process against railroad companies may be served upon conductors, etc.; H. S. § 8147 is not repealed as to justices' courts by H. S. § 6862: Fowler v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 7 M. 79.

57. Substituted service may be made upon corporations not acting, as well as upon those acting. The inability to find the last officers of corporations that have ceased to do business authorizes the same proceedings to obtain service as in case of inability to find the proper actual officers in active corporations: Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 M. 78.

58. Process against a township cannot be served upon its supervisor outside of the county: Pack v. Greenbush, 62 M. 122.

Service of notice, see APPEAL, § 364.

(b) Foreign corporations.

59. A state may impose as a condition upon which a foreign corporation shall be permitted to do business within the state that it shall stipulate that, in any litigation arising out of its transactions in the state, it will accept as sufficient the service of process on its agents or persons specially designated: St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350.

60. The transaction of business by a corporation in the state appearing, a certificate of service by the proper officer on a person who is its agent there is sufficient prima facie evidence that the agent represented the corporation in the business. But when the record is offered as evidence in another state, it may be shown that the agent stood in no such representative character to the corporation as would justify service upon him: Ibid.

61. Service of process on the agents of a corporation in another state for matters within the sphere of their agency is, in effect, service on the corporation itself, as much as if such agents resided in the state where the corporation was created: Ibid.

62. Service of summons against a foreign corporation, on the secretary, is irregular and unauthorized. Our statutes providing for service of process on various named corporation officers do not apply to foreign corporations. Except in cases where special provision has been made otherwise, the remedy as to foreign corporations must be sought as at common law: Watson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 24 M. 38.

63. The service of process on an officer of a foreign corporation casually within the state but not on the business of the corporation, and not authorized by the corporation to receive such service, is not a good service: Newell v. Great Western R. Co., 19 M. 336.

64. The officer or agent of a foreign corporation served within this state under H. S. § 8145 need not be here upon official business for his corporation, or be specially authorized for such service: Shickle, etc. Iron Co. v. Wiley Construction Co., 61 M. 226.

65. There is no exception to the mode of service provided in H. S. § 4367 against foreign insurance companies. It applies to all cases of suits against them: Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Owen, 30 M. 441.

66. The provision of H. S. §§ 4362-4368, authorizing service of process against foreign insurance companies by delivery to the commissioner of insurance, who is required to send duplicates to the company or its agents within the state, does not apply to any but courts of record: Ibid.

67. The general or special agent in Michigan of a foreign insurance corporation is the proper person to be served with a summons in garnishment against it, and to make answer: Lorman v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 33 M. 65.

68. An attorney appointed by a foreign corporation to receive service of process in "action upon any liability or indebtedness incurred or contracted" by the company (H. S. § 3723) cannot be served with notice of garnishment proceedings: Moore v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 55 M. 84.

69. Prior to the amendment in 1881 of C. L. 1871, § 1624 (see H. S. § 8723), service upon a foreign express company could not be made upon its "agent," but had to be upon a person authorized by power of attorney to receive it: American Express Co. v. Conant, 45 M. 642.

IV. RETURN.

(a) In general.

70. A return of service should always inform the court that lawful service has been made: Town v. Tabor, 34 M. 262.

71. A certificate of service with the venue laid in the county of Wayne and city of Detroit, and signed simply "John B. Kendall, Sheriff," without specifying of what county, and certifying to a personal service upon defendants named, on a day specified, "in said county of St. Clair," is not sufficient proof of service: Clark v. Lichtenberg, 33 M. 307.

72. A constable's return to a writ of attachment, reciting that he had "personally attempted to serve the within attachment on the defendant by reading the same and offering a copy to him at the house of Daniel Dean, but he ran away. I could not deliver a copy to him," is not valid as a return of personal service; it does not show that the officer was actually in the presence or hearing of the defendant, or that the defendant knew that he had a writ against him, or that his flight had any connection with the suit: Holden v. Ranney, 45 M. 399.

73. The return of service indorsed upon a declaration recited that the sheriff "served the declaration of which the within is a true copy" . . . by delivering, etc., "a true copy thereof, and of the foregoing complaint and the notice relating thereto." Held, that the use of the word "complaint" was an immaterial error, and did not affect the showing of due service: Hammond v. Baker, 39 M. 472.

74. The sheriff certified "that on the 9th day of Sept., 1876, he served the declaration of which the within is a copy on John O. Hammond, and on the 11th day of Sept., 1876, he served on the defendant, Erastus L. Hammond, . . . by delivering to said defendant," etc. Held that, as the entire return clearly showed that service was made on both defendants, the omission to add the letter "s" to the word "defendant" did not fatally affect it: Ibid.

75. The sheriff's certificate of service in a suit begun in the superior court of Detroit stated that he served the declaration "on Edward A. Elliott in the city of Detroit, the defendant named in said declaration, by delivering to him in said county of Wayne a true copy thereof." Held sufficient, as the city is within the county. Judgment would not be reversed for the irregularity in form (H. S. § 7635, subd. 13): Elliott v. Preston, 44 M. 189.

76. The return of a service of summons in replevin "by delivering a certified copy of said writ to his wife personally," it not appearing that defendant could not be found and that the service was at his dwelling, is bad: Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 M. 78.

77. Where a notice was attached to a declaration that a note, a copy of which was given, would be read in evidence under the declaration, and the sheriff returned that he had served on the defendant a copy of the declaration and notice, it was held that the return necessarily implied service of a copy of the note, since that constituted an essential part of the notice: Bliss v. Paine, 11 M. 93.

78. Where the suit is commenced by declaration, the certificate of service may be indorsed on the original declaration on file, or on a copy: Larned v. Wilcox, 4 M. 338.

79. Where there is more than one defendant, a return that the sheriff cannot find the defendants is equivalent to saying that neither can be found: Hitchcock v. Hahn, 60 M. 459.

80. The city marshal of Manistee has no authority to serve process outside of the city. Held, that his return to a writ of attachment issued by a justice would not confer jurisdiction to proceed, if it did not show affirmatively that it was served within the city: Alverson v. Dennison, 40 M. 179.

81. It seems that, where a sheriff's return of personal service of a declaration commencing suit does not state the place of service, the presumption is that he discharged his duty by serving within the county: Norvell v. McHenry, 1 M. 227.

82. Where an affidavit of service of declaration states that service was made "on the 26th day of June, last past," the jurat, showing that the affidavit was made July 31, 1844, may be resorted to to show the time of service: Ibid.

83. A return of service signed by the under-sheriff in his own name is good: Calender v. Olcott, 1 M. 344; Allen v. Hazen, 26 M. 142.

84. Even if the under-sheriff did not have power to sign a return in his own name, yet when the writ appears from the return to have been served by the proper officer the return is amendable, and a judgment will not be reversed because of the defect: Calender v. Olcott, 1 M. 344.

85. A return to a writ may be signed by a deputy-sheriff in his own name: Wheeler v. Wilkins, 19 M. 78.

86. Proof of service of a notice that is equivalent to process should be made by copy sworn to or officially certified; an affidavit of service showing the substance or purport of the notice is not sufficient: McCaslin v. Camp, 26 M. 390.

87. Where service is to be made by mail, if it does not appear that the conditions existed on which its validity must depend, the proof of service is, as a general rule, insufficient: Clark v. Adams, 33 M. 159.

88. An indorsement of acceptance of service on behalf of a foreign corporation by parties who therein describe themselves as agents of the corporation has no legal force by itself as evidence of the fact of such agency, or as proof of such service as the law contemplates: Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co., 33 M. 400.

89. The objection that the jurat in the proof of service is defective is one that should be made in the trial court; otherwise it will not be heard on appeal unless the defect has caused injustice: Froman v. Froman, 53 M. 581.

90. The return of a ministerial officer of personal service is unimpeachable: Facey v. Fuller, 13 M. 527.

91. The return, by an officer, of service of process is conclusive, in any collateral proceeding, upon the parties to the suit in which the process issued: Michels v. Stork, 52 M. 260.

92. A sheriff's return to a writ of replevin may be amended on due notice and proper showing, but if not amended is conclusive as made: Green v. Kindy, 43 M. 279.

93. An officer's return of service of process may, under certain circumstances, be set aside upon sufficient cause shown in the same proceeding; but where it shows the service to have been legal and proper, though false, it gives jurisdiction: Low v. Mills, 61 M. 35.

(b) Amendment.

94. The statute of amendments (H. S. § 7635, subd. 2) covers only formal defects, and those by which neither party shall have been prejudiced; it does not reach jurisdictional defects: Denison v. Smith, 33 M. 155.

95. A return to a municipal court declaring that service had been made in the county was held to mean in the county outside of the municipality, and was therefore full and conclusive as to that territory. A subsequent ex parte amendment to show that service had been made in the municipality also could not affect a joint defendant outside of the municipal jurisdiction. He was not bound to watch the records after the former return had been made: Ibid.

96. Whether a return on which the jurisdiction over property depends can be amended after discontinuance of suit, quere: Haynes v. Knowles, 36 M. 407.

97. Where it is sought to amend the proof of service of process in order to show jurisdiction, and thereby give validity to the judgment so that it may be used in another suit to sustain rights claimed under it, the party adversely interested is entitled to notice. But such amendments are not generally permitted to affect the rights which third persons may have acquired while the proceedings remained defective: Montgomery v. Merrill, 36 M. 97.

98. A return cannot be amended in matters affecting the jurisdiction without giving notice to the parties affected by such amendment: Haynes v. Knowles, 36 M. 407.

99. An officer who is sued for misconduct cannot, pending the trial, manufacture evidence for himself by an ex parte amendment of his return curing the official action which is the basis of the suit against him: Ibid.

100. As a general rule, in all cases where the defect or mistake is owing to the default of any clerk or officer of the court, an amendment will be allowed: Calender v. Olcott, 1 M. 344.

101. A sheriff's return never becomes part of the record until actually on file with the clerk, and he may amend it without leave at any time before filing: Watson v. Toms, 43 M. 561.

102. Where a motion is made to open a final judgment obtained by default, the circuit court has power to allow a sheriff to amend his return of service of a declaration by showing that a copy of a note appended thereto was also appended to the copy which he served: Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 M. 355.

103. It seems to be within the discretion of a judge, in trying an action upon a recognition of special bail, to permit the sheriff to amend his return to a capias in the original suit by adding the date: Heymes v. Champlin, 52 M. 26.

104. The date of the constable's return to a writ of attachment may be amended by changing it according to the fact: Kidd v. Dougherty, 59 M. 240.

105. A constable's omission to date his return is merely clerical, and should be disregarded where the justice's return to a certiorari states that the return to the attachment was not actually made or the writ returned to him until the return day mentioned therein: Nicolls v. Lawrence, 30 M. 395.

106. Where a judgment, taken by default on a service of a declaration by a deputy-sheriff, is offered in evidence in another cause and objected to on the ground that the certificate of service does not show that any copy of rule to plead was served with the declaration, it is error to permit the person who made such service to amend his return without any affidavit or other showing, and after ceasing to be deputy-sheriff, so as to make it show that a copy of rule to plead was indorsed on the copy of the declaration so served by him. Such amended certificate did not constitute any official return of the service of rule to plead, upon which there could be legal liability. A proof of service by affidavit should have been required instead of such amendment: Arnold v. Nye, 23 M. 286.

107. Proceedings in justice's court to amend the return of service of an attachment after judgment were quashed on certiorari where notice thereof had not been duly served, and the amendment consisted in changing the name of the person on whom the writ had been served, and against whom judgment was rendered: Clark v. McGregor, 55 M. 412.

PROHIBITION.

1. A writ of prohibition is a common-law preventive against the encroachment, excess or improper assumption of jurisdiction, and can only be resorted to in clear cases and where other remedies are ineffectual. It may lie at the suit of one or more parties on either side to restrain the action of the court so far as it exceeds its jurisdiction and thereby affects the petitioner; but it is a discretionary writ, and will not be granted unless it appears that the petitioner has vainly applied for relief to the court against which he wishes it to issue: Hudson v. Superior Court Judge, 42 M. 239.

2. The writ cannot be issued to restrain any action of inferior courts which can be reviewed by any of the ordinary methods: People v. Wayne Circuit Court, 11 M. 393.

3. The writ is proper to restrain action by an inferior court clearly in excess of jurisdiction: Scott v. Chambers, 62 M. 532.

4. The writ issues to stay proceedings begun in one court to cancel a judgment entered by a competent court of co-ordinate jurisdiction: Maclean v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 52 M. 258.

5. Or to restrain a court of equity from proceeding with the exercise of power conferred upon it by an invalid act: Houseman v. Kent Circuit Judge, 58 M. 364.

6. The writ granted to restrain a circuit judge from entertaining garnishment proceedings where no jurisdiction had been gained over the principal defendant: McCloskey v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 26 M. 100.

7. An assignee in bankruptcy may be entitled to this writ to restrain a state court from enjoining his proceedings in the bankrupt court to quiet his title to goods turned over to him by the marshal as assets of the bankrupt's estate: Hudson v. Superior Court Judge, 42 M. 239.

PUBLIC LANDS.

I. SURVEYS.

II. DISPOSAL OF LANDS.

(a) By entry, patent, etc.

1. General power.
2. Powers of land board; conveyances by.
3. Town-site claims.
4. Pre-emption claims; homestead entries; location under warrant.
5. Purchase and sale.
6. Patents.

(b) By legislative grant.

III. SWAMP-LAND GRANT.

IV. GRANTS TO CANALS AND RAILROADS.

V. INDIAN LANDS.

VI. SCHOOL LANDS.

VII. AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE LANDS.

VIII. TRESPASSES ON PUBLIC LANDS.

I. SURVEYS.

1. All subdivision lines of a section of land according to government survey must run straight from a point in one exterior line of the section to the corresponding point in the opposite boundary: Wilson v. Hoffman, 54 M. 246.

2. In government surveys, lines actually run and marked on the ground prevail over any theoretical or paper platting, and small excesses or diminutions are disregarded: Sandborn v. Vance, 69 M. 224.

3. "Quarter-posts" fixed by the original United States surveys are to be accepted as fixed and established monuments, controlling courses and distances, and not liable to be changed for errors in the surveys: Britton v. Ferry, 14 M. 53.

4. Under the acts of congress of Feb. 11, 1805, and April 24, 1820, the surveyor-general had no authority to extend a south fraction north of the east and west quarter-line of the section, and if he did so such action would be void: Keyser v. Sutherland, 59 M. 455.

5. The quarter-post on the east side of section 36 must be identical with that on the west side of section 31, it being a township line: Highway Commissioner v. Beebe, 61 M. 1.

6. The meander lines run by a government surveyor have no significance as boundaries, and are run simply to afford a means of computing the area for which the government requires payment; and where a patent calls for a fractional quarter section containing $16\frac{1}{16}$ acres on the shore of a lake, the patentee's title extends to all the land in the quarter section, and is not limited by the meander line on the lake's border: Palmer v. Dodd, 64 M. 474.

7. Lands constantly submerged cannot be surveyed by the commissioner of the general land office as islands omitted from former surveys, and therefore subject to sale as public lands. And a patent for such land is void: Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 626.

8. Under the act of congress of April 24, 1820, enacting that in surveying public lands fractional quarter sections containing less than 160 acres should not be subdivided but should be sold entire, the surveyor-general returned entire a parcel of 117 acres, being such part of the section as lay southeast of a meandered stream, and this was patented as "the southeast fractional quarter according to the official plat of the surveyor-general." Held, that the whole of this phrase constituted a part of the description of the premises conveyed, and that a declaration in ejectment describing the land claimed as "a portion of the southeast fractional quarter," etc., was good, although such portion lay outside of the line ordinarily limiting the quarter section: Wilson v. Hoffman, 70 M. 552.

9. And a tax-deed to the defendant in ejectment conveying the east half of an adjoining quarter was held to convey only that portion of such east half as lay north of the stream bounding said fractional quarter: Ibid.

10. Section corners and the lines connecting them fixed by the original survey cannot be changed by any later one made for the purpose of dividing the sections: Palmer v. Giddings, 59 M. 338.

11. The burden of proof is upon one who disputes a line run by the government surveyor: Smith v. Rich, 37 M. 549.

II. DISPOSAL OF.

(a) By entry, patent, etc.

1. General power.

12. Under § 3 of art. 4 of the federal constitution, and § 4 of the act of June 15, 1836, admitting Michigan into the Union, all powers preliminary to and connected with the sale and disposition of all vacant and unsold public lands of the United States in Michigan are vested in the federal government exclusively, until the issue of the patent consummates the sale, divests the title of the United States, and makes the land for the first time subject in all respects to the local laws of the state: Brewer v. Kidd, 28 M. 440.

2. Powers of land board; conveyances by.

13. Notwithstanding the previous organization of the state government, the governor and judges of the territory of Michigan remained in office and competent to execute the powers conferred upon them by the act of congress entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment of titles of land in the town of Detroit and territory of Michigan, and for other purposes," approved April 21, 1806, until July 1, 1836: Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 1 D. 119.

14. The land board constituted by the act of congress of April 21, 1806, did not consist of two integral parts—the governor and the judges; but of four persons designated by their names of office, any three of whom were authorized to execute any of the powers conferred by the act. Therefore a deed of bargain and sale executed by the judges only is valid: Ibid.

15. They will all be presumed to have been present, and to have deliberated upon an act done by the majority, unless the contrary expressly appears: Ibid.

16. The power of the governor and judges to convey lots in the town of Detroit was not confined to a conveyance of lots in such forms and dimensions as they should delineate upon their plan. The claims to be adjusted by them were such as any person might have, legal and equitable; and when satisfactory proof had been made, they had no right to deprive a claimant of any portion of that land actually belonging to him under the acts of congress, whether it interfered with any projected plan or not. And the courts cannot go behind their conveyances while they acted within their jurisdiction: People v. Jones, 6 M. 176.

17. The plan of the city of Detroit, when made, was liable to modification by interfering claims and reserves, and the land board had power to adapt it to contingencies when necessary: Ibid.

18. The powers conferred upon the governor and judges of Michigan territory to grant donation lots in Detroit are not to be construed with the technical strictness applicable to those of an ordinary attorney or donee of a power; but they were vested with a large discretion, and their acts are entitled to liberal intendments in their support: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

19. Until the land board has made a donation of a lot to the person entitled effectual, it cannot be said to have exhausted its powers. The mere allotment of a piece of land as a donation lot, not followed by a deed, could not confer title either legal or equitable: Ibid.

20. Congress having authorized the governor and judges of the territory of Michigan, for the time being, to convey certain lands, the fee of which was in the United States, and having, by acts of legislation, recognized the persons who assumed to convey such lands, by virtue of such authority, as incumbents of those offices, and the offices as being in existence at and subsequent to the time when such conveyances were made, a mere stranger will not be permitted to controvert the title under such a conveyance, on the ground that the grantors were not at the time of the grant such governor and judges, and that there were then no such offices: Scott v. Detroit Young Men's Society, 1 D. 119.

21. And therefore a third person is not at liberty to question the validity of a clause inserted in a deed given to the land board, by which the grantee was to hold "in trust for the rightful owners," etc.: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

22. Where a lot was conveyed by the land board to one Hall in trust for the rightful owners, "who may claim the same by mesne conveyances from the original grantee or otherwise," and there was no showing that any person other than Hall had any claim to the land, legal or equitable, at the date of the deed, it was held that the construction of the deed must be the same as if it had been to Hall, habendum to the use of himself and those who should claim under him by conveyance or otherwise: Tregent v. Whiting, 14 M. 77.

23. A deed by the land board "in trust to and for the use and rightful benefit of the owners of the premises hereinafter mentioned, claiming the same by virtue of mesne conveyances from the original grantee or otherwise howsoever," is not void for uncertainty, and was within the powers of the land board: Ready v. Kearsley, 14 M. 215.

24. Where the board conveyed a lot in Detroit to A., and afterwards by mistake gave a deed of the same lot to B., and A. took possession of another lot on the supposition that it was the one granted to him, and the board afterwards, assuming that A. had lost the title to the first-mentioned lot, gave him a deed of the one of which he had taken possession, it was held that the board had not exhausted its power to grant a donation lot to A. by giving the first deed, and that the second deed to him was valid: Ibid.

25. The conveyance by the governor and judges of certain lands in Detroit to the trustees of the University of Michigan, held valid: Regents v. Board of Education, 4 M. 218.

26. No presumption can be indulged against the lawful character of the conveyances of the governor and judges: Cicotte v. Anciaux, 58 M. 227.

3. Town-site claims.

27. The act of congress "for the relief of citizens of towns upon the lands of the United States, under certain circumstances," approved May 28, 1844, was intended to apply exclusively to actual and existing towns, and not to such lands as may have been selected by non-resident claimants as the site for a prospective town: Selby's Case, 6 M. 198.

28. The act was intended for the protection of citizens of villages and cities that had grown up or might grow up on government lands, and to secure to them severally, at the minimum price, all lands actually occupied by them respectively for village or city purposes; and to them collectively, for the use of the village or city, such other lands as might be embraced in the government subdivisions within its limits: Ibid.

29. The rules and regulations to be prescribed by state legislation under the act are to relate to the determination of claims to possession, and the extent of possession that may fairly be considered as falling within an occupancy for town purposes, as well as to the disposition of the part of the land not actually occupied for town purposes by individuals: Ibid.

30. The act of the legislature of Michigan relative to Ontonagon, approved Feb. 29, 1853, was held void under said act of congress: First, because undertaking to dispose of the whole trust to the person named therein, and his grantees, and authorizing no one else to be considered or receive any relief; and second, because not prescribing any rules and regulations for the execution of the trust: Ibid.

31. A claimant under said act of congress, whose petition shows that the land claimed had not been actually occupied at the time the state legislation designed to carry out the act was adopted, and that it was afterwards occupied only as a farm, does not come within the provisions of said act, and is entitled to no relief: Ibid.

32. Where land has been entered by the county judge under said act of congress, and the trustee is proceeding to adjudicate upon a claim made to a portion thereof, a person who sets up a right to such portion as a pre-emptioner for agricultural purposes, and claims that the same was never occupied for town purposes, and was not legitimately entered by the trustee, has a right to appear before the trustee and be heard: Ibid.

33. On the hearing by the county judge of a claim under said act of congress, a citizen and tax-payer of the town, who objects that the claimant is not entitled to the land claimed, but that it is a part of the common fund, to be disposed of for the benefit of the town, is entitled to appear and be heard: Ibid.

4. Pre-emption claims; homestead entries; location under warrant.

34. Until a pre-emptioner pays for his land the government may dispose of it: Busch v. Donohue, 31 M. 481.

35. One of foreign birth, who is otherwise duly qualified, and has in due form declared his intention of becoming a citizen, is entitled, under the pre-emption laws, to file and maintain a pre-emption claim before becoming fully naturalized: Boyce v. Danz, 29 M. 146.

36. The "settlement" of a pre-emptioner under the act of congress of 1841 (Brightley's Digest, p. 474, § 88) must be that of a qualified person, and one is not qualified until he has filed his pre-emption claim, and, if a foreigner, has declared his intention of becoming a citizen. The law requires the proofs and payment within twelve months of settlement; and if the pre-emptioner has stated in his claim that he "settled and improved" the land at a date which was, in fact, earlier than his qualification, and more than twelve months before payment, he is still not estopped from afterward dating the settlement as of the time when he actually qualified: Ibid.

37. The action of the register and receiver of the United States land-office in accepting the proofs furnished by a pre-emptioner as satisfactory, and receiving his money and issuing to him the usual duplicate, is a judicial determination of his rights, which is conclusive in all collateral proceedings. Whether or not the commissioner of the land-office can reverse their action where there is no adverse claim under the pre-emption laws, it is held that his action in doing so, without notice to the party concerned, thus overturning a formal adjudication without the privilege of a hearing, was wrong: Ibid.

38. A homestead entry vests no title, but gives a right of possession which may be perfected by continued occupancy and improvement; and if not so perfected reverts to the government: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

39. Where, under a homestead entry not made in good faith, a patent was obtained for the supposed excess above 640 acres in a tract that had been officially surveyed, and confirmed to complainant's grantors under the act of congress of April 25, 1808, and since possessed by them or complainant, held, that under said act a tract of more than 640 acres might be confirmed; that complainants were entitled to all the land within the survey lines and monuments, and that any paper descriptions contained in the patent or in plats made from the survey must yield so far as they differ: Sanborn v. Vance, 69 M. 224.

40. Notice to a homesteader of proceedings against him under the homestead act covers such matters only as are alleged in the complaint, and under such notice these are the only questions that can be passed on by the register of the United States land-office, or, on appeal from him, by the commissioner of the general land-office and the secretary of the interior. And if a final ruling on a point not raised by the complaint shall have the effect of ousting the homesteader, he can file a bill in equity to compel a subsequent patentee, with notice, to convey to him: Johnson v. Lee, 47 M. 52. (Reversed, 116 U. S. 48.)

41. While, as a general rule, in contested matters before the federal land department, the decision should be confined to the questions raised by the allegations of the respective parties, yet if it appears that the claim of the moving party is against public policy or the law, it should be disregarded, whatever be the nature or extent of the testimony upon the point at issue: Lee v. Johnson, 116 U. S. 48.

42. Where, in a proceeding before the general land department involving only the question of the abandonment of a homestead entry, it appeared from the evidence returned on appeal to the secretary of the interior that the claimant was not a bona fide homestead claimant, the secretary did not exceed his jurisdiction in directing a cancellation of the entry: Ibid. (Reversing Johnson v. Lee, 47 M. 52.)

43. In proceedings for the alienation of public lands, the findings of the officers of the federal land department upon matters of fact must, in the absence of fraud or imposition, be taken as conclusive: Ibid.

44. The holder of a land warrant has an absolute right to locate land with it, and to receive a patent therefor: Merrill v. Hartwell, 11 M. 200.

45. Where plaintiff located land with a warrant which had been sold to him with a guaranty, and was afterwards notified from the land-office that the entry was suspended because the commissioner of pensions had cancelled the warrant on the allegation that it was issued on forged papers, and plaintiff then brought suit on the guaranty, it was held that this ex parte and extra-judicial proceeding of the commissioner could not conclude private rights, and that evidence of this action did not show plaintiffs entitled to recover: Ibid.

46. Where the commissioner of the state land-office assumed to cancel the location of lands and tendered back the warrants on which the land had been located, the act of the holder in receiving back the warrants without objection and in using them to locate other lands amounted to such an acquiescence in the cancellation as would preclude him or his assignee from thereafter relying on the original location as a step in the proceedings necessary to entitle them to a certificate of the purchase of the land first selected: Ely v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 49 M. 17.

5. Purchase and sale.

47. While the proceedings to a land sale by the federal government remain in fieri, no power outside of that of said government may interfere with such proceedings, or adjudicate upon their validity, for the mere purpose of controlling or restraining them in relation to the subject-matter of the sale: Brewer v. Kidd, 23 M. 440.

48. Under the United States system of public land sales, the action of the register and receiver of a local land-office in making or refusing a sale is not conclusive upon the purchaser or the government, and the official action necessary for a completed sale must be regarded as in fieri, and only in process towards completion, until consummated by the issuing of a patent, which exhausts the federal government's power of sale: Ibid.

49. The rules adopted in the land-office relating to selections do not apply to cases under act 197 of 1883: Webster v. Newell, 66 M. 508 (June 28, '87).

50. The courts of the state have no authority to restrain, by injunction, the receiver and register of the United States land-office, acting under instructions of the commissioner of the land-office, from proceeding to sell, at public sale, lands of the United States for which patents have never issued, notwithstanding such lands were subject to private entry, and all the steps towards a purchase of them at private sale, except the issue of the patent, had been taken, and the purchase money paid: Brewer v. Kidd, 23 M. 440.

51. It is the general policy of the land laws of Michigan that there shall be no private sales of state lands until they shall have been offered at public sale: Potter v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 55 M. 485.

52. Act 197 of 1883, in fixing the minimum price for certain lands, does not authorize their sale, but merely prohibits sales below that price, and it presumptively means that a higher price may in some cases be demanded: Ibid.

53. Lands left undisposed of after public sale cannot be entered at the state land-office until the land commissioner has had an opportunity to receive and enter the returns from the public sales, and to fix the minimum price and the time for future entries. And the previous deposit of money, which the commissioner has no right to receive officially, cannot give the depositor precedence as a purchaser: Ibid.

54. Whether the precedence of one person over another in a simultaneous struggle to enter land at the land-office can be determined by the fact that his application is first in the hands of the official conducting the sale, quere: Ibid.

55. If the commissioner of the state land-office receives a draft as money in payment for lands, individuals cannot treat this as no payment and demand the right to purchase the same lands afterwards—there being no showing that the draft was not as good as money: People v. Pritchard, 19 M. 470.

56. A person applying to purchase lands and making only part payment, where the commissioner's rule requires the whole, has no right to rely upon the assurance of a clerk in the office that such payment will secure the land for him, if on notice he should secure or pay the balance: Ibid.

57. After such application and payment another person applied for the same lands, tendering payment. Thereupon the first purchaser was notified that he could select of the lands so much as the money paid in by him would pay for, and he did so, claiming the whole, however, and offering to pay in full. Held, that the second applicant was entitled to the balance of the lands: Ibid.

58. Where an order headed "Michigan State Land-Office, Dec. 1, 1859," purporting to be a reservation from sale of certain lands specified, and to be signed by the commissioner of the land-office, though in the handwriting of one of the office clerks, has been pasted in that book of the office in which advertised offerings are kept, and the commissioner in his annual report for the following year officially reports said lands as reserved, it is a reasonable inference, although the commissioner's order reserving the land is not found in any other shape in the office, that the order in the clerk's handwriting is a copy of an original since lost or destroyed, and this would be sufficient evidence that this land had been withheld from sale: Attorney-General v. Smith, 81 M. 359.

59. Where lands subject to private entry are applied for and payment tendered, the commissioner has no authority to withhold them from sale for the accommodation of other parties who had made application previously but were not ready to make payment: People v. Pritchard, 17 M. 888.

60. When title to land passed from the United States to an individual, a delivery of the land certificate to a third person for that individual was held equivalent in law to a delivery to the person himself, and the fact that it was not really delivered to him by such third person was unimportant: Weare v. Linnell, 29 M. 224.

61. The commissioner of the state land-office has authority to replace a certificate of purchase covering several parcels of land with certificates for each, if he is satisfied that the public trust fund will not thereby be injured. Held, that he is only expected to protect the state's interest; he has no concern with those of individuals, for his acts cannot determine their rights: Allen v. Cadwell, 55 M. 8.

62. The bona fide holder of a land-office certificate has an equitable interest which is subject to any priorities that may be held by a previous purchaser of the land itself: Warner v. Hall, 53 M. 371.

63. The holder of a part-paid land certificate mortgaged the land and then sold out and put the purchaser in possession. Afterwards he assigned the certificate to some one who advanced the money to take up the mortgage and pay the balance due the state, so as to get a patent. Held, that the purchaser could maintain a bill against the holder, the mortgagee and the assignee of the certificate to enjoin ejectment and for specific performances: Rogers v. Odell, 86 M. 411.

64. A redemption from a purchase of state forfeited land made by one claiming to hold by assignment from the original locator, and who at the time was likewise guardian of the heirs of such locator, is sufficient to cut off the purchaser's rights, though such assignment be proved to have been a forgery, since, if the assignment were invalid, the redemption may be sustained as made on behalf of the heirs: Johnston v. Knapp, 85 M. 307.

65. Whether a redemption when made is not sufficient, in all cases and by whomsoever made, to save the title to the real owner, whoever he may be, quere: Ibid.

6. Patents.

66. Mandamus will not lie to compel the secretary of state to issue patents to state lands; that is the governor's duty (H. S. § 5269): Crane v. Secretary of State, 51 M. 195.

67. When a patent has been issued, a third person, not in privity with the title, is not to be heard to allege that it has issued improvidently: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 856.

68. The question whether a government patent is not void for excess is one that cannot be raised by third persons if the excess patented was public land subject to sale: Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 626.

69. One who has procured a patent having notice of another's right in the land cannot, against a bill in equity filed by the latter, raise the defence that complainant's act in quitclaiming the right to reserve the timber was a fraud on the state. The state is protected from waste by the stipulations in its certificate: Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 M. 252.

70. The effect of a patent issued to a claimant before commissioners under the act of congress of March 3, 1807 (relating to lands in Michigan territory), and based upon the claimant's actual possession of the premises, is to release the title of the government and to confirm that under which the claimant held; and it does not exclude the right of dower of the widow of the claimant's grantor: May v. Specht, 1 M. 187.

71. A patent to public lands relates back to the time when they were purchased, and gives the patentee title as of that date: Fisher v. Hallock, 50 M. 463.

72. One who has perfected his homestead entry is entitled to a patent which relates back to the time when the entry was made, and takes date with it; but such relation does not operate to defeat a railroad company's right of way perfected under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2477: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

73. The principle that a government patent when issued relates back to the original entry applies with equal force to a patent issued to the assignee of the original purchaser: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 356.

74. A bill to restrain an action of ejectment was properly dismissed where plaintiff held a federal patent to the land that had been granted him on the strength of equities arising out of his having entered it thirty-one years previously and twenty-one before the defendant in the action and complainant in the bill had gone upon the land, though the latter had continued in possession in spite of notice that it was not open to entry: Ives v. Ely, 57 M. 569.

75. A state patent to school lands is evidence of legal title, but it cannot cut off private rights, the holders whereof may assert them in equity. But a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer of the patented land will be protected: Allen v. Cadwell, 55 M. 8.

76. Those who have no reason to question a patentee's rights may rely on his title as valid: Warner v. Hall, 53 M. 372.

77. After confirmation of a claim to land by the board of land commissioners under the act of congress of May 11, 1820, and after patent issued, if it be competent for a court of equity to go behind a patent to settle conflicting claims, it should only be done upon the clearest and most irrefragable proofs: Bernard v. Bougard's Heirs, H. 130.

78. A patent of lands from the United States or the state cannot be impeached in an action at law: Bruckner's Lessee v. Lawrence, 1 D. 19; Romain v. Lewis, 39 M. 233; Carpen- ter v. Ingersoll, 43 M. 433. Otherwise, where there was no jurisdiction to issue it: Webber v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 M. 626.

79. A land patent from the state is presumed valid, except as against such persons as are distinctly authorized to assail it, unless the state itself brings proceedings to avoid it; and if the state has confirmed by a patent a settler's license which it issued previously, all inquiry into the facts of settlement and occupancy is precluded thereby except by those who have the statutory right to inquire into them: Hedley v. Leonard, 35 M. 71.

80. A patent for land, given as upon an ordinary sale, is of no validity unless the authorities issuing it had jurisdiction to do so; and it is beyond their jurisdiction when the land is under a prior reservation from sale, which remains in force: Ibid.

81. Where one knowingly and by collusion with the deputy commissioner of the land office obtained from the state a patent for lands not subject to sale, and on the next day made sale of them at a distant place to another person who had never seen the lands but who had paid for them almost double their valuation, it was held that a strong showing would be required to establish the good faith of such a purchase: Attorney-General v. Thomas, 31 M. 365.

82. Under an information to vacate a patent collusively obtained, and which treated the purchase from the state as made for cash, and asked no relief on any other basis, a decree that the purchase price be refunded in scrip was held unwarranted: Ibid.

83. A bona fide purchaser under a patent from the state is entitled to protection: Austin v. Dean, 40 M. 386; Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 M. 252.

84. One who knew of a dispute as to the genuineness of an assignment of a land certificate, but who bought under a patent taken out by the holder of the certificate, was held not to be a purchaser in good faith without notice: Austin v. Dean, 40 M. 386.

85. A bill to establish a trust in lands wrongfully patented was maintained with costs of both courts against the patentee and defendants claiming under him with notice, but dismissed as to purchasers in good faith with costs to them: Ibid.

86. The validity or operation of a government patent is not impaired by neglecting to record it in the registry of the county where the land lies: Sands v. Davis, 40 M. 14.

87. The record of a United States patent in the government office at Washington has the same force as the patent: Ibid.

88. The state cannot prescribe rules for officers of the general government, as by requiring that a certificate of the cancellation of a patent must be signed by a particular officer: Davis v. Filer, 40 M. 810.

89. When the United States grant by patent land described by a legal subdivision, the grantee is entitled to all the land within such subdivision, and is not limited by the number of acres specified in the patent or upon the government plat: Palmer v. Dodd, 64 M. 474.

90. No grantee by a patent from the United States granting a legal subdivision of land can derive title to land upon another legal subdivision: Ibid.

(b) By legislative grant.

91. Lands may be granted by act of congress, or by treaty, as well as by patent: Stockton v. Williams, W. 120, 1 D. 546.

92. Under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2477, granting to highways the right of way across the public lands, a patent is not necessary; the offer and its acceptance by the construction of the road are equivalent to a grant that is good as against the government, and also as against a subsequent patentee, unless the latter's patent antedates the grant by relation, or unless his equities preclude the acquisition of adverse rights: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

93. Where, by a treaty with the Chippewa Indians, lands were reserved for certain individuals specified, to be afterwards located in such manner as the president might direct, it was held that this reservation was equivalent to an absolute grant; and the title was conferred by the treaty, though not perfect until the location was made, which was necessary to give the grant identity: Dewey v. Campau, 4 M. 565; Stockton v. Williams, W. 120, 1 D. 546.

94. A report of the commissioners of the general government appointed for the purpose of settling claims made by citizens of Michigan territory to lands therein, recommending lands for confirmation to a certain person, and an act of congress confirming such recommendation, are equivalent to a grant of such lands: Solomon v. Groesbeck, 65 M. 540.

95. Public grants are to be construed strictly; nothing passes under them by implication: La Plaisance Bay Harbor Company v. Monroe, W. 155; Kiefer v. German-American Seminary, 46 M. 636.

96. A sovereignty making title to its own lands has a right to determine for itself upon the sufficiency of whatever goes to entitle the claimant to a conveyance: Clark v. Hall, 19 M. 356.

97. When the government conveys by act of congress, that which constitutes the deed also constitutes the law which defines the right or estate. No court may subject these sovereign legislative grants, which are more like treaty cessions than they are like individual bargaining, to the definitions and refinements which the rules of municipal law apply to conveyances between man and man. They need not be capable of falling under any of the definitions given to estates by common law. While the government deals with its own, the right or estate granted, whether anomalous, or unprecedented or otherwise, will be entitled to recognition and effect for just what it appears and was intended to be: Johnson v. Ballou, 28 M. 379.

98. A legislative grant differs from a grant of a private person in that it is both a grant and a law; and, as such, the intent of the law is to be kept in view, and its purpose effectuated whenever the subject-matter of the grant comes in controversy; and that construction must be placed upon it which will preserve and carry out the object of the legislature, however such construction may conflict with the principles of the common law, or prevent the attaching of equities which would spring from transactions with private parties: Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 416.

99. The grant of a sovereignty must have operation according to its intent; it may operate immediately, or from time to time, if such appears to be its purpose: Ballou v. O'Brien, 20 M. 304.

100. Where a grant was by the United States, it is presumed that the title had not been previously conveyed: Tregent v. Whiting, 14 M. 77.

101. But any grant by the United States must be inoperative as against another which by construction of law antedates it: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

102. The state, through its legislature, may grant lands; but its grant, like that of any other grantor, conveys only the title which the state actually possessed in the premises: Byrne v. Beeson, 1 D. 179.

103. The state, while acting under the constitution, can impose its own conditions on its own grants: Rogers v. Port Huron & L. M. R. Co., 45 M. 460.

104. A condition in a grant is to be construed strictly against the state; and the state is entitled to enforce it only when a forfeiture would be fairly within the intent of the act whereby the grant was made: Kiefer v. German-American Seminary, 46 M. 636.

105. Where lands or franchises are held under legislative grants, reserving the right of forfeiture for non-performance of conditions subsequent, no judicial decree of forfeiture is necessary: Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 416.

III. SWAMP-LAND GRANT.

106. The federal act of 1850 (9 Stat. at L., 519), providing that certain swamp lands "shall be and are hereby granted" to certain states, is a grant in presenti, needing only the identification of the lands to make it effective, and is sufficient to give title even without a patent, which is only evidence of title. Even if the patent were necessary it would cut off intervening claimants by relating back to the time when the right to it became perfected. The listing of these lands by the secretary of the interior is held sufficient identification: Busch v. Donohue, 31 M. 481.

107. Lands received by the state as "marsh and overflowed lands" under the act of congress of Sept. 28, 1850, could be conveyed by it in 1882 under the swamp-land legislation, although they had meantime become submerged and the water over them navigable: Sterling v. Jackson, 69 M. 486.

108. Purchasers of swamp lands from the general government after the passage of the act granting them to the state, but before full title had vested, are protected against subsequent purchasers from the state, though patents have issued to the latter: Dale v. Turner, 34 M. 405.

109. A mere listing of swamp lands under the act of congress granting such lands to the state of Michigan, and the approval of such list by the secretary of the interior, was only an act of identification, which could not extinguish any rights previously acquired by individuals by purchasing any of the lands from the United States with cash or land warrants: Ibid.

110. H. S. §§ 5384-5, authorizing the state treasurer to receive from the general government the proceeds of swamp lands sold by it after the grant of all such lands to the state in 1850, amounted to a waiver of the state's claim to all such lands as against such intermediate buyers: Ives v. Ely, 57 M. 569.

111. An entry of swamp land in good faith, while the title to such lands was in question as between the state and federal governments, was sufficient to give the person making such entry an equitable claim to the land, which the commissioner of the general land-office could not extinguish without the claimant's consent or some proceeding against him: Ibid.

112. The equitable title of one who has made an entry of public land is, when confirmed by act of congress, the highest evidence of title until otherwise adjudged by a court of last resort: Ibid.

113. Where the United States had cancelled patents to swamp lands on the ground that they were covered by a grant to the state, H. S. § 5386 gave the patentees or their heirs the right to enter these lands at any time before they were put up for sale. A claim for certain lands was entered accordingly at the state land-office, but before the transfer from the United States to the state had been completed the claimant died. Immediately upon the completion of the transfer certain other parties, who knew of the claimant's equities and had obtained quitclaims from some of his heirs, took patents to themselves, claiming under the act. Held, that those who had notice of the claimant's rights took the title in trust for themselves and their co-tenants, the remaining heirs, and it was decreed that they convey to the latter an unencumbered title to their proportion: Davis v. Filer, 40 M. 310.

114. The holders of a certificate of purchase of swamp land cannot have relief in equity against a patentee unless they aver and prove substantial compliance with every condition of the statute governing the issue of such certificate: Bangs v. Stephenson, 63 M. 661.

115. A bill by the holders of a certificate of purchase of swamp land against a patentee must aver settlement and cultivation within one year after its issue by the purchaser or his assigns; and, if it does not, such bill is bad for laches: Ibid.

116. Where a locator of swamp lands comes within the provisions of the act of congress of March 2, 1855, giving relief to those who had made entries prior to the issue of patents to the state, a person deriving title subsequently from the state holds his apparent title in trust for such locator and those holding under him: Huggett v. Case, 61 M. 480.

117. Act 31 of 1858, for the sale of the state swamp lands, made (H. S. § 5398) provision for two distinct classes of purchasers, namely: settlers and occupants of such lands at the time of the passage of such act, who should have been such Dec. 1, 1857, and owners and occupants of adjoining lands who were such

Dec. 1, 1857: People v. State Treasurer, 7 M. 366.

118. Occupancy of the adjoining lands, under the swamp-land act of 1858 (H. S. § 5398), might consist of cultivation and use, without actual residence, or might be by a tenant: Ibid.

119. H. S. §§ 5436-5443, which permit licenses to be issued to actual settlers who clear and drain the lands, should not be technically construed for the purpose of defeating their benevolent intent, especially when such construction is not demanded by any grievance: Hedley v. Leonard, 35 M. 71.

120. An unmarried man who lives with his father on a parcel adjoining the land for which he holds a settler's license may fairly be said to reside on such land, if the two parcels are used and to some extent enclosed together, and if his occupation is honestly designed as home occupation: Ibid.

121. The commissioner of the state land-office has no authority to forfeit the license issued to a settler who, though he does not live upon the land, continues, after taking the proper preliminary steps, to make important improvements by clearing and draining, and keeps up his occupation for that purpose (H. S. § 5443): Ibid.

122. A settler's license cannot be forfeited by the commissioner of the land-office unless upon a clear case and a showing of both non-residence and abandonment (H. S. § 5443); the commissioner must use his judgment on the showing: Ibid.

123. A settler holding a license from the state cannot be deprived of his rights by any ex parte determination made by the commissioner of the land-office in conflict with the facts; the commissioner can intervene only when the settler has given up his rights: Ibid.

124. An outstanding settler's license must be avoided by a declaration made by the commissioner of the land-office before the land can be sold by the state to any one else; the avoidance is not to be left to inference: Ibid.

125. Persons holding land under a patent which was issued as if upon sale in the open market were compelled to release to one who claimed under a patent of later date, which was issued in confirmation of a settler's license that antedated the adverse title: Ibid.

126. A bill in equity filed by a settler on swamp land to enforce a right under the swamp-land acts of 1859 and 1861 (H. S. §§ 5436-41) must show a substantial compliance with every provision of the act on which the right depends: Remeau v. Mills, 24 M. 15.

127. In providing for the entry of swamp lands on presentation of a certificate of cancellation signed by the register of the federal land-office, H. S. § 5386 merely provides for official evidence, and does not prescribe who must sign the certificate: Davis v. Filer, 40 M. 310.

128. H. S. § 5386 provides that the "assigns" of any purchaser of United States lands whose purchase has been cancelled on the ground that they were swamp lands can buy them from the state on presenting his certificate of purchase and cancellation before the state has disposed of them. Held, that this means only the "assigns" of the purchaser's ownership or supposed ownership in the land itself, and not of a mere interest incident to the option remaining in the purchaser: Ely v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 49 M. 17.

129. Under act 239 of 1863, § 4, it was held that the time which would govern as to the right of selection of the lands to be withheld from sale would be the time at which the commissioner of the land-office was notified that they had been selected: People v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 23 M. 270.

130. It was held that the right of selection attached to each parcel of land in the order in which it was described in the list of selected lands sent to the land-office, and that if any tract mentioned had been sold before the commissioner was notified of the selection, or was for any other reason to be omitted, the order of the list should be pursued as if such tract had never been included. And there was no right to include in the list any greater amount of land than the act authorized to be selected: Ibid.

131. Where a commissioner of the land-office, in patenting lands, had himself so departed from a rule restricting the demand for patents to the order of selection as shown in the lists of lands that it was thereafter impracticable to observe such order, it was held that the right to select belonged rather to the applicant for patents than to the commissioner, and that the latter could not withhold patents on the ground that the demand did not conform to the rule: Ibid.

132. It was held that act 239 of 1863 applied to all swamp lands in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, "not otherwise appropriated," whether classed as mineral lands or not, and that the term "appropriated" here signified an appropriation by the legislature for some purpose similar to that here intended — a disposition of the lands in some way, by which the state was to part with its title: Ibid.

133. The rule restricting the demand for patents to the order of selection would cease to operate at the expiration of the period for which, the lands were to be withheld from sale; and, as former selections no longer bind the state, they would not bind the applicant, who might then select other remaining lands, and demand patents for them, which would be a selection in itself. But any sales made by the state to individuals of previously selected lands, after they ceased to be withheld from sale and prior to a demand for patents, would be valid, and the original applicant would lose all right to the land so sold: Ibid.

134. In a proceeding to compel the issue of patents to certain lands, it was held that, where patents had already issued to parties who had disposed of the lands so patented to other parties who had not appeared to show cause, and upon whom no process had been served, the rights of such latter parties would not be passed upon, nor would the circuit court order the issuing of another patent for such lands. Whether, in such proceeding, the court could invalidate the prior patent, and whether it could be done in any way except by scire facias for that special purpose, or by bill in chancery, quere: Ibid.

135. The provision of H. S. § 5355 that swamp and primary school lands in the mineral range of the Upper Peninsula, theretofore withheld from market as mineral lands, should, with certain exceptions, be re-offered and sold in the same manner as other swamp and primary school lands, contemplates an offering at public auction before they are subject to private entry at the land-office: Attorney-General v. Smith, 31 M. 359.

136. It had been the settled policy of Michigan before the passage of act 145 of 1863 (H. S. §§ 5355-58), that while none of the swamp and primary school lands of the mineral range of the Upper Peninsula should be disposed of at less than a fixed minimum price, an opportunity should be made for obtaining the highest price that competition could bring on offering them at public sale, after due notice, before they were to be entered on the books of the land-office as subject to sale on private application; and an intent will not be lightly inferred, from any mere equivocal words, to depart from this settled policy, especially in the case of lands which had been supposed exceptionally valuable and reserved for that reason from the previous public offerings: Ibid.

137. Where an information to vacate a patent issued by the commissioner of the state land-office avers that the lands in question had been selected and reserved by the governor under H. S. § 5355, so as to except them from its operation, and also that they were never offered for sale subsequent to that act or to their reservation thereunder, the information is sufficient to warrant relief from the patent on the ground that it was invalid for the want of such a re-offering of the lands in accordance with the requirements of the act as to make them subject, under its provisions, to a valid private entry: Ibid.

138. One who knew, before the issuing by the state to his grantor, of a patent for the lands he claims, that the state authorities claimed that the lands covered by the patent were reserved from sale, and who also knew of ineffectual attempts to purchase them from the state, had sufficient notice to put him on inquiry, and subject him to any equities growing out of any mistake or fraud under which the patent had been issued, and he is not entitled to any consideration as a bona fide purchaser: Ibid.

139. A patent based on a sale by private entry at the state land-office and conveying "indemnity lands" of the state, which had never been offered for sale at public auction, is held void. These lands, if not to be considered as included by intendment in the general designation of swamp lands, so as to be subject to the state regulations as to the sales of such lands, were not subject to sale at all, for want of any legislation providing for it: Attorney-General v. Thomas, 31 M. 365.

140. The commissioner of the state land-office has no power to adjudge void and cancel a certificate of purchase of swamp land issued through mistake, fraud, etc.; and he cannot resell the land unless the certificate is voluntarily returned, or is adjudged void by the proper court: People v. State Treasurer, 7 M. 366.

141. A purchaser of state swamp lands bought when the conditions entitling him to a deed were that he should pay one-fourth down, and the rest, with interest, at any time thereafter. A subsequent statute added the condition to such sales that the taxes should also be paid. The purchaser afterwards assigned his certificates of purchase; and the assignee, after paying the rest of the purchase price and the interest, demanded from the commissioner of the land-office a certificate entitling him to his deed. The commissioner refused because the taxes had not been paid. Mandamus was granted to compel him to issue the certificate; but it was also held that the state did not release any tax lien on the land by giving a deed, and that this would not govern a case where the certificate of purchase had been issued after the passage of the statute: Robertson v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 44 M. 274.

142. A deed from the governor for a parcel of swamp lands will confer no title unless given pursuant to some law: Remeau v. Mills, 24 M. 15; Attorney-General v. Smith, 31 M. 359.

143. Under the act of 1859, p. 310 (see H. S. § 5414), authorizing contractors for swamp roads to take lands in lieu of money, they can only take such lands as are subject to entry at private sale: People v. Pritchard, 17 M. 260.

144. Lands reserved from sale by a road contractor under a state contract are reserved for the full time specified in the contract for its fulfilment; and if the board of control of state swamp lands extends the time for fulfilment, the reservation is also extended for the same time: Newcombe v. Chesebrough, 33 M. 321.

145. The renewal by the board of control of state swamp lands of a road contract, the time for which had already expired, does not revive the reservation of lands thereon that have been already forfeited and subsequently acquired by another: Ibid.

146. Lands are not withdrawn from market on a state road contract unless reserved within the time limited for the completion of the work: French v. Christy, 37 M. 279.

147. On application for the reservation of land on a state road contract, an officer of the land-office marked the descriptions of land applied for on a plat-book of the office. No list of the lands wanted was filed by the applicant, as required by H. S. § 5414, until after the time specified in the contract for the completion of the work. Held insufficient as a reservation: Ibid.

148. Act 19 of 1879, amending act 481 of 1871, appropriated swamp lands to pay for the construction of a certain state road, and provided that the lands selected should be reserved from private entry as soon as a list of them should be filed with the commissioner of the state land-office. A reservation was accordingly made, which, however, exceeded the amount authorized by from two to three thousand acres. This reservation was not to last more than three years, and on "satisfactory showing to the board of control of state swamp lands by a certificate from the state swamp land commissioner . . . that said road had been constructed in as good and substantial a manner as the board now require," the lands should be patented to the counties engaged in building the road, or to their assigns. After the three-year period expired, a person holding swamp land scrip earned under act 239 of 1863 applied to the commissioner of the land-office for patents to 320 acres of the lands included in the reservation, and, taking these lands in the order in which they were listed, the lands applied for were among those properly appropriated and not in the surplus. The commissioner refused, and the applicant sought by mandamus to compel him, to issue the patents. Held, unimportant to this case that the county clerks of the counties which built the road did not, as directed by the supervisors, actually execute assignments of the interests of the counties to the road contractor; the rights of the counties and of their assigns vested as soon as the act was complied with, if this took place within the period to which the reservation of the land was limited and if the swamp land commissioner's certificate was duly filed. This certificate stated that the road was constructed in as substantial a manner as was required by the board of control "at the time of the passage of the act locating said road." Held, that this expression corresponded to the word now in the act, and that the word now did not refer to the period of the adoption of the original act, but to the date of the amendatory statute, as the two enactments established roads under different names. And it was not necessary and could not be required that the road should be accepted by the board of control; that body was only to receive a "satisfactory" showing, which showing was to be the swamp land commissioner's certificate. And none of the lands reserved, taken in the order of their descriptions in the list, were subject to private entry: Chadbourne v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 59 M. 113.

IV. GRANTS TO CANALS AND RAILROADS.

149. The grant to the state of Michigan of land to locate a canal upon at the falls of the St. Mary extends only to the military reserve, and does not include private property below it: Ryan v. Brown, 18 M. 196.

150. The action of the state in accepting, with its conditions, a congressional grant of land for the benefit of a corporation organized to build a canal under the state law, and in granting said land to the corporation on certain conditions,—congress afterward adding more land for the benefit of the corporation according to such conditions,—fixed in the corporation building the canal and fulfilling the imposed conditions a contract right with a right of possession of the lands so granted: Attorney-General v. Lake Superior Ship Canal, R. & Iron Co., 32 M. 233.

151. The land grants made by the acts of congress of 1865 and 1866 to aid in the construction of the Portage Ship Canal must be assumed to have been made by congress with a knowledge of the provision of the state constitution inhibiting the state from engaging in any work of internal improvement, as well as to comply with the expressed will of the state as contained in the joint resolution of Jan. 21, 1865, asking aid for this work; and the acts of congress conferring these grants must be regarded as intended to leave the state full discretion in the choice of agencies, as had before been the case with railroad grants: Ibid.

152. Under the act of congress of June 8, 1856, granting to the state of Michigan certain lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads from Grand Haven and Pere Marquette to Flint and thence to Port Huron, and the act of the legislature of Michigan of Feb. 14, 1857 (Laws of 1857, p. 346), accepting said grant and conferring upon the Detroit & Milwaukee Railway Co. so much of said lands as pertain or attach to said route from Grand Haven to Owosso, and upon the Port Huron & Milwaukee Co. so much thereof as pertain or attach to said route from Owosso to Flint and thence to Port Huron, and providing for a board of control to manage and dispose of said lands in aid of said railroads in the manner provided in said act, with authority, in case of failure of either of said companies, to accept said lands or perform the conditions of said grant, to declare said lands forfeited to the state, and confer the same upon some other competent party under the general regulations and restrictions of said act, it is held not within the authority of said board of control, upon forfeiture of the grant to the Detroit & Milwaukee Railway Co., to transfer the same to the Port Huron & Milwaukee Company, which was engaged in building a road from Port Huron to Flint, but did not propose to construct a road from Grand Haven to Owosso. The grants were distinct, and the design was to provide for two distinct lines intersecting at Owosso, and to aid each by a grant of the lands lying within the prescribed distance along and near it; and a conveyance to said latter company, for the construction of a portion of the line easterly of Owosso, of lands lying westerly thereof and pertaining to the other line provided for, is held invalid. It is immaterial that the charter of the company authorized it to build a road from Owosso westerly to Grand Haven; for there must be something more than a paper line, and while it remains on paper only, with no intention on the part of the company to actually build the road, there is nothing to which the grant can be applied: Bowes v. Haywood, 35 M. 241.

153. The act of congress of June 8, 1856 (11 U. S. Stat. at Large, p. 21), granting lands for building a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse Bay, was a present grant of the lands included in its terms. The right of selection vested in the railroad company as soon as it earned them, and a sale by the company of any specific parcels of land, not exceeding the quantity earned and lying within the limits specified in the grant, was, to that extent, an effectual selection: Johnson v. Ballou, 28 M. 379; Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 416.

154. The board of control created by Mich. act of Feb. 14, 1857, could not qualify the right of selection or subject it to any conditions not performed or waived; nor was such board vested with any power over the lands contained in the grant except in cases of non-performance or of conflict, in which cases the board might declare a forfeiture or adjust the controversy: Ibid.

155. The intention of said act was that the bounty, aside from the first 120 sections, should be bestowed as fast as each continuous length of twenty miles was constructed, and no faster; so that neither the state nor a company authorized to build the road could convey or encumber lands not earned by construction; and a conveyance by the state to a railroad of lands in excess of those at that time earned is not a grant subject to forfeiture, but void, even though the road subsequently earned such lands: Ibid.

156. The arrangement between the A., L. & T. B. R. Co. and the J., L. & S. R. Co., and the legislation following the same, by which the beneficial interest of the former in the land grant was transferred to the latter, could not operate to affect rights previously acquired by third parties: Johnson v. Ballou, 28 M. 379.

157. Said act of congress required each quantity of 120 acres to be selected from a continuous strip twenty miles in length of the road and from a strip on either side of the road lying within six miles of it, if sufficient land could be found unappropriated therein. A deed by the railroad company for lands outside of the prescribed limits was made at a time when the road had already conveyed more land than it had earned, and was therefore invalid, but the land conveyed in prior deeds, which exhausted the grant earned, also contained land outside those limits. Held, that the selection made by the prior deeds must now stand valid, since none but the United States can now question it; and they probably will not do so, as the purpose of the grant has been accomplished: Jackson, L. & S. R. Co. v. Davison, 65 M. 416.

158. The J., L. & S. R. Co. was, by Mich. act, March 18, 1865, authorized to agree with the A., L. & T. B. R. Co. for the location of its line on the lines of the latter, and in such case to receive the land grant of the latter, and to purchase its railroad and property. Oct. 6, 1866, such agreement, location and purchase were made. Subsequently the property of the A. Co. passed on foreclosure sale to the J. Co., which in due time completed the road, and received patents to all the land grant the A. Co. had failed to earn. Held, that the right of the A. Co. to earn the grant was not transferable; that the effect of the assignment to the J. Co. was a surrender of the right to the state, and which it was authorized to confer, and did confer, by said act of 1865, upon the J. Co., and that, therefore, the right of the J. Co. to earn and obtain the grant was derived not from the assignment but from said act of 1866: Ibid.

159. Act 182 of 1877, confirming the transfer by the governor and by the board of control of railroads to the Port Huron & L. M., A. Co. of lands granted by congress to the state in aid of the construction of railroads, and at first assigned to the Detroit & M. R. Co., was void as impairing the general government's conditional right of reverter for non-completion within a specified time of the roads to which the state assigned the lands: Fenn v. Kinsey, 45 M. 446.

160. Congress, by an act passed June 8, 1856, granted certain lands to the state of Michigan, to be used solely in aid of the construction of railroads. The state, by act 156 of 1857, set them apart for the benefit of certain designated roads, on condition that the beneficiaries should accept them subject to the terms of the act. Held, in a case in which the acceptance was qualified, that the company acquired no title, and that a bill would not lie to quiet a title to the lands obtained by execution against the beneficiary intended by the statute: Rogers v. Port Huron & L. M. R. Co., 45 M. 460.

161. Railroad companies which accepted the congressional grant of public lands under the provisions of act 26 of 1857 acquired rights which could not be destroyed except by their own neglect: Ibid.

162. The transfer by mutual agreement and legislation of the beneficial interest of the Amboy, Lansing & Traverse Bay Railroad Company in the land grant to the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw Railroad Company could not affect rights previously acquired by third parties, and the government's patent to the latter company was unimportant, as the government then had no title: Johnson v. Ballou, 28 M. 379.

163. Where the location of a line of railroad was to fix the identity of certain lands granted by the government to the use of said road, and lying upon either side of it, the effect of the grant and location was to take out of the body of lands subject to sale by the United States the sections of land covered by the floating title already conveyed; an application to purchase these lands would give no right to go upon them or to cut the timber. Whether or not the land-officers of the United States were still charged with the duty of protecting these lands against trespassers, they could not, as against the railroad company, sell off the timber, and thus deprive the company of a portion of the benefit intended by the grant: Ibid.

164. A patent for lands embraced in a grant for the use of a railroad company was held, as against trespassers, to relate back at least to the time when the lands were earned: Ibid.

165. Under act 197 of 1883, for the relief of innocent purchasers and actual settlers on certain railroad lands, the title to which had been held invalid, a claimant may select from the descriptions in his deed, which he desires patents for, not exceeding the 160 acres limited by the act; and the commissioner cannot make the selection for him unless requested to do so. But in order to make up the exact quantity of 160 acres a government description cannot be subdivided: Webster v. Newell, 66 M. 508.

166. A claimant under said act of 1883 is entitled to have the commissioner of the state land-office enjoined from selling the lands until complainant can make the selection to which he is entitled: Ibid.

167. Said act 197 of 1883, being a statute granting privileges, not rights, its requirements must be strictly complied with: Paine v. Newell, 66 M. 245.

168. Under said act of 1883, the purchaser claiming a patent must show a deed valid on its face. If the deed to him was so drawn as not to cover the land, it would have to be corrected and re-acknowledged in time to save the title under the statute, else it would not save the statutory privilege: Ibid.

169. Under said act of 1888, unless the claim and its proofs were presented within six months after the statute took effect, it was too late. March 8th being the last day, an averment that the papers were filed "on or about" that day is insufficient: Ibid.

V. INDIAN LANDS.

170. A patent issued by the president to a person claiming to be a reservee under the Saginaw treaty of Sept. 24, 1819, was void, and could in nowise affect the title of the reservee under the treaty: Stockton v. Williams, W. 120, 1 D. 546.

171. Where a treaty with an Indian tribe reserves for the use of persons therein named, and their heirs, certain designated quantities of land to be located as the president of the United States may direct, such reservation is equivalent to an absolute grant, and passes at once an estate in fee-simple which attaches as soon as the lands are located: Dewey v. Campau, 4 M. 565; Stockton v. Williams, W. 120, 1 D. 546.

172. Indians have no power to dispose of the fee of their lands, except to the United States, without the concurrence of the government: Cook v. Biddle, 2 M. 269.

173. The treaty of Oct. 18, 1864, with the Chippewa Indians, provided for patenting public lands in fee-simple to such as would have been declared "competent," and under restrictions to those who were not competent. Held, that the practical construction put on the treaty was that the determination of competency and the selection of the grantee's land became operative together, when fixed by the proper official authority, and that if an Indian disposed of the land he expected to receive before he was found to be "competent," such disposition would be invalid; the finding of competency does not relate back: Raymond v. Shawboose, 84 M. 142.

174. The executive department is not so bound by the conduct of the Indian agents that it cannot repudiate their frauds and decline to follow their false decisions: Ibid.

VI. SCHOOL LANDS.

As to escheats, see ESTATES OF DECEDENTS, IX, (d).

175. The words employed in the proposition relating to school lands in the act of congress for the admission of Michigan to the Union indicate an intent on the part of the United States that the grant should have a continuous operation; and therefore lands reserved for the benefit of Indian tribes by treaties with them prior to the admission of the state will, on the extinguishment of the Indian title, be presumed, as against a trespasser, to be embraced within the proposition aforesaid: Ballou v. O'Brien, 20 M. 804.

176. The act of 1837 setting apart seventy-five per cent. of the proceeds of swamp lands for the primary school fund does not constitute such an appropriation of the lands to educational purposes as to place them, under § 2, art. 13, of the constitution, beyond legislative control: People v. Auditor-General, 12 M. 171.

177. The subsequent acts, reducing the proportion thus set apart, and appropriating lands to the construction of roads, were therefore not invalid: Ibid.

And see SCHOOLS, § 96.

178. A trespasser upon a section 16 reserved for school purposes, claiming a title adverse to that of the state, cannot inquire into mere irregularities by which the state sells the land under its own statutes. The state alone can complain of the sale: Cooper v. Roberts, 18 How. (U. S.) 178.

179. By the act providing for the admission of Michigan into the Union (which, when accepted by the state, became an irrevocable compact), section 16 in every township not sold or otherwise disposed of was granted to the state for school purposes. As the government extended its surveys, so that the location of those sections was ascertained, the title of the state became complete and could be sold without the consent of congress; and the act of March 1, 1847 (9 U. S. St. at L. 146), does not authorize the sale by the United States of any lands, mineral or otherwise, which fall within section 16; nor could a lease made by the secretary of war for mining purposes impair the state's title to such lands: Ibid.; Minnesota Mining Co. v. National Mining Co., 11 M. 186, 8 Wall. 882.

180. Where a lot belonging to the primary school lands was conveyed by deed in 1850, and for the following twenty-two years treated as out of the market, the commissioner of the land-office will not, upon proof that such deed is void, and that there is no such society as that named as grantee therein, be compelled by mandamus to sell the same now at the price of an appraisal made in 1850; H. S. § 5276 authorizes him to refuse to sell such lands, if, in his opinion, the doing so would be beneficial to the several funds affected thereby: Chapman v. State Land-Office Commissioner, 26 M. 146.

181. Where a petition for a mandamus to compel the sale of public land alleges that, when the relator applied to purchase it, the commissioner of the state land-office assigned, as his reason for refusing to sell, the existence of a former deed which turned out to be void, this is not equivalent to an allegation that but for the deed the lot was subject to sale, or that when the deed was executed it was subject to sale at an appraisal made before that; the commissioner's omission to assign any other reason is only circumstantial evidence: Ibid.

182. A certificate of the sale of primary school lands, signed by a clerk in the office of the superintendent of public instruction, was held not well executed under the laws in force in 1841, though he added after his name, "For J. D. P., Superintendent of Public Instruction:" Lee v. Payne, 4 M. 106.

183. A bill was filed to compel the re-assignment of primary school land certificates wrongfully withheld, and it was claimed in defence that as complainants had obtained these lands from the state by fraud, in filing an affidavit that they were chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes, when they were really valuable for pine timber, they were not entitled to relief. Held, that defendants could not avail themselves of such an objection; the question of value only concerned the state, which appeared to be abundantly secured: Spoon v. Gilbert, 44 M. 535.

VII. AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE LANDS.

184. The agricultural college land-grant board had the right to determine, or to authorize the land commissioner to determine, what portion of these lands should be sold as timbered lands under the act of 1863, as amended by the act of 1869, provided such action was not the result of fraud on their part: Attorney-General v. Ruggles, 59 M. 123.

185. One who is alleged to have procured agricultural college lands to be entered for his benefit in names other than his own need not disprove the charge until some evidence is offered to prove it: Ibid.

186. Where agricultural college lands valuable for timber had been bought of the state under circumstances of fraud at an undervaluation, held, that the land-grant board, or the attorney-general and land commissioner acting under their authority, could make a settlement of suits pending between the purchaser and the state which would bind the latter and bar the claim of fraud: Ibid.

187. That a purchaser from the state of agricultural college lands does not divulge to the commissioner his knowledge as to the present or prospective value of property as timber land is not actionable fraud: Ibid.

188. Circumstances surrounding the purchase of timbered agricultural college land held to stamp the transaction as fraudulent: Ibid.

VIII. TRESPASS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

189. The general government has all the common-law rights of an individual in respect to depredations committed upon the public lands. And the commissioners of the general land-office may lawfully direct the seizure and sale, by the local land-officers, on behalf of the government, of timber cut by trespassers on the public lands: Stephenson v. Little, 10 M. 433.

190. The commissioner of the state land-office appointed an agent to reclaim timber wrongfully taken from state lands. The agent reclaimed certain logs from trespasser, and sold them at private sale. In replevin for the logs by the purchaser it was objected that the commissioner had no power to make any such appointment, and, if he had, the sale must be public. Held, that the trespasser or the one claiming under him would not be heard to urge the first objection, and that the sale was not invalid because of being private, if the case was free from circumstances of secrecy or fraud: Ballou v. O'Brien, 20 M. 304.

191. A bill in equity will not lie to reach money received by the proper state officers in settlement of a trespass on public lands, even though complainant claims that the settlement was procured by false representations as to the extent of the trespass, or by threats of imprisonment: McElroy v. Swart, 57 M. 500.

As to venue of trial of action against trespasser, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 74.

VI. JUDGMENT.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES; LEAVE TO FILE INFORMATION; WHEN THE PROPER REMEDY.

1. Quo warranto proceedings should generally be instituted in the circuit court: Coon v. Attorney-General, 42 M. 65.

2. It is discretionary with the supreme court to grant an application for leave to file an information in the nature of quo warranto: People v. Tisdale, 1 D. 59; Attorney-General v. Erie & K. R. Co., 55 M. 15.

3. H. S. § 8662, subd. 2, permitting a private relator, on leave granted, to file an information in the circuit court to try the title to an office, contemplates that a showing for leave shall be made: Vrooman v. Michie, 69 M. 42.

4. Whether the supreme court would require the attorney-general to file an information in the nature of quo warranto against his own judgment, quere: Coon's Case, 42 M. 65.

5. The attorney-general has the same discretion in cases on relation as in other cases, under the law requiring him to file informations in the nature of quo warranto where he has good reason to believe they can be established: Yates v. Attorney-General, 41 M. 728.

6. And the supreme court will not review his discretion in refusing to file an information where it is not clearly abused, and where the proceeding could not benefit the relator: Ibid.

7. Where a person intrudes himself into an office, in consequence of the unlawful decision of a board of canvassers, the proper remedy is by motion to the supreme court for leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto to try the right to such office: People v. Tisdale, 1 D. 59.

8. The right to a public office is to be settled by a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto: Curran v. Norris, 58 M. 512.

9. Quo warranto is the only way to try titles to office finally and conclusively: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323.

10. Quo warranto is the proper proceeding to determine between two municipal bodies asserting the same power of appointment; the boundaries of their franchises must be determined by quo warranto: Ibid.

11. The proceeding by quo warranto will not lie when an office is vacant: Wayne Auditors v. Benoit, 20 M. 176.

12. Whether information in the nature of quo warranto lies in the case of an office not created by the state, quere: Throop v. Langdon, 40 M. 674.

13. Probate judges are not within the exception in H. S. § 8662, which permits informations in the nature of quo warranto to be filed in the circuit court except against state officers: Secord v. Foutch, 44 M. 89.

14. An information in the nature of quo warranto will not lie against an alleged township whose organization is invalid on the face of the record; it will lie, however, against the several town officers for usurping franchises, but would not lead to any judgment reaching the whole controversy in one record: Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 M. 648.

15. Quo warranto against the district or its officers is the proper proceeding to test the validity of the organization of a school district: Owosso Fractional School District v. School Inspectors, 27 M. 3.

16. There should, however, be some special and extraordinary reason to justify interference by quo warranto with the organization of a school district, as the statutes provide a speedier remedy by an appeal from the district board to the township board: Lord v. Every, 38 M. 405.

17. The state cannot be estopped from instituting quo warranto proceedings against a corporate body on the ground that it has been recognized as a corporation by a municipality: Attorney-General v. Hanchett, 42 M. 486.

18. Whether quo warranto or scire facias was the proper remedy, prior to Rev. Stat. 1846, by which to proceed against a private corporation for violating its charter, quere: People v. Oakland County Bank, 1 D. 282.

19. A judgment creditor's application for leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto to enforce a forfeiture for non-user of the rights and franchises of a manufacturing company was denied in the absence of any showing that the statutory remedy provided for judgment creditors, and which is deemed the more appropriate one, is not available: Carpenter v. Wayland Wood Manuf. Co., 33 M. 418.

20. The statute (H. S., ch. 298) concerning informations in the nature of a quo warranto contemplates the punishment of corporations for the violation of state law and policy only: Maybury v. Mutual Gas-Light Co., 38 M. 154.

21. Leave to file an information was denied where the purpose was to deprive a certain gas company of the right to lay pipe and distribute gas in Detroit, on the ground that it had forfeited the right by violating certain conditions imposed by the city in granting it: Ibid.

22. And such leave was denied where the respondent was a railroad company, the forfeiture of whose charter would not redress the grievance complained of, which was that its lessee had discontinued part of its route and side-tracked a village, which complained of the consequent loss of facilities for transportation: Attorney-General v. Erie & K. R. Co., 55 M. 15.

23. An information cannot be filed under H. S. § 8635, subd. 3, where the articles of association state a purpose for which the statute authorizes a corporation to be formed, and where the requirements of law preliminary to incorporation are fulfilled. The question whether the corporation is exercising any franchise or privilege not conferred by law is to be tested by information filed, on leave of court, under § 8646: Attorney-General v. Lorman, 59 M. 157.

Remedy discretionary, see CONSTITUTIONS, § 200.

II. PARTIES.

24. Persons claiming to be wardens and vestrymen of a religious society cannot join as relators to test in one proceeding their right to the offices respectively against adverse claimants: People v. De Mill, 15 M. 164.

25. Quo warranto against a single officer of a municipality does not make the corporation a party any more than it would be in a private suit: Scrafford v. Gladwin Supervisors, 41 M. 648. Even though its attorney files a brief: People v. Hatch, 60 M. 229.

III. PLEADINGS.

(a) General rules.

26. The pleadings in quo warranto cases are governed by the rules in civil cases, except so far as the statutes modifying these rules are, from their terms, applicable: People v. Miller, 15 M. 354.

27. The statutes prescribe the form of pleading on suggestion of damages on quo warranto, and the supreme court will not prescribe any other: People v. Sackett, 15 M. 315.

(b) Informations.

28. The information need not be entitled of any particular day. It is governed by the rules of pleading in civil cases, and an allegation that the defendant "for the space of two days last past, has usurped," etc., is sufficient; it refers to the two days next preceding the presenting of the information: People v. Miller, 15 M. 354.

29. Where the information, charging the defendant with usurping the office, and requiring him to show his right thereto, contains in addition an allegation that the relator, by virtue and warrant of due and regular election, is in law and in right entitled to have, hold and exercise said office, it is not necessary that the relator's title to the office be set forth: People v. Miles, 2 M. 348.

30. In an information for intruding into a corporate office it is not sufficient to aver in general terms the corporate existence, unless the corporation is by special statute. The information should set forth such facts as, in connection with the general statutes of which the court can take judicial notice, will make out the corporate existence, that being a jurisdictional fact: People v. De Mill, 15 M. 164.

31. If the corporation is created by special statute its existence need not, in general, be shown by further averment; but where not so created it must be made out according to the facts: Ibid.

32. Where the court is not judicially informed concerning the nature of an alleged office in a corporation, it ought to be so described in the information, as to its nature and duties, as to enable the court to determine whether it comes within the purview of the statute giving this remedy for usurpation of franchises: Ibid.

33. It is not necessary to set forth the franchises and privileges alleged to be usurped, except in general terms. It is always the right of the government to call upon those who assume corporate powers to show by what warrant they do so; and, when the defendants set forth their claims by plea, the attorney-general may show by replication the special grounds he relies on: People v. River Raisin & L. E. R. Co., 12 M. 889.

34. An information in quo warranto need not set forth the facts which would negative the respondent's title, and the respondent cannot, therefore, demur to it for that deficiency, if it is otherwise sufficient; but wherever he relies upon his own title he must make a showing of it by his own pleadings: Larke v. Crawford, 28 M. 88.

35. An information in the nature of a quo warranto is not demurrable for stating that a municipality "was and now is possessed" of certain premises, and that respondents unlawfully hold and exercise the franchises of taking possession of them for a public park. Possession for restricted purposes would not exclude possession as an owner: Mayor v. Park Commissioners, 44 M. 602.

(c) Pleas.

36. In quo warranto causes the respondent must either disclaim or justify, and the plea is the first pleading that indicates the facts concerning which the controversy as to the right of office will arise: Larke v. Crawford, 28 M. 88.

37. When the respondent disclaims holding the office in dispute, no controversy of fact can arise beyond the simple question of his exercise of the office: Ibid.

38. A plea of justification must show all the facts necessary to establish respondent's lawful right to the office in question. No issue of fact can be joined in such cases except upon a replication or some pleading subsequent thereto, either by denial or by confession and avoidance: Ibid.

39. All that is necessary to state in a plea of title to an office is the authority for holding the election, the holding it, and that defendant received the greatest number of votes for the office: People v. Van Cleve, 1 M. 362.

40. Where an information charging respondent with intruding into a public office avers that an election to fill the office was held, that relator received a certain number of votes, and was thereby elected, a plea to such information that no election was held for this office, and that no votes were cast for this purpose, should conclude to the country, and not with a verification: People v. Hartwell, 12 M. 508.

41. Where the plea to an information for entering into a public office shows that respondent has been declared elected it need not aver his citizenship or other qualifications for office. And if it states the number of votes cast at the election it need not explicitly negative the casting of a greater number; nor need it be verified (see, as to verification, Larke v. Crawford, 28 M. 88): Attorney-General v. McIvor, 58 M. 516.

42. Upon an information filed by a private relator, a plea showing that relator has no right to the office in question is a complete defence, if established: Vrooman v. Michie, 69 M. 42.

43. Immaterial statements in a plea to an information in quo warranto about the proceedings of the county board of canvassers may be struck out as surplusage: People v. Van Cleve, 1 M. 362.

44. Information calling upon the defendants to show by what right they assume to exercise certain banking powers. Plea, setting forth a charter of defendants as a railroad corporation, which gave them no authority to issue circulating notes; and stating the issue by defendants of certain certificates which, as described, might or might not be within the statute against unlawful banking, and then denying that defendants have exercised the franchises charged, "except as aforesaid." Held that, as the plea neither confessed nor denied the exercise of banking powers, the issue tendered by it was immaterial: Ibid.

45. To an information in the nature of a quo warranto, requiring a corporation to answer by what warrant it claimed to have, use and enjoy certain corporate powers, etc., which it was therein alleged to have usurped, a plea setting forth the charter of the corporation, by which the powers claimed were conferred in presenti, is a prima facie defence; for, the commencement of a legal existence being thus shown, it will be presumed that the corporation continued to exist, and to perform its duties, until the contrary is alleged: Attorney-General v. Michigan State Bank, 2 D. 359.

46. And where, in addition to this, the plea contained allegations designed to show either a continued existence of the corporation down to the filing of the information, or that the state was estopped from insisting upon forfeiture of the corporate franchises for causes which arose prior to a certain period, it was held that these allegations were surplusage, and on motion they were ordered to be struck out: Ibid.

(d) Replications.

47. A replication in quo warranto proceedings is not chargeable with duplicity for stating several distinct facts that are all aimed to make out the one ultimate fact of a violation of corporate duty, urged as a ground of forfeiture of the charter of incorporation: Coon v. Plymouth P. R. Co., 81 M. 178.

48. The alternative statement in a replication, that the corporation respondent "did wilfully or negligently so manage their affairs that," etc., is not material when the facts set up are sufficient of themselves to show it: Ibid.

49. Where a replication not only avers that the respondent company did not keep their plank-road in lawful repair, but also that the directors did not, the latter averment is of no legal consequence unless it was in such a way the duty of the directors that the company, on information, would be responsible for their failure; in that case the averment would be proper: Ibid.

50. A replication which, to show that defendants usurp the franchise of banking, avers that certificates issued by them are in the similitude of bank-bills, and also that they are issued with intent to be put in circulation as money, is double: People v. River Raisin & L. E. R. Co., 12 M. 389.

51. An information in the nature of a quo warranto involved the legality of the organization of a township. The plea alleged its organization after due preliminaries. The replication denied the legality of the proceedings on the ground that the petition for its organization was not signed by the required number of freeholders. Held that, if the objection relied upon was that those who did sign were not freeholders, it should have been distinctly set forth in the replication, and permission was given to amend it: Attorney-General v. Page, 38 M. 286.

52. An information in quo warranto proceedings charged official misconduct and neglect of duty. The plea denied the charge. A replication was filed which merely reiterated the charges contained in the information, without specifying the acts of neglect and misconduct relied upon. It seems that such a replication is open to demurrer: Dullam v. Willson, 53 M. 392.

(e) Demurrers.

53. Where an information in the nature of a quo warranto is filed under H. S. § 8635, and charges individuals with the wrongful assumption of corporate powers, a joinder in demurrer to a plea of incorporation leaves the legal incorporation of the defendants the only question in issue. But where it is filed under § 8646, and is aimed at corporate delinquencies, it admits the corporate existence, and the corporation is duly made a party, and under the admission made by the demurrer it must be deemed to be lawfully incorporated unless there are reasons to the contrary connected with the act of incorporation: Nelson v. McArthur, 38 M. 204.

54. On demurrer to the replication a merely formal defect in the plea cannot be noticed: People v. Jackson & M. P. R. Co., 9 M. 285.

55. Where the respondent does not demur to the replication, but pleads over, defects of form will be disregarded: People v. Miller, 16 M. 56.

56. A plea setting up a private relator's incapacity to hold the office sued for — that of county superintendent of the poor — because he, being a supervisor, is forbidden by statute to hold such office, raises a distinct issue, and requires a reply; and, if generally demurred to, being good in substance, it entitles respondent to judgment: Vrooman v. Michie, 69 M. 42.

57. An election was determined by lot, the vote being tied. Quo warranto proceedings were instituted for the office. The plea set up an equality of votes, and, being demurred to, this fact was admitted. Held that, on overruling the demurrer, the relator could not be allowed to plead the invalidity of votes cast for respondent: Evans v. Sutherland, 41 M. 177.

IV. EVIDENCE.

58. Where, on information in the nature of a quo warranto, the state calls upon an individual to show his title to an office, he must show the continued existence of every qualification necessary to the enjoyment of the office. The state is bound to make no showing, and the defendant must make out an undoubted case: People v. Mayworm, 5 M. 146.

59. The burden is on the respondent to justify his own title — that of the relator being a collateral issue; and a judgment of ouster will be rendered against a respondent who shows no title, whether the relator's title prevails or not: Keeler v. Robertson, 27 M. 116.

60. In a contested election case the official majority establishes a prima facie right to the office; and it will require, to overcome it, a finding of the jury showing the number of illegal votes received by each party: Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 33 M. 241.

61. A relator can take nothing by reason of any statement of facts which has not been found by the jury or admitted by the attorney-general as well as by the respondent: People v. Molitor, 28 M. 341.

62. In the case of tenure by appointment the relator has the burden of showing his own title affirmatively; it cannot be shown by respondent's default or agreement: Frey v. Michie, 68 M. 323 (Jan. 26, '88); Vrooman v. Michie, 69 M. 42.

63. A relator whose claim to the office in question depends upon an appointment from a certain board cannot controvert respondent's title on the ground that the appointing power was never vested in the board: Ibid.

V. PRACTICE.

(a) In general.

64. The fact that an information was filed by the attorney-general as on the relation of a claimant to an office, without the knowledge or authority of such relator, will not entitle him to have the information dismissed on motion. But the court will allow him, at his option, to withdraw from the proceeding: People v. Knight, 13 M. 230.

65. An information to try the right to a public office will not be dismissed on the ground that the office has expired since information filed. To oust the incumbent is not the sole object of the proceeding; but, under the statute, if he is found guilty of the intrusion, a fine may be imposed and costs recovered; and if the relator claims the office, and is found entitled to it, he may recover damages: People v. Hartwell, 12 M. 508.

66. The statute which authorizes the attorney-general to enter a rule requiring the defendants to plead to the information within twenty days after service is enacted for his benefit and to enable him to expedite the proceedings. He cannot be defaulted for failure to enter it: People v. De Mill, 15 M. 161.

67. When a default is entered in quo warranto, no issue of fact can be framed till the default is set aside: People v. Pratt, 16 M. 65.

68. Where a stipulation signed by relator and respondent was filed previous to a default, but afterwards signed by the attorney-general, held that, as it would only be admissible as evidence upon a proper issue, the entry of the default might operate as a withdrawal of it; and the subsequent signature of the attorney-general could not of itself operate to open the case or hold respondent to the agreement: Ibid.

69. No stipulation can be regarded in a proceeding in the nature of a quo warranto unless signed by the attorney-general: People v. Pratt, 15 M. 184; Crawford v. Molitor, 23 M. 341. None but he can bring error: 56 M. 27.

70. On quo warranto to try the right to a public office the attorney-general has control of the proceedings, and notice of hearing must be in his name: People v. Pratt, 14 M. 383.

71. Quo warranto cases sent from the supreme court to the circuit for trial may be noticed for hearing before the report of the proceedings in the circuit court is filed—the case being regarded as having always been in the supreme court: People v. Kopplekom, 16 M. 61.

72. The practice in reviewing trials upon issues in quo warranto cases, not being provided for by statute or rule of court, must be governed by that at common law: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 243.

73. Where an issue under proceedings in the nature of a quo warranto has been sent down for trial, the case remains throughout as an original cause in the supreme court; and the verdict and proceedings on the trial, when certified up, will be subject to the same rules as apply in any court when judgment is moved for on a nisi prius record: Keeler v. Robertson, 27 M. 116.

(b) Venue; trial of issue.

74. On information for usurpation of an elective county office, the issues will be sent for trial to the county in which the election took place, unless such a showing is made for change of venue as is required in other cases: People v. Cicotte, 15 M. 326.

75. H. S. § 8644, which authorizes an issue to be sent to such county as the supreme court may direct, refers only to issues arising on the question of damages for the detention of the office, and not to those referring to the office itself: Ibid.

76. When an issue in quo warranto is sent down to the circuit court to be tried, the parties cannot be deprived of a jury against their consent: People v. Doesburg, 16 M. 133.

77. In quo warranto upon a contested election it is held proper to submit to the jury special questions as to whether certain alleged illegal voters voted at the election, for whom they voted, and whether they were legally entitled to vote: Harbaugh v. Cicotte, 33 M. 241.

78. A witness testified that he was confident certain persons voted a certain ticket. Held admissible: Ibid.

79. Whether a voter had been "duly registered," or was a "legal voter," are proper special questions to submit to a jury in a contested election case. The objection that it requires the jury to pass upon a question of law is not valid: Ibid.

(c) New trials.

80. A motion for a new trial in a quo warranto case should be made at the term at which the report of the trial is filed, where there is ample time to make it before the close of the term: Coon v. Plymouth P. R. Co., 32 M. 248.

81. A new trial may be granted after a trial on quo warranto upon the same grounds and on the same showing as in civil cases generally: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 243.

82. When issues are sent down to the circuit court to be tried, a refusal to grant a continuance will be no ground for a new trial, unless it is made to appear affirmatively that the party asking it has been improperly deprived thereby of material testimony: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 320.

83. If a new trial can be granted at all on the ground that the verdict was against evidence when the judge who tried the case certifies that he was satisfied with it, it can only be when from the evidence reported there can be no doubt of the impropriety of the verdict: Ibid.

84. Where issues framed in the supreme court are sent to one of the circuit courts for trial, the circuit judge should make report of the trial, embracing sufficient of the proceedings to show the bearing of any legal rulings made by him to which exception was taken, that the parties may have such rulings reviewed on motion for a new trial. The motion cannot be heard on affidavits as to what the proceedings were: People v. Sackett, 14 M. 248.

85. If a party moves for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, the judge must report the evidence in full, and also whether the verdict upon the evidence was satisfactory to him. And he should fix a time for settling his report, and cause notice thereof to be given to the parties that they may be present: Ibid.

VI. JUDGMENT.

86. A verdict finding only part of the facts necessary to decide the issue will be regarded as a special verdict; and, if there be no general finding, no judgment can be entered, and the case must be retried: People v. Doesburg, 17 M. 135.

87. Where an issue of fact in a quo warranto case has been sent down for trial by jury, and the circuit judge has not certified the evidence with his report of the trial, this omission is no valid objection to the entry of final judgment where the judge was not required to certify it by the order sending the case down: Coon v. Plymouth P. R. Co., 32 M. 248.

88. Proceedings by quo warranto, begun in the circuit court, for the office of alderman were dismissed below for want of jurisdiction upon a finding which did not show how many votes were cast, or how many for either party, or that either received more than the other, and which recited the acts of the election inspectors without deciding upon their accuracy. Held, that the finding was not full enough to justify final judgment in the supreme court: Cooley v. Ashley, 43 M. 458.

89. Upon respondent's default, where the information is filed on relation of the claimant to a public office, the court will render judgment of ouster against respondent, but cannot adjudge relator entitled to the office: People v. Connor, 13 M. 238.

90. Although the pleading demurred to be defective, judgment goes against the party whose pleading was first defective in substance: People v. Hartwell, 12 M. 508.

91. The rule that judgment on demurrer must be given against the party who commits the first fault in the pleadings applies only to errors of substance: People v. Miller, 16 M. 56.

92. The admissions in a respondent's plea are conclusive against him, and, if they show him not entitled to office, will maintain a judgment of ouster against him; but no judgment can be rendered for the relator thereon, if there has been no trial or finding upon facts: Crawford v. Molitor, 23 M. 341.

93. The imposition of a fine for usurpation of office is in the discretion of the court: People v. Miller, 16 M. 205.

94. In a proceeding to determine the title to the office of supervisor, the only questions raised being questions of fact, which have all been found for the relator, judgment of ouster is granted with costs: Pruden v. Denton, 35 M. 305.

95. Whichever party prevails upon an information filed in the circuit court by a private relator to try title to an office, the judgment does not estop the people: Vrooman v. Michie, 69 M. 42.

96. A corporation that had usurped certain franchises, but not in bad faith, was merely ousted therefrom, with a nominal fine and costs: Stewart v. Father Matthew Society, 41 M. 67.

97. No costs are awarded against a respondent who was not in possession of office when the information to try the right thereto was filed: People v. Lord, 9 M. 237.

98. The question of the boundary line between two cities will not be determined on quo warranto where it is not necessarily raised upon the record, and where neither city is implicated in the proceeding: People v. Hatch, 60 M. 229.

RAILROADS.

I. CHARACTER AND ORGANIZATION.

As to offence of wilfully endangering lives of employees, etc., see CRIMES, § 203.

I. CHARACTER AND ORGANIZATION.

(a) Their public character.

1. In legal contemplation a railroad is neither a public common nor a public highway: Williams v. M. C. R. Co., 2 M. 259.

2. Although railroad companies receive tolls as compensation for carrying persons and property, they are to be deemed public rather than private corporations, the legislative purpose in creating them being to benefit the public: Swan v. Williams, 2 M. 427.

3. Railroads are often termed public highways, because they accommodate the public travel and are regulated by law so as to exclude partiality in their accommodations; but, when in private hands, the resemblance to ordinary highways is fanciful, and they are not a public purpose in such sense that the taxing power may be exercised to help build them: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452; Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499. See infra, § 56.

4. Railroads, though not strictly highways, are such within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2477, which grants the right of way for the construction of highways across the public lands: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

5. Though a railroad corporation is private, its work is public: Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 666.

(b) Organization of companies.

1. Legislation; charters.

6. The legislative council of the territory had power to pass the act of March 7, 1834, incorporating the Detroit & Pontiac Railroad Company: Mercer v. Williams, W. 85.

7. And said act, in so far as it authorized the appropriation of private property for the purposes contemplated in the act, without the owner's consent, was not repugnant to the constitution of the United States or to the ordinance of 1787: Swan v. Williams, 2 M. 427.

8. Act 195 of 1871 (C. L. 1871, §§ 2405-2460), entitled "An act to revise the laws providing for the incorporation of railroad companies," held constitutional against the objections that its title was not sufficiently specific, and that its provisions were incoherent: Continental Improvement Co. v. Phelps, 47 M. 299.

9. Said statute superseded the general railroad law of Feb. 12, 1855 (C. L. 1871, §§ 2297-2365), and the acts amendatory thereto: Ibid.

10. The general railroad law of 1873 (H. S. §§ 3313-3397) is not unconstitutional on the ground that the title provides for more than one object, its object being to bring together the legislation concerning the creation and management of railroads: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

11. The act of Feb. 13, 1855, changing the name of a certain railroad company to the Detroit & Milwaukee Railroad Company, and authorizing it, for the purpose of forming a continuous line, to acquire the franchises of another company, cannot be held to have been unconstitutionally adopted (see CONSTITUTIONS, § 526): Attorney-General v. Joy, 55 M. 94.

12. Nor is said act of Feb. 13, 1855, repugnant to Const., art. 15, § 8, which declares that the legislature shall pass no act renewing or extending a special act of incorporation; nor does it create a new corporation in violation of Const., art. 15, § 1: Ibid.

13. Act 96 of 1859 (H. S. §§ 3406-3408), entitled "An act in relation to mortgages against preferred stock in, and the delivery of goods by, railway companies," held not void for duplex title, or as having the effect to create new corporations with the old chartered powers: Ibid.

14. Said act was not repealed by the amendment of the general railroad law by the act of 1873 (Sess. L., p. 83) or by the general revision of that law in 1873; those acts refer to companies organized under the general railroad law: Ibid.

15. Act 80 of 1907 (C. L. 1871, § 2361), amending C. L. 1857, ch. 67, by adding a new section concerning construction of road and assessment of stock, held constitutional (see CONSTITUTIONS, §§ 563, 618): Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

16. It is provided by section 5 of the charter of the Michigan Central Railroad Company (Laws 1846, p. 43) that no railroad or railroads from the eastern or southern boundary of the state shall be built, constructed or maintained, or shall be authorized to be built, constructed or maintained, by or under any law of this state, any portion of which shall approach, westwardly of Wayne county, within five miles of the line of said railroad, as designated in said act, without the consent of said company; and that no railroad or railroads shall be authorized or constructed which shall commence within twenty miles of the city of Detroit and extend to Lake Michigan or the southern boundary of the state, the line of which shall, on an average, run within twenty miles of the main line of said Michigan Central Railroad; provided, that said section shall not be construed to restrict or prevent the construction of public roads, or canals, or railroads, or private ways, under, above or across the road of said company, when deemed expedient, but so as not unnecessarily to obstruct the same. It was held that the prohibition contained in the first subdivision of said section does not apply to a chain or series of railroads, one of which might reach one of the prohibited points, and another of which might reach the other point, but only to an entire road in itself extending to each point. Held, also, that the proviso at the end of the section was not limited in its terms by the general language of the first subdivision, and that its intent was not to prohibit the construction of such roads only as did not connect with said southern or eastern boundary: M. C. R. Co. v. Michigan Southern R. Co., 4 M. 361.

2. Preliminaries; estoppel to dispute organization.

17. Where, under C. L. 1871, § 2297, the affidavit as to the amount of stock subscribed was not sworn to by a sufficient number of directors, the irregularity was cured by the subsequent filing of an affidavit sworn to by the requisite number: Monroe v. Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co., 28 M. 272.

18. Where a railroad company is organized under a special charter, proof of the charter and of user under it is sufficient to establish a prima facie right in the corporation to sue for the recovery of subscriptions to its stock; and this prima facie case is not to be disputed by an individual in an action where the question only arises collaterally, and the state, as the party chiefly concerned, cannot be heard by its counsel. The ruling should be the same where an attempt has been made to organize a corporation under a general law, and the question is one of exact regularity and strict compliance with the law: Swartwout v. Michigan A. L. R. Co., 24 M. 389.

19. A subscriber to the capital stock of a railroad company cannot set up in defence to an action on his subscription any mere irregularity in the organization of the company, provided it be a corporation de facto, proceeding without interference of the state in the construction, completion and maintenance of its road: Monroe v. Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co., 28 M. 272.

20. Where a subscription to a railroad company recognizes the corporation, the regularity of the preliminary steps organizing the company are not open to dispute in an action upon such subscription: Parker v. Northern Central M. R. Co., 33 M. 23.

21. The legality of the incorporation of a railroad company cannot be inquired into as between the parties in a collateral action by it upon a transferable aid contract whereof it is equitable assignee: Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 M. 456.

22. A railroad company that has completed its road and is engaged in operating it must be deemed, in an action brought by it upon an aid contract, a corporation de facto, and defendant cannot dispute its legal organization: Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 43 M. 584.

(c) Consolidation.

23. In consolidating two or more railroad companies, every requirement of the statute must be strictly complied with: Peninsular R. Co. v. Tharp, 28 M. 506; Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Drinker, 30 M. 124.

24. The first step in consolidation proceedings is the making of an agreement by the directors of the respective companies (C. L. 1871, § 2346; H. S. § 3343); and this precedes any steps to convene the stockholders. The stockholders' meetings consider and determine the ratification of an agreement, not the acceptance of a proposition: Tuttle v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 35 M. 247.

25. Where no notice of a meeting of directors to act upon a proposed consolidation is required by the statute, and it is not shown that the articles of association or the by-laws provide the manner of notice or require that there should be any, and a quorum is present, all voting affirmatively, as shown by the record, such meeting is legally held, and its action valid, without proof of notice to the absent members: Wells v. Rogers, 60 M. 525.

26. Unless the notices convening stockholders to ratify a consolidation agreement follow the requirements of the statute, the proceedings at the meetings are invalid. The object of the meetings must be stated in the notices, and the notices must be published for the statutory time: Tuttle v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 35 M. 247.

27. Without proof of notice of a stockholders' meeting to ratify a consolidation agreement, it does not appear that a legal meeting has been held: Rogers v. Wells, 44 M. 411.

28. The notices of the meetings of the stockholders of two railroad companies to ratify an agreement for consolidation are to be separate, should be signed by the secretaries separately, and each need be published only in the counties through which the particular road runs: Wells v. Rogers, 60 M. 525.

29. If the publication of notice to stockholders of a meeting to bring about consolidation is not shown by affidavit as allowed by H. S. § 3317, it should be proved by some one connected with the newspapers, or who has seen the notices and can identify them: Brown v. Dibble, 65 M. 520.

30. The merger does not take place until the consolidation agreement is made and ratified and a duplicate thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state; before that there can be no valid action by the new company: Peninsular R. Co. v. Tharp, 28 M. 506; Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Drinker, 30 M. 124.

31. And any attempted election of directors of the consolidated corporation, prior to such filing, is unwarranted and ineffectual: Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Drinker, 30 M. 124.

32. Nor can the consolidated company, before such filing, make valid assessments upon subscription to the stock of one of the original corporations; the conditions of the statute, from which alone it derives its corporate existence, are imperative: Peninsular R. Co. v. Tharp, 28 M. 506.

33. Under the general law of 1855 (C. L. 1871, § 2348) the rights, property and franchises of the constituent companies did not vest in the consolidated company until the election of a board of directors for the latter; and until the consolidation was thus perfected the new company could not, by virtue of any rights acquired by the consolidation proceedings merely, maintain a suit upon a demand belonging to one of the former companies: Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Drinker, 30 M. 124.

34. In an action upon a subscription to a specified railroad company, evidence was given tending to show that the company had been consolidated with another, and that business had since been done in the name of the consolidated corporation by which suit was brought. Held, that it was fair to presume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the new organization had elected a board of directors, whereby the right to the subscription had been transferred to it: Detroit, L. & M. R. Co. v. Starnes, 38 M. 698.

35. Where, on the mere ground of a right by succession under the statute, a consolidated corporation sues to recover assessments upon a subscription to the capital stock of one of the original corporations, or upon an aid subscription to one of such companies, it is essential to a recovery that a consolidation conforming to the statute be proved; it is not enough that the new company is a corporation de facto, and entitled as such to enforce contracts as against parties who have dealt with it. And defendants, unless estopped by acquiescence, may assail the validity of the consolidation proceedings: Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Drinker, 30 M. 124; Tuttle v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 35 M. 247; Brown v. Dibble, 65 M. 520.

36. To establish the legality of a consolidation between a Michigan company and an Ohio one, it should appear that the latter was legally incorporated, and that it could lawfully unite with a Michigan company: Brown v. Dibble, 65 M. 520.

37. A certificate signed only by the railroad commissioner and by a person not a member of the board, the two describing themselves as chairman and secretary of the "board of railroad consolidation" (a term not used by the statute), is not evidence of the approval required by H. S. § 3844 as amended by act 174 of 1888 (Pub. Acts, p. 187): Ibid.

38. Where recovery is sought from a consolidated railroad company for a cause of action that arose originally against one of its constituents, the declaration must aver against what company it arose, and aver such facts as will subject the new company to liability upon it: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 M. 251.

39. In an action brought by the assignee of a subscription for railroad stock to recover the amount of the subscription, the declaration alleged the consolidation of the company in which the stock was taken, and the plaintiff sought to introduce in evidence the articles of the original and the consolidated companies. Held, that the objection that they were "incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial" was not sufficiently specific: Rodgers v. Wells, 44 M. 411.

40. Every railroad corporation has its existence and domicile within the territory of the sovereignty which creates it; and when two or more corporations created in different sovereignties are consolidated into one, the component parts bring to the new organization the powers and privileges possessed by each, however different, and the consolidated company exercises in each jurisdiction only those powers that the constituent part formerly exercised there. And where roads lying in different states are consolidated, the legislature of each state continues to legislate as before in respect to so much of the road as has always been within its jurisdiction, and cannot follow the consolidated company outside of the state. But the consolidated company stands, in each state, in the place of the corporation to whose rights it succeeded there: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Auditor-General, 53 M. 79.

41. The general railroad law, in permitting the consolidation of railroad companies within the state with others beyond its boundaries, contemplates leaving the domestic company in its original position as to stock and loans, and annexing to its capital and loans those additions which are most proportional to the original amounts: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. People, 46 M. 193.

42. A railroad company's liability for injuries from negligence attaches to a new company into which it is merged by consolidation: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 53 M. 125.

43. Consolidation of plaintiff with another company, pending an action for an assessment upon subscriptions to stock, does not defeat the action; the cause of action passes to the new company: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

Consolidation does not defeat condemnation proceedings: See infra, § 151.

(d) Re-organization; transfer.

44. Under H. S. § 3406, those who acquire the property and franchises of a railway company on foreclosure sale take the road free from all debts and obligations not secured by prior liens or encumbrances, and the new stockholders succeed to the charter powers of the debtor company under the same conditions and with the same rights as if they had been the original stockholders of the road burdened with no debts; nor will any common-law action lie against them for any of the debts of the former company: Cook v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 43 M. 349.

45. The purchasers on execution sale of the property and franchises of a street railway company may exercise such franchises and collect tolls the same as the corporation: McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. Street R. Co., 41 M. 274.

46. Where the assets of a railroad company are sold in bankruptcy, and the purchaser of its assets transfers them to another who organizes a new company, and in the papers expressly recognizes the new company as assignee from him of the assets, this is a sufficient assignment to enable the new company to bring suit upon obligations given to the old company: Wilcox v. Toledo & Ann Arbor R. Co., 43 M. 584.

II. AID TO RAILROADS; SUBSCRIPTIONS.

(a) Municipal-aid bonds.

47. Legislation authorizing municipal corporation to vote taxes and pledge their credit in aid of the construction of railroads by private companies is unconstitutional; and, therefore, a township will not be compelled to execute and issue bonds in accordance with a resolution adopted by it in favor of a company which subsequently constructed its road in reliance thereupon: People v. Salem, 20 M. 452.

48. And, for the same reason, where a city, under act 45 of 1869, had issued bonds in aid of a railroad and deposited them with the state treasurer, who, on demand therefor, declined to deliver them up to the proper authorities of the city, such delivery was compelled by mandamus: Bay City v. State Treasurer, 23 M. 499.

49. Municipal-aid bonds deposited with the state treasurer under a law held unconstitutional are in his official custody until delivered up, and he is responsible for their safe-keeping and return to the makers when demanded, and a mandamus lies to compel such return when refused upon a reasonable demand: La Grange v. State Treasurer, 24 M. 468.

50. The fact that a city has received in exchange for void bonds, issued under a statute authorizing aid to railroads, the bonds of the railroad company in whose favor the city bonds were issued, does not make valid the unauthorized obligations of the city: Thomas v. Port Huron, 27 M. 320.

51. A resident owner of real and personal estate subject to taxation can maintain a bill to enjoin the issue of railroad-aid bonds under a resolution of the township board, such bonds being unlawful: Curtenius v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 37 M. 583.

52. Creditors who have received township railroad-aid bonds in payment cannot retain them and question their validity at the same time; if they wish for a payment in cash they must give up the bonds: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Mellen, 44 M. 321.

53. Township-aid bonds were delivered by a railroad company to one of its directors to pay for depot buildings which he had put up and agreed to convey, but did not do so. Held, on a bill for accounting, that he should be charged with the bonds: Ibid.

54. A judgment against a township upon railroad-aid bonds precludes inquiry into the grounds upon which it was rendered, but it does not bind another township that was not made a party to the action; nor can it sustain a claim for apportionment against such other township where the transaction upon which it was based did not become a binding agreement until after the other township had been set off from the one which issued the bonds: Pierson v. Reynolds, 49 M. 224.

55. A charter provision empowering the common council to "issue new bonds for the refunding of bonds and evidences of debt already issued," authorizes the issue of refunding bonds for railroad-aid indebtedness that has passed into judgment: Port Huron v. McCall, 40 M. 565.

56. The federal courts hold that statutes authorizing municipal aid to railroads are constitutional, and those courts permit recovery upon bonds issued prior to the decision cited supra, § 47: Pine Grove v. Talcott, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 666; Taylor v. Ypsilanti, 105 U. S. 60; New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73.

57. The rights of the holder of municipal bonds issued in aid of a railroad are not determined by the law as expounded by the supreme court of the state at the time he received them; even if not a holder for value, he is entitled to whatever rights the railroad company had by virtue of its contract with the municipality: New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73.

58. Under the act of March 22, 1869, providing that a municipality voting aid to any railroad "shall, within sixty days after the question of aid is determined, issue its coupon bonds for the amount so determined," bonds issued after the sixty days and ante-dated are not invalid; the statute is simply permissive: Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 663.

59. Municipal bonds voted in aid of a railroad company are rightly delivered to a new or consolidated company into which the former has been merged: New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73; Chickaming v. Carpenter, 106 U. S. 663.

60. That municipal bonds were issued to a railroad company as a donation, and not as a subscription to stock, does not affect the legal principles governing them: New Buffalo v. Cambria Iron Co., 105 U. S. 73.

61. In an action on municipal bonds issued under authority of law, plaintiff need not aver performance of any of the requisites necessary to give them validity; but it is for the defendant to show, if it exists, the want of such validity: Lincoln v. Cambria Iron Co., 103 U. S. 412.

(b) Voluntary subscriptions.

62. A railroad-aid subscription signed on Sunday is prima facie void; and if the railroad company has not acted on it in good faith and without knowledge of the defect, it can only become valid by some distinct act of the subscriber upon a week-day in delivering it, or authorizing it to be delivered: Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co. v. Chappell, 56 M. 190.

63. A voluntary subscription in aid of a railroad is not defeated by the fact that the municipal and individual aid and stock subscriptions do not amount to $3,000 per mile; the proviso of C. L. 1871, § 2298, merely refers to levying assessments upon stock subscriptions: Wright v. Irwin, 35 M. 347.

64. A promise to contribute in aid of a proposed railroad implies, as a condition, in the absence of express conditions, that the road shall be constructed and operated; and if, relying upon such promise, this is done in a reasonable time, where no time is fixed, the promise becomes binding: Stevens v. Corbitt, 33 M. 458; Michigan, M. & C. R. Co. v. Bacon, 33 M. 466.

65. The fact that a company was organized to build the road, or that even in the absence of such a promise the road would have been built, does not defeat the promise: Stevens v. Corbitt, 33 M. 458.

66. A promissory note given as a voluntary contribution in aid of a railroad will not be held invalid for want of consideration where the proposed road has been constructed and put in operation: Wright v. Irwin, 35 M. 347.

67. Where a railroad-aid contract is conditioned on the payment of a stated sum when the road is completed, the word "completed" does not have the same force as it would in a contract for construction; the purpose of the condition is accomplished when the road is ready for regular business: Tower v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 34 M. 328.

68. In an action on an agreement to pay a certain sum of money to a railroad company in a specified time after the cars begin to run, evidence to show what would be a reasonable time for completing the road is inadmissible: Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 M. 456.

69. Defendant promised to pay a certain sum in aid of the construction of a railroad, provided the cars should run upon said road within one-third of a mile of a certain town within eighteen months from the date of the promise. Held, that the condition did not require that the road-bed and track, and the rolling-stock and equipments, should be built and perfected within the eighteen months to the point named, but merely that the road and stock should be so far constructed that cars could be run over the road, and should actually make such run within the time stated: Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co. v. King, 68 M. 111 (Jan. 5, '88).

70. There may be such a change in the location of the line of the road as would warrant the withdrawal of an aid-promise, where the promisor would lose the advantages he expected to accrue to him from the building of the road. The evidence in a particular case held not to sustain such a defence: Michigan, M. & C. R. Co. v. Bacon, 33 M. 466.

71. A company's agreement, as the consideration for a subscription, to establish and construct a railroad between two specified points, would not be performed unless the company had a road under its own permanent control covering the entire distance; though it was not necessary that the company itself should literally build the road all the way: Brown v. Dibble, 65 M. 520.

72. A promissory note, payable to the treasurer of the Chicago & Canada Southern Railway Company, was made "in consideration of the construction of" the railway through or within half a mile of the village of Dundee "within three years after this date, and the building of passenger and freight depot" at Dundee; and it was made payable "in thirty days after said road and depot are constructed as aforesaid." The articles of incorporation of the railway company named Chicago as one of the termini. The track was laid through Dundee, and the depot put up, but instead of extending the road to Chicago it was connected with other routes at a point beyond Dundee, so as to form a through line. Held, that the promise was made to afford aid in constructing the road, and was intended to be payable in case of the completion, as agreed, of the portion built, regardless of the failure to extend it to Chicago within three years, as stipulated: Stowell v. Stowell, 45 M. 364.

73. Several persons signed a paper reciting that, as A. had proposed to construct a railroad from I. to S., in consideration of the right of way and $3,000 a mile local subscription, they promised to give their notes to the I. & S. Railroad Company for the amounts set opposite their names. The company was not then organized nor the line of road fixed. In a suit on one of the subscriptions it was held that plaintiff might show that, owing to the high lands near the city, it had not been contemplated by the parties that the road would be built to the corporate limits of Ionia, but that the line of a previously constructed road was to be used for some distance; and that the nature of the ground might be shown as a reason why a particular route could not be chosen: Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co. v. Starnes, 38 M. 698.

74. A promise to pay an existing company, its successors or assigns, a sum of money sixty days after the road is open for traffic may be enforced in its own name by the successor of such company which has completed the road, and to whom the promisee has assigned all its franchises and property, including such franchise. The essence of the agreement is the building and opening of the road: Michigan, M. & C. R. Co. v. Bacon, 38 M. 466.

75. Where the consideration of a transferable aid-note given to a railroad company is the benefit to be derived by the maker from the construction of its road, he cannot defend on the ground that the road was built by another company: Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 M. 456.

76. A defendant who has promised to pay money one day after the grading is done and the ties are on the ground for the road-bed of a railway between certain points cannot be held liable to another company which, after the road has been abandoned for eleven years, builds a road between those points and uses part of the same line, but does not show that it is the legal assignee or receiver of the former company: Sickels v. Anderson, 68 M. 421.

77. A railroad-aid note was given, whereby the makers, in consideration of the building of the V. B. Division of the T. & S. H. Railroad, promised to pay to said railroad company, or order, $200 in thirty days after notice of its completion. When the note was given the T. & S. H. Company was not in existence, and no company of that name was ever organized, but an independent corporation by the name of the V. B. Division of the T. & S. H. Railroad Company was afterward created with a different purpose from that of the original undertaking. Held, that the promisee in the note was the T. & S. H. Railroad Company, and that the V. B. Division, as afterward organized, could not recover upon it without showing that the promisors had consented to the change of scheme, and declaring on the new agreement: Toledo & S. H. R. Co. v. Lamphear, 54 M. 575.

78. Successive assignments and deliveries of an aid-note drawn to the order of a railroad company were held sufficient to create an equitable assignment of the contract embodied in it, and to authorize the final holder to sue on it in his own name as equitable assignee: Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 M. 456.

79. In an action upon a contract, whereby a specified amount was to be paid upon the completion of a certain railroad, the declaration averred the contract to have been made for a valuable consideration, and the antecedent negotiations out of which the contract grew were relied on as constituting such consideration. Held, no error to allow such preliminary negotiations to be very fully disclosed: Tower v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 34 M. 328.

80. A railroad-aid note, conditioned on the road's completion to a certain point, may, when it has become absolutely payable, be sued by the payee under the common counts: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Potter, 55 M. 327.

(c) Subscriptions to stock.

As to what certificate constitutes stockholder, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 81, 82.

As to transfer of stock, see CORPORATIONS, §§ 42, 45, 46.

Subscription books are evidence of sum subscribed per mile: See EVIDENCE, § 507.

1. In general.

81. Under the general railroad act of 1855 (C. L. 1871, ch. 75), a railroad company was organized, with articles of association which fixed the amount of capital stock, and named five commissioners to open books for subscriptions to the stock. The commissioners, however, never opened such books, but a subscription paper was circulated by an agent appointed by the directors, and defendant subscribed a sum thereon which he subsequently on several occasions offered to pay. Held, that the promise was without consideration, and he was not liable thereon: Shurtz v. Schoolcraft & T. R. R. Co., 9 M. 269.

82. The commissioners act as a statutory board, and are alone authorized to receive subscriptions. They are not required to recognize or protect any subscriptions not under their own auspices; and such subscriptions cannot prevent other persons taking the entire amount of stock not subscribed by the articles of association, whenever the commissioners shall open books. There is, therefore, no consideration for any other subscription: Ibid.

83. Where the general railroad law had provided that subscriptions for stock in a railroad company must be taken upon books opened by commissioners, it was held that subscriptions otherwise made could not be enforced unless made on some actual consideration or agreement binding the company: Parker v. Northern Central M. R. Co., 33 M. 23; Northern Central M. R. Co. v. Eslow, 40 M. 222.

84. A subscription paper was headed as follows: "We, the undersigned, in consideration that the Northern Central Michigan Railroad Company shall proceed to the building of said road, hereby agree to pay said company — for which we shall have paid-up stock of the company — the amount set to our names, to be paid 20 per cent. a month, beginning when the work shall have commenced." It was not a subscription to stock taken by commissioners in the mode prescribed by law, and therefore binding on the company. Held that, in the absence of any averment in the declaration that the offer it contained was accepted and acted upon, it would not sustain a recovery against subscribers: Ibid.

85. Under C. L. 1871, § 2405 (now repealed), subscriptions to capital stock of a railroad corporation could be made only "in the manner to be provided by its by-laws." A subscription made before any by-laws were adopted gave no right to either party; and, where there had been nothing done to create an estoppel, the subscriber was held not bound by a by-law made afterwards and adopting his subscription: Carlisle v. Saginaw, V. & St. L. R. Co., 27 M. 315.

86. A preliminary subscription to railroad stock seems to be sufficient if it promises contribution to an enterprise which afterwards in the articles the associates proceed to describe with the particularity required by law: Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 M. 130.

87. Under C. L. 1871, § 2361 (repealed by H. S. § 3397), providing that when the subscriptions, including municipal aid voted, amounted to $8,000 per mile, the company might elect directors and proceed, etc., held that, notwithstanding the subscription was made up in part of invalid (see supra, § 47) municipal aid voted, etc., it was sufficient to authorize the company to proceed, etc.: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

88. One who is sued on his subscription for railroad stock may show, in defence, the corporation's failure to obtain the amount of capital stock required by law; for his subscription is on the implied condition that the aggregate amount called for by statute shall be subscribed: Monroe v. Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co., 28 M. 272.

89. The statutory requirement with regard to the amount of money that must be subscribed for each mile of road does not apply to parts of the road lying outside the state. In a suit upon a subscription for stock, therefore, it cannot be objected that there is no proof that such amount has been subscribed for the whole of a road that lies partly in another jurisdiction: Ibid.

90. An arrangement between the officers of a railroad company and a portion of its subscribers that, if the town in which the latter resided voted a certain amount of municipal aid, such subscribers, upon paying a certain percentage of their subscription, should be released from the balance, was held void, being in effect an agreement to release a portion of the subscriptions without authority of law: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

91. Where C. L. 1871, § 2297 (now repealed), says that "thereupon the persons who have subscribed, and all persons who shall from time to time become stockholders in such company, shall be a body corporate," the subscribers intended are not only the parties to the articles of association whose subscriptions are provided for in the same section, but also the subscribers to the preliminary agreement to take shares of the capital stock of the proposed company and pay therefor according to the directors' assessments; and those who have subscribed only the preliminary agreement are held liable thereon after the company has been formed and assessment made and payment demanded: Peninsular R. Co. v. Duncan, 28 M. 130.

92. Where, according to the law, one has paid his five per cent. upon his subscription to the preliminary agreement to take shares of stock in the proposed railroad company, and it is received and retained by the custodian agreed upon by those who are associated in such agreement, he has acquired the important right to take part in the organization and the choice of directors and the determination of the route, and in shaping the constitution of the company; and he ought not to be able to disaffirm his action at pleasure after other parties have taken a further unquestionably binding action in reliance on his promised assistance. The promises in such an agreement would, when accepted by the organization and action of the company, be enforceable at common law, if the purpose were lawful and beneficial, and if the return called for by the subscriptions could be made to the several promisors: Ibid.

93. While the general railroad law supposes that the subscribers to the original agreement for the formation of a railway company will sign the articles of association also, it neither takes away their rights, nor absolves them from obligations, on account of their failure to observe this formality; but if the corporation is duly formed, the preliminary subscribers are liable on general principles applicable to such undertakings as they have entered into, for the fulfilment thereof, in the absence of any provision of the statute which expressly or by necessary implication relieves them therefrom. The state requires that subscriptions to a certain amount be made to the articles; but if there be other subscriptions to the preliminary agreement it does not follow that they must be also added to the articles, or that, if they are not, the subscribers are released thereby: Ibid.

94. Where the declaration in a suit upon a subscription to an agreement to take stock in a railroad company did not expressly aver payment of the five per cent. required by law, but set it forth by way of recital, it was still held sufficient in that particular on general demurrer and on special demurrer directed to other defects: Ibid.

95. A demurrer to a declaration against one who had not fulfilled his agreement to take stock in a railroad company to be formed, that it did not appear therefrom that the commissioners named in the articles of association of the company for distributing stock in excess of subscriptions had ever assigned any stock to the defendant, was held as not well taken, as the commissioners do not assign stock unless in apportioning such surplus, and the original corporators are entitled to what they subscribed for independently of any action by the commissioners: Ibid.

96. A railroad company, although a corporation de facto, and entitled as such to maintain actions, cannot recover on subscriptions to its stock without showing performance of all those acts which are made by the statute conditions precedent: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

97. A declaration upon a subscription for railroad stock must allege the agreement between the company and the subscriber to be either complete, or to be made so by subsequent acceptance, and the allegation must be proved to sustain the action: Parker v. Northern Central M. R. Co., 33 M. 23.

98. In an action upon a subscription, irregularly made, for railroad stock, possession of the subscription paper by the corporation long after the suit began would not, of necessity, raise the presumption of seasonable liability on it, as if it had been duly delivered to and accepted by the corporation: Ibid.

2. Assessments and actions therefor.

99. One who receives a certificate of stock for a certain number of shares at a given sum per share thereby becomes liable to pay the amount thereof when called upon by the corporation or its assignee: Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 665.

100. Under the general railroad law of 1855, at least as it stood prior to its amendment in 1857, no levy of assessments could be made until the whole amount of the capital stock specified in the articles was subscribed: Shurtz v. Schoolcraft & T. R. R. Co., 9 M. 289.

101. A consolidated railroad company cannot make valid assessments upon subscriptions to the stock of one of the original corporations until after its articles are filed in the office of the secretary of state: Peninsular R. Co. v. Tharp, 28 M. 506.

102. In an action by a corporation to recover an assessment upon subscriptions to stock, the mere fact that the commissioners designated to receive subscriptions had assumed to set apart a division of the railroad for construction, that being by the law the duty of the directors, and that this action was therefore void, is of no consequence when the proper proceedings had afterward been taken by the directors: Swartwout v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 24 M. 389.

103. Under C. L. 1871, § 2361, for the purposes of an assessment upon subscriptions to stock, either the road was to be regarded as an entirety, or the separate division set apart for construction was to be considered and proceeded with by itself as a whole. An action for an assessment upon such subscription could not be maintained without proof that the necessary subscriptions had been obtained between the two termini, or within the required distance from them, of the division designated and set apart: Ibid.

104. It was held that a subscription to railroad stock, made upon condition "that the line of the road shall be located and built within one mile of the postoffice in the village of Three Rivers," would be assessable when the road should be finally located within one mile thereof, although not yet constructed: Ibid.

105. It is no defence to an action to recover an assessment upon subscriptions to stock that stock had been awarded by the commissioners for receiving subscriptions to persons whose names were not on the stock book or to those who had not actually paid in the per cent. required by law on subscribing; one who has received what he subscribed for cannot complain of an award to those who could not have compelled it: Ibid.

106. It was held not to defeat an action by a railroad corporation for an assessment upon subscriptions to stock, that, pending the action, the plaintiff consolidated with another company. The cause of action passed to the new company, and the objection, if valid in any form, should have been considered matter in abatement merely, and should have been pleaded accordingly: Ibid.

107. A subscriber to the stock of a railroad company, when sued for an unpaid assessment on shares forming part of an increase of the capital stock, cannot defend on the ground that the proceedings to increase the stock were irregular or invalid; he is estopped from disputing them: Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 665.

That a valid consolidation must be proved to sustain an action by a consolidated company upon an assessment on stock in one of its constituent companies, see supra, § 35.

3. Assignment.

108. Whether stock subscriptions are assignable, quere: Rodgers v. Wells, 44 M. 411.

109. They are if the amount due thereon has been regularly called in by assessment, so that it stands as a liquidated demand that may be sued; but the assignment would be subject to equities and could not deprive the debtor of any stockholder's rights: Wells v. Rodgers, 50 M. 294.

110. One who declares upon an assignment to him by a consolidated company of a claim for an amount due on a subscription to stock in one of the original companies must show that the statutory conditions to consolidation were substantially observed; and he cannot recover on proof that the claim was assigned by one of the constituent companies to his assignor, unless he has declared on such an assignment: Rodgers v. Wells, 44 M. 411.

111. In an action by the assignee of a claim for an amount unpaid on a stock assessment the defendant, if a stockholder in the assigning company, may have a right to know whether or not he is to be sued by a purchaser for value, and he can therefore show the consideration of the assignment: Wells v. Rodgers, 50 M. 294.

III. PROCUREMENT AND USE OF RIGHT OF WAY.

(a) Right of way in general.

112. Property of individuals, taken by railroad corporations for the purpose of constructing their roads, is, in legal contemplation, taken not for private but for public use. The tenure of the corporations in the land is in the nature of a trust for public use, subject to the supervision of government: Swan v. Williams, 2 M. 427.

113. Certain lands lying east of the village of Hillsdale were, in the year 1838, taken and appropriated by the state for the use of the Michigan Southern Railroad, which was completed and brought into use over said lands in 1844; and in 1846 all the right, title and interest of the state in the railroad was transferred to the Michigan Southern Railroad Company. It was held that, under the law of 1838, providing for the acquisition of lands for the purposes of railroads, and the settlement of claims for the appropriation of property for such uses, the lands in question vested in the state, whether the claim for damages for their appropriation had been adjudicated upon and satisfied or not; that the transfer of the road by the state to the company imposed upon the latter no obligation to pay said damages, and that the company took such lands relieved of any claim or lien for such claim: People v. Michigan Southern R. Co., 3 M. 496; Smith v. McAdam, 3 M. 506.

114. The statutes providing for the construction of the state railroads, and constituting a board to which claims might be presented for lands taken, considered: People v. Michigan Southern R. Co., 3 M. 496.

115. Lands taken by the state for its railroads passed by the sale of the roads to the purchasers, notwithstanding the owners of the lands had failed to present their claims and obtain compensation: Ibid.; Smith v. McAdam, 3 M. 506.

116. The Michigan Central Railroad Company is the legal owner of its road by purchase and grant from the state, and has by its charter the entire and exclusive right of possession and control of such road: William v. M. C. R. Co., 2 M. 259.

117. An owner cannot, by dedicating land to public use, affect a railroad company's existing right of way thereover: Detroit v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 23 M. 173.

(b) Procurement by grant or agreement.

118. Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2477 a railroad company is entitled to a grant of the right of way over public lands, and the construction of the road is a sufficient consideration for such grant: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

119. No patent is needed in such case where the grant is accepted by the construction of the road; nor is the grant defeated by mere relation back of a homesteader's subsequent patent to the time of his entry; but he is entitled to compensation for improvements: Ibid.

120. All grants to a railroad of the right of way over premises must be construed reasonably, and in the light of surrounding circumstances. (For construction in a particular case, see CONVEYANCES, § 248): Newaygo Manuf. Co. v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 M. 114.

121. An agreement for a railroad right of way cannot rest partly in writing and partly in parol, and if so made the written contract supersedes the oral: Waldron v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 55 M. 420.

122. A deed of a right of way to a railroad company, on condition that the company lay a side-track in some convenient place to be chosen by the grantor, on his premises, within a specified time, or in default forfeit the grant, is construed to mean that the period within which the track must be laid shall not begin to run until the grantor has designated the place for it: Ibid.

123. A deed to a railroad company "of 100 feet in width, being fifty feet on each side of the line which may be hereafter established by said company for the route of their railroad over and across" a specified forty-acre tract, conveys a mere floating right that can only become operative as a conveyance of title by the actual location of the route across such tract: Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 M. 165.

124. A condition in a conveyance to a railroad company that the company "shall build, erect and maintain a depot or station-house on the land herein described, suitable for the convenience of the public, and that at least one train each way shall stop at such depot or station each day when trains run on said road, and that freight and passengers shall be regularly taken at such depot," is not specifically enforceable as such against the grantee; the courts cannot undertake the management of railroading details, and the requirement as to the depot's suitability is too indefinite: Blanchard v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 31 M. 43.

125. Where a railway company seeking to condemn lands does not obtain authority from the owner in fee, it can obtain no rights of control over the land by any license or grant from the holder of a contingent dower interest or a tenant at will: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

126. The charter of a railroad company empowered it to settle with any owner his claim of damages for the occupation of land; therefore a grant to the company, by one of several tenants in common, of the right of way as to his interest over the common estate, although it passes no fee and confers no right as to the other tenants, is nevertheless valid, and operates as to the tenant executing it as a release of his damages: Draper v. Williams, 2 M. 586.

As to proceedings to avoid deed of right of way, see MANDAMUS, § 98.

(c) Condemnation proceedings.

1. General matters.

127. The territorial legislature had power to appropriate private property for public use on securing proper compensation, and could lawfully authorize a railroad corporation to take such property for such use: Swan v. Williams, 2 M. 427.

128. Condemnation proceedings are not judicial in the ordinary sense: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

129. The inquiry in proceedings to condemn lands for railroads is as to an appraisal or estimate of values and a determination of the necessity of the proposed taking: Ibid.

130. Proceedings to condemn land for railroad uses are purely statutory; the remedies therein provided are exclusive, and cannot be extended beyond those contained in the statute: Derby v. Gage, 60 M. 1.

131. But for the specific provisions of our constitution the state could have provided that the inquiries as to necessity and value should be made by any medium it might select: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456. See People v. Michigan Southern R. Co., 3 M. 496.

132. If necessary, intangible rights may be condemned provided compensation is made: Dunlap v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 50 M. 470.

133. Whether a homesteader's inchoate title is such an interest as can be appropriated under the general railroad law by adverse proceedings, querre: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Gordon, 41 M. 420.

134. The corporate existence of a company and its right to exercise corporate franchises cannot properly be passed on by the inferior tribunals for assessing damages in condemning lands, and cannot therefore be considered on certiorari to review their action: Schroeder v. Grand H. & M. R. Co., 44 M. 387.

135. The title of a land-holder cannot be litigated in proceedings before commissioners to condemn the land for railway purposes; and his averment, in answer to the petition for the condemnation of a particular lot, that this and certain other specified lots, lying together, constituted his homestead, and that he occupied them as such, was held sufficient to raise the question of injury to the contiguous lots: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506.

136. An order under H. S. § 8340, allowing possession to be taken of lands sought to be condemned pending proceedings therefor, when, after failure of a first attempt to condemn them, by reason of defects in the proceedings, a second attempt is made, cannot, if it can be granted at all, be granted without full notice and an adequate hearing; and the probate court has never power to make such an order: Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. Livingston Probate Judge, 63 M. 676.

137. Where a railroad corporation had, in good faith, obtained an assessment of damages for land needed for their road long before they wanted the use of it, and afterwards, when any delay would have been injurious to them, and while the confirmation of the inquisition was pending in the supreme court, to which it had been reserved, had tendered the damages assessed and proceeded to use the land, an injunction to restrain the use was refused, notwithstanding the inquisition was not valid until confirmed; inasmuch as the corporation could only be delayed, and could not be prevented from finally obtaining the land: Mercer v. Williams, W. 85.

As to compensation allowed where right of way is taken for street or highway crossing, see HIGHWAYS, §§ 62-64.

2. The petition; map and survey.

138. A petition to acquire title to land for railroad purposes must allege that the taking is necessary for the public use: Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Van Driele, 24 M. 409.

139. A petition which alleges that the property sought is "required" for public use is sufficient. "Required" is synonymous with "necessary": Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Detroit & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

140. Petition for condemnation of land for use of railroad set forth and held sufficient in form and substance: East Saginaw & St. C. R. Co. v. Benham, 28 M. 459.

141. Where it is sought to appropriate the land of several persons for a right of way for a railroad, the petition therefor must distinctly describe each parcel and the purposes for which it is wanted, and must give the reasons for the necessity of proceeding to take it under the statute: Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Sanford, 28 M. 418.

142. A petition for a right of way for a railroad is too defective to maintain proceedings if it does not distinguish the lands of the several owners, nor show the cause of proceeding against each; and when a verdict under it is set aside, the case cannot be referred back to a new jury, but the parties must proceed by a new application: Ibid.

143. The petition need not show an intention to build the entire road if a division of fifteen miles has been lawfully designated; but in such case it must appear in the petition affirmatively that such division has been lawfully made in such manner as to conform to the statute: Ibid.

144. A petition by a railroad company to acquire title, for railroad purposes, to lands used and occupied as a street, is fatally defective if it does not disclose whether it is designed to appropriate the lands as the respondent's property, or whether they were included in the petition for the purpose of having an assessment of the respondent's damages, by reason of his ownership of premises fronting on the street; if the latter, the petition must show that he owns such premises: Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Clark, 28 M. 519.

145. A petition for condemnation is jurisdictionally defective if it only describes the land as a strip 100 feet wide, commencing on the east line of the W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 22, running N. 59° 10' W. across certain designated governmental subdivisions, and lying 50 feet on each side of the center line of a specified railroad as located by a certain survey and indicated by stakes. And a report by the jury which describes the land in this way, and gives no map and does not name, as far as possible, the owners of land to be condemned, will not sustain an award: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Munson, 57 M. 43.

146. The fact of petitioner's inability to acquire title amicably by agreement with the owner is jurisdictional and must be alleged, and may be controverted: Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Sanford, 28 M. 418; Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. v. Weiden, 69 M. 573 (April 20, '88).

147. Where the statements of the petition that the corporation has sought in good faith to acquire the title, and that the land-owner demanded an exorbitant price, are denied by the answer, and where evidence is given of the sum offered and of the price asked, it is error to exclude testimony of the value of the property and of other lots in the vicinity, offered to support the answer; and this error is reviewable on certiorari: Grand Rapids, L. & D. R. Co. v. Weiden, 69 M. 572.

148. The petition need not state the particulars of the unsuccessful negotiations to acquire title—what offers were made or declined—but it is enough to state that the owner asked what petitioner considered an unreasonable price, and that he refused to accept a reasonable sum offered: Ibid.

149. Where the evidence showed that before the petition was filed no sufficient effort was made to settle with the owner, but that such effort was made before the proceeding was moved in the probate court, this court reluctantly allowed the petition to stand without being resworn or presented anew: G. R. & I. R. Co. v. Weiden, 70 M. 390.

And as to petition, see infra, §§ 232-235.

150. The map and survey required by C. L. 1871, § 2312, must embody or be accompanied by such full and accurate notes and data as will furnish complete means for identifying the precise position of every part of the line, with courses and distances throughout, so that there can be no doubt as to where any portion of it is to be found: Convers v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 18 M. 459.

3. Parties.

151. The power of a railroad company to begin proceedings for the condemnation of lands within the state is not lost by its consolidation with another railroad company into a new organization so as to constitute a corporation subject to the laws of the same state as the original company: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

152. All the owners of any parcel sought to be condemned must be before the court; the necessity of taking undivided interests in the same land cannot be determined separately: Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Alley, 84 M. 16, 18.

153. And a dismissal of the petition as to joint owners not served operates as a dismissal as to all: Ibid.

154. In proceedings to condemn lands for a railroad right of way, mortgagees of the land must be defendants; and a discontinuance as to them without adjudicating on their rights is fatal to the proceedings: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 40 M. 383.

4. Notice.

155. The charter of a railroad corporation is not unconstitutional because not expressly requiring notice to the owners of proceedings to assess the compensation for property taken, the charter evidently contemplating notice; so that it is the duty of the tribunal in which the proceeding is taken to see that it is given: Swan v. Williams, 2 M. 427.

156. The jurisdiction of the probate court in proceedings to condemn lands for railroad purposes is dependent upon proof of a valid notice to the land-owners; and notice mailed to a party whose residence was in fact, and was so alleged in the petition, at Aurora, New York, directed to him at Batavia, Cayuga county, New York, is void: Morgan v. Chicago & N. E. R. Co., 86 M. 428.

157. Jurisdiction to appoint commissioners of appraisal in proceedings to condemn land cannot be conferred by notice served only on a person who is in no way connected with the owner of the premises, and has only gone on them to receive service by collusion with those interested in the condemnation: Dunlap v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 46 M. 190.

158. The want of publication of notice to owners and parties interested cannot be insisted upon on appeal when all concerned have voluntarily appeared in the case: East Saginaw & St. C. R. Co. v. Benham, 28 M. 459.

5. Jury and its functions.

159. The right to a jury trial in railroad condemnation cases is a substantial one that cannot be refused or evaded when asserted in proper time: Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Callanan, 61 M. 12.

160. The drawing of a jury must be in the presence of the court at the time of making the order therefor: Convers v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 18 M. 459.

161. The "vicinage" from which jurors are to be drawn is the whole county, and not the town or neighborhood in which the land is to be taken: Ibid.

162. The jurors must be freeholders: Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 M. 18.

163. And the order of the court should direct freeholders to be summoned: Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Clark, 23 M. 519.

164. In drawing jurors from the petit-jury box those not freeholders must be set aside, and the drawing is to continue until the requisite number of qualified jurors is obtained: Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 M. 18.

165. Where the claimant to lands, the title to which a railroad company had petitioned to acquire, was present at the impanelling of a jury of inquest, and no challenge was interposed, the objection to the confirmation of the jury's report, that the jurors were not affirmatively shown to be freeholders, is not well taken in the absence of any showing that any of them were disqualified: Manafield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Clark, 23 M. 519.

166. A stockholder in the railroad company is not a competent juror, and if one is drawn he should disclose his interest, and the company at its peril should challenge him. An inquest by a jury, one of whose members was a stockholder in the company, is void: Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 M. 18.

167. One who has given his note to a railroad company to aid in the construction of its road is disqualified as a juror in proceedings to condemn land for its right of way; and the disqualification cannot be removed by stipulation between the parties: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 40 M. 383.

168. A subscriber to a railroad-aid fund, who takes no stock in the road, acquires no legal interest in another projected road from the fact merely that it is to be leased to the road which he has aided; and he is not therefore incompetent to act as a juror in condemnation proceedings by such other road: Detroit, W. T. & J. R. Co. v. Crane, 50 M. 182.

169. Jurors may be challenged for cause in these proceedings, but not peremptorily: Convers v. G. R. & I. R. Co., 18 M. 459; Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 M. 18.

170. A challenge is properly overruled if the judge knows at the time of nothing which would give the juror a bias; and if the challenger knows of facts which would do so, it is not enough to present them for the first time as a reason for refusing to confirm proceedings which have been long in progress at considerable cost, and in which the juror has taken part without any showing of legal cause against his acting: Detroit, W. T. & J. R. Co. v. Crane, 50 M. 182.

171. On an inquest of the value of property required for a railroad, after a juror had been struck from the panel by one of the parties, and the jury completed, it was held that he could not be resummoned by the officer in the place of one who had been excused: In re Detroit & P. R. Co., 2 D. 367.

172. In these proceedings the oath of the jurors is not to be construed by itself, but as part of the proceedings in which it is taken; and if, when so construed, everything required by the statute is embraced in substance if not in form, it is sufficient: East Saginaw & St. C. R. Co. v. Benham, 28 M. 459.

173. The jury, in proceedings to condemn lands, are not bound by the testimony submitted to them, but are also expected to use their own judgment and knowledge from a view of the premises and from their own experience as freeholders: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

174. Where the jury in proceedings to condemn land for a railroad take all measures that they would if they were personally concerned to acquire a knowledge of the value of the land and of the injury the road is likely to cause it, it is presumable that further evidence as to the public importance of the work and as to amounts of compensation to other owners will no more influence their judgment than such evidence would if they were merely buying and selling: Detroit, W. T. & J. R. Co. v. Crane, 50 M. 182.

175. An inquest of damages for land condemned for railway uses may be conducted by a jury without legal assistance, and liberal practice in the admission or rejection of testimony is allowable; and the conclusions of the jury thereon will not be disturbed except for rulings that were manifestly inaccurate and did substantial injustice: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 M. 222.

176. The jury or commissioners in proceedings to condemn land for railway uses are judges of the law as well as of the facts: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456; Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506.

6. Functions of court.

And see supra, §§ 175, 176; infra, §§ 195-201.

177. The functions of the judge in attendance upon a jury in condemnation proceedings are at most advisory; and where the proceedings of the jury are not based on false principles, the supreme court, on review, will not consider questions raised on merely technical objections to the admission or rejection of testimony though in accordance with the judge's rulings: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

178. If, in proceedings to condemn land, a jury has been summoned under proper circumstances, has conducted its inquiries legally and with due regard to private rights, and has reached a legitimate conclusion as to the necessity for the condemnation and the compensation, the appropriation of the land on payment of such compensation will be lawful and will not be affected by collateral action by the judge or court: Ibid.

179. The award of the jury in proceedings to condemn lands for railroad uses will not be set aside merely because of the admission of testimony that would not have been admissible under strict legal rules, unless it appears to have caused substantial injustice: Detroit, W. T. & J. R. Co. v. Crane, 50 M. 182.

180. Proceedings to condemn land for railway uses are special and unlike ordinary trials at law; the inquest may be conducted by commissioners or a jury without the aid of counsel, so that the practice must be simple and a large discretion allowed in admitting or rejecting testimony: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506.

181. It is not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury or commissioners on the condemnation of land for railway uses: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Detroit & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

182. The probate court cannot direct a continuance in condemnation proceedings before commissioners appointed by it: M. C. R. Co. v. Tuscola Probate Judge, 48 M. 688.

7. Verdict or report.

183. The verdict in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes must be unanimous, and a verdict signed by less than all the jurors is a nullity: Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Sanford, 23 M. 418.

184. Under a petition to acquire title for railroad purposes, but failing to show for what purpose the lands specified are included in the petition, an award of a jury disclosing that they had assessed the damages which they thought the respondent entitled to on account of his "claiming" to own certain lands used and occupied as a street, without determining whether, in fact, he did own it, and from which it does not appear whether the damages awarded were the estimated value of the land, or only that of some doubtful claim they supposed him to be setting up, cannot be sustained: Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Clark, 23 M. 519.

185. A finding in the verdict that "it is necessary that said real estate and property should be taken for the purposes of said company" is not such a finding of the necessity for the taking of said property for the public use, either in form or substance, as is required by Const., art. 18, § 2. The report of the jury or commissioners must distinctly find that the taking is necessary for the public use and benefit; and to make such a report they must be satisfied, not only that the particular land is needed for the construction of the work, but also that the work itself is one of public importance: Ibid.

186. A finding by a jury that they "did ascertain and determine that it is necessary for said company to take said real estate for public use, to wit, for the purpose of said company's incorporation as and for right of way," is a sufficient finding that the land was required for the public use: East Saginaw & St. C. R. Co. v. Benhum, 28 M. 459.

187. The verdict of a jury "that it was and is necessary to take and use said land for the purpose of operating and constructing said railroad by said company" is not sufficient either in form or substance: Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Van Driele, 24 M. 409.

188. Where commissioners were appointed to determine the necessity of taking land for a railroad company, their finding "that the taking of said strip or parcel of land was required and necessary for the constructing and operating of said railroad and a necessary public use thereof" was held sufficient: Morgan's Appeal, 39 M. 675.

189. A description in an award condemning lands for railway purposes allowed a strip 80 feet wide on each side of a given line across the entire premises, except that in crossing a specified parcel a strip only 25 feet wide was allowed south of the line. It also described another parcel by making the boundary begin and end at the east end of the northerly outside line of the former, and by giving the courses and distances. Held sufficient: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 M. 222.

190. Where a jury is required merely to determine the damages or compensation for taking property for a railroad company, a finding in general terms is sufficient, and it need not specify the amount allowed for each item of injury. And, unless there are indications to the contrary, the presumption is that all evident facts bearing on the amount of damages were taken into account: Ibid.; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Detroit & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

191. In taking lands for a right of way for a railroad, each owner has a right to have a finding as to the value of his land and the necessity for taking it; and a general finding, giving a single sum for taking the land of several owners, is invalid: Chicago & M. L. S. R. Co. v. Sanford, 23 M. 418.

192. Where the interest of two persons in lands is treated as joint by the petition asking that they be condemned for railroad purposes, and the persons appear jointly and jointly demand a jury, it is not improper for the jury to award an undivided sum to the two; their own action precludes them from insisting that their interests should have been separately regarded: East Saginaw & St. C. R. Co. v. Benham, 28 M. 459.

193. An award of damages is not invalid for having been reached by averaging the amounts as marked by each commissioner, if the commissioners did not agree beforehand upon this mode of compromise, but merely resorted to it as a proper method of arriving at a just result, after stating to each other the amounts which they had individually fixed: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Houghton Probate Judge, 53 M. 217.

194. An award of damages for land condemned for railway uses was sustained where it expressed the gross sum allowed to all joint claimants and specified how much of it was for each of those interested as mortgagees: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 M. 222.

195. The confirmation of a report in condemnation proceedings is not a matter of strict right even upon a regular record. If substantial reasons are shown against it by facts not in the record itself, the court has power to do justice and refuse confirmation, and on appeal the same power exists: Port Huron & N. W. R. Co. v. Callinan, 61 M. 12.

196. The probate court in condemnation cases has power to set aside the report of commissioners for good cause shown; if, for example, the amount awarded is unreasonable, and indicates prejudice or impartiality or action upon a wrong basis of estimation: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Houghton Probate Judge, 53 M. 217.

197. The finding of a jury in these cases is not conclusive as to the amount of damages; and such finding will be set aside where it appears that the award is in disregard of contradicted testimony and of proper elements of damage: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Weiden, 70 M. 390.

198. The showing upon a motion to set aside an award is ordinarily made by affidavits and counter-affidavits, but it is discretionary with the court to require oral testimony and cross-examination: Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Houghton Probate Judge, 53 M. 217.

199. The official report of the commissioners appointed by the probate court in proceedings to condemn land for railroad purposes should not ordinarily be outweighed by affidavits as to the value of the land and the damage thereto. Such evidence is, however, admissible on a motion to set aside the report: Ibid.

200. Commissioners in proceedings to condemn land for railway purposes are not like a common-law jury, and their individual affidavits are admissible to impeach their finding or to show, like any other fact, the rule of damages on which they proceeded: Ibid.

201. Where the land has been actually appropriated by the railroad company after paying the award therefor under protest, the company cannot claim that the award should be set aside, as that would deprive the owners of their property without the necessity or the compensation being first determined, which the constitution forbids: Ibid.

8. Damages; costs.

202. An award of damages in condemnation proceedings is invalid if, without the consent of the parties, it gives compensation on any but a money basis: Toledo, A. A. & N. R. Co. v. Munson, 57 M. 42.

203. When proceedings are had to condemn land for railway use, the damages awarded should include all the consequences of the appropriation of the land in the manner in which the company will use it. The company cannot be required to resort to a new condemnation whenever some new expenditure is to be made or change effected, unless it is something so plainly repugnant to or varying from the purpose originally contemplated as to amount to a change of user: Barnes v. Michigan Air Line R. Co., 65 M. 251.

204. Adequate compensation for land actually taken under proceedings for its condemnation includes its value or the amount to which the value of the property from which it is taken is depreciated. Where the injury affects the rental value or enjoyment, the same principle applies: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 47 M. 393.

205. Where land used as a business stand is taken, the owner of the business is entitled, apart from the money value of the property itself, to compensation for the interruption of such business and its damage by the change: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Weiden, 70 M. 390 (May 18, '88).

206. The value of land for farm use is a proper subject of inquiry in proceedings to condemn it for railway purposes: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 M. 222.

207. Where commissioners appointed to assess damages for taking land for railroad purposes assessed them in view of the tract taken altogether, but understated the quantity of the land by a fraction of an acre, it was held that it did not invalidate their action: Morgan's Appeal, 39 M. 675.

208. Where proceedings are taken to condemn a portion of a city lot for a railroad right of way, and the lot is part of a homestead lying on both sides of an alley, the award of damages cannot be confined to the land actually taken, but must cover such actual injury as is done to the entire homestead, including the easement in the alley: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506.

209. In assessing damages for the taking of land for railroad purposes, work already done by the railroad company upon the land in the reasonable belief that the land would be obtained by amicable means cannot be regarded as part of the realty for the purpose of increasing the damages: Morgan's Appeal, 39 M. 675.

210. A railway track or other improvement wrongfully placed upon land by a railroad company, and not abandoned to the owner of the premises, cannot be treated as a part of the realty for the purpose of increasing its value in estimating the damages due to the owner in subsequent proceedings to condemn the land for the use of the company: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

As to recovery of damages for illegal appropriation or occupancy, see infra, §§ 243-254.

As to damages where one railroad crosses another, see infra, §§ 236-240.

211. Execution will not issue against a railroad company to enforce payment of either damages or costs allowed in condemnation proceedings; unless such payment is made in sixty days the title of the owner to the land is not divested: Derby v. Gage, 60 M. 1.

212. The owner of lands sought by a railroad company is not put in fault so as to be liable for the subsequent costs by refusing a tender; nor is he deprived of any rights by the mere deposit, pending appeal, of the sum awarded by the jury: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

213. Where condemnation proceedings were affirmed on appeal so far as they related to the findings of the jury, but were reversed as to certain collateral orders, costs of the supreme court and of the proceedings below were awarded to appellant: Ibid.

9. Appeals.

As to CERTIORARI to review condemnation proceedings, see that title, §§ 87, 52, 53, 59, 65.

214. Any one — e. g., a mortgagee — whose rights are affected by the result of condemnation proceedings may appeal, even though there has been a discontinuance as to him: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 40 M. 333.

215. Under H. S. § 3337, requiring that a notice of appeal from an appraisal or report in proceedings to condemn lands for railroad uses "shall specify the objections to the proceedings," an objection that the court did not have jurisdiction to appoint the commissioners or to confirm their report is too general: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Detroit & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

216. The notice of appeal must point out the errors and defects complained of with such particularity that the attention of the appellee and the court will be at once precisely directed to them: Ibid.

217. Whether, on these appeals, questions can be brought up by bill of exceptions, quere: Michigan Air Line R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 M. 323.

218. Objections to the petition and award must be clearly specified: Ibid.

219. An objection that the award of a jury in proceedings to take land "is against the law and evidence in the case" cannot show what objections are deemed waived, and is insufficient to raise any question: Ibid.

220. An appeal from confirmation of an award or report brings before the supreme court the entire case as it stood before the confirmation: Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 M. 18; Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506; Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Munson, 57 M. 42.

221. And jurisdictional defects will defeat the proceedings at any stage, whether relied on or not: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Munson, 57 M. 42.

222. The objection that a stockholder in the railroad sat as a juror may be raised in the supreme court for the first time: Peninsular R. Co. v. Howard, 20 M. 18.

223. When a party seeks a ruling on which to base an appeal if it is wrong, he cannot rely on the judge's private knowledge of facts, but must bring them into the case in some authoritative and responsible form, so that they may become a part of the record for the purposes of the review: Detroit, W. T. & J. R. Co. v. Crane, 50 M. 189.

224. In reviewing proceedings for the condemnation of lands, the supreme court cannot consider any reasons against the confirmation of the report of the jury except those which were presented to the lower court: Ibid.

225. Rulings on the admission of testimony in proceedings by commissioners or a jury for the condemnation of lands for railroads will not be reviewed on appeal to the supreme court unless they have done substantial injustice: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506.

226. The findings of a jury in proceedings for the condemnation of land will not be set aside unless upon objections raised in the record and unless the record shows that the proceedings were erroneous: Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co. v. Dunlap, 47 M. 456.

227. The finding in proceedings to condemn land that the taking thereof is necessary is conclusive if there is evidence to support it: Port Huron & S. W. R. Co. v. Voorheis, 50 M. 506.

228. The award of damages in proceedings to condemn land is conclusive on review unless the authorities making it have misconceived the law and have not fully considered all the essential elements of the injury done to the landholder: Ibid.

229. An award of damages and compensation for property taken for railway purposes will not be disturbed on review unless grossly inadequate, or so inadequate as to give rise to the inference that the jury or commissioners acted on a wrong basis: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. D. & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

(d) Condemnation of way across another railroad.

230. One railroad company has no right to appropriate, without compensation, the franchises or property of another for the construction of its road; the fact that property has been taken for a particular public use does not make it public property for all purposes; and the property rights of a railroad company in its right of way are protected by the same restrictions against appropriation by any other railroad company for railroad purposes or other public use as is afforded by the constitution and laws in the case of the private property of an individual: Grand Rapids, N. & L. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 35 M. 265.

231. The same legal proceedings must be had where one railroad company seeks to acquire the property of another to effect a crossing as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in other cases: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 63 M. 564.

232. The petition for condemnation to effect a railroad crossing must show a bona fide attempt and failure to obtain, by treaty between the parties, the property and franchises described therein. This is jurisdictional: Ibid.

233. Such a petition is fatally defective if it seeks for condemnation of the title to the land in the right of way sought to be obtained and nothing else. It must describe the rights and franchises it may condemn under the statute, or that petitioner wishes to condemn: Ibid.

234. The petition of one railroad for the right to cross or connect with another need not contain statements not required by the statute for obtaining title to real estate or other property; e. g., it need not state the manner of the crossing, whether above or below the grade: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Detroit & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

235. H. S. § 3340, allowing an order to be made permitting possession to be taken of lands sought to be condemned, pending a second attempt to condemn them after a first attempt has failed by reason of defective proceedings, does not apply where one railroad seeks to cross another: Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. Livingston Probate Judge, 63 M. 676.

236. A railroad company whose road is crossed by another's cannot be compelled to pay any part of the expense of making a crossing; and H. S. § 3350, as amended by S. L. 1888, p. 187, § 36, is unconstitutional in so far as it contemplates this: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 63 M. 564.

237. The compensation to one railroad for a crossing effected by another properly includes the value of the land and any additional expense created in the ordinary use of respondent's road, or any other injury or damage to its track, right of way or franchise occasioned by the crossing, and which may properly be considered as the natural, necessary and proximate cause thereof: Ibid.

238. The compensation to be paid to one railroad where a crossing is effected by another includes the value of the land taken, the damage suffered from the interruption of its business, and the damages accruing from the expense made necessary by such crossing: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 63 M. 645.

239. The damages to be paid by one railroad company for the right to cross another's track should include the cost of maintaining signals, a crossing system, and a watchman, if necessary; but the value of the land, and the cost of stopping trains at the crossing, are not proper items of damage: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. D. & B. C. R. Co., 64 M. 350.

240. In dismissing a bill to enjoin interference with a crossing which complainant had made by violent and illegal methods over defendant's road, the court, in order to end the controversy, and as a condition of granting the affirmative relief asked by defendant, made a decree — conditioned on defendant's assenting thereto — appointing the members of the state board commissioners to adjust the crossing, and to estimate the compensation to be paid therefor: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 63 M. 645.

241. It is a condition precedent to any assumption of power to make a crossing, even after condemnation, that the state board shall determine the manner and conditions of making the crossing: Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. v. Livingston Probate Judge, 63 M. 676.

242. The statute does not authorize the road making the crossing, even where the condemnation is regular, to use its own discretion in making it, or to disturb the old road or change its grade. It contemplates harmonious action by both roads, or action under the supervision of the state board: Toledo, A. A. & N. M. R. Co. v. D., L. & N. R. Co., 63 M. 645.

243. Where a subscriber in aid of a railroad is injured by the road's being run across his lands instead of half a mile away, as contemplated by his promise, he has a remedy for such damages as he has suffered thereby, independent of his agreement: Michigan, M. & C. R. Co. v. Bacon, 83 M. 466.

244. The statute for the condemnation of lands to the use of a railroad company does not empower a party aggrieved by its unauthorized occupancy of land to resort to the statutory remedy of appraisal for compensation, but he has a right of action in the ordinary way. Until the proper body has passed upon the necessity for the railway the question of compensation by statutory appraisal cannot arise: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 47 M. 393.

245. Where the owner of land has allowed a railroad company to build and operate a road over it with the understanding that the rights of parties as to damages should be adjusted thereafter, and the company takes statutory proceedings to fix the damages, the owner should present all his claims for settlement in these proceedings, and cannot split his demand and reserve part of it for future litigation. But if such proceedings are not resorted to, he would have a suitable remedy for the enforcement of his rights otherwise: Harlow v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 41 M. 386.

246. An action to recover damages for an illegal occupancy is not abated by subsequent proceedings to condemn the land for railway purposes: Callanan v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 61 M. 15.

247. In probate court proceedings for condemnation the land-owner may have damages assessed for a previous illegal occupancy by the company; but he is not bound to do so, and he may bring suit therefor: Ibid.

248. Where land has been injured by a railroad company that has gone upon it under void condemnation proceedings, the owner's right to recover damages is unaffected by his having sold it to a third person, for the depreciation would have been taken into account in fixing the price: Dunlap v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 50 M. 470.

249. But where the land was actually occupied by a tenant, the landlord's right of action for trespass upon the premises under void condemnation proceedings goes with the land and attaches only to his reversionary interest, and is condemned and appropriated therewith, and disappears when subsequent valid proceedings are taken as permitted by H. S. § 3840 and compensation made: Ibid.

250. The dedication of a street to the public does not authorize it to be used for an ordinary railroad track; and the municipal representatives cannot authorize it to be so used without compensation to adjacent owners: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 88 M. 62, 47 M. 393.

251. And such an owner is entitled to such damages as he would have been allowed to recover on proper proceedings for condemnation: Ibid.

252. Where a public street is taken by a railroad company for its track, an abutting owner whose ownership does not extend beyond the street line is not entitled to be compensated as owner for the taking of the land, but is confined to such damages as would affect her as adjacent occupant and proprietor: Ibid.

253. Where a railroad track has been laid in a public street without authority to use the street for that purpose, any adjacent proprietor who has not consented to such use is entitled to damages for such injury as he may have suffered in consequence thereof: Ibid.

254. It is for a jury to determine the damages to an adjacent proprietor from the malicious and unnecessary operation of a railroad in the public street: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 47 M. 393.

IV. CONSTRUCTION, OPERATION AND MANAGEMENT.

Judicial notice of railroad management, see EVIDENCE, §§ 1023-1026, 1035.

255. Failure to pay monthly, as agreed, on a contract for grading a proposed railroad, would not, of itself, and in the absence of any showing that any delay was authorized by the company, entitle the contractors to recover extra compensation for the labor performed on account of the delay occasioned by such default in payment, and the consequent increased cost of the work: Grand Rapids & B. C. R. Co. v. Van Deusen, 29 M. 431.

256. A railway contractor, after agreeing that the material furnished by him for construction should become the property of the company as soon as estimated by its engineer, sublet the job of fencing subject to the conditions of his contract with the company. The contractor was paid eighty-five per cent. on monthly estimates. The subcontractor furnished timber, but did not do his work within the time limited, and the company took possession of it. The contractor had, before this, surrendered his contract. The subcontractor sued the company in assumpsit and recovered. Held, by an equally divided court, that the judgment should be affirmed: Sherwood v. Saginaw, T. & H. R. Co., 58 M. 317.

257. The president of a railroad company held bonds of the company which were issued to be used in the construction of the road. A contract for construction having been made by the president and others, who were a committee for the purpose, the president took an assignment of an interest in the contract, and claimed to retain the bonds in respect to such interest. In a suit by the company to recover the bonds, the contract being still unperformed and the assignment having been made without the company's assent, held, that no contract relation was established by this assignment between the company and the assignee which would entitle him to retain the bonds: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Dewey, 14 M. 477.

That officers cannot take interest in contracts which they are empowered to let, see CORPORATIONS, § 102.

258. In an action upon a voluntary subscription in aid of a railroad which promises to pay $100 "in six months after the first cars run over the road" between specified points, the defence cannot be raised that the company has forfeited its franchise by not finishing and putting its road in full operation within the time required by C. L. 1871, § 2442: Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 49 M. 148.

259. Whether the company has finished and put its road into full operation is a question involving matters of fact for the jury: Ibid.

260. A chartered railroad company is bound to build its road between the termini named in its charter, and then to operate the whole of it: Attorney-General v. Erie & K. R. Co., 55 M. 15.

261. Where the lessee of a chartered railroad company discontinued running trains over part of its route and ceased to maintain a station at a certain village, leave to file an information in the nature of quo warranto was denied under the circumstances of the case: Ibid.

262. Where a railroad constructed by a corporation incorporated under the general railroad law is leased to a chartered company, the lessee in operating the road is bound not by its charter but by the general law: McMillan v. Michigan Southern & N. I. R. Co., 16 M. 79.

263. A chartered railroad company is responsible for the performance of the duties imposed by its charter, even though it has leased its road: Attorney-General v. E. & Kalamazoo R. Co., 55 M. 15.

264. A company that has a right of passage over another company's track is liable if, by its negligence, a collision occurs whereby a passenger in a train of the other company is injured: Patterson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 54 M. 91.

265. Individuals, like corporations, can manage street railways, ferries, turnpikes or bridges, the franchises of which may nevertheless be perpetuated: McKee v. Grand Rapids & R. L. St. R. Co., 41 M. 275.

266. The statutory requirement that every railroad shall impartially and diligently receive and forward the cars of other roads does not apply to cars unfit for passage, but means that no needless delays or hinderances shall be interposed, and that all precautions against the use of improper cars shall be adopted with reference to reasonable dispatch: Smith v. Potter, 46 M. 258.

267. A railway company owes a duty to the public to keep its track in safe and suitable condition, and run its trains with regularity and dispatch for the carriage and transportation of passengers and freight: Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 495.

268. A railroad company, when backing its cars on a private track laid by its owners by permission of the city across a public street, at the owner's request and for his convenience, is not engaged in the performance of its own business under its charter, but is employed in a special and temporary service, differing in no legal sense from what might have been rendered by men or horses pushing or drawing cars for the same person on his own premises: McWilliams v. Detroit Central Mills, 31 M. 274.

And see AGENCY, § 8.

269. A firm of loggers agreed to build a tram railway, and contracted with the corporation controlling it to carry their lumber at certain rates. The corporation afterward assigned, and its assets went into the hands of one of the parties with whom the agreement to build was made, and through him became the property of a railway company in which he was a principal stockholder. This company refused to fulfil the agreement for transportation, and the loggers sued out a preliminary injunction restraining it from running over so much of the road as they had built except on condition of carrying their lumber at the rates agreed on. Held, that the agreement was no more than an ordinary executory contract, was not enforceable in equity, and gave complainants no more control than other contractors over the road-bed; that the preliminary injunction was a final order and void, and that mandamus would lie to set it aside: Tawas & B. C. R. Co. v. Iosco Circuit Judge, 44 M. 479.

As to recovery of the penalty provided by H. S. § 3324 for a railroad company's failure to transport a passenger, see CARRIERS, § 108.

270. Where two railroad companies are sued on a joint contract for transportation, evidence as to which was in default is immaterial: Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 M. 489.

As to custody and disposition of assets by managing director, see CORPORATIONS, § 92.

As to the rights, duties and liabilities of railroad companies in common with other carriers in the carriage, etc., of goods and passengers, see CARRIERS.

Damages for expelling passenger, see DAMAGES, §§ 43, 259; PLEADINGS, § 546.

As to liability for loss of baggage, see CARRIERS, §§ 155, 156.

As to the liability of railroad companies for goods in warehouse, see CARRIERS, §§ 49-57.

271. A railway station-keeper was held criminally liable for assaulting a passenger who did not leave the waiting-room when ordered to do so on account of his spitting on the floor: People v. McKay, 46 M. 439.

V. CROSSINGS, CATTLE-GUARDS AND FENCES; LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO STOCK.

(a) Crossings.

272. The right of the public in a highway crossing a railroad is simply a right of passage across the railroad. The right of way and of use, when not used or required for the purpose of passage across the railroad, belongs to the railroad company, and may be used by it in the same manner as if no street-crossing was there: Kelley v. M. C. R. Co., 65 M. 186.

273. A railroad company whose road crosses or interferes with an existing highway must bear the expense of putting the crossings and the highway in safe condition; and this includes the cost of such fencing and cattle-guards as may be needed: Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 M. 507.

274. But H. S. § 1822, in providing that, where any highway may have been or shall be established across a railway, the railroad company shall open, construct and maintain the highway, and the necessary crossing therefor, across its right of way and tracks, cannot be so construed as to compel the company to open and maintain at its own expense that part of a highway which would cross its right of way if the highway itself is not made necessary by the existence of the railroad: People v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 52 M. 277.

275. And act 166 of 1883, which amends said § 1822 by providing as damages the value of the land used for the crossing, is inoperative so far as it seeks to impose upon the company the expense and duty of opening, completing and maintaining the highway and its approaches, guards and fences: Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 M. 507.

276. A railroad company crossing a public highway is liable for an injury occasioned to a traveller by a want of repair in the approaches to the crossing, and it makes no difference that the traveller knew of such want of repair; he had a right, notwithstanding, to use the highway: Maltby v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 52 M. 108.

277. An individual can sue a railroad company for the personal damage caused by leaving its cars standing across a highway longer than is allowed by H. S. § 8823: Patterson v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 56 M. 172.

278. Whether an encroachment upon the planked portion of a highway crossing by the drawbar of a car standing beside it was or was not a negligent obstruction of passage was a question for the jury: Lowless v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 M. 292.

279. If an injury results from the neglect of a railroad company to observe the statutory rule that it shall not leave cars standing across a highway more than five minutes at a time, the company is guilty of negligence and liable for the injury if the person who suffered was not in fault: Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 56 M. 430.

280. It cannot be said, as matter of law, that a highway crossing is not obstructed by cars when a space of only sixteen feet is left open; it is a question of fact for a jury, depending on the circumstances: Ibid.

281. A box freight car left standing at a highway crossing is not of itself an object that would naturally frighten horses of ordinary gentleness; and an action resting on an assumption that it would do so cannot be maintained: Gilbert v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 51 M. 488.

282. Where a car that had been left for three or four days in a highway crossing very near the travelled part of the way frightened a horse attached to a passing wagon, so that the driver was hurt, the company was held liable: Peterson v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 64 M. 621.

283. Staking cars across a public highway is not unlawful, nor is it negligence per se: Kelley v. M. C. R. Co., 65 M. 186.

284. The illegal obstruction of a highway by a freight train standing across it is not the proximate cause of the injury which a driver, who, in waiting to get across the track, may suffer from having his horse frightened by a passing train while he is detained there: Selleck v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 58 M. 195.

285. The failure to erect a caution board at railroad crossings, as required by the statute, does not necessarily make the railroad company responsible for damages occasioned by a collision with one of its trains at the crossing: Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 47 M. 401.

286. Such caution board is for the purpose of a notification to those who are passing along the road; and where a party is familiar with the crossing, and has frequently been over it, and had it in mind on the occasion in question as he approached it, he cannot be said to have been injured by the failure to set up the caution: Ibid.

287. Although the crossings at which watchmen or flag-men are required to be kept are determined by the commissioner of railroads, yet when a railroad company so obstructs its track that its trains cannot be seen by those approaching, and so that bell and whistle are not sufficient to warn the traveller, some additional warning must be given, and a flag-man may be necessary to acquit the company of negligence: Guggenheim v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 150.

288. It seems that the absence of a flagman at a street-crossing of a railroad is not necessarily evidence of negligence on the company's part, unless the necessity for stationing and maintaining such flag-man there has been required by the railroad commissioner: Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 M. 494.

289. A railroad company is not, as matter of law, under obligation to station a flag-man at a road-crossing in the country, because of the approach to it being partially concealed by embankments or otherwise: Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 47 M. 401.

290. In an action for fatal injury to a person crossing a railway track the jury may properly consider whether the railroad company should not, apart from any statutory requirement, have set up special safeguards at the point where the injury took place, if at that point there were several tracks running side by side, and little opportunity to see a coming train and much noise and confusion: Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 289.

(b) Cattle-guards.

291. Cattle-guards are sufficient if they are in good repair and of a pattern that has been found by experience effective in keeping from the track such animals as they are generally designed to restrain: Smead v. Lake Shore & M. S. R'y Co., 58 M. 200.

292. In an action of damages against a railroad company for injuries to horses caused by neglect to keep up proper cattle-guards, testimony was admitted, without objection, having some tendency to prove a cattle-guard insufficient; held no error to submit the question of sufficiency to the jury: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Judson, 84 M. 506.

293. A railroad company is not required, by H. S. § 8377, to cover a ditch which crosses the highway parallel with its track, the entire distance of four rods, but only so much thereof as is used for highway purposes proper: Whitisky v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 62 M. 245.

294. The existence of an exceptional case, doing away with the necessity of having a cattle-guard near a highway crossing in a village, cannot be presumed, but must be proved by the defendant company: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 M. 510.

295. Defendant was held liable for the killing of plaintiff's cow, which got upon its track at a point within an unfenced part of its road, such part extending without any cattle-guards a long distance each side of a station and highway crossing, although the way could have been fenced up to, and guards put in at, such crossing without inconvenience to the public or the company: Lafferty v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 71 M. 35.

296. In an action against a railroad sued for sheep killed on the track, plaintiff cannot recover upon proof that defendant negligently failed to maintain its cattle-guards to a cattle-pass leading to its right of way, without proof that such sheep passed through the gate which was the approach to said pass, left open through defendant's negligence: Lemon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 59 M. 618.

297. In an action for the loss of a colt killed upon a railway track in consequence of the insufficiency of the cattle-guards, it was improper to ask the plaintiff and his witnesses whether, in their opinion, the cattle-guard was sufficient to prevent animals from getting on the right of way under circumstances ordinarily arising at those places: Smead v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 58 M. 200.

298. A declaration for an injury caused by an insufficient cattle-guard is demurrable if it fails to state the particulars of the insufficiency: Ibid.

(c) Fences.

299. At common law railroad companies were not required to fence their rights of way, and were not liable for the accidental destruction of cattle trespassing upon their roads: Williams v. M. C. R. Co., 2 M. 259; Gardner v. Smith, 7 M. 410; Continental Improvement Co. v. Phelps, 47 M. 299.

300. The act of March 17, 1847 (C. L. 1857, § 628), was not applicable to a railroad company's right of way: Williams v. M. C. R. Co., 2 M. 259.

301. The statutory regulations (H. S. § 3877) concerning the fencing of railways apply north of Saginaw river, except that the statutory penalty for neglecting to build them is not in force: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

302. Under the general railroad act the liability of corporations organized under it, and their agents, for damages which may result from the neglect of the corporation to erect and maintain fences on the sides of the line of road, attaches as soon as they have possession of the route for the purpose of constructing the road: Gardner v. Smith, 7 M. 410; Continental Improvement Co. v. Ives, 80 M. 448.

303. A contractor for the construction of the road is an agent of the corporation within the meaning of C. L. 1857, § 1987, requiring railroads to fence their tracks. And he is primarily liable to the same extent that the corporation would have been for the same acts or omissions: Gardner v. Smith, 7 M. 410.

304. Where, therefore, while a contractor was engaged in constructing a railroad through certain premises, and had taken away fences for the purpose, the sheep of the owner of the land escaped and were lost in consequence, it was held that the contractor was liable for the loss, notwithstanding the owner turned the sheep into the field after the route was taken possession of, and while the contractor was constantly throwing down the fences for his purposes: Ibid.

305. The term "agent," as used in C. L. 1857, § 1987, included every one exercising the powers of the company upon or over the road, and so included another company becoming lessee of the road. Such lessee being thus liable to fence, its neglect to do so rendered not only itself, but the lessor, liable for any damage resulting; and the object of the amendment of 1867 (p. 221) was to give the injured party a remedy against both the agent and the principal: Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 M. 390.

306. A railway company's liability for an injury done to crops by cattle that have gone upon the premises in consequence of the company's neglect to fence its right of way is not changed by the fact that the road was at the time in the hands of a contractor who had nothing to do with the fencing: Pound v. Port Huron & S. W. R. Co., 54 M. 13.

307. Negligence cannot be alleged against a railroad company for not keeping up its fences, where plaintiff himself, at the time of the resulting injury, was using the gap as a passage-way for his own convenience in hauling railroad ties. And it is immaterial that the gap was there before: Clark v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 62 M. 358.

308. In an action against a railroad company for the killing of a cow, which got upon the track through defendant's neglect to repair its fence, the fact that the cow had wandered to a highway crossing at the time she was struck is immaterial: Jebb v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 67 M. 160.

309. Where a company had acquired a right of way across a farm and had taken down the fences already on the premises, it was liable for injuries done to the crops by cattle which had come upon the right of way and had escaped therefrom upon the farm: Pound v. Port Huron & S. W. R. Co., 54 M. 13.

310. In an action under the statute to recover the value of stock killed by reason of the neglect of a railroad company to fence its track, the negligence of the owner to take care of his property is no defence to the company, as it would be at common law, since the statute is a police regulation, as much for the security of passengers as the protection of property: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 M. 510; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Cameron, 45 M. 451.

311. Under the general railroad law of 1871, which went into effect April 18, 1871, and prior to its amendment by act 198 of 1878, the liability of a railroad company for neglect of its duty in fencing its road was subject to an action only by an adjacent occupant or proprietor; and the owner of property distant half a mile from the railroad is not such: Continental Improvement Co. v. Phelps, 47 M. 299.

312. The statute does not prescribe as to the strength of the fence, but it must be of such reasonable strength as to confine and turn the animals usually restrained by fences in the country: Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 M. 890.

313. Act 198 of 1878 (H. S. § 3877), in requiring companies to fence their tracks, only requires reasonable partition fences four and a half feet high, and fairly adapted, so far as their strength and mode of construction is concerned, to keep animals from getting on the track. But act 175 of 1881 (H. S. § 3808) leaves them to be approved and regulated by the commissioner of railroads: Davidson v. M. C. R. Co., 49 M. 428.

314. It being the duty of a railroad company to erect and maintain a fence, if it be insufficient or out of repair, in the absence of any proof showing an extraordinary cause for such condition, the company will be liable for the consequences resulting to the property of any person having an interest in the maintenance of the fence, and not shown to be in fault for such defective condition: Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 M. 890.

315. The sufficiency of the fence which a railroad company is required to maintain along its track is not impaired by leaving gates in it; nor does it come in question where cattle have got upon the track by going through the gate while open: Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Hayt, 55 M. 347.

316. Where a railroad track crosses a highway diagonally, and the company, in fencing its right of way, leaves a space between the termination of its fence and the fence of the adjacent owner, its way is defectively fenced: Coleman v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 64 M. 160.

317. A flock of sheep were killed by a railroad train in the neighborhood of a cattle-guard at a highway crossing. There was testimony that the fencing near by was and had long been insufficient, and that the cross-fence was two feet short of the cattle-guard and the cattle-guard was shallow. Held that, in an action against the railway company for damages, the case was properly left to the jury: Agnew v. M. C. R. Co., 56 M. 56.

318. The statute does not requiring fencing, etc., where it would be illegal or improper that the road should be fenced, as at the crossings of streets or alleys in a city or town, or at mills and depot grounds and the approaches thereto, where public convenience requires the way to be left open: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 M. 510; Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Campbell, 47 M. 265; McGrath v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co., 57 M. 555; Early v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 849.

319. But the track within the corporate limits of a city or town, at points where no such reasons apply, is as much within the statute as the track elsewhere: Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 M. 510.

320. Any exceptional case preventing the application of the statute must be proved by the company when it is sued for an injury from failure to fence, and such case will not be presumed: Ibid.

321. And, therefore, in an action against a railroad company for injuries to stock which got upon its track through an open, unfenced space, away from a highway, it is for defendant to show that such space is within its station grounds: Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 70 M. 382.

322. The extent of unfenced depot grounds is not fixed according to the continuous, actual use of every part of them; nor can their proper limits be collaterally determined by a jury in an action against the company for the loss of a cow that came upon the track near the station where there was no fence: McGrath v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co., 57 M. 555.

323. Where stock are killed on defendant's track, having entered thereon from unfenced station grounds, the criterion of defendant's liability is not whether all the grounds set apart for station purposes have been actually used, but whether defendant, in view of the present or prospective needs of such grounds for a station, has exercised a reasonable discretion in throwing them open for that purpose; and where it appears from the testimony that the grounds are not unreasonably extensive, the company's liability is a question of law, and is not for the jury to determine: Rinear v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 70 M. 620.

324. A railroad company must be as watchful to keep its fences in repair as any prudent person would be in maintaining fences to protect his own property: Crosby v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 58 M. 458.

325. A railroad company, though required to maintain side-fencing, is not liable for the destruction of cattle suddenly let loose upon the track through a breach in the fencing caused by a storm, and existing through no fault or neglect of the company: Robinson v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 32 M. 823.

326. A railroad company, in maintaining fences along the track, is only bound to reasonable diligence, and is not liable for injuries occurring to cattle which come upon the track through defects in fences not traceable to want of care: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Monroe, 47 M. 152.

327. Where the fences had been accidentally destroyed by fire after the track inspector had made his daily inspection, and the fact was not known until after the injury had been done, the company was not guilty of negligence: Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co. v. Eder, 45 M. 829.

328. A railroad fence was found burning at about six or seven o'clock in the evening; the section foreman got notice thereof at about eight o'clock, and went next morning before six to repair the fence with the nearest materials belonging to the company, which were about half a mile distant. Held not unreasonable delay: Stephenson v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 34 M. 823.

329. A railroad fence burned and animals were killed on the track. The fence was mended without unreasonable delay. In an action for the injury done, evidence was offered that it might have been mended sooner by using materials nearer at hand. But it did not appear that they were available, and did appear that they did not belong to the railroad company. Held proper to exclude the evidence: Ibid.

330. Track-repairers found at the close of the day that several rods of railway fencing, enclosing pasture land, had been burned, but they put off mending it till morning. Meanwhile a horse got upon the track during the night and was killed by a passing train. Held, that in an action against the company for the injury it was for the jury to say, in view of all the circumstances, whether defendant was negligent: Crosby v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 58 M. 458.

Neglect to fence track as rendering company liable for personal injury, see infra, §§ 415-417.

331. In an action against a railroad company for damage arising from neglect to fence its lands, the declaration need not be specially framed upon or refer to the statute imposing the duty of fencing railroads — that duty being imposed by a general statute, and the action not being one for a penalty but for damages resulting from a neglect of a statutory duty: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

332. Where action was brought to recover damages arising from the neglect of a railroad company to fence its road, and the injuries complained of extended over a period within which the statute requiring the fencing had been changed as to the extent of the liability imposed for the neglect, but not as to the duty of maintaining fences, a declaration that made no specific reference to the statutes was held good in the absence of demurrer; there would be no practical difficulty in determining the admissibility of proofs by the laws in force at the time to which they refer: Continental Improvement Co. v. Ives, 30 M. 448.

333. Where, in an action against a railroad company for damages arising from want of fencing, the declaration charged the defendant as a corporation "owning, occupying and doing business on and over" a certain road naming it), "under the laws of the state of Michigan," it was held that the objection could not be raised, under the plea of the general issue, that it did not allege defendant to be a corporation or otherwise competent to be sued: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Southwick, 30 M. 444.

334. General allegations of the continuous operation of a railroad and continuous neglect to fence it, and that damage resulted therefrom, are sufficient to authorize a recovery for such natural mischiefs as invariably follow the destruction of fences and exposure of lands, and which cannot easily be itemized: Ibid.

Further as to declarations for neglect to fence, see PLEADINGS, §§ 245, 539, 585.

335. In an action against a railroad company to recover for animals killed on its track through its failure to keep its fences in repair, plaintiff cannot be allowed to show that animals of his other than those killed had on several occasions, months before the loss sued for, been seen on defendant's right of way: Jebb v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 67 M. 180 (Oct. 13, '87).

336. As the statute requiring railroad companies to fence their roads reaches all corporations occupying railways built under the general laws, and as there are no other railways except those built under special charters, of which the courts must take notice, the finding of occupancy by a specified company, as a corporation, brings it plainly within the law: Continental Improvement Co. v. Ives, 30 M. 448.

337. In an action against a railroad company for damages arising from its neglect to fence its road, an objection to findings as to damages for injuries committed in certain specified years, on the ground that there were parts of those years in which there was no liability for damages proved, was not sustained where the record did not indicate that any evidence for those years was objected to, or that any attempt was made to obtain a more specific finding. Errors are not to be presumed; the presumption is that the finding does not cover any period during which there was no liability: Ibid.

338. In an action against the Continental Improvement Company for damages arising from its neglect to fence the road controlled by it, it was held that a finding that "the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad" is located on the land, and that "grading was commenced on such railroad in the month of June, 1868; that the said Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad Company has never built or caused to be built any fences," etc., could not be misunderstood in view of the universal custom of calling railroads by the name of the company laying out or building them; also, that, where the sense was clear and the bill of exceptions furnished conclusive proof by which the finding could be amended, the defect would not be held a fatal omission upon the objection that it failed to declare specifically that the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad Company was a corporation owning and occupying the road in question or coming within the railroad laws: Ibid.

339. C. L. 1857, § 1987, as amended in 1867, p. 221, giving double damages for injury arising from neglect to erect and maintain fences, was repealed after verdict, but before judgment. Held, that the damages could not be doubled: B. C. & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 M. 390.

As to the measure of damages for injury to animal through neglect to fence, see DAMAGES, §§ 176, 177.

Statute providing for attorney fee is invalid: See CONSTITUTIONS, § 149.

VI. LIABILITY FOR PERSONAL INJURIES.

As to declarations in actions for railway negligence, see PLEADINGS, §§ 232-235, 237, 238, 240, 242, 243, 247, 536, 537, 539, 546.

Admissibility of opinions and conclusions in actions for negligence, see EVIDENCE, §§ 562, 566, 572, 573, 577, 578, 581, 599-605, 610, 668, 670.

Statements, etc., of employees in such actions, see EVIDENCE, §§ 156, 397, 400.

Care or want of care at other times of person injured is immaterial: See EVIDENCE, § 142.

Evidence as to extent of injury, see EVIDENCE, § 70.

As to damages for personal injuries, see DAMAGES, §§ 88, 339, 342.

Damages for causing death, see DAMAGES, §§ 346-355.

(a) To employees.

See, generally, NEGLIGENCE, I, (a), 2.

340. The responsibility of a railroad company to its employees for the condition of its road is less strict than it would be to strangers; and an accident to an employee, involving no liability, might, if it happened to another person, cause an actionable injury: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 53 M. 125.

341. An employee cannot bring an action against a railroad company upon the obligation which it owes the public to keep its track in safe and suitable condition, and to run its trains with regularity and dispatch for the carriage of passengers and freight: Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 495.

342. Where an employee is injured through the negligence of a railroad company, a corporation into which the former is subsequently merged is liable to the same extent as its predecessor was: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 53 M. 125.

343. A manufacturer of nitro-glycerine contracted with a railroad company for the transportation of a quantity, and the latter requested another railroad company to move the car loaded therewith some distance over its track. The company so requested sent a switchman to perform the service, and he was killed by the explosion of a can while it was being loaded. The loading was done by employees of the manufacturer, and the switchman had no control or authority over them. He, however, knew the dangerous character of the work. Held, that there was no ground of action against the company which employed the switchman for the fatal injury to him: Foley v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 48 M. 622.

344. A railroad company is required to use due care to provide materials, machinery and other means by which an employee is to perform his work, safe for his use, and to keep them in repair and order, so as not unnecessarily to expose him to danger: Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

345. A railroad company is not bound to change its manner of using its side tracks, or to adopt the most approved ways or appliances in business: Ibid.

346. A railroad company is under no legal obligation to maintain, for the protection of its employees, a station agent at a flag-station where there is an unblocked siding. All that is required of it is that it construct and equip its side tracks and cars, and station its agents, in the manner usual with well-managed railroads, and as good railroading requires: Ibid.

347. Plaintiff, an engineer in the employ of the defendant railroad, was injured in a collision caused by a flat-car (which had stood upon a siding) running down upon the main line. There being nothing to show that the side track was not in proper condition, or that the company had not used ordinary care in placing the car upon the siding, held, that the omission to provide the flat-car with brakes, or the side track with stop-blocks, was not actionable negligence: Ibid.

348. A railway company whose track is broken without any fault of its own is under no obligation to its employees to repair it within any specified time, if it duly warns them so that they shall not be injured in consequence thereof: Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 495.

349. In an action against a railway company for negligent injury to an employee from a defect in a roadway which has just come under its control from another company, there can be no presumption that defendant had had sufficient time to remedy the defect: Batterson v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 49 M. 184.

350. Where the defendant railroad company had made a general order directing all car-inspectors and repair-men, before going between or under any cars, to place a red signal-flag on the end of the car or cars in the direction from which a train or engine could approach, and forbidding all train-men to back against or couple onto any car while such signal was displayed, held, that defendant was not negligent in not having a watchman or "bumpers;" nor was it negligence to run other cars upon the same track where cars were being repaired, when space was left between them, and the red flag was respected according to the rule: Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 67 M. 102.

351. A railroad company is not under obligation to its servants under all circumstances to make use of the safest known appliances and instruments, so as to make it responsible for failure to discard what is not such, and to supply its place with something safer: Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 33 M. 133.

352. A railroad company owes no duty to its employees to make use of the latest improvements in bridges, or to change the structures upon its road so as to conform to the most recent ideas upon such subjects: Illick v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 632. (Jan. 5, '88).

353. Railroad companies may use their own discretion as to what kind of bridges they will use, and when and under what circumstances they will remove or replace them, while they are safe: Ibid.

354. The width between the trusses of a railroad bridge is of no concern to a brakeman whose duty does not require him to occupy a place of danger while passing over it: Ibid.

355. The discretion of a railroad company as to the sharpness of the curves it shall use in its freight depots and yards, where the safety of passengers and the public is not involved, cannot be interfered with by the courts in determining the company's obligations to its employees: Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 123 U. S. 189.

356. A railroad company is not bound to block its frogs, particularly if it does not appear that in doing so it would not entail greater dangers than it would avert: McGinnis v. Canada Southern Bridge Co., 49 M. 466.

357. A railroad company is not negligent in omitting to clear snow and ice from the ground alongside its track, even in the neighborhood of depot platforms; and a brakeman suddenly called to supper, who is injured in consequence of slipping on the ice, has no remedy against the company: Piquegno v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 52 M. 40.

358. It is the duty of an engineer to know the duties of a station agent along the line of the railroad so far as they relate to the proper discharge of the engineer's duty: Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61 (Oct. 6, '87).

359. A youth of inferior mental and physical power, employed as common laborer on the construction of defendant's road, and who had no experience as a brakeman, was ordered by the superintendent of the work to perform services as a brakeman, and in going to do so was run over and killed. Held, that the company was liable: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 37 M. 205.

360. Where a railway employee is injured while in the performance of work to which he was wrongfully assigned, and which he had never agreed to do, he is entitled to recover damages from the railroad company: Jones v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 573.

361. Where a brakeman, on going into the employment of a railroad company, signs a contract binding him to obey all orders, rules and regulations, but in which the general language applies equally to all classes of employees, the agreement to obey all orders must be construed to apply to all which are issued to him in the line of duty in which he is employed; and it does not empower the company to assign him to other duties wholly disconnected therewith and differing therefrom. And while the clause binding him to use care and caution applies to anything he may undertake to do, it is for the jury to decide whether he has violated it: Ibid.

Evidence that employee did not voluntarily enter upon work imposed, see EVIDENCE, § 867.

362. A railroad employee was injured while coupling a car that was lower than the rest; he had fully understood the danger, yet had not protested to his employers against the use of the car, nor received any assurance that its use would be discontinued. Held, that the company was not liable: Fort Wayne, J. & S. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve, 88 M. 138; Botsford v. M. C. R. Co., 88 M. 256.

363. A switchman had his hand crushed while coupling a freight car furnished with double deadwoods, and received from another road where such a contrivance was generally used. He had not been expressly notified that he would be required to handle such cars, but in the course of commerce, and as a matter of business necessity as well as of statutory obligation, they were being constantly received and forwarded like all other cars adapted to the gauge of the road, and having occasion to run thereon. Held, that the switchman could not maintain a suit against the company as for negligent injury in receiving the cars or in omitting to notify him thereof: M. C. R. Co. v. Smithson, 45 M. 212.

364. The omission of a railroad company to warn an inexperienced brakeman of the specific danger of coupling cars that are furnished with double deadwoods does not make the company liable for an injury received by him in so doing, if the risk is such as to be manifest to any person, and if, on being employed, he was warned in general terms of the perils of coupling cars of different construction, and was told not to take any chances: Hathaway v. M. C. R. Co., 51 M. 253.

365. The risk arising from the use of worn rails for side tracks in a railroad yard is one of the ordinary risks of a switchman's employment: M. C. R. Co. v. Austin, 40 M. 247.

366. Whether an accident occasioned by a misplaced switch, by which a train is run on a side track and against cars standing there, is not within the risks assumed by an engineer in entering into the employment of the company to run its engines, querc: Lyon v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 31 M. 429.

367. Railroad employees are presumed to be aware and take the risk of dangers from such conditions and defects in the construction of a side track as would be open to observation; and they are also expected to use reasonable care in examining their surroundings: Batterson v. C. & G. T. R. Co., 58 M. 125.

368. An experienced brakeman was ordered by the conductor to attach a car loaded with lumber which projected forward and compelled him stoop in making the coupling. In doing so he delayed a little, and his fingers were caught in the coupling-link and hurt. Held, that he could not maintain an action against the railway company, as he fully understood the difficulty to be guarded against, and the conductor was not shown to have been in fault in any way: Day v. Toledo, C. S. & D. R. Co., 42 M. 528.

369. A youth of ordinary intelligence was killed while coupling freight cars. He was fully aware of the danger of such work, and not entirely inexperienced, and his death was not caused by any negligence or carelessness of those in charge of the train. Held, that the railroad company was not answerable for his death: Viets v. Toledo, A. A. & G. T. R. Co., 55 M. 120.

370. A railway employee cannot recover for an injury arising from the improper construction of a side track if he had equal means of knowledge with the defendant of the defect and did not protest against it: Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

371. If a railroad employee, knowing, or having ample means of knowing, from long-continued employment, the way and manner in which the side tracks are used, continues in the employment without complaint, and is thereby subjected to risks of accident, he is presumed to assume such risks, and, if injured thereby, cannot recover: Ibid.

(b) Negligence of co-employees.

And see NEGLIGENCE, II.

372. If a railroad company has used proper diligence in choosing competent servants, it is not liable in damages for an injury to one of them caused by the carelessness of another: Gardner v. M. C. R. Co., 58 M. 584.

373. So, if the servant whose carelessness caused the injury is not shown to be incompetent: Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 67 M. 102.

374. In a suit brought by a railroad employee against the company for damages caused by the alleged unskilfulness or negligence of another employee of the same company, the defendants are entitled to the benefit of a presumption that they exercised due care in the employment of their servants, and that they had no knowledge of the defects of character or incapacity imputed: Davis v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 20 M. 105.

375. General reputation of unfitness would be admissible as evidence, and might be sufficient to charge the company with knowledge, notwithstanding they may have been actually ignorant of it. The ignorance will be negligence in a case in which any proper inquiry would have obtained the information, and where the duty to inquire was plainly imperative. But the burden of proof to establish the unfitness alleged as the ground of the plaintiff's action and the defendant's knowledge of it is upon the plaintiff: Ibid.

376. A railroad employee having knowledge of the unfitness of another employee of the same company, or one whose position or duties are such that he ought to be acquainted with such unfitness when it had become notorious, and who does not give information to the company of the unfitness thus actually or constructively known to him, takes upon himself all the risks of injury from such unfitness while engaged in the ordinary performance of his duties, as much as if he had expressly contracted with reference to possible injuries from that cause: Ibid.

377. Where the reasons which are relied upon to charge the officers of the company with knowledge apply with equal force to show the knowledge of the plaintiff, the negligence of the latter in not complaining is as great as that of the company in employing an incompetent person. And where employer and employee have equal knowledge, and the latter continues the service, each party takes the risk, unless the employer undertakes to give special directions: Ibid.

378. A direction by a railroad officer to his subordinate to perform an ordinary service, such as his employment contemplated — there being nothing unusual in the mode directed — is not such a special direction as will charge the company for an injury happening during the performance of such service: Ibid.

379. Personal presence of officers and directors all along the line of a railroad being impossible, subordinates with more or less discretionary authority are indispensable; and the company has a right to trust that an agent or officer carefully chosen will use good judgment in making his own appointments and doing his own duties, and is not bound to treat an employee as incompetent unless for some error or misconduct going to his general fitness for the place: M. C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 M. 510.

380. In an action against a railroad company by an engineer for an injury caused by the negligence of a freight conductor, evidence that he was put on the list of conductors some eight months before the accident, after having been employed as brakeman for a longer period, and that he had once by mistake carried a passenger beyond his stopping-place, and had for that reason spoken disparagingly of himself to his employer, does not by itself show him to be incompetent: Ibid.

381. A railroad company cannot be held liable as for the consequences of negligently retaining incompetent servants if, in exercising due care and diligence to see that its employees are competent, careful and sober, it fails to discover that they are not. But the degree of diligence which they must exercise must correspond to the servant's responsibility, and it is for a jury to say what reasonable diligence may be. The presumption is that the company has done its duty, and the burden of proving the contrary is on the party complaining of its negligence: Hults v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 55 M. 437.

382. Where the officers of a railroad company have had their attention directed to the intemperate habits of an employee, it is their duty to make careful and frequent investigation as to the fact if they retain him in their service. The weight and importance of evidence that they knew of it is for the jury to pass upon: M. C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 M. 176.

383. If a locomotive engineer has for several months habitually used intoxicating liquors to such an extent that those who come in contact with him notice his condition, the failure of his superiors to notice it, and their omission to make such inquiries as would disclose it, is negligence: Hults v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 55 M. 437.

384. Notice to the caller whose business it is merely to call the conductors in a certain order when trains are ready, and, if one cannot go, to call the next, of a special temporary incapacity of a conductor called by him, is not notice to the company: M. C. R. Co. v. Dolan, 82 M. 510.

385. Evidence that a railroad employee is hasty, passionate and excitable does not, of itself, necessarily show that he is unfit for the post of yard-master; nor does the mere fact that he has sent an engine upon the track when a coming train was overdue conclusively show that the company was negligent in keeping him in its service, since he might have had information showing that the train would not arrive for some time: M. C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 M. 176.

386. A locomotive engineer's opinion that, if he had obeyed the order of the yard-master to place his engine on the main track when a coming train was past due he would have gotten into trouble, was held inadmissible to show that the railroad company was negligent in keeping the yard-master in its employment unless the case had been brought to the knowledge of the company officers: Ibid.

Evidence as to employee's competency, see EVIDENCE, §§ 49, 957.

387. A brakeman cannot hold the company which employs him responsible for the failure of fellow-servants to take peculiar precautions: Day v. Toledo, Canada Southern & D. R. Co., 42 M. 524.

388. Where the fireman on a freight train was hurt in consequence of the train being ditched through the engineer's neglect to obey signals, which he saw and was bound by the company's rules to observe, the company was not held liable: Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 495.

389. Whether a brakeman can recover against the railway company for an injury received in consequence of the conductor's managing the locomotive in the engineer's absence, quere. Judgment denying such liability affirmed by equal division: Rodman v. M. C. R. Co., 55 M. 57.

390. Where the collision in which plaintiff, a railroad engineer, was injured was caused by a flat-car moving from a side track out upon the main track, it was held that if the motion which was the cause of the flat-car's being hauled out was imparted to it by a freight train which had shortly before backed upon the side track, such fact might establish negligence on the part of the men in charge of the freight train, but that for such negligence there could be no recovery against the railroad company, it being the negligence of fellow-servants: Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

391. A boy about 17 years old was employed as brakeman by the engineer of an ore train. The engineer had power to employ and discharge brakemen, and the boy was capable and experienced in the business. The engineer directed the fireman to back the locomotive upon a side track to the train, and told the brakeman to attend a switch. He himself went to attend another switch further on. While this was being done the bell and whistle of a train on the main track near by were both sounding. The first switch was passed, and the engineer was about throwing the second when he heard an outcry and saw the brakeman under the locomotive. The brakeman died in a few minutes from his injuries, and his administrator sued the railroad company for the injury. It was proved that the brakeman knew the train was about moving back, and that there was room enough for him to perform his duties. Held, that he needed no further warning of his danger, and that the accident was due to his own negligence; also, that if the failure to sound the bell and whistle of the locomotive was negligence, it was the fault of the fireman, who was a fellow-servant of the brakeman, and for whose negligence towards a fellow-servant the company would not be liable: Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 M. 197.

392. A railroad employee whose duty it was to couple cars and make up trains was assisted in that work by a helper, and by an engineer and a fireman upon the switching engine. He sued to recover for injuries received while on duty, through the fireman's alleged incompetency in being unable to communicate properly to the engineer the prescribed signals used in making up trains. Held, that he could not recover without establishing affirmatively the receipt by the fireman of the proper signal, the misinterpretation of the same by the fireman to the engineer, through ignorance of the meaning of the signals, and that the injuries were received by reason of such mistake: Catlin v. M. C. R. Co., 66 M. 358.

393. A brakeman in coupling freight cars had his arm crushed by a loosened deadwood on a car which had come from another road. It was the business of inspectors employed on both roads to see that cars transferred were in proper condition, and there was no claim or showing that they were not competent. Held, that the inspector was a fellow-servant of the brakeman, and that the risk of error on his part was one of the risks of the brakeman's employment, and that the brakeman could not recover against the company for the injury: Smith v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 46 M. 258.

394. Conductors and brakemen are fellow-servants whose acts are not independent in such a sense as to separate them from each other in the line of dangers: Ibid.

395. The foreman of a gang of car-repairers and the engineer of a switch-engine are fellow-servants of one of the repairers, who, if he is injured through their negligence, cannot recover against the employing railroad company: Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 67 M. 102.

Further, as to who are fellow-servants, see NEGLIGENCE, §§ 150-155.

(c) Contributory negligence of employees.

See NEGLIGENCE, III, (b).

396. An engineer who in running a railroad train is injured while disregarding the instructions which the company has issued for his guidance, and is therein guilty of gross negligence contributory to the injury, cannot recover damages of the company: Lyon v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co., 31 M. 429.

397. A switchman who had been strictly cautioned against having anything to do with coupling cars tried to uncouple some while the train was moving, and had his foot caught where the planking had been for some time slightly broken, though the defect had not been seen by him as yardman and the railroad company had no notice of it. Held, that he could not recover for the injury resulting to him: Gardner v. M. C. R. Co., 58 M. 584.

398. A railroad employee was injured by a defective draw-head which he used for the first time without looking at it, acting on the supposition that it was all right. He had worked about the engine nearly a week without examining the draw-head, which he was liable to use at any moment. Held, that his negligence would prevent a recovery for the injury: Goulin v. Canada South. Bridge Co., 64 M. 190.

399. A brakeman, whose business it also was to couple cars, had his arm crushed in trying to couple to another car a caboose the draw-bar of which was some six inches below that of the other car and of cars generally. The caboose had been in that condition for a month, as the brakeman himself knew, and it had been reported for repairs; but the fact that the draw-bars were not on the same level must have been apparent to any one attempting to couple the cars, if he used his eyes.

Held, that he could not recover against the railroad company: Brewer v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 56 M. 620.

400. Where a side track in a freight yard was constructed with a very sharp curve, so that there was great danger that in coupling cars the draw-bars would slip and pass each other, which danger, however, existed only on the inside of the curve, it was held to be contributory negligence for an experienced brakeman, who must have been aware of the danger, to remain on the inside while engaged in coupling: Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 122 U. S. 189.

401. On a signal for brakes, a brakeman, standing on a flat-car in a freight train, caught hold of a ladder on the side of a box-car, and, swinging his body around to ascend, came in contact with a bridge, was thrown down and killed. Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence: Illick v. F. & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 682.

402. An employee of a car-building company crawled under some new cars which had been removed from the company's yards as completed, and placed upon a railroad company's track for transportation. The conductor of a train had already looked over the cars to see if any one was under them at work. The cars were then coupled to the train and were started up, and the employee was killed. Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence: Coops v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 448.

403. The foreman of a gang of laborers employed by a railroad company to dig and load gravel called out as the train was about to start, "All aboard!" and one of the men, in attempting to jump on while the train was moving, lost his hold and was injured. He swore that he heard no order to board the cars, and went because the others went; and he knew that there was to be another opportunity of getting on the train. Held, that there was no evidence of defendant's negligence: Novock v. M. C. R. Co., 63 M. 121.

404. A call "All aboard!" when cars are about leaving is no more than notice of that fact, and justifies no one in boarding or leaving cars in motion: Ibid.

405. H. contracted with the defendant company to draw, saw and pile for it certain wood at one of its stations, and plaintiff was employed by him by the day in piling the wood as sawn. While thus employed he was injured by the cars being thrown from the track and running against the woodshed, and in some way causing his hand to be crushed. The company, on the theory (which there was some evidence to establish) that the cars were thrown from the track by means of a plank which H. had placed between the rails to aid his work under the contract, asked a charge: 1. That plaintiff and H., while working on the premises, were bound to use the same ordinary care against accidents to themselves as was incumbent on the company, and that if the neglect of plaintiff or of H. in the course of their work under the contract contributed proximately to the accident, plaintiff could not recover, unless the conduct of the company's servants was wanton or wilful. 2. That if H., in the course of his work under the contract, placed the plank on the track, and thereby the cars were thrown off and ran against the woodshed, this was neglect on H.'s part which contributed proximately to the accident, and that plaintiff could not recover unless the conduct of the company's servants was wanton or wilful. There was no evidence that plaintiff knew of the plank, but it was proved to have been seen there by the station agent. Upon the question whether this charge should have been given, the court was equally divided: M. C. R. Co. v. Leahey, 10 M. 198.

(d) Liability for injuries to strangers.

1. Negligence of company.

See, generally, NEGLIGENCE.

As to liability for injuries to passengers from negligence, see CARRIERS, V, (b).

Company's negligence in carrying passenger past station, not proximate cause of subsequent injury: See NEGLIGENCE, §§ 48, 49; PLEADINGS, § 546.

As to negligence in obstructing or not repairing crossing, or in failing to erect caution boards and keep flag-men at crossings, see supra, §§ 276-290.

406. Two railroad tracks controlled by the same company crossed a highway near each other, one on a bridge and the other on a level. A flag-man employed for the latter track had for years been in the habit of warning travelers upon the highway of the approach of trains to cross the bridge on the other. In so doing his signals once misled a person driving, so that the latter advanced at the wrong time, and the horse was frightened by a train passing over the bridge. The driver was thrown out and injured, and sued the company, which defended on the ground that the flag-man was not acting in the line of his employment. Held, that it was for the jury to say whether the flag-man, who was a servant of the defendant, did not act by its consent, express or implied, or under its direction, in flagging for the bridge: Peck v. M. C. R. Co., 57 M. 8.

407. Plaintiff, who had been a passenger on defendant's train, left its depot on a dark and rainy night, and fell into an unguarded hole on its grounds that was close to the culvert of a diagonal path whereon he was walking; defendant had constructed another and safer path, but most of the travel went over the way used by plaintiff, and defendant had never objected to its use. Held, that plaintiff could recover for injuries received: Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 69 M. 363 (April 6, '88).

408. A man went by night to the depot to meet his wife, and, having occasion to urinate, no special resort being provided, he stepped off the walk, in the darkness, upon a portion of the depot grounds, and fell into a hole. Held, that he was a customer of the railway company and not a trespasser, and that he could maintain an action against the company for the injury he sustained: McKone v. M. C. R. Co., 51 M. 601.

409. As the act of running the cars over the road is a lawful act, railroad companies cannot be held liable for accidental injuries occasioned thereby, unless the running was without proper care, or in an unreasonable manner: Williams v. M. C. R. Co., 2 M. 259.

410. The fact that the plaintiff in an action for a railway injury was hurt without his own fault or negligence does not of itself entitle him to recover, as it must further appear that the defendant is legally chargeable with the injury: Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 49 M. 495.

411. The negligence of a railway company will not be presumed in an action against it for personal injury, but must be shown; and there can be no recovery unless it appears to be the efficient cause of the injury without any contributory fault in the plaintiff: Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 51 M. 236.

412. Negligence in injuries inflicted by railroad trains upon individuals is a question that depends upon the circumstances, and can rarely, if ever, be absolutely defined as matter of law; and, in determining whether there has been negligence, all the circumstances must be considered together: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

413. Railway companies buying rolling-stock from reputable manufacturers are not chargeable with negligence in accepting material on such inspection as is usual and practicable, without discovering concealed defects; they cannot be held to warrant their cars: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 M. 537.

414. In an action for railway injury, defects in the track at other times and places than those of the accident cannot be shown in proof of negligence contributing to the injury: Ibid.

Evidence of accidents to others in same dangerous place not admissible, see EVIDENCE, § 143.

415. Where there is no statute requiring a railroad company to fence its track for the prevention of personal injuries, a charge that if a fence would have prevented such injury it was negligent not to have had it is all that can be asked in an action therefor against the company: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 M. 99.

416. A railroad company's neglect to fence its track is for the jury to consider as bearing on its liability for injury done to a child which got upon the track in consequence: Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 56 M. 559.

417. Where a railroad company is required by statute to fence its road with a fence "sufficient to prevent cattle or other animals from getting on such railroad," the requirement, it seems, includes the protection of children: Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 M. 890 (June 23, '87).

418. It is for the jury to determine whether it is not negligence in a railway company to omit means to prevent their cars from moving or being driven beyond the rails where these, if extended, would cross a passage-way, left open by the company to give access to the depot: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 M. 687.

419. It is negligence in a railroad company to allow coal-bins so close to its track that persons upon an excursion car cannot safely stand, while passing them, upon the running board that stretches along the side of such a car: Dickinson v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 53 M. 43.

420. Whether the piling of wood by a railroad company by the side of its track, adjacent to a road crossing the track, in such manner as to obscure the view of crossing trains, imposes upon the company the duty of great care or caution in running their trains, or making use of extra means of notifying those about to cross when trains are approaching, quere: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

421. It is gross negligence to back a train, without a brakeman at the rear end as a lookout, across the main thoroughfare of a village, when there is no flag-man at the crossing, even though the rate of the train is but little faster than a person walks: Cooper v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 261.

422. If a railroad company, by placing freight cars on a side track, obstructs the view of its track at a public crossing, it is bound, irrespective of statute, to take extra care to guard against accidents: Guggenheim v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 150.

423. Where the view of a railroad track as it crosses a public street is obstructed by buildings and freight cars, the company is not relieved from the duty of giving warning, by whistle or otherwise, of the approach of trains by the absence of a statute requiring such warning: Ibid.

424. The neglect of a railroad company to ring a bell, as required by statute when approaching a crossing, will make it liable for any injury resulting from such neglect: Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 M. 532.

425. A man crossing a railway track after dark in a wagon was struck by a passing train and killed. Whether the train was hidden from view by intervening shrubbery, and whether any signal of its approach was given, were disputed questions of fact. Held that, so far as these facts involved the legal duty of the railroad company, they must go to the jury: Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 57 M. 525.

426. Proof that a railroad company is in the habit of ringing its bell on approaching a station is not competent as bearing on the question of negligence by another company which uses the track of the first at that point as a side track: Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 M. 99.

427. That a train is drawn by a reversed engine is not, it seems, by itself evidence of negligence: Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 M. 494.

428. The lookout upon a locomotive must be as efficient as the circumstances require, and especially so when the chances of access to the track are greater than usual: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

429. A railroad train ran over a child on the track. It appeared that there were visitors in the cab of the engine, and that the presence of strangers without leave was prohibited by rule. Held, that it was proper for the jury to consider the fact with other circumstances as bearing on the question of negligence: Ibid.

430. Plaintiff, a child three months old, was run over by a railroad train at a crossing in a suburb of Detroit, in the day-time. There was nothing to interrupt the view of the crossing from the train, which could have been stopped before reaching the child had she been seen, as she ought to have been. The trainmen, however, testified that they were on the lookout and did not see her. Held, that there was evidence to sustain an allegation of reckless negligence, and that the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence — could such be imputed to one so young — did not arise: Battishill v. Humphreys, 64 M. 514.

431. Boys riding free upon a freight train, by the permission, express or implied, of the employees in charge, cannot be considered trespassers so as to prevent a recovery against the company for their death: Ecliff v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co., 64 M. 196.

432. An eight-year-old boy trespassing upon the premises of a railroad company got on the step of the engine and was ordered off by the fireman, and as he jumped off he fell. The locomotive was started that moment and the tender passed over his leg. He was a boy of more than average intelligence, and had been warned against going on the premises or riding on the engine. Held, that the railway company could not be held liable for the injury without showing that the engineer or other servants of the company in charge of the locomotive knew that the child was in the way, or that they had been reckless or negligent in the management of the engine, or could have anticipated the injury: Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Smith, 46 M. 504.

433. A child two and a half years old is no such trespasser in going upon a railroad track as to forfeit redress for being run over and seriously injured by the recklessness or negligence of the engineer. Nor can the child be considered negligent. The question of its parent's negligence in permitting it to go is for the jury: Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 56 M. 559.

434. A little child got upon a railroad track at a point where it was unfenced, and was injured by a passing train, the engineer of which had seen an object on the track half a mile distant, but had not recognized it as the child. A large verdict for the injury was affirmed, but a majority of the court did not expressly concur upon any point: Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 M. 390.

435. Proof that a heavily-loaded train of cars was running down a wharf, at the rate of from ten to fifteen miles an hour, without a locomotive, when people were landing from a steamboat, is sufficient proof of negligence: Malmsten v. Marquette H. & O. R. Co., 49 M. 94.

436. It cannot be presumptively negligent to run a railroad train in the usual manner, in the absence of proof that such usual manner is in itself improper: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Judson, 34 M. 506.

437. More than ordinary speed is not necessarily evidence of negligence in running a train: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 M. 537.

438. A high rate of speed at a common highway crossing is not of itself negligence: Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 64 M. 279.

439. Though there is no statute limiting the speed of railroad trains when crossing a public street, yet where the crossing is made dangerous because the view of the track is obstructed by buildings and freight cars, the speed should be consistent with the degree of care and prudence required for the safety of the lives and property of the persons rightfully approaching and travelling over such crossing: Guggenheim v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 150 (June 9, '87).

440. It is a question for the jury whether a special train can be run without negligence at such a speed as to make it difficult to check its speed within a reasonable time and distance: Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 M. 1.

441. Sending out a train with so few brakemen that on some grades its speed cannot be checked cannot be held, as a matter of law, to have no tendency to support an allegation of reckless management; nor can the neglect be held to be of one degree rather than another; if there are special circumstances tending to excuse such management, they are for a jury to weigh: McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 51 M. 628.

442. It is negligence not to slacken the speed of a train so that it can be stopped if necessary, if the engineer has seen an object on the track a long way off, and cannot tell what it is: Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 56 M. 559.

443. A railroad engineer is bound to slow down or stop his train if possible where he finds that persons on the track are apparently unaware of the danger of being run over, and do not hear or give attention to the warning signals: Bouwmeester v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 63 M. 557.

444. An engineer is not required to heed a signal to stop his train, given by a stranger, when no danger is in sight or may be reasonably apprehended: Blair v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 60 M. 124.

445. In an action for damages resulting from a train's striking a team at a railroad crossing, the court, after charging that there could be no recovery if the proper signals were given, left it to them to determine whether there were any unusual circumstances which made speed unreasonable. There was nothing in the pleadings or proofs to show that there were any exceptional circumstances, or that this crossing was more dangerous than others. Held, that the charge was contradictory and erroneous: Klanowski v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 64 M. 279.

446. Where trains are required by law to come to a full stop before crossing a railroad track, it seems that their neglect to do so, though not averred in a declaration for injury to persons crossing their tracks, has nevertheless some bearing on the question of the speed at which they were running near such crossing: Staal v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 239.

447. In an action for railway negligence the question how far an easy-running flat-car, given motion towards the south end on a descending grade, would run without obstruction towards the north, was held too indefinite to be material: Hewitt v. F. & P. M. R. Co., 67 M. 61.

Evidence as to speed of trains, see EVIDENCE, §§ 50, 395, 599, 600-604, 670, 677.

Remote evidence as to location and dimensions of platform and station in action for negligence, see EVIDENCE, § 75.

2. Contributory negligence.

See NEGLIGENCE, III, (a).

As to contributory negligence of railway passengers, see CARRIERS, §§ 128, 134, 136-151.

448. The doctrine of comparative negligence does not prevail in Michigan, and cannot be applied to the case of a person injured while crossing a railroad track: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 M. 257.

449. One cannot recover for an injury caused by the collision of a locomotive with the wagon in which she was riding, if her own negligence contributed directly or proximately to the injury, though the negligence of the railroad company may have concurred: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

450. In an action against a railroad company for injuries caused by the collision of its locomotive with the wagon in which the plaintiff was riding, the latter's right to recover was affected as much by the negligence of the person owning and driving the team as by her own: Ibid.

451. An administrator cannot recover damages for the negligent killing of his intestate, who was run over by a street-car, if the negligence of the deceased contributed to the injury, and if he had not exercised that reasonable care to avoid injury which a person of ordinary prudence would have shown under the circumstances: Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 M. 255.

452. It is not contributory negligence to assume that it will be safe to go through an open passage left by a railroad company to give access to their depot, even though the track ends near by and is not protected by snubbing-posts: Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Martin, 41 M. 667.

453. It may be assumed that a railway company will take the utmost care to protect persons from injury in crossing a passage left by it to give access to the depot, when the passage does not actually cross the railway track: Ibid.

454. In an action to recover for injuries received by falling, on a dark night, into a turn-table pit located upon the defendant's depot grounds six feet from the line of the street along which plaintiff had been walking, the evidence showed that plaintiff was well acquainted with the locality and surroundings, having himself worked for the company many years. Held, that he could not recover: Early v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 349 (June 16, '87).

455. A stranger who voluntarily attempted to enter a car in a running train in order to give warning of a broken rail, his previous signal having been disregarded, is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover for an injury received in such attempt: Blair v. G. R. & I. R. Co., 60 M. 124.

456. A boy twelve years old, who lived in the immediate vicinity of railroad trains and who was accustomed to them, got upon a freight train without leave, and, while on the front of the engine, was killed by a collision in which no one else was hurt. Held, that his contributory negligence would prevent a recovery of damages for his death: Ecliff v. W., St. L. & P. R. Co., 64 M. 196.

457. Where a train which has been standing across a highway has backed down to the cattle-guard for the apparent purpose of letting people pass, it is not per se negligence for one who has been waiting to attempt to drive by in front of the engine if his horse is steady; but it is a question for the jury whether it was negligence in the railroad company not to have seen the person so trying to cross, and to have blown off steam while he was crossing: Geveke v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 57 M. 589.

458. One without permission walks upon a railroad track is guilty of such contributory negligence as will preclude a recovery against the company for his death, unless it appears that the engineer of the train saw and understood the danger, and recklessly ran the train upon him without doing what he could to avoid the injury: Bouweester v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 67 M. 87.

459. One about to pass a railroad track is bound to recognize the danger and use the sense of hearing as well as of sight, to learn before trying to cross whether a train is dangerously near. Neglect to do this is legal negligence, and absence of mind does not excuse it: Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 M. 274.

460. It is error to charge that persons approaching a railroad track in a wagon are required to exercise only such care as "persons of their situation or condition in life" would ordinarily exercise under like circumstances. Such considerations do not affect the question: Ibid.

461. A person who, being in full possession of his sight and hearing, crosses, on a dark and stormy night, a railroad track at a street-crossing with which he is well acquainted, without stopping to look or listen, and is killed by a train, is guilty of such contributory negligence as precludes a recovery of damages, though the defendant company is guilty of negligence in moving its train: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 64 M. 98.

462. The rule that a railroad track is a warning of danger applies as well to a side track as to the main line: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 59 M. 257.

463. When a railroad company is required to sound an alarm, or is in the habit of blowing whistles and ringing bells, a traveller about to cross the track has a right to rely somewhat upon the observance of this custom or duty; and if the track is obstructed temporarily by freight cars, ordinary care does not require that, after he has looked and listened, and heard no warning, and no train is expected at the time, he should stop his team and go on foot upon the track simply because he cannot determine with certainty by sight alone that a train is not approaching: Guggenheim v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 150 (June 9, '87).

464. To establish negligence on the part of a person who drives upon a railroad track when a train is approaching, it is not enough that he was told the train was coming; it should also appear that he heard and understood what was said to him: Ibid.

465. While one who is about to cross a railroad track is in any event required to look and listen for an approaching train, he is not required to do so as carefully as he would be were a train due, the time of the coming of which was known to him: Ibid.

466. Contributory negligence prevents a recovery for a railway injury, even though defendant was negligent in not exhibiting a light or in failing to ring a bell on approaching a street-crossing: Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 64 M. 98.

467. Neglect to look and listen before venturing upon a railroad track is such contributory negligence as prevents recovery for defendant's neglect to give signals at a highway crossing: Matta v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 69 M. 109.

468. While it is a wholesome precaution for persons approaching the track of a railroad to look both ways and to listen for approaching trains, and while this is what is generally required, it is not a rule of universal application. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances: Cooper v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 66 M. 261.

469. In an action for injuries caused by a collision with a train while plaintiff was crossing a railroad track, where the track was in plain view for a long distance, so that no one who paid any attention could fail to see the approach of the cars, it was held by a divided court that the case was properly taken from the jury on the ground of contributory negligence: Straugh v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 65 M. 706.

470. The fact that the approach of a railroad to a highway crossing is obscured by embankments or otherwise imposes upon travellers by the highway, as well as upon the railroad company, special care to avoid collisions: Haas v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 47 M. 401.

471. It is negligent to approach a railway crossing with a team so closely as to involve apparent danger, either of direct collision or of the team's being so frightened by the passage of the train as to become unmanageable and likely to get upon the track in spite of the attempt to check it: Rhoades v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 58 M. 264.

472. A person approaching a railway crossing rode for nearly fifty rods along a highway, which was for all that distance not far from the track and from which the track was in full view. He was drawn by a double team driven by another man, and another double team was in front. The forward team crossed the track, safely in front of a coming train; but a blast of the whistle started the rear team and the driver let them go, thinking it the safest way. The team was struck, however, and personal injuries inflicted. Held, in an action against the railroad company by the person riding, that he was grossly negligent and the case should be taken from the jury: Potter v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 62 M. 22.
